In the certificate to the bill of exceptions, dated January 10, 1911, appears the following: "I certify that the original bill of exceptions in this case was tendered to me on October 22, 1909; that I sent it to plaintiff's counsel by mail November 9, 1909, when it was returned to me by plaintiff's counsel on November 10, 1909, with a statement of their objections to it, and that counsel disagreeing as to what changes should be made in the bill of exceptions, I informed them that a date would be fixed for a meeting with them, for the purpose of going over their bill. For one cause and another, this meeting was not held until the 14th of December last, when a corrected bill of exceptions was agreed upon by counsel for each side, and by consent of plaintiff's counsel defendant's counsel took the corrections to be incorporated in a corrected bill of exceptions, and to be submitted to counsel for the plaintiff after this was done. On January 3d I was informed by plaintiff's counsel that this had been done, and on the 4th I received from defendant's counsel the corrected bill. The delay in signing the bill was due to my purpose and desire to get counsel of the parties together and agree to the contents of the bill of exceptions." Held, under the facts stated, the motion to dismiss the writ of error must be sustained, in view of the fact that the bill of exceptions of 20 pages was not returned to the presiding judge within a reasonable time after the meeting referred to in the certificate, when the corrections proper to be made in the bill of exceptions were agreed upon by counsel for plaintiff and defendant, and counsel for plaintiff in error "took the corrections to be incorporated in a corrected bill of exceptions, and to be submitted to counsel for the plaintiff after this was done"; it not appearing from the certificate that the delay was occasioned by providential cause or imperative necessity. Sutton v. Valdosta Guano Co., 115 Ga. 794, 42 S. E. 94.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Exceptions, Bill of, Dec. Dig. § 59.*]

Error from Superior Court, Douglas County; Price Edwards, Judge.

Action by W. P. Kelley against T. R. Whitley. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendant brings error. Writ of error dismissed.

J. S. James, for plaintiff in error. Anderson, Felder, Rountree & Wilson and Geo. P. Whitman, for defendant in error.

HOLDEN, J. Writ of error dismissed.

BECK, J., absent. The other Justices concur.

(136 Ga. 862)

TRUST CO. OF GEORGIA et al. v. SESSIONS et al.

(Supreme Court of Georgia. Sept. 26, 1911.)

(Syllabus by the Court.)

1. APPEAL AND ERROR (§ 327*)—PARTIES—NECESSARY PARTIES.

Where a mortgagee proceeded by a rule nisi to foreclose the mortgage, and certain persons filed equitable interventions, claiming that property belonging to them had been improperly used, and that they were entitled to recover sums to be paid from the assets of the mortgagor, and making such mortgagor and the interveners' guardian defendants to the intervention, upon exception to the overruling of the demurrer filed by the mortgagee to such intervention, and a refusal to allow the mortgagee to dismiss its foreclosure proceeding, the mortgagor and the guardian of the interveners were not interested with such interveners in seeking to sustain the judgment of the trial court, and therefore were not necessary parties defendant in error to the bill of exceptions.

(a) In view of the entire record, M. M. Sessions, as guardian, is not a necessary party plaintiff in error to the case in this court. The motion to make the mortgagor a party plaintiff in error is granted.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Appeal and Error, Dec. Dig. § 327.*]

2. EXCEPTIONS, BILL OF (§ 58*)—SERVICE OF BILL—ACKNOWLEDGMENT.

Where the plaintiff in proceedings to foreclose the mortgage demurred to the interventions which were filed by three parties, and also sought to dismiss the foreclosure proceedings, and to the overruling of the demurrer and the refusal to allow the case to be dismissed a bill of exceptions was filed, assigning error on such ruling, and counsel who appeared of record as representing all of the interveners signed an acknowledgment of "due and legal service of the within bill of exceptions," and following their names were the words, "Attorneys for defendant in error," this was a sufficient acknowledgment of service to bind all of the interveners, although the singular "defendant" in error was used, instead of the plural word "defendants."

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Exceptions, Bill of, Cent. Dig. § 104; Dec. Dig. § 58.*]

3. MORTGAGES (§ 436*)—FORECLOSURE—INTERVENTION.

In a statutory proceeding by rule nisi to foreclose a mortgage, it is not competent for parties who claim that property belonging to them has been misappropriated, and that they have an interest in the property of the mortgage, to intervene as defendants to the foreclosure of the mortgage, and seek equitable decrees in their favor in such proceeding. If they have any equitable rights, they cannot be thus asserted. Civil Code 1910, § 8280.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Mortgages, Cent. Dig. § 1289; Dec. Dig. § 436.*]

4. MORTGAGES (§ 475*)—FORECLOSURE—DISMISSAL.

It was error to refuse to allow the mortgagee to dismiss the foreclosure proceedings.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Mortgages, Dec. Dig. § 475.*]

Error from Superior Court, Cobb County; W. R. Power, Judge.

Proceedings by rule nisi by the Trust Company of Georgia and others against William M. Sessions, by next friend, and others, to foreclose a mortgage. To the overruling of a demurrer to an intervention, and the refusal to allow the mortgagee to dismiss the proceedings, the mortgagee brings error. Reversed.

Anderson, Felder, Rountree & Wilson, for plaintiffs in error. Geo. F. Goher, Mozley & Moss, and Clay & Morris, for defendants in error.

BECK, J. Judgment reversed. All the Justices concur.

(137 Ga. 53)

RAWLINGS v. BROWN et al.

(Supreme Court of Georgia. Oct. 12, 1911.)

(Syllabus by the Court.)

REFUSAL OF INJUNCTION.

Under the pleadings and the evidence, there was no abuse of discretion in refusing an interlocutory injunction.

Error from Superior Court, Johnson County; B. F. Walker, Judge.

Action by C. G. Rawlings against T. F. Brown and others. Judgment for defendants, and plaintiff brings error. Affirmed.

Hines & Jordan, A. R. Wright, and E. L. Stephens, for plaintiff in error. A. L. Hatcher, for defendants in error.

HOLDEN, J. Judgment affirmed. All the Justices concur, except BECK, J., absent.

(137 Ga. 21)

MORGAN v. STATE.

(Supreme Court of Georgia. Oct. 11, 1911.)

(Syllabus by the Court.)

1. REFUSAL OF CONTINUANCE.

The court did not abuse his discretion in refusing to continue the case.

2. MUTUAL COMBAT.

The evidence authorized a charge on self-defense in case of mutual combat, predicated on Penal Code 1910, § 73.

3. SELF-DEFENSE.

The court did not confuse the defense of one's person, as defined in Penal Code 1910, §§ 70, 71, with the law of self-defense in case of mutual combat, as contained in Penal Code, 1910, § 73.

4. SUFFICIENCY OF EVIDENCE.

The evidence is sufficient to support the verdict.

Error from Superior Court, Laurens County; J. H. Martin, Judge.

P. I. Morgan was convicted of crime, and brings error. Affirmed.

Adams & Flynt and Jno. R. Cooper, for plaintiff in error. E. D. Graham, Sol. Gen., and H. A. Hall, Atty. Gen., for the State.

EVANS, P. J. Judgment affirmed. All the Justices concur, except BECK, J., absent.

(136 Ga. 885)

STRICKLAND et al. v. JOLLY.

(Supreme Court of Georgia. Sept. 26, 1911.)

(Syllabus by the Court.)

1. CORPORATIONS (§ 620*)—DISSOLUTION—PROCEEDINGS.

The general demurrer to the petition was properly overruled.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Corporations, Dec. Dig. § 620.*]

2. CORPORATIONS (§ 620*)—OFFICERS—ELECTION—HOLDING OVER.

The special demurrers to so much of the petition as sought to restrain the directors of the defendant corporation from holding a meeting for the purpose of electing a successor to the plaintiff, who was holding over beyond the term for which he had been elected, should have been sustained.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Corporations, Dec. Dig. § 620.*]

Error from Superior Court, Bartow County; A. W. Fite, Judge.

Action by H. J. Jolly against E. Strickland and others. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendants bring error. Affirmed, with directions.

The defendant in error filed an equitable petition, alleging that he owns one-fifth of the capital stock of the Cartersville Grocery Company, and the defendants E. Strickland, Sr., E. Strickland, Jr., and A. Strickland own the other four-fifths; that, owing to the existence of friction between himself and E. Strickland, Sr., it became impossible for the business of the corporation to be conducted to its best interests, and petitioner consented to sever his connection with the company by a sale of his entire interest to E. Strickland, Sr., on terms proposed by the latter, but said Strickland refused to comply with his proposition, and to consummate the purchase; that later "it was agreed between all the parties hereto, representing all of the said stock of said company, that said corporation would convert all its assets into cash as soon as possible, pay the debts of said corporation, dissolve the corporation, and divide up the net balance between the stockholders thereof in proportion to the amount of stock held by each;" that sale was consummated by the parties, and it was on the faith of this verbal agreement that petitioner signed the contract which was made with the purchasers, H. J. Smith and S. J. Hall, whom he induced to come to Cartersville for this purpose, selling to them all of the stock of goods of the Cartersville Grocery Company, except such as was damaged, and on which a price could not be agreed between the parties, together with other holdings of the company, and more than half of the company's accounts receivable; that at the instance of E. Strickland, Sr., the plaintiff made a contract with such purchasers to enter their employment, but that this should not interfere with the discharge of his duties as secretary and treasurer, so long as necessary for the winding up of the Cartersville Grocery Company; that petitioner has sought by every means to induce E. Strickland, Sr., to consent to some practicable method of collection of such of the accounts as were not included in the sale to Smith and Hall, and to a disposition of the small amount of stock which was withheld from the operation of said sale, and a distribution among the stockholders of the net sum remaining after the payment of all debts, but said Strickland has refused to give his consent to any agreement with reference thereto. Petitioner is informed and believes that E. Strickland, Sr., and E. Strickland, Jr., have very recently ordered goods shipped to the Cartersville Grocery Company, in defiance of and in violation of the verbal contract between petitioner and the other stockholders, as above stated. He alleges that he is secretary and treasurer of the defendant corporation, his term of office, by common consent of all the stockholders, continuing since the date provided by the by-laws for the last annual meeting of the stockholders; there having been no meeting at that time for the election of officers. He prays that E. Strickland, Sr., and E. Strickland, Jr., be restrained and enjoined from making any contracts or obligations in the name of or on the part of the Cartersville Grocery Company; that defendants be restrained from holding any stockholders' or directors' meetings, or from attempting to elect any individual or party as director, or as secretary and treasurer, of the corporation, in lieu of petitioner; that all of said parties be enjoined from paying out any of the funds of said corporation, except by check signed by E. Strickland, Jr., manager, and by petitioner, as secretary and treasurer; that provision be made for the collection of the accounts and the sale of the stock of goods excepted from the sale made to Smith and Hall; and that the agreement heretofore entered into by and between the stockholders be required to be strictly performed. The defendants filed their demurrer, on grounds general and special, which was overruled, and they excepted.

Neel & Neel, for plaintiffs in error. J. T. Norris, for defendant in error.

BECK, J. (after stating the facts as above). [1] 1. The court below did not err in refusing to sustain a general demurrer to the plaintiff's petition. While the directors of the corporation, at the time of acting upon the proposition of selling and closing out the business in which they were engaged at a time when it appeared that the differences and internal troubles of the corporation were such as to render the further carrying on of the business unprofitable, were not assembled in a regular meeting, or in a special meeting formally called, still all the directors and the stockholders were conferring together, and the action taken was by the consent of every one of the stockholders and directors. And having, under these circumstances, agreed and consented to wind up and close out the business of the corporation, where subsequently, in pursuance of this action of the directors, a sale of all the stock of goods, except such as was damaged and on which a price could not be agreed between the parties, was made to a party who became the purchaser thereof, the corporation could not, over the objection of the plaintiff, he being a stockholder and director in the corporation, continue the business with the remnant of the stock of goods not included in the sale because of the damaged and unsalable character of the remnants, and should not be permitted to do so, or to make other purchases, thereby adding to the remnant so reserved; but in good faith the agreement made among the entire body of directors and stockholders should be carried out to its final completion by the entire disposal of the remnant of the stock of goods reserved for the reasons stated above, when the business was practically closed by the sale of the bulk of the goods. This is in the main what the plaintiff seeks by his petition, and these main principles of the suit can be accomplished without any order dissolving the corporation, and the petition, by the overruling of the general demurrer, was properly retained. See, in this connection, 3 Clark & Marshall on Private Corporations, § 644; 21 Am. & Eng. Enc. L. 865, 866.

[2] 2. While we have held that the grounds of demurrer which were general in their character were properly overruled, we are of the opinion that the court should have sustained the special demurrer to so much of the petition and the prayers thereof as sought to prevent the corporation from holding a meeting for the purpose of electing a secretary and treasurer, as it appears that the plaintiff was holding over beyond his term as the incumbent of that office, and no reason appears why he should continue in the office beyond the expiration of his regular term. Direction is given that such special demurrer be sustained, and so much of the petition as seeks to prevent a meeting of the directors for the purpose just stated be stricken.

The other special demurrers were without merit, and the court did not err in overruling them. The extent of the interlocutory injunction granted is not brought under review by this bill of exceptions. Neither does this case involve any question of the rights of creditors. No creditor is proceeding, and a proper decree can be entered as to corporate debts. The question raised is between the plaintiff, the corporation, and the other individuals constituting all the stockholders and directors thereof.

Judgment affirmed, with direction. All the Justices concur.

(138 Ga. 377)

SEAGRAVES et al. v. W. E. POWELL CO.
(Supreme Court of Georgia. Sept. 26, 1911.)

(Syllabus by the Court.)

1. CONTINUANCE (§§ 23, 51*)—GROUND—ABSENCE OF PARTIES—ABSENCE OF WITNESSES.
The court did not err in overruling the motion for a continuance.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Continuance, Cent. Dig. §§ 68-118; Dec. Dig. §§ 23, 51.*]

2. INSTRUCTIONS—SUFFICIENCY OF EVIDENCE.
The court correctly instructed the jury as to all the material issues involved in the case, and the exceptions to the charge are without merit. The evidence amply supported, if it did not demand, a verdict for the plaintiff.

Error from Superior Court, Pike County; E. J. Reagan, Judge.

Action by the W. E. Powell Company against S. E. Seagraves and another. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendants bring error. Affirmed.

E. C. Armistead, for plaintiffs in error.
Cleveland & Goodrich, for defendant in error.

BECK, J. W. E. Powell Company brought suit upon a promissory note against S. E. Seagraves and Mrs. J. P. Seagraves. It was recited in the note that the same was given for the purchase money of a certain described horse. The defendants filed their joint plea, setting up that the horse was never delivered to the defendants, or either of them, although the note was executed by them upon the express understanding that the horse would be delivered to S. E. Seagraves the next day; hence the consideration for the note has totally failed. Mrs. J. P. Seagraves did not execute the note as principal, but as security only, and this fact was well known to the plaintiff before and at the time it took the note; that her contract of suretyship was that the note was given for the horse; that the note was a mortgage on the horse, and that she should only be liable for any balance that might be due on the note after the horse had been subjected to the payment of the note; that S. E. Seagraves (who was her son), in procuring her signature to the note, was acting as the agent of the plaintiff, and this was well known to the plaintiff, and the plaintiff, in thus directing S. E. Seagraves to procure her signature, and in placing the horse beyond the jurisdiction of the courts, intended to cheat, swindle, and defraud her. It was pleaded by S. E. Seagraves that, after he had executed the note, he procured the signature of Mrs. Seagraves thereon and delivered the note to the plaintiff upon the promise that the horse would be delivered to him the next day; that he called the next day for the horse, and the plaintiff handed him a note which the defendants had formerly executed in favor of one Hollingsworth, stating to defendant at the time that the horse had been delivered to Hollingsworth, and would not be delivered to Seagraves. Seagraves denied that the Hollingsworth note so returned to him was accepted by him in lieu of the horse, and made tender of the same to plaintiff. Defendant further pleaded that the Hollingsworth note was a nullity, being without consideration and set forth the circumstances under which the same was given. Upon the trial the jury returned a verdict in favor of the plaintiff for the principal of the note sued on, with interest and 10 per cent. attorney's fees. The defendants made a motion for a new trial. This the court overruled, and they excepted.

[1] 1. Complaint that the court erred in overruling the motion for a continuance in this case is based upon two grounds: First, it is alleged that a continuance should have been granted upon the ground of the sickness of Mrs. Seagraves, one of the parties. To support the motion for a continuance, it was shown that "Mrs. Seagraves was sick and unable to attend court at that time; that her attorney could not safely go to trial in her absence; that he could prove by her that she was only a security on the note sued on; that she signed the note as security for S. E. Seagraves on his statement that he had bought a horse from W. E. Powell Company, who had taken a mortgage on it, and wanted her to sign the note as additional security; that she knew nothing of any arrangements between Powell and S. E. Seagraves and Hollingsworth about the horse and washing machine note, never was present, nor was anything ever said to her about it." It appears from the evidence in reference to Mrs. Seagraves that the condition of her health for two weeks or more prior to the trial was such as to suggest that her appearance at the court would probably be prevented by her physical condition. During the two weeks immediately preceding the trial, she was not entirely well, but she could be out of bed, and could go where she wished to go most of the time. It was not intimated that she was not sufficiently strong to answer interrogatories duly propounded to her. In view of the fact that the case had, at a previous term of the court, been continued on account of her absence and sickness, the court did not err in refusing to grant another continuance on account of the indisposition of this party, especially in view of the fact that it did not appear that she suffered from an attack of sickness so sudden as to prevent herself and her counsel from anticipating that she might not be able to be present when the trial of her cause came on.

The other ground of the motion was based upon the absence of two witnesses. Their absence was not hurtful to the plaintiffs in error; the facts which the plaintiffs in error, according to the showing made on the motion for a continuance, expected to establish by the absent witnesses were immaterial and irrelevant to the real issues in the case. The defendants' contention on the trial was that the note sued on was given for the purchase of a horse, and that the plaintiff, instead of delivering the horse, delivered to him a note, which the defendant Seagraves had formerly executed and delivered to a third party. He pleaded that when this note was handed to him he did not know what the paper so handed to him contained, and that immediately upon reading it and discovering that it was his promissory note, formerly executed to the third party just referred to, he tendered it back. But upon the trial of the case he testified that, while the note sued on was for the purchase money of a horse, he accepted and retained the note so handed to him in lieu of the horse, and directed that the horse which he had purchased be turned over to the third party, the payee in the note which was handed to him, and which he accepted. The court on the trial of the case distinctly and clearly submitted to the jury the question as to whether or not there had been a constructive delivery to Seagraves of the horse, which constituted the consideration of the note sued on; and there was sufficient evidence to authorize the finding of the jury that there was a constructive delivery of the animal to Seagraves, and that it was by his direction, and with his consent, that the horse was actually delivered to Hollingsworth, instead of to himself, and that, instead of taking actual possession of the horse himself, he received and accepted his note, which he had formerly executed to Hollingsworth. The witnesses of whose absence he complained, and by whose testimony he insists he could have shown that the note to Hollingsworth was without consideration, and void on the ground of fraud, had they been present in court, could not have availed him in the face of his admissions that he had accepted the Hollingsworth note, knowing for what purpose it was turned over to him, and that he retained possession of the same. Nor could their testimony have availed Mrs. Seagraves, the absent party, who pleaded that she was merely surety on the note, which was for the purchase money of a horse, inasmuch as she was absolutely bound upon the note, and the consideration of the same was actually or constructively delivered to the defendant, S. E. Seagraves.

[2] 2. The court in his charge clearly, fairly, and explicitly instructed the jury as to the material issues of the case, and the exceptions to the charge are without merit.

Judgment affirmed. All the Justices concur.

(186 Ga. 854)

TOWN OF DECATUR v. JAUDON.

(Supreme Court of Georgia. Sept. 26, 1911.)

(Syllabus by the Court.)

1. MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS (§ 360*)—CONTRACTS — CONSTRUCTION — COMPENSATION — EXTRA WORK.

Where, having reference to the contemplated construction of a system of waterworks, a civil engineer made to the municipal authorities of the town proposing to construct the waterworks a written proposition offering his services in the following language: "I will do all the work necessary to get up a complete set of plans and specifications for your proposed waterworks; said plans and specifications will be such that you will be able to invite bids on the same; and after the contract is awarded from the bids I will supervise the construction of the work and see that the same is carried out according to the plans and specifications adopted by you. I will make a proposition to do all the work for the lump sum of $1,500, this amount to include all expenses of getting up the plans and specifications and the supervision of the work after the same has been contracted"—and this proposition was accepted without additional stipulation or qualification, the engineer could not recover against the municipality for additional services and expenses which were rendered and incurred by him after the time fixed in a contract between the municipality and the contractors who were to construct the waterworks had expired. His right of recovery was limited to the lump sum named in the proposal.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Municipal Corporations. Cent. Dig. §§ 892, 892½; Dec. Dig. § 360.*]

2. EVIDENCE (§ 398*)—PAROL EVIDENCE AFFECTING WRITINGS—ADMISSIBILITY.

The contract was free from ambiguity. And the engineer could not, in a suit against the municipality, based upon this contract, open the way for the introduction of parol evidence which would alter or change the terms of the written instrument, by allegations as to his understanding of the terms and scope of the written contract, and that his understanding of it was known to the municipal authorities.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Evidence, Cent. Dig. §§ 1766-1771; Dec. Dig. § 398.*]

3. CONTRACTS (§ 186*)—CONSTRUCTION—PAR-TIES.

Stipulations in the contract between the municipal authorities and the contractors who undertook the work of construction, providing for penalties in the event of failure on the part of the contractors to carry out the terms of their contract with the municipality, could not be invoked by the plaintiff in this case, who was not a party to the contract last referred to.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Contracts, Dec. Dig. § 186.*]

Error from Superior Court, De Kalb County; L. S. Roan, Judge.

Action by H. S. Jaudon against the Town of Decatur. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendant brings error. Reversed.

H. S. Jaudon, a civil engineer, made the following written proposition to the town of Decatur: "I will do all the work necessary to get up a complete set of plans and specifications for your proposed waterworks; said plans and specifications will be such that you will be able to invite bids on the same; and after the contract is awarded from the bids I will supervise the construction of the work and see that the same is carried out according to the plans and specifications adopted by you. I will make a proposition to do all the work for the lump sum of $1,500, this amount to include all expenses of getting up the plans and specifications and the supervision of the work after the same has been contracted." The town of Decatur, acting through its mayor and council, accepted this proposition. Immediately Jaudon set about making surveys, maps, estimates, plans, and specifications for the construction of the system of waterworks, and submitted his work to the town for final disposition. The town adopted the plans and specifications and advertised for bids, which resulted in the making of a contract with Walton & Wagner, wherein it was stipulated that Walton & Wagner would, at their own cost and expense, do all the work, furnish all the material, equipment, and labor necessary for the construction of the waterworks in accordance with the plans and specifications so prepared by Jaudon, and accepted and adopted by the town of Decatur. In order to secure the faithful performance on their part, Walton & Wagner executed and delivered to the town a good and solvent bond.

So much of the contract entered into between the town of Decatur and Walton & Wagner as Jaudon claims to be material to the issues in his suit against the town of Decatur is as follows: Walton & Wagner guarantee to complete the contract on or before October 1, 1907. They have carefully examined the annexed specifications, contract, and plans on file in the office of the city clerk and engineer, and made all personal examination necessary to fully understand the meaning and intent of the same. Walton & Wagner further agree to do the work in strict accordance with the plans and specifications on file; said plans and specifications, in addition to the proposal herein before mentioned, being annexed and made a part of this contract. It is mutually agreed that payments will be made by the town as set out in the specifications. The contract must be finished within the time named in the proposal, time being of the essence of this contract, and the work must be carried on continuously and diligently from the time of beginning. Should the contractors fail to complete the work as specified in his proposal, within the time named therein, they hereby agree to pay all expenses incurred by the engineer for engineering and inspection, due to said delay, which amounts shall be deducted from any moneys which may be due by the town. Should the town authorities see fit, they may extend the time for the completion of the work; in such case, the contractor agrees to pay all expenses, such as engineering and inspection, that the engineer may incur, due to said extension. At the end of each month, the town will have made an estimate of the work done during the month, and will pay to the contractors 80 per cent. on such estimate. At the completion of the contract, the town will have made a final estimate of the work done, and will cause to be paid to the contractors, within 30 days after such final estimate is made, the entire sum found to be due under the contract, after deducting therefrom all previous payments.

The entire work must be completed within the time set out in the proposal. The work of constructing the waterworks system was not completed until several months after October 1, 1907. Jaudon sues the town of Decatur for services and expenses incurred in connection with supervising the work of Walton & Wagner for the months of October, November, and December, 1907, aggregating the sum of $872.35. He alleges that the intent and meaning of the contract between the town of Decatur and himself was that he would be paid by the town $1,500 for services rendered by him between the time the contract was made and the 1st day of October, 1907, and that for all services rendered by him after October 1st he was to be paid by defendant, but defendant was to be reimbursed by Walton & Wagner; that this is a reasonable construction of the contract, and is the construction he put upon it at the time he entered into his contract with the defendant, and at all times since; and that this construction by him was known to the defendant all the while, and not disputed by the defendant until long after October 1, 1907. The defendant demurred generally to the petition. The demurrer was overruled, and the defendant excepted.

L. J. Steele and Nathan Harris, for plaintiff in error. J. D. Kilpatrick, for defendant in error.

BECK, J. (after stating the facts as above). The defendant in the court below by general demurrer challenged the right of the plaintiff to recover on the case as set forth in the petition. The court held that the petition set forth a cause of action, and overruled the demurrer.

[1-3] Under the contract in this case between the plaintiff and the defendant municipality, the former was entitled only to the sum of $1,500, for which, in a proposal offering his services to the municipality, he had undertaken to supervise the construction of the contemplated work, and see that the same was carried out according to the plans and specifications to be adopted. Under the proposition submitted by the plaintiff himself, in writing, he was to "do all the work for the lump sum of $1,500, this amount to include all expenses of getting up the plans and specifications and the supervision of the work after the same has been contracted." This proposition was accepted by the town of Decatur without additional stipulation or qualification. It would be difficult to conceive of a contract freer from ambiguity and more plainly revealing its meaning without the aid of construction or interpretation. As brief as the contract is, it iterates and reiterates the proposition to do the work of supervision, and to do and perform all the duties incumbent upon the engineer of such an enterprise, for a "lump sum" definitely fixed. Jaudon was not a party to the contract between the town and firm of contractors, Walton & Wagner, and he cannot invoke the terms of that instrument to change or alter the plain terms of the contract between himself and the defendant in this case. In this connection, see notes to the case of Inman Mfg. Co. v. American Cereal Co., 133 Iowa, 71, 110 N. W. 287, 8 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1140, and cases there cited. If it were permitted by parol evidence to raise an ambiguity in a contract as free from that vice as the contract now under consideration is, then no written contract could be exempt from the danger of attack by parol evidence. The court erred in not sustaining the general demurrer.

Judgment reversed. All the Justices concur.

(156 N. C. 410)

JONES v. HUNTLEY et al.

(Supreme Court of North Carolina. Oct. 25, 1911.)

1. WILLS (§ 832*)—CONSTRUCTION—PAYMENT OF DEBTS—PROPERTY LIABLE.

Testator gave a policy on his life to a beneficiary, and declared that she should have all the benefits accruing thereunder, and that his debts should be paid out of any other property of which he might die possessed, after which any residue should be divided between his legal heirs. Held, that the life policy was specifically devised to the beneficiary and was exonerated from the payment of debts, though his other personalty alone was not sufficient therefor.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Wills, Cent. Dig. §§ 2139-2155; Dec. Dig. § 832.*]

2. WILLS (§ 7*)—PROPERTY DEVISED—INTEREST IN REMAINDER.

Under Revisal 1905, § 3140, defining what property passes by will, a testamentary gift of testator's property of which he died possessed after the payment of debts includes his interest in remainder in land.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Wills, Cent. Dig. § 11; Dec. Dig. § 7.*]

Appeal from Superior Court, Anson County; Justice, Judge.

Petition by William Jones, executor of Elijah D. Huntley, deceased, against Fanny Huntley and others, heirs at law, for the sale of land to make assets. From a judgment directing a sale, defendants appeal. Affirmed.

This was a petition to sell land to make assets filed by the executor of Elijah D. Huntley against his heirs at law. The sole question presented was the construction of the will as set out upon the following facts agreed:

"Elijah D. Huntley died on December 13, 1902, leaving a will, two of the items of which are as follows:

"First, I hereby give and bequeath to Miss Hattie Hasty, of the said county and state, my insurance policy of one thousand ($1,000) dollars in the Phoenix Mutual Life Insurance Company, of Hartford, Conn., bearing date November 17, 1902, and it is my will and desire that she, the said Miss Hattie Hasty, shall have all the benefits accruing thereunder, in the event of my death.

"Second, I desire that my debts (if any) and burial expenses be paid out of any other property of which I die possessed, after which the balance of my personal property and real estate shall be divided between my legal heirs as the law may direct."

The plaintiff qualified as his executor. The testator did not at his death have sufficient personal property other than the insurance policy referred to in item 1 to pay the debts and burial expenses. The plaintiff used $400 of the proceeds of the insurance for the payment of debts. The testator at the time of his death was the owner of an interest in the remainder in some lands in Anson county. The plaintiff brought this action to sell these lands for the purpose of reimbursing the legatee for the amount of the policy which had been used for the payment of debts.

Lockhart & Dunlap, for appellants. Russell & Weatherspoon and McLendon & Thomas, for appellee.

CLARK, C. J. [1] The judgment of his honor was correct, and so fully states his reasons that we reproduce it as the opinion of this court: "The court is of the opinion, and so adjudges, that the said policy of insurance or proceeds thereof is and was intended by the testator to be an absolute, specific legacy, and the land mentioned in the second clause not being specifically devised, and the intention of testator appearing in the will that the property so mentioned in item 2 should be subject to the payment of debts in exoneration of the said policy, it is ordered and adjudged that if it shall be found that there is not sufficient personal property, other than the proceeds of the policy, to pay the debts of the testator that the plaintiff as executor have license to sell the land to pay the debts, and that the policy or the proceeds of the same shall not be liable until all the property, real and personal, mentioned or referred to in the second clause of the will be exhausted."

Ordinarily the personalty must first be exhausted before recourse can be had for the payment of debts to the realty. But the testator can change this order. The prime consideration in the construction of a will is the intent. As to that, there can be no doubt upon the face of the will. The testator intended that the property in item 2 of the will should be charged with the payment of debts and burial expenses in exoneration of the property mentioned in item 1. By item 1 the testator bequeathed not "$1,000," but his "insurance policy of $1,000," using the words "one thousand dollars" as descriptive of the policy. His intention to make the policy a specific bequest is further manifested by his description of it giving the name and location of the company, the amount, and date. The further words that, "the said Miss Hattie Hasty shall have all the benefits accruing thereunder in the event of my death," show clearly that he intended it should be specifically exonerated from the payment of debts. This intent he further indicates by providing in section 2 that his debts and burial expenses should "be paid out of any other property of which I shall die possessed." He further adds to this by saying "after which" the balance of his personal and real property should be divided between his legal heirs as the law may direct.

[2] The words, "other property of which I shall die possessed, after which the balance of my personal property and real estate

*For other cases see same topic and section NUMBER in Dec. Dig. & Am. Dig. Key No. Series & Rep'r Indexer shall be divided," etc., include the ownership of an interest in remainder of lands. Rev. 3140.

The intent of the will seems to us so plain that no citation of authorities could throw any additional light upon its construction.

The judgment of his honor is in all respects affirmed.

(156 N. C. 329)

BATTLE et al. v. CITY OF ROCKY MOUNT et al.

(Supreme Court of North Carolina. Oct. 18, 1911.)

1. COURTS (§ 187*)—RECORDER'S COURT—DUTY TO ESTABLISH—"SHALL."

Acts 1907, c. 209, § 24, provides that a special court for the trial of misdemeanors is established to be known as the "recorder's court of Rocky Mount." Section 25 provides that it shall be presided over by a recorder, who shall be a resident and qualified voter of the city, and "shall" be elected by the aldermen of the city at a certain meeting. Held, that such act was one concerning the public interest, and hence the word "shall" was not to be construed as equivalent to "may," but that the act was mandatory and imposed an absolute duty on the board to elect a recorder to preside over such court.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Courts, Dec. Dig. § 187.*]

For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, vol. 7, pp. 6459-6469; vol. 8, p. 7799.]

2. COURTS (§ 187*)—ELECTION OF RECORDER—CONTINUING DUTY.

Under Acts 1907, c. 209, § 25, requiring the board of aldermen of Rocky Mount to elect a qualified person to preside over the recorder's court biennially, the duty so to elect is a continuing one, the exercise of which the courts will compel when they have failed to hold the election at the appointed time.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Courts, Dec. Dig. § 187.*]

3. MANDAMUS (§ 76*)—SCOPE OF REMEDY—PUBLIC OFFICERS—COERCING ACTION.

Where the board of aldermen of Rocky Mount failed and refused to elect a recorder to preside over the recorder's court established by Acts 1907, c. 209, as required by section 24, mandamus was the proper remedy to compel the board to take such action.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Mandamus, Cent. Dig. §§ 158-160; Dec. Dig. § 76.*]

Appeal from Superior Court, Edgecombe County; Cooke, Judge.

Mandamus by the State, on relation of T. H. Battle and others, against the City of Rocky Mount and others. Judgment for relators, and defendants appeal. Affirmed.

This is a suit for a writ of mandamus, brought by certain citizens of the city of Rocky Mount, to compel its board of aldermen to elect a recorder, as required to do by the Acts of 1907, ch. 209, §§ 24, 25, 26, and 27, in order that a recorder's court may be established and organized according to the terms of the said act, which sections provide as follows:

"Sec. 24. That a special court for the trial of misdemeanors is hereby established, and said court shall be known as the 'recorder's court of Rocky Mount.'

"Sec. 25. That said recorder's court shall be a court of record, and shall be presided over by a recorder, who shall be a bona fide resident and a duly qualified voter of said city, and shall be elected by the board of aldermen of said city at the meeting to be held on the Thursday next succeeding the election for mayor and aldermen, to be held on the first Monday in May, one thousand nine hundred and seven, and biennially thereafter; and such recorder shall hold his said office for a term of two years from the date of his said election and until his successor shall be duly elected and qualified. Pending such election and so long thereafter as the board of aldermen shall fail to fill said office by the election of a recorder, the mayor of said city shall be ex officio recorder, and as such shall exercise every power conferred upon and perform every duty imposed upon such recorder by this act.

"Sec. 26. That whenever the board of aldermen of said city shall, in accordance with the provisions of the preceding section, elect a recorder, said board shall likewise proceed to elect a vice recorder, who shall possess the same qualifications and hold office for the same term as the recorder; and said vice recorder shall enter upon and discharge the duties of the office of recorder whenever the recorder, on account of sickness, absence from the city or other good and sufficient cause, shall be unable to do so, and he shall for the time be clothed with every power conferred by law upon the recorder: Provided, that so long as the mayor of said city shall be ex officio recorder the mayor pro tempore shall be ex officio vice recorder, and as such shall be clothed with every power conferred by law upon such vice recorder.

"Sec. 27. That the recorder's court shall hold daily sessions in the court room of the municipal building in said city, and shall possess every power in the regulation and ordering thereof usually possessed by other courts of record in like cases."

The defendants have never complied with the requirements of this act, nor taken any steps to do so, contending that it was left entirely to their discretion whether to fill the office of recorder or permit the mayor to act as recorder, and the mayor pro tem. as vice recorder, and they thought it best for the interests of the community to continue the old régime. The judge of the superior court, Hon. Chas. M. Cooke, did not agree with defendant's counsel in this construction of the act, and adjudged that the writ of mandamus be issued. Defendants excepted and appealed.

F. S. Spruill, for appellants. L. V. Bassett, for appellees.

* For other cases see same topic and section NUMBER in Dec. Dig. & Am. Dig. Key No. Series & Rep'r Indexes

WALKER, J. [1] We concur with the learned judge in his conclusion of law and in his judgment. The act of 1907 is plainly mandatory. A recorder's court is established by the act, with detailed provisions for the exercise of the jurisdiction conferred upon it. It was clearly intended by the Legislature that the board of aldermen should, at their May meeting, next after the passage of the act, elect a recorder. There is not even the scintilla of a discretion given to the board so far. The Legislature had the power to pass the act, and it evidently knew precisely what it wanted to do, and expressed itself to that end in unambiguous words, and, being composed of fine grammarians, it conveyed its meaning to the board in the imperative mood, which is generally supposed to carry a mandate with it. In every section of the act the word "shall" is used to show that the Legislature intended that the board should execute its will and not its own. As an auxiliary, the word "shall" implies a duty or necessity, whose obligation is derived from the person speaking and is equivalent to an order or direction to do the particular thing, and excluding all idea of discretion or the exercise of the will of the person addressed, so that he may do it or not as seems to him best. He is simply commanded to do it, and his only duty, which, of course, is obligatory, is to obey. The mandate could not be more imperatively given than it was in this case, and why the intelligent gentlemen should have thought otherwise we are at a loss to know. Public duties are imposed to be performed and not to be neglected. It was not the purpose of the Legislature to decide who should be elected as recorder, for that was left to the choice of the board, but in all other respects they are left without any discretion in the matter. It has even been held that, when the word "may" is used in a statute, "it will be construed to mean 'shall' or 'must,' when public interests or rights are concerned, and when the public or third persons have a claim de jure that the power shall be exercised. And, conversely, the word 'shall' may be understood as equivalent to 'may' when no right or benefit to any one depends upon the imperative use of the term." Black Int. of Laws (1896) p. 338; Jones v. Commissioners, 137 N. C. 579, 50 S. E. 291; 36 Cyc. 1159; 2 Lewis' Sutherland, Stat. Con. (2d Ed.) §§ 637, 638, 640.

How could there be a recorder's court, under the terms of this act and in view of its evident intent, without a recorder? The provision for the mayor to fill any original vacancy was inserted for the purpose of keeping the office full until there could be an election, or to supply a vacancy occurring from any other cause until a recorder could be elected, as in case of death or resignation. It was not the purpose of that provision to enable the defendants to nullify the act of the Legislature, or to set at naught its declared will. The meaning of the statute is clear, and, where there is no ambiguity, there is no room for construction, and the intention must be gathered from the words employed. U. S. v. Wiltberger, 5 Wheat. 76, 5 L. Ed. 37; U. S. v. Hartwell, 6 Wall. 386, 18 L. Ed. 830; State v. Barco, 150 N. C. 792, 796, 63 S. E. 673; Fortune v. Commissioners, 140 N. C. 322, 52 S. E. 950; State v. Eaves, 106 N. C. 752, 11 S. E. 370, 8 L. R. A. 259; Adams v. Turrentine, 30 N. C. 147, 150. "The meaning and intention of the legislature (and its will) must be sought first of all in the language of the statute itself; for it must be presumed that the means employed are adequate to the purpose, and do express that will correctly." Black, Inter. of Laws (1896) § 25; U. S. v. Goldenberg, 168 U. S. 96, 18 Sup. Ct. 3, 42 L. Ed. 394; Hamilton v. Rathbone, 175 U. S. 421, 20 Sup. Ct. 155, 44 L. Ed. 219. As a corollary of the foregoing proposition, it follows that: "If the language of the statute is plain and free from ambiguity, and expresses a single definite and sensible meaning, that meaning is conclusively presumed to be the meaning which the Legislature intended to convey. In other words, the statute must be interpreted literally." Black, § 28. The purpose of this court always has been, as shown by its decisions, and ever will be, not to defeat the intention of the Legislature by a forced interpretation, but to construe its enactments so as to execute its will with punctilious regard for its sovereign right, delegated by the people, to make the law. We say what it is, but they say what it shall be, and, when the will of that body is declared, it becomes the duty of every citizen, and every official, to obey it. The defendants cannot escape the discharge of the duty enjoined upon them by the plea that, having failed to act at the day fixed in the act, they are discharged altogether from its performance, and thus, by their own willful wrong and neglect of duty, acquit themselves of responsibility.

[2] The duty is a continuing one, time not being of the essence of the obligation imposed upon them, and the courts will compel them to do, at any time, what they have failed to do at the proper or appointed day. Any other doctrine would put it in the power of a delinquent officer to defeat the legislative will and repeal a law, and would be nothing less than monstrous. Grady v. Commissioners, 74 N. C. 101; McCormac v. Commissioners, 90 N. C. 441; 2 Lewis' Sutherland, Stat. Construc. (2d Ed.) § 612-16; Black, Inter. of Laws (1896) 343; Julland v. Rathbone, 39 N. Y. 369.

[3] This much upon the preliminary matters. The other question in the case is whether mandamus will lie to compel obedience to the law. The rule as to this point is that: "Where the duty to be performed is judicial or involves the exercise of discretion upon the part of the tribunal or officer, mandamus will lie to compel such tribunal to take some action in the premises and exercise its judgment or discretion. But the function of the writ is merely to set in motion. It will not direct how the duty shall be performed or the discretion exercised. To do so would be to substitute the judgment and discretion of the court issuing the mandamus for that of the court or officer to whom it was committed by law. No particular act can be commanded, and, if the discretion is to act or not to act at all, mandamus will not lie. After the tribunal or officer has exercised the judgment or discretion vested in him, and has acted, mandamus will not lie for the purpose of reviewing the decision and compelling a change of judgment or any further action in the premises. The writ cannot be used for the correction of errors. If, however, such judgment or discretion is abused, and exercised in an arbitrary manner, mandamus will lie to compel a proper exercise thereof. So, where the law has limited the discretion of a board or officer, mandamus may be used to keep such board or officer within the limits of such discretion. If by reason of a mistaken view of the law or otherwise there has been in fact no actual and bona fide exercise of judgment and discretion, as for instance, where the discretion is made to turn upon matters which, under the law, should not be considered, mandamus will lie. So where the discretion is as to the existence of facts entitling the relator to the thing demanded, if the facts are admitted or clearly proved, mandamus will issue to compel action according to law. If the law involved is purely ministerial and not judicial or discretionary, and if the duty itself is imperative, specific, and well defined, mandamus will lie not only to compel performance, but in a particular and specific manner. But the duty must be clearly and unmistakably enjoined by law, so that its performance does not involve the exercise of any judgment or discretion." 19 Am. & Eng. Enc. of Law (2d Ed.) 732-741, and numerous cases cited in the notes.

This view of the law was adopted by us in Barnes v. Commissioners, 135 N. C. 27, 47 S. E. 737, where the subject is fully discussed, with a copious array of the authorities in this and other jurisdictions. We there said: "While it is proper by mandamus to set them (the commissioners) in motion and to require their action upon all matters officially intrusted to their judgment and discretion, the courts will in no manner interfere with the exercise of their discretion nor attempt by mandamus to control or dictate the judgment to be given." And again: "If the defendants had neglected or refused to execute the power intrusted to them, we certainly might call upon them to show cause why they had been so negligent, and upon insufficient return might have issued a peremptory mandamus. Here all we could do would be to command them to select the site for the permanent seat of justice for the county, according to law"—citing and quoting from State ex rel. Hill v. Bonner, 44 N. C. 257. Advancing a little beyond this proposition and entering the domain of their discretion, for the purpose of ascertaining and marking the line beyond which the court will not go in ordering a mandamus, which may incidentally control discretion, we said: "It is sufficient for us now to hold, as we do, that the commissioners still have a discretion, and while this discretion must be exercised in a manner fair, candid, and unprejudiced, and not arbitrary, capricious, or biased, much less warped by resentment or personal dislike, it cannot (otherwise) be controlled by mandamus. The court can only insist on a conscientious judgment being used in the exercise of the power of choosing or rejecting, but cannot itself exercise the power nor substitute its own conscience for that of the board or its own sense of fitness for the approval or disapproval of that other tribunal, for to do so would be in direct violation of the statute. But this does not mean that they may use this discretion for the purpose of advancing or vindicating their own views or opinions upon the general policy of selling liquor. This policy has been settled by the decision of the Legislature and a vote of the people, to which they must yield a ready obedience, and the discretion must therefore be exercised by them in strict submission to this declared policy, and with scrupulous regard to the right of the applicant to have a fair and impartial hearing and a just decision, whether for him or against him, and, subject to those limitations, they are (virtually) a law unto themselves."

The rule may be thus briefly stated: Mandamus extends to all cases of neglect to perform an official duty clearly imposed by law, when there is no other adequate remedy. While the court may not control the official discretion of the board, it may compel the reluctant officers to exercise it, and, while it cannot direct them in what manner to decide, it may set them in motion and require them to act in obedience to law. Atty. Gen. v. Newell, 85 Me. 246, 27 Atl. 110. So, in the case at bar, the duty to proceed to this election, in the manner pointed out, is not a matter of discretion nor dependent upon the judgment of either branch of the government or of the members of either branch. If it were so, there could be no remedy by mandamus. The court does not attempt to control the judgment and discretion of the individual members when assembled in the choice then to be made. But it may properly, by mandamus, require the two branches to meet in convention, as a required preliminary step to the election of some one to this office. Otherwise the anomaly would arise of a minority of those who must constitute the convention being able to defeat an election if they are only a majority of either branch. See, also, Morse, Petitioner, 18 Pick. (Mass.) 443; Lamb v. Lynd, 44 Pa. 336; Strong, Petitioner, 20 Pick. (Mass.) 484; King v. Norwich, 1 Barn. & Ad. 310; Gibbs v. Hampden, 19 Pick. (Mass.) 298; Rex v. Cambridge, 4 Burr. 2008.

The law will not countenance or condone any attempt to defy its mandate. The private citizen must obey the law, and the public officer is not exempt from this duty by any special privilege appertaining to his office. He is not wiser than the law, nor is he above it. The truth is that, if he willfully neglects or omits to perform a public duty, he is liable to indictment at common law. State v. Commissioners, 4 N. C. 419, 6 Am. Dec. 567; State v. Williams, 34 N. C. 172; State v. Commissioners, 48 N. C. 399; State v. Ferguson, 76 N. C. 197. If the neglect, omission, or refusal to discharge any of his official duties is willful and corrupt, it is criminal misbehavior and subjects him to indictment for a misdemeanor and punishment by fine or imprisonment, and, as a part of the penalty, to removal from office. Pell's Revisal, § 3592, and note.

It is usual to issue an order to show cause or an alternative writ, ex parte, and in the first instance, in order that the respondent may explain his conduct; but where sufficient facts are admitted, and the special matters pleaded in defense are not a bar to the relief, there is no reason why a peremptory writ should not be sent out. There is no issue of fact to be tried, and the court acts at once and finally upon the admissions of the parties, if they entitle the plaintiff to the writ. This board should no longer be permitted to defy the Legislature and obstruct the due and orderly administration of justice. A peremptory writ commanding the recusant defendants to perform an official duty clearly defined by the law, and which should be well understood by them, is demanded by a just regard for the free will of the people and the regular and decorous conduct of the government, as well as by the dignity and majesty of the law and the peace and tranquility of society. Atty. Gen. v. Newell, 85 Me. 250, 27 Atl. 110. If this statute is undesirable or unsuited to the needs of that community, the board of aldermen are not, for that reason, authorized to disregard it, but an appeal to the Legislature is the only remedy. The members of the board must meet and comply with the mandate of the law; that is their plain duty, and, if they fail to perform it, the law will punish their disobedience and enforce obedience to the legislative will in some other effectual way. They must act, and we will compel them to do so, though we cannot dictate or control their choice. A peremptory writ of mandamus will issue, commanding the board to meet at once and proceed to comply with the requirements of the law.

As this is a matter in which the public has an interest, and as compliance with the law has been so long delayed, we will follow the well-defined precedents and enter judgment here, requiring the writ to issue from this court. But we are sure that, upon being informed of this opinion and the conclusion of the court upon this appeal, the defendants will at once comply with the law and elect a recorder. For this purpose, the execution of the judgment will be stayed until November 1, 1911, and, if there has been an election in the meantime, the clerk of the court will not issue the writ, but certify the judgment of this court, with a copy of this opinion, to the court below, as is usual in other appeals. If for any valid and sufficient reason a further stay is desired, or the usual certificate should be issued, without retention of the case here, an order to that effect, modifying this judgment, may be entered, upon application after notice to the opposing party. The practice of retaining the case here and issuing the writ from this court is well settled. Corporation Commission v. Railway, 137 N. C. 1, 49 S. E. 191, is directly in point, and the several cases of like import are cited therein. In Caldwell v. Wilson, 121 N. C. 473, 28 S. E. 562, the court said: "The judgment must therefore be affirmed; but, in view of the public interests involved, we deem it proper not to remand the case, but to enter final judgment in this court." See, also, White v. Auditor, 126 N. C. 584, 36 S. E. 132; Revisal, § 1542; Rules 49, 50, and 51 of this court (140 N. C. 670, 671, 66 S. E. xi).

No error,

(156 N. C. 340)

IN RE FOWLER'S WILL.

(Supreme Court of North Carolina. Oct. 18, 1911.)

EVIDENCE (§ 251*)—ADMISSIONS—PERSONAL REPRESENTATIVES.

The declaration of an executor, made either before or after the will is probated and he has qualified, that he unduly influenced testator to make the will is not competent as evidence against the legatees and devisees, because not jointly interested with him.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Evidence, Dec. Dig. § 251.*]

Appeal from Superior Court, Harnett County; Whedbee, Judge.

Proceedings by J. P. Jackson for the probate of the will of J. M. Fowler, deceased, in which G. R. Fowler and others appeared as caveators. From a judgment for the caveators, the propounder appeals. Reversed, and new trial ordered.

Douglass, Lyon & Douglass and J. C. Clifford, for appellant. E. F. Young and R. L. Godwin, for appellees.

*For other cases see same topic and section NUMBER in Dec. Dig. & Am. Dig. Key No. Series & Rep'r Indexes

WALKER, J. The question in this case can be briefly stated, and, while it is almost of first impression in this state, its novelty is not of that kind which awakens our surprise, rather than challenges our most respectful and careful consideration. Is the declaration of an executor, either before or after the will is probated and he has qualified, that he unduly influenced and compelled the testator to make the will competent as evidence against the legatees and devisees, for the purpose of invalidating the will? That is the point in the case. The question presented is thus stated in the brief of the propounder's counsel: "(1) The court erred in admitting the declarations of J. P. Jackson (who was named as executor in the will), after the death of the testator, to the effect that he forced the testator to change his will and make it as he wanted it. (2) The court admitted evidence of the declarations of the said J. P. Jackson, which were made prior to the execution of the will, to the effect that he was going to have the said testator change his will, so that it would be like he (the said Jackson) wanted it to be. (3) The court erred in admitting as evidence alleged declarations of the testator that the said J. P. Jackson (at some time not named) had threatened to turn him out of his home."

We are unable to see how the rejected evidence can be competent. There are decisions in other courts which seemingly give some color to the contention of the caveators, but when they are examined and considered with reference to their special facts, if they can be said to conflict with our views, the reasons given in favor of this kind of evidence are more apparent than real. In a certain, and sometimes in a qualified, sense, an executor may be considered as standing in the place of the testator and his creditors, and he may also be said to represent the devisees and legatees in some respects, but for the purpose of destroying or even impairing their interest in the estate the ordinary rule applies that they are not bound by what he says or does. He then occupies a position of antagonism to them, and his declarations should be no more binding upon them than if he had been an entire stranger. Where a man declares against his own interest, the law admits the declaration as against him, because "self-interest induces men to be cautious in saying anything against themselves, but free to speak in their own favor. We can safely trust a man when he speaks against himself, and the law, in this instance, substitutes for the sanction of a judicial oath the more powerful one arising out of the sacrifice of a man's own interests. This natural disposition to speak in favor of, rather than against, interest is so strong that when one has declared anything to his own prejudice his statement is so stamped with the image and superscription of truth that it is accepted by the law as proof of the correctness and accuracy of what was said, and the fact that it was against interest is taken as a full guaranty of its truthfulness in place, not only of an oath, but of cross-examination as well; they being the usual tests of credibility." Smith v. Moore, 142 N. C. 277, 55 S. E. 275, 7 L. R. A. (N. S.) 684. The law must take account of the strength (or the frailty, as some may think) of human nature, and decide that "he that sweareth to his own hurt and changeth not" is worthy of trust and confidence, and that, because it is against himself, what he says is entitled to our belief; self-interest and the motive not to swear falsely to his own injury supplying the ordinary tests of the law, by which the reliability of human testimony is assured—the oath and cross-examination, and, we add, the demeanor of the witness on the stand. Ivat v. Finch, 1 Taunton, 141; Lyon v. Ricker, 141 N. Y. 225, 36 N. E. 189; Bowen v. Chase, 98 U. S. 254, 25 L. Ed. 47; and the leading case of Higham v. Ridgeway, 10 East, 109 (3 Smith's Lead. Cases [9th Am. Ed.] 1). But the declaration must be against interest, and should be free from suspicion.

The executor, in this case, had no joint interest with the legatees or devisees; his interest consisting solely in his right to manage the estate and to receive the emoluments; that is, the commissions arising therefrom. In all other respects his interest was entirely distinct and separate from that of the legatees, and there is therefore no valid reason why he should be permitted to speak for them, or to bind their interests by what he may have declared. It seems that he had influence over the testator—a very potent one—and his declarations, if competent, are sufficient to warrant a finding by the jury of undue influence, as he had the power to subdue the will of the testator to his own; but the vital question is, Does the law authorize him to speak for and conclude those who have no joint interest with him? We think not, and the best-considered authorities we believe to be against the competency of such evidence. It is undoubtedly true that the declaration of the executor would be competent against him to show that he is unworthy of the trust reposed in him, and therefore should be removed from his office and deprived of its emoluments; but to permit him to prejudice the rights of others acquired independently of his, and several in their nature, might open the door to fraud, and would shock our sense of justice and right, and this court has virtually held that such declarations are not admissible to invalidate a will, where the interests of the declarant and the beneficiaries under the will are not joint, and there is no relation of privity between them. The court says, in Linebarger v. Linebarger, 143 N. C. 229, 55 S. E. 709, quoting from Shaller v. Bumstead, 99 Mass. 112, that, "admitting, for the present, that any interest in a will obtained by undue influence cannot be held by third persons, however innocent of the fraud of the person procuring it, still it by no means follows that the interest of the other innocent legatees should be liable to be divested by the subsequent statements of the parties procuring the will. Such a rule would violate all sense of right, and is not sustained by the decisions. The admissions of a legatee, made prior to the date of the execution of the will, are rejected for the reason that, if made before he becomes a legatee, they are not declarations against his interest"—citing 1 Underhill on Wills, 163. The very question was raised in Shaller v. Bumstead, supra, and the court held the declarations of the executors, Hayden and Shaller, to be incompetent for unanswerable reasons stated by Judge Colt in the opinion, which need not be repeated here. It was said by him that such declarations stand upon the same ground as those made by a legatee, which are surely not admissible against any other innocent legatee or devisee, thereby making our case of Linebarger v. Linebarger, supra, a direct authority against the ruling of the lower court in this case, by which the declarations were admitted.

The case of In re Will of Mary Ames, 51 Iowa, 596, 2 N. W. 408, is an interesting and instructive one, and, besides, very comprehensive in the scope of the decision actually made, as it embraced both classes of declarations, those of a legatee, as well as those of the executor, and they were held to be incompetent; the court saying: "The general rule of law consonant with reason is that one person is not to be prejudiced by the unauthorized declarations of another. The exceptions to this rule are found in those cases where there is a joint interest or privity or design between several. In such cases each is presumed to speak for the whole; but where there is neither joint interest nor combination, when each claims independently of the other, though under a common instrument, the words of one, no more than his acts, can bind the other. The interests of these devisees and legatees under the will are several, and not joint; and hence the three who would impeach it were bound, on principle, to produce evidence that was competent against all the rest. The evidence was not competent as to the three daughters named as legatees, and therefore was properly rejected. This conclusion is as clear on authority as on reason." Numerous authorities are cited in support of the ruling by which the declarations were excluded. Another expression of the court in that case is very pertinent to this discussion: "The reasoning of the authorities to which we have referred must, we think, work the exclusion of a declaration of an executor who is a legatee and a party to the record, where other legatees may be adversely affected by the declaration. The circumstance of his being executor and a party will not authorize him to manufacture evidence against other devisees, or to affect them by his declaration."

In Blakey v. Blakey, 83 Ala. 611, it was said: "It is the settled law of this court that the declarations and acts of a proponent, who is not the sole legatee, are not admissible in evidence to defeat the probate of the will."

Underhill, in his work on Wills (vol. 1, § 163), thus states the result, after an examination of the authorities: "Upon the question whether a declaration of a legatee, made after the execution of a will, is admissible to show that it was procured by undue influence, there is a conflict of authority. The majority of the cases reject such evidence, reasoning on general principles that no one should be concluded by the unauthorized statements of others with whom he is in no way associated or identified in interest. The admission of a legatee is evidence against the will, where he is the sole beneficiary under it. But the interests of legatees under a will are several, not joint. Each claims independently of the others, and his interests should not be affected by the acts or declarations of the other legatees. The same reasoning will be applicable to bring about the rejection of the declarations of an executor, offered for the purpose of showing undue influence. No privity of interest or community of purpose exists between him and any legatee which will admit his declarations to impeach the will whence the legatee derives a benefit." The cases holding such declarations to be competent are not well sustained by the reasons given, and some of them may be explained by restricting the evidence to the declarant himself, or upon the ground that he and the other parties, legatees or devisees, had what was considered to be a joint interest, or had conspired to defeat the will.

Our conclusion is that the court erred in admitting the declarations of J. P. Jackson, the executor, and for this error a new trial is ordered.

New trial.

(156 N. C. 316)

BELL v. CAROLINA POWER & LIGHT CO.
(Supreme Court of North Carolina. Oct. 18, 1911.)

MASTER AND SERVANT (§ 287*)—INJURIES TO SERVANT—NEGLIGENCE—QUESTION FOR JURY.

In an action for injuries to a servant by being knocked from the wall of a tank by the sudden movement of a derrick pole, which he had been sent to straighten, resulting from the foreman's direction to other employes to move the pole, whether defendant was negligent held for the jury.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Master and Servant, Dec. Dig. § 287.*]

Appeal from Superior Court, Wake County; Whedbee, Judge.

Action by R. H. Bell against the Carolina Power & Light Company. Judgment for defendant, and plaintiff appeals. Reversed.

This is an action to recover damages for personal injuries. The plaintiff alleges that he was an employé of the defendant, and that he was injured negligently, while performing a duty in obedience to an order of his superior. The defendant admitted that the plaintiff was in its employment, but denied negligence on its part, and alleged that the plaintiff was injured by his own negligence.

The defendant was engaged in building a large tank, and at the time of the injury was endeavoring to raise a derrick pole, which was to be used in hoisting material for the tank. The tank was about 42 feet long, 16 feet wide, and 10 feet deep, and was divided into three compartments, of equal size, by two walls 12 inches wide; the bottom being of concrete. The pole was about 58 feet long, and about 16 to 18 inches in diameter at the larger end. It was lying across the tank; the larger end projecting about 6 feet over the end of the tank next to the hole, where it was to be placed, and the smaller end about 15 feet over the other end of the tank. It was not parallel with the sides of the tank, the larger end being nearer one side of the tank, and the smaller nearer the other side.

The pole was what is known as a "derrick pole," and was to be placed in a hole outside of the tank, to be used in hoisting material. A rope was fastened around the pole about 10 or 12 feet from the larger end, and this rope extended to a snatch block, fastened to a pole, and then about 15 feet, where at the time of the injury it was in the hands of four or five employés of the defendant. A line dropped from the smaller end of the pole approximately locates the snatch block, and from that point the rope extends in a southeastern direction. The rope was to be used in raising the pole.

The plaintiff offered evidence tending to prove that he was ordered by the foreman of the defendant to go on one of the 12-inch division walls and straighten the pole; that in obedience to the order he took a scantling and went on the wall; that he had the scantling under the pole, pushing it straight, in full view of the foreman, when the foreman suddenly and without warning to him, directed the other employés to pull on the rope; that this order was obeyed, the pole was raised several feet, turned towards him, and knocked him off the wall; and that he fell on the cement floor and was injured. At the conclusion of the evidence, his honor, on motion of the defendant, entered a judgment of nonsuit, and the plaintiff excepted and appealed.

Douglass, Lyon & Douglass, for appellant. J. H. Pou and R. H. Battle & Son, for appellee.

ALLEN, J. (after stating the facts as above). In our opinion there was evidence of the defendant's negligence for the consideration of the jury, and this is the only question before us. We express no opinion as to its weight, and forbear to discuss it further than is necessary to indicate upon what ground this decision rests, as the case is to be tried before a jury, whose verdict should be rendered uninfluenced by an expression of opinion on the facts by this or any other court.

The evidence on a judgment of nonsuit must be considered in the light most favorable to the plaintiff, and for the purposes of this appeal we must accept as proven the facts which the evidence reasonably sustains. There is no suggestion in the record that the plaintiff was injured by the negligence of a fellow servant, and the defendant admits that Stewart was in charge of the hands and the work.

The evidence tends to show that the defendant was handling a heavy pole 58 feet long, resting on the top of walls 10 feet from the ground; that it was the purpose of the defendant to raise the pole by means of a rope and place it in a hole; that the rope was fastened to the pole, and extended to a snatch block, and then extended some distance, where it was held by employés of the defendant; that the pole was not in the right position; that the foreman ordered the plaintiff to go on top of one of the division walls, 12 inches wide, and force the pole into position by using a scantling; that the plaintiff obeyed the order, and had the scantling under the pole, pushing it, when the foreman, who was in full view, suddenly and without notice to the plaintiff gave the signal which caused the employés of the defendant, who had hold of the rope, to pull it; and that this carried the pole towards the plaintiff, knocked him from the wall, and injured him.

If so, there was evidence that a man of ordinary prudence could have foreseen that injury would probably result to the plaintiff by obedience to the signal, and that giving the signal was the cause of the injury, and this would be evidence of negligence. The place where the rope was fastened to the pole, the direction of the snatch block, and the position of the men who pulled the rope were also circumstances which the jury could consider. The case falls within the principle declared in Beal v. Fiber Co., 154 N. C. 157, 69 S. E. 834.

*For other cases see same topic and section NUMBER in Dec. Dig. & Am. Dig. Key No. Series & Rep'r Indexes

There was error in ordering a nonsuit, and there must be a new trial.

New trial.

(156 N. C. 259)

SOUTHERN INV. CO. v. POSTAL TELEGRAPH-CABLE CO.

(Supreme Court of North Carolina. Oct. 18, 1911.)

1. CONTRACTS (§ 312*)—BREACH—ACTIONS OF TORT-FEASOR.

In the absence of specific stipulation, where one has entered into enjoyment of a right, conferred by contract, an interference by a tort-feasor with such enjoyment is not imputable to the grantor, so as to make him liable for breach of contract.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Contracts, Dec. Dig. § 312.*]

2. TENANCY IN COMMON (§ 50*)—GRANT OF RIGHT BY ONE TENANT.

A telegraph company and a railroad company having become tenants in common for a period of years of poles along the railroad right of way, for the purpose of a telegraph system, to serve both the public and the railroad, the telegraph company could not, in the absence of specific provision in their contract conferring the power, and without permission of its cotenant, the railroad company, give a telephone company right to place wires thereon for telephone purposes.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Tenancy in Common, Cent. Dig. § 124; Dec. Dig. § 50.*]

3. TENANCY IN COMMON (§ 50*)—CONTRACT BY TENANT IN COMMON—BREACH—INTERFERENCE BY COTENANT.

A telegraph company, tenant in common with a railroad company of telegraph poles, having by contract, for valuable consideration, undertaken, alone, to grant to a telephone company a revocable license to use the poles for telephone wires, and the delivery and enjoyment of the privilege being interfered with and prevented by the railroad company, having right to do so, there is a breach of the contract by the telegraph company, making it liable for damages.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Tenancy in Common, Dec. Dig. § 50.*]

4. APPEAL AND ERROR (§ 1066*)—HARMLESS ERROR—INSTRUCTIONS.

The court having been authorized to instruct that under the evidence there was a breach of the contract, any error in instructing that under certain conditions there was a breach was not prejudicial to defendant.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Appeal and Error, Dec. Dig. § 1066.*]

5. DAMAGES (§ 124*)—MEASURE—BREACH OF CONTRACT.

For breach of defendant's contract, granting plaintiff the privilege of putting telephone wires on a line of telegraph poles, the breach being after plaintiff had the materials ready to put on the poles, and preventing his doing so, the expenses of proper preparations to carry out the contract, including cost of survey and the freight charges for delivering the material along the route, and the loss incident to purchase and resale of material, where it could not be used to advantage or otherwise disposed of, being within the reasonable contemplation of the parties and capable of ascertainment with a reasonable degree of certainty, are recoverable.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Damages, Cent. Dig. §§ 328-338; Dec. Dig. § 124.*]

6. DAMAGES (§ 124*)—MEASURE—BREACH OF CONTRACT—NOMINAL DAMAGES.

Though the contract by which defendant, one of the tenants in common of telegraph poles, granted to plaintiff the privilege to put telephone wires thereon, stipulated that it might be terminated by either party on 30 days notice, and such a notice was given by defendant, yet, the contract having been breached, before the giving of the notice, by defendant's tenant in common preventing, as was its right, the use by plaintiff, plaintiff is not restricted to nominal damages, but may recover the damages suffered before the giving of the notice, at least before it became effective.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Damages, Dec. Dig. § 124.*]

Appeal from Superior Court, Beaufort County; O. H. Allen, Judge.

Action by the Southern Investment Company against the Postal Telegraph-Cable Company, for breach of contract. From a judgment on a verdict for plaintiff for $1,000, defendant appeals. Affirmed.

R. C. Strong and W. B. Rodman, for appellant. Small, MacLean & McMullan, for appellee.

HOKE, J. On the trial it appeared that, on or about February 1, 1909, plaintiff, a corporation "owning and operating a telephone line and system" into and out of New Bern, Washington, Farmville, and Greenville, N. C., being desirous of extending the same to Wilson and Raleigh, N. C., and intermediate points, entered into negotiations with defendant corporation, with a view of securing a right or license to use, for the purpose indicated, a line of poles to said points, placed along the right of way of the Raleigh & Pamlico Sound Railroad Company, and in which defendant had acquired an interest, by contract with the latter company, and, on May 1, 1909, a written contract, properly executed, was made between plaintiff and defendant, by which said defendant, in consideration of $376 per annum, payable semiannually in advance, granted to plaintiff, termed in the contract "licensee," the right to attach to said poles along said route two wires, to be used only as telephone wires, and for no other purpose, together with necessary brackets, insulators, etc. This agreement contained a further stipulation to the effect that the same could be terminated by either party on giving to the other 30 days written notice of such intent, and in which case the licensee should have the privilege of removing said wires, fixtures, etc. It appeared, further, that the interest of defendant company, a corporation doing a telegraph business, was acquired and set forth in a written contract, duly executed, entered into between said defendant and the Raleigh & Pamlico Sound Railroad Company in August, 1905, by which the two contracting parties were to own said poles as tenants in common for 25 years, and on termination of the contract the telegraph company had the right to remove the wires and fixtures placed by that company, and the poles and such wires as the railroad company had placed to be and remain as the property of the railroad. This latter contract contained express provision for two wires, to be used in the telegraph business, with the right and privilege of either to place additional wires and fixtures thereon as the said business might require, and also made minute specifications as to user of said wires in doing telegraph work for railroad business and for the general public, and as to the different duties and burdens imposed upon the two contracting parties in the operation and maintenance of the line. It was further made to appear that the rights and interests of the defendant railroad company in the railroad, its franchise, the right of way, and the said poles thereon were subsequently acquired and held by the Norfolk & Southern Railroad, which last-mentioned road, by proceedings had, was, at the time of the alleged breach of contract between plaintiff and defendant, and at the time same was made, in the hands and control of receivers appointed by the federal court.

There was evidence on the part of plaintiff tending to show that, as soon as the contract between plaintiff and defendant had been duly made and executed, payment of the first installment of rent having been postponed by mutual consent of the parties, the plaintiff proceeded to purchase and distribute along the railroad line the necessary equipment and material to construct the plant and install the telephone system as contemplated and provided by the contract, and made an effort to affix the wires to the poles, when it was interfered with and the work stopped by the receivers, claiming the right to do so, and plaintiff was forced to give over its purpose and dispose of the material purchased at considerable loss. On this question, H. Susman, a witness for plaintiff, testified that the material and equipment purchased was fit for the line to Wilson and Raleigh, but could not be used on the portions of line already constructed, and he was forced to sell it at considerable loss, which, with the freight paid for its delivery along the route and preliminary work, reasonable and necessary in preparation, amounted to $1,398. It appeared, further, that the receivers were resisting the right of defendant company to any other or further use of the poles, and had filed a petition in the cause, praying that the road be relieved of the stipulations of their contract with defendant; and, further, that when it was disclosed that the action of the receivers would operate to prevent plaintiff from exercising the rights and privileges granted in the contract between plaintiff and defendant said defendant, on June 9, 1909, gave due notice in writing that it elected to terminate its contract in 30 days from said date, etc.

On these, the controlling facts relevant to the inquiry, the defendant assails the validity of plaintiff's recovery, contending (1) that no breach of contract has been shown; (2) that in any event, the damages should be only nominal; but, in our opinion, neither position can be sustained.

[1] Undoubtedly, as insisted on by defendant, it is a correct general proposition that, in the absence of specific stipulation, where one has entered into the enjoyment of a right conferred by contract, an interference with such enjoyment on the part of a tortfeasor is not imputable to the grantor. The authorities cited by defendant are apt in support of that position. Hulest v. Marx, 67 Mo. App. 418; Moore v. Weber, 71 Pa. 429, 10 Am. Rep. 708; Underwood v. Birchard, 47 Vt. 308; but no such case is presented here. On the contrary, it appears that the receivers of the railroad are contending that the road should no longer be bound in any way by the terms of the contract between the defendant and the railroad, and have filed a petition that the same be set aside.

[2] But, without reference to the ultimate determination of the questions involved in that proceeding, and assuming that the defendant's position is sustained, and that their contract with the railroad holds, we find nothing in it which confers upon defendant the right to make the contract upon which plaintiff has brought suit. A perusal of that agreement will disclose that under its provisions this defendant and the railroad, or its successors and assigns, became tenants in common of these poles for the term of 25 years, for the purpose of operating a telegraph system along this route, to serve both the general public and the railroad company. Specific stipulation is made for two wires, in the first instance, and the right and privilege of either of contracting parties to affix additional wires as its business might require; interchangeable duties and burdens are provided for between the contracting parties, in reference to the operation of the system and the maintenance and repair of the line, its wires, and fixtures, etc. In such case, and in the absence of specific provision conferring the power, and without permission given by its cotenant, the defendant had no right to grant to plaintiffs, in furtherance of a disconnected and separate business, the privilege of affixing two telephone wires to these poles, and of imposing this additional burden upon the owners. Murray v. Haverty, 70 Ill. 818; Marshall v. Trumbull, 28 Conn. 183, 73 Am. Dec. 687; Hutchinson v. Chase, 39 Me. 509, 63 Am. Dec. 645; 4 Kent's Commentaries, pp. 508-513. In Hutchinson's Case, supra,

Rice, J., delivering the opinion, said: "The general rule seems to be well settled that one tenant in common cannot, as against his cotenant, convey any part of the common property by metes and bounds, or even an undivided portion of such part. Bartlet v. Harlow, 12 Mass. 348 [7 Am. Dec. 76]; Peabody v. Minot, 24 Pick. [Mass.] 329; Griswold v. Johnson, 5 Conn. 366; Smith v. Benson, 9 Vt. [138, 81 Am. Dec. 614]. The reason is obvious. His title is to an undivided share of the whole, and he is not authorized to carve out his own part, nor to convey in such a manner, as to compel his cotenants to take their shares in several distinct parcels, such as he may please. Great Falls Co. v. Worcester, 15 N. H. 412. Even though his deed may bind him by way of estoppel, as against the cotenants, such deed is inoperative and void. 4 Kent's Commentaries, 368. Though tenants in common are, in legal contemplation, all seised of each and every part of the estate, still they are not permitted to do acts which are prejudicial to their cotenants." And further: "As one tenant in common cannot convey the entire estate, or the whole of any portion thereof, or give a valid release for injuries done thereto, so, too, and for the same reasons, he cannot subject the common property to particular servitudes, by which the rights of his cotenants will be affected. These servitudes, or easements, must be created by the owner, and one tenant in common cannot establish them, upon the common property, without the consent of his cotenant. 3 Kent's Com. 436; 2 Hillard's Abr. 118. Such, also, is the rule of the civil law. He who has the property of an estate only in common with others, without any division of the several shares, cannot subject any part of it to a service without the consent of all his copartners; and any one of them may hinder it, until the estate being divided into shares, every one may impose a service on his own share, if he think fit. And likewise he who possesses in common, and undivided, a portion of the land or "tenement to which the service is so due, cannot by himself free the land or tenement which owes the service; but the service remains for the portions of others. For these services are for every part of the land or tenement to which they are due, and every one of the proprietors has an interest in the service for his own portion."

[3] This, we think, being the correct principle, whether the right which defendant undertook to grant plaintiff be considered a lease, as argued, an easement, or revocable license (and we think it clear that it was the latter), there has been a breach of contract on the part of defendant. For valuable consideration, defendant has made a binding agreement, granting to plaintiff a license which he had no right to make; the delivery and the enjoyment of the privilege has been interfered with and prevented, not by a tort-feasor. but by one having right, and on authority plaintiff should be allowed to recover. Kerrison v. Smith, L. R. Q. B. Div. 1897, p. 445; Smart v. Lewis, 109 E. O. L. p. 717; Despeaux v. De Lano, 71 N. J. Law, 280, 59 Atl. 10. And in our own reports the case of Sloan v. Hart, 150 N. C. 269, 63 S. E. 1037, 21 L. R. A. (N. S.) 239, 134 Am. St. Rep. 911, is in recognition of the same general principle.

[4] The court, therefore, committed no error to defendant's prejudice in charging the jury, on the question of breach of contract, as he did, in effect, that defendant was responsible if plaintiff was interrupted in the enjoyment of the rights bargained, by reason of litigation and difficulties arising between the railroad and defendant, and of which defendant had knowledge at the time it made the contract. In our view, he might well have told the jury, if they believed the evidence, there had been a breach of contract.

[5] On the question of damages, his honor, in general terms, charged the jury that if a breach of contract was established the plaintiff was entitled to recover the damages incident to the wrong, which were in the reasonable contemplation of the parties, and more specifically, and to the extent they were in such contemplation, they could allow the reasonable costs and expenses incurred by plaintiff in making proper preparation to carry out the contract, including cost of survey, the freight charges paid in delivering the material along the route, and the loss incident to purchase and resale of material, where the same could not be used to advantage or otherwise disposed of, etc. Subject to the well-recognized rule stated by the court that damages must be such as were in the reasonable contemplation of the parties, and capable of ascertainment with a reasonable degree of certainty, a recovery for breach of contract is allowed as compensation for the loss sustained (Hassard-Short v. Hardison, 114 N. C. 485, 19 S. E. 728; Hale, Damages, pp. 38, 39), and plaintiff, having been induced by defendant's wrong to make this outlay, the amount should be made good to him.

[6] And we may not approve the position earnestly insisted on by defendant that plaintiff should be restricted to nominal damages, by reason of notice given that defendant elected to terminate the contract in 30 days; the argument being that, as plaintiff would, in any event, have had to take down and remove the material in that time, he suffered no actual loss. This position rests upon the theory that the contract had been carried out and the notice duly given according to its terms, the resultant damage in such case being necessarily and entirely speculative; whereas, in fact and truth, the contract had been broken when the notice was given, and the damages claimed had been already suffered, certainly so before the notice ever became effective. This, too, is the correct view to take of Kivett v. McKeithan, 90 N. C. 106, in its application to the facts, an authority much relied on by defendant. In that case it was held "that a parol license, relating to land, either voluntary or supported by valuable consideration, may be revoked by the owner, without incurring liability in damages, when notice is given and reasonable opportunity afforded to remove the improvements put up thereunder." It will be noted that the decision proceeds upon the theory that no actionable wrong had been committed, and on that ground no damages were allowed. In our case a breach of contract has been established, and under correct rulings damages therefor have been properly awarded. There is no error, and the judgment for plaintiff is affirmed.

No error.

(156 N. C. 375)

L. HARVEY & SON v. PETTAWAY.

(Supreme Court of North Carolina. Oct. 18, 1911.)

1. GAMING (§ 50*)—FUTURES—CONTRACT.

Plaintiffs, who were dealers in spot cotton, bought 25,000 pounds of lint cotton, to be delivered to them by defendant at a certain depot in J., on or before December 31, 1909, at a specified price. The contract provided that, if defendant failed to deliver any or all of the cotton, he agreed to pay plaintiffs the difference between the price specified and the price of middling cotton in K. at noon on December 31, 1909, on the amount not delivered, and that plaintiffs might purchase such cotton at such time and place, and charge defendant with the difference between the agreed price and the price paid. Held, that such provision did not necessarily indicate that it was the intention of both parties that the cotton should not be delivered and that the contract should be discharged by payment of differences, so that it was not a gambling contract as a matter of law.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Gaming, Cent. Dig. § 103; Dec. Dig. § 50.*]

2. SALES (§ 418*)—DAMAGES—DIFFERENCE IN VALUE.

While the legal rule for computing damages in case of breach of a contract for the sale of a commodity is the difference between the contract price and the market price at the place of delivery on the date provided therefor, it is competent for the parties to agree on the market price at another place as the governing market price, if done in good faith.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Sales, Dec. Dig. § 418.*]

Appeal from Superior Court, Lenoir County; Peebles, Judge.

Action by L. Harvey & Son against C. A. Pettaway. From a judgment sustaining a demurrer to the complaint, plaintiffs appeal. Reversed.

Rouse & Land, McLean, Varser & McLean, and Loftin & Dawson, for appellants. Duffy & Koonce and G. V. Cowper, for appellee.

BROWN, J. The action is brought to recover damages for failure to deliver 25,000 pounds of cotton according to the terms of a written contract. The plaintiffs allege that for many years they have been and still are dealers in spot cotton. They then set up and make a part of their complaint a contract, which contains the usual provisions for the sale of 25,000 pounds of lint cotton, to be delivered to plaintiffs at "A. C. L. depot, Jacksonville, N. C.," on or before December 31, 1909, at a price therein mentioned. Then follows the following clause upon which arises the vital question in this appeal: "Should the party of the second part fail to deliver any or all of said 25,000 pounds of cotton, then he hereby agrees to pay said L. Harvey & Son the difference between the price herein agreed upon and the price of middling cotton in Kinston at noon on December 31, 1909, on the quality said party of the second part fails to deliver, and that L. Harvey & Son may purchase such cotton at said time and place, and charge said party with the difference between the herein agreed price and the price so paid." There are two grounds of demurrer, but only one is relied upon in defendant's brief.

[1] It is contended by the learned counsel for defendant that the clause quoted is conclusive evidence that the contract is a gambling contract on its face and therefore void. We cannot concur with them. There is nothing on the face of this contract which necessarily indicates that it was the intention of both parties that the cotton should not be delivered, and that the contract should be discharged only by payment of the difference between the contract and the market price. The language of the opinion in Rankin v. Mitchem, 141 N. C. 277, 53 S. E. 854, is applicable to this contract: "The insertion of the last clause cannot be said to be conclusive evidence of the intention of both parties that the contract should be discharged only by a payment of the difference between the contract price and the market price of the cotton on the day fixed for delivery. That being so, the matter is to be settled by ascertaining the real underlying intention of the parties to the contract. Was it the intention of both parties to the contract that the cotton should not be delivered? Was it their purpose to conceal in the terms of a fair contract a gambling, in which the parties contemplated no real transaction as to the article to be delivered? This purpose and underlying intent his honor properly left to the jury, the contract not being a gambling one on its face."

This case is cited and approved in Edgerton v. Edgerton, 153 N. C. 169, 69 S. E. 54, where it is said that "the form of the contract is not conclusive in determining its validity, when it is a sale, as being founded upon an illegal consideration, and as having been made in contravention of public policy. * * * The true test of the validity of a contract for future delivery is whether it can be settled only in money, and in no other way, or whether the party selling can tender and compel acceptance of the particular commodity sold, or the party buying can compel the delivery of the commodity purchased. The essential inquiry in every case is as to the necessary effect of the real contract and the real intention of the parties." Edgerton v. Edgerton, 153 N. C. 168, 69 S. E. 53; 20 Cyc. 930; Williams v. Carr, 80 N. C. 295; State v. McGinnis, 138 N. C. 724, 51 S. E. 50; State v. Clayton, 138 N. C. 732, 50 S. E. 866; Bibb v. Allen, 149 U. S. 481, 13 Sup. Ct. 950, 37 L. Ed. 819; Sampson v. Camperdown Mills (C. C.) 82 Fed. 836; Dillaway v. Alden, 88 Me. 236, 33 Atl. 981; Cleage v. Laidley, 149 Fed. 352, 79 C. C. A. 284; Berry v. Chase, 146 Fed. 630, 77 C. C. A. 161; Thompson v. Williamson, 67 N. J. Eq. 219, 58 Atl. 602; Kingsbury v. Kirwan, 77 N. Y. 612.

[2] The provision in this contract to pay damages in case of failure to perform it is nothing more than the law would award upon its breach without any specific agreement. It is true the legal rule would be the difference between the contract price and the market price at Jacksonville on December 31, 1909, the date fixed for delivery, while the contract fixes the price at Kinston. The parties had the right to agree upon Kinston as the place at which the market price is to be fixed, if done in good faith. Certainly this slight difference between the measure of damages allowed by law and that stipulated in the contract is not alone sufficient to stamp it as a gambling contract.

The defendant will be allowed to answer.

Reversed.

(156 N. C. 347)

EDGERTON et al. v. KIRBY et al.

(Supreme Court of North Carolina. Oct. 18, 1911.)

1. MANDAMUS (§ 174*)—ISSUES OF FACTS—TRIAL.

Under Revisal, § 824, requiring mandamus to be continued until jury trial of any issues of fact, suit to compel township road commissioners to meet to fill a vacancy was properly transferred for jury trial, where an issue of fact was raised as to the existence of a vacancy.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Mandamus, Cent. Dig. §§ 386, 387; Dec. Dig. § 174.*]

2. MANDAMUS (§ 72*)—SUBJECTS OF RELIEF—PUBLIC OFFICIAL DUTY.

Generally, mandamus lies to compel a public officer to do a mandatory duty, but not to control exercise of discretion given him.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Mandamus, Cent. Dig. § 134; Dec. Dig. § 72.*]

3. MANDAMUS (§ 1*)—WHEN PROPER REMEDY.

Mandamus is an extraordinary remedy and lies only in cases of necessity.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Mandamus, Cent. Dig. §§ 1-3; Dec. Dig. § 1.*]

4. MANDAMUS (§ 7*)—NATURE OF REMEDY—DISCRETION.

Mandamus is so far a prerogative writ that it may be granted or withheld according to a judge's sound judgment, but the discretion is judicial and not arbitrary, and where there is a right and no adequate remedy, should not be denied.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Mandamus, Cent. Dig. § 5; Dec. Dig. § 7.*]

Appeal from Superior Court, Johnston County; Peebles, Judge.

Action by N. E. Edgerton and others against Charles F. Kirby and others. From an order transferring the cause for jury trial, defendants appeal. Affirmed.

This is a suit for mandamus to require the defendants, except defendant Green, to meet with the plaintiffs and to elect the seventh member of the board of road commissioners of Selma township. The complaint alleges that after M. C. Winston, the seventh member of said board, resigned, the six remaining members met, and, there being a tie vote (three voting for defendant Green and three voting for H. E. Earp), the chairman, N. E. Edgerton, being doubtful as to his power to break the tie, the meeting was adjourned. It is further alleged that the three defendant commissioners thereafter met with the defendant W. A. Green, and undertook to perform the duties of road commissioners of Selma township, and that the defendant Green has no right or title to said office, being a usurper thereof in palpable disregard of the law, that his holding the same is merely colorable, and that he should be removed from the office so unlawfully usurped by him. The complaint further demands that the other defendants shall be required by the court to meet at the call of the chairman and elect and induct the seventh commissioner into office, and a prayer accordingly is inserted in the complaint. The defendants answered the complaint and alleged that the defendant W. A. Green is holding the office of road commissioner of Selma township, that he was elected at the first meeting of the board, when M. C. Winston resigned, by a vote of three in favor of Green and two in favor of Earp. The matter came up for hearing before Hon. R. B. Peebles, judge, upon motion of the plaintiffs, under section 824 of the Revisal, to transfer the case to the superior court at term for trial of the issues thus joined between the parties, whereupon the following order was entered: "The court being of the opinion that the whole matter depends upon whether W. A. Green got three votes and his adversary got two votes in the meeting of the board of road commissioners of Selma township held on May 6, 1911, the motion of the defendants is denied, and defendants except and appeal to the Supreme Court. Plaintiffs move and request that the issue raised by the pleadings as to the number of votes received by said Green and Earp be submitted to a jury at the next term of the superior court of Johnston county, which convenes on the 11th day of September, 1911, upon the pleadings herein filed. This motion is granted, and it is ordered that this action be and the same is hereby transferred to the superior court of Johnston county for trial by jury at the September term, 1911, of said court." Defendant excepted and appealed.

Abell & Ward, for appellants. Aycock & Winston, for appellees.

WALKER, J. [1] The order of Judge Peebles was correct. There was nothing else for him to do, except what he did, in view of the express provision of the statute (Revisal, § 824) requiring the judge, when an issue of fact is raised by the pleadings, to continue the action until it can be tried by a jury upon the issue thus joined between the parties. Such an issue was plainly and directly raised by the pleadings. Plaintiffs alleged that W. A. Green was never legally elected a member of the board of road commissioners, but is an usurper of that office without the shadow of right or title to it, and they ask that he be so declared, and that the three defendant commissioners be required to meet in joint session with plaintiffs and elect the seventh commissioner to fill the vacancy created by the resignation of M. C. Winston, in order that the business of the board may be transacted. Defendant squarely denies the allegation and, on the contrary, avers the truth to be that W. A. Green was duly elected a commissioner by a majority vote and is entitled to hold the office and exercise its functions. This presents a preliminary issue to be determined before we reach the question whether the plaintiffs are entitled to a mandamus for the purpose of compelling the three defendant commissioners to meet with them to elect the seventh commissioner and complete the personnel of the board. If the jury find that W. A. Green was duly and lawfully elected, then there is no necessity for a mandamus, unless he and his codefendants should refuse to meet with the plaintiffs and discharge the duties imposed upon the board by law. We will discuss and decide that question when we come to it, and not prematurely and perhaps unnecessarily. The case of Rhodes v. Love, 153 N. C. 468, 69 S. E. 436, so much relied on by the appellant, does not, we think, have any present bearing upon the case. Whether it will or not, if the jury find that W. A. Green was not duly elected a member of the board, is a matter upon which we prefer not to express an opinion, at this time, for it may become a moot question.

[2] It may be said, generally, that, if a public officer fails to perform his legal duty to the public, mandamus will lie to compel him to do so, if it is a mandatory one, but not to control the exercise of a discretion given to him, for it is the nature of a discretion in certain persons that they are to judge for themselves, and therefore no court can require them to decide in a particular way or review their judgment by way of appeal, or by any proceeding in the nature of an appeal, since the judgment of the persons, to whom the discretion is confided by law, would not then be their own, but that of the court under whose mandate or compulsion they gave it. Attorney General v. Justices of Guilford, 27 N. C. 315; Barnes v. Commissioners, 135 N. C. 27, 47 S. E. 737. If W. A. Green was not elected, the six members of the board must meet and elect a successor to W. A. Green, and, in other respects, proceed with the business of the board.

[3] "A mandamus lies only for one who has a specific legal right, and who is without any other adequate legal remedy." 1 Chett. Gen. Pr. 790; State v. Justices, 24 N. C. 430. It is an extraordinary remedy, and the court will not grant it unless in a case of necessity. Why should we issue the writ in this case, where the necessity for it may never arise? But how can we determine that the necessity exists, until we hear from the jury and are informed as to the facts? The point as to when the writ will lie where there is discretion is sharply accentuated by Tapping in his work on Mandamus, star p. 15, where he says: "The writ does not lie to command the justices to license a victualer to sell ale, notwithstanding it was suggested that the refusal proceeded from a mistaken view of their jurisdiction, and also notwithstanding a very strong case of partiality was made out, for it is a matter entirely within their discretion. The proper course in such a case is to move for a criminal information; nor does it lie to rehear an application for license which they have refused because of a mistaken notion as to the law." As to the power of a court of general jurisdiction to issue a mandamus for the purpose of controlling the discretion of a public officer, the cases of U. S. v. Seaman, 17 How. 225, 15 L. Ed. 226, and Gaines v. Thompson, 7 Wall. 347, 19 L. Ed. 62, may well be consulted, for they state the doctrine with clearness and accuracy. They deny the power where there is a discretion left to the officer as to how he will perform the duty, and so we have held.

[4] It has been said that, in this country, the writ of mandamus has not been regarded as a prerogative one, as in England, according to Blackstone, their great commentator, and yet, even here, it so far partakes of the nature of a prerogative writ that the court has the power to issue or withhold it, according to its sound judgment, and if the writ, in its consequences, would manifestly be attended with hardship and difficulties, the court may, and even should, refuse it, but this discretion lodged in the court is not an arbitrary one; it is a judicial discretion, and when there is a right, and the law has established no adequate and specific remedy, this writ should not be denied. Prop. of St. Luke's Church v. Slack, 7 Cush. (Mass.) 226; Tapping on Mandamus, p. 18. This author says that in no case does the writ lie "to compel a tribunal, judicial or administrative, to render any particular judgment or decision, or to set aside one already rendered, but only to enforce the performance of a ministerial or mandatory duty. The writ is appropriate to compel subordinate courts or bodies (or even individuals, in a restricted class of cases) to proceed and determine matters pending before them and properly within their cognizance or jurisdiction; but it cannot compel them to do that which the law leaves them to decide according to their best judgment and discretion. Tapping, pp. 35, 36. The plaintiff must try other ordinary remedies before he resorts to this unusual writ of compulsion. Reg. v. Hull & Selby Railway, 6 Q. B. R. 70 (Patterson, J., one of the greatest of the judges of the King's Bench, delivering the opinion of the court, in the absence of the Chief Justice). It seems that the duty which is asked to be performed must be mandatory, before the court will send out so drastic a writ. It cannot be said, in this case, that every sufficient remedy of the law has been exhausted. In fact, the plaintiff is not even on the threshold of obeying that principle which requires that every other remedy should be tried, and that all preliminary questions of fact should be decided, before the court will listen to his prayer for this extraordinary writ. It is seldom needed and rarely granted. The citizen must perform his duty to the public, both as a simple member of society and as a public officer; and, if he fails in the latter capacity to do what the law requires of him, he cannot only be compelled by mandamus to do his duty, but he is criminally liable for not performing it. Where the law reposes discretion, it excludes the writ of mandamus as a means of controlling it, and leaves it to be exercised freely and untrammelled, save by the injunction that the officer must perform the duty required of him, honestly and fairly.

No error.

(156 N. C. 267)

CHAS. S. RILEY & CO. v. W. T. SEARS & CO., Inc., et al.

(Supreme Court of North Carolina. Oct. 18, 1911.)

1. CORPORATIONS (§ 566*)—INSOLVENCY—PRIORITY OF CLAIMS—WAGES.

Under Revisal 1905, § 1206, providing that on the insolvency of any corporation the wages due to laborers in the employment of such corporation shall be a first lien on its assets for wages due for work done within two months next preceding the proceedings in insolvency, a judgment for wages, declaring a prior lien on the corporation's assets, has a priority over the rights of a creditor who has purchased part of its property and given bond to pay prior liens on the corporation's assets, and may be paid by the receiver of the money in his hands or collected from the purchaser on his bond.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Corporations, Dec. Dig. § 566.*]

2. APPEAL AND ERROR (§ 1097*)—LAW OF THE CASE—SECOND APPEAL.

Questions well within the scope of a former appeal cannot be raised upon a second appeal.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Appeal and Error, Cent. Dig. §§ 4353-4363; Dec. Dig. § 1097.*]

Appeal from Superior Court, New Hanover County; Peebles, Judge.

Action by Chas. S. Riley & Co. against W. T. Sears & Co., Incorporated, and its receiver. Heard on motion made in the cause. Judgment for defendants, and plaintiffs appeal. Affirmed.

See, also, 154 N. C. 509, 70 S. E. 997.

Herbert McClammy, for appellants. Keenan & Stacy and E. K. Bryan, for appellees.

HOKE, J. On the hearing it appeared that this was an action by Riley & Co., holding a large claim against Sears & Co., Incorporated, secured by mortgage on part of the assets, to dissolve the debtor corporation and distribute the assets, according to law. In the progress of the cause, sale was had of a large portion or all of the property, and Chas. S. Riley & Co., creditor and mortgagee, became the purchaser at the price of $15,000, and after paying $2,000, an amount ascertained to be due under a mechanic's lien, gave bond in the sum of $13,000, conditioned to pay such further claims as might be established and declared as prior liens on the corporation assets. It further appeared that certain persons, claiming to be creditors, by reason of wages due for labor performed for said corporation within two months before proceedings instituted, filed their petitions in the cause, asserting such claim, and, the same being resisted by plaintiffs, at May term, 1910, of said superior court, an issue was submitted, and it was duly established that the petitioners were due from defendant corporation certain specified amounts as wages for work and labor and within the 60 days, etc. Judgment was therefore formally entered for these amounts, declaring same a prior lien on the property of the corporation. The receiver was directed to pay the full amount of these claims out of any moneys on hand, and if not sufficient amount on hand for the purpose that he collect same from plaintiffs, Chas. S. Riley & Co., and on the bond given, as stated. Plaintiff appealed from this order to the Supreme Court. The appeal was dismissed at fall term, 1910, and this action of Supreme Court having been certified down, plaintiff made further resistance to the order, claiming that payment of the claims embodied in the former judgment cannot now be properly made by reason chiefly of certain actions of tort, now pending against defendant corporation, and which might also be declared liens on the assets. The court below, being of opinion that plaintiffs' position was untenable, gave further directions that the receiver proceed to collect the judgment, and plaintiffs excepted and again appealed to this court.

[1] Our statute in reference to these claims (Revisal, § 1206) provides that in proceedings of this character the wages due to "laborers and workmen and all persons doing labor or service, of whatever character, in the regular employment of such corporations, shall be a first lien upon the assets for the amount of wages due them, respectively, for their work rendered within two months next preceding the date when proceedings in insolvency shall be instituted." And if this were a question now open to plaintiff, the statute and authoritative interpretations of it would seem to be against plaintiffs' position. Trust & Deposit Co. v. Fisher, 200 U. S. 38, 26 Sup. Ct. 186, 50 L. Ed. 367; Cox v. Lighting & Power Co., 152 N. C. 164, 67 S. E. 477; Railroad v. Burnett, 123 N. C. 210, 31 S. E. 602; Dunavant v. Railroad, 122 N. C. 1001, 29 S. E. 837; Coal Co. v. Electric Co., 118 N. C. 232, 24 S. E. 22. But the position is not open.

[2] At a former term of the court, the question as to the amount of these claims and their priority as liens upon the assets were investigated, and both the amount and the liens and the priority of same were fully established. Judgment to that effect was formally entered and signed by the presiding judge, and plaintiffs' appeal from such judgment, as heretofore stated, was regularly and formally dismissed. The questions which plaintiffs now seek to raise were, no doubt, fully considered and passed upon when the former judgment was entered; certainly they were well within the scope of the inquiry, and in such case we have repeatedly held that a litigant is concluded, and cannot raise the same questions upon a second appeal. Roberts v. Baldwin, 155 N. C. 276, 71 S. E. 319; Holley v. Smith, 132 N. C. 36, 43 S. E. 501; Perry v. Railroad, 129 N. C. 333, 40 S. E. 191.

There is no error, certainly, which gives plaintiff any just ground of complaint in entering the second judgment, simply that the receiver proceed to collect the money required to pay these claims. This will be certified, that appropriate measures be taken to enforce obedience to the judgment of the court.

Affirmed.

(156 N. C. 269)

JOHNSON v. CITY OF RALEIGH.

(Supreme Court of North Carolina. Oct. 18, 1911.)

1. MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS (§ 763*) — STREETS, SIDEWALKS, ETC.—MAINTENANCE —DUTY.

The governing authorities of a city must keep its streets, sidewalks, drains, and culverts in reasonably safe condition, so far as it can be done by using proper and reasonable care and continuing supervision.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Municipal Corporations, Cent. Dig. §§ 1612-1615; Dec. Dig. § 763.*]

2. MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS (§ 821*) — STREETS, SIDEWALKS, ETC.—LIGHTS.

As affecting a city's liability for injury to a pedestrian, who stepped into a hole in a street, absence of light at the place was not negligence per se, but only a relevant fact on the issues whether the street was kept reasonably safe and whether the authorities properly performed their duty.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Municipal Corporations, Dec. Dig. § 821.*]

Appeal from Superior Court, Wake County; Whedbee, Judge.

Action by Lucy Johnson against the City of Raleigh. Judgment on verdict for defendant, and plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

Douglass, Lyon & Douglass, for appellant. W. H. Pace, for appellee.

HOKE, J. On the trial it appeared that on the night of February 5, 1910, plaintiff was crossing from her home on Bloodworth street to Barber's store, nearly opposite, and while near the sidewalk she fell into a hole, about 1½ to 2 feet in depth, and was injured; that just at the edge of the sidewalk, and nearly in front of the store, instead of an open gutter, a long box had been placed, "like a rabbit gum," as one of the witnesses described it, and covered over with dirt, and the hole had been caused, in all probability, by a wagon, in driving over or along this way, having crushed in the box. There was evidence on part of plaintiff tending to show that it was a dark night, with no light, or no sufficient light, on the street; that she crossed at the place where persons were accustomed to go; and that the authorities had actual notice of the existence of the hole in time to have remedied the defect, and, in any event, the same had been in existence for such a length of time that they should have known it, and had same properly repaired. The evidence on part of defendant tended to show that they had no notice or knowledge of the hole, and that same had not been there long enough to have enabled them to discover it in the exercise of ordinary care, and that there was adequate light at the cross street, a short distance away, etc.

[1] In the conflict of evidence, the court charged the jury in general terms that it was the duty of the governing authorities of a town to keep its streets, sidewalks, drains, and culverts in a reasonably safe condition, as far as this could be accomplished by the exercise of proper and reasonable care and continuing supervision, and under this rule submitted the issue of defendant's negligence to the jury on the question whether the authorities had notice or knowledge of the existence of the hole in time to have remedied the defect, or whether it had existed for such length of time that they should have discovered and repaired the same.

[2] In reference to the lights, the court, in effect, told the jury that the absence of lights at the place of the injury, if such condition existed, was not negligence per se, but was only a relevant fact on the determinative questions whether the streets were kept in a reasonably safe condition and whether the authorities had properly performed their duty concerning them, at the time and place of its occurrence.

We have carefully examined the record, and are of opinion that the charge is in accord with our decisions on the subject, and the case has been fully and fairly submitted to the jury. Revis v. City of Raleigh, 150 N. C. 353, 63 S. E. 1049; Kinsey v. Kinston, 145 N. C. 108, 58 S. E. 912; Fitzgerald v. Concord, 140 N. C. 110, 52 S. E. 309. And on the question of lights see White v. City of New Bern, 146 N. C. 447, 59 S. E. 992, 13 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1166, 125 Am. St. Rep. 476.

There is no error, and the judgment below must be affirmed.

No error.

(156 N. C. 275)

WALL et al. v. HOLLOMAN.

(Supreme Court of North Carolina. Oct. 18, 1911.)

1. TRESPASS (§ 52*)—TIMBER WRONGFULLY CUT—MEASURE OF DAMAGES.

The measure of damages for cutting and removing timber wrongfully, but in good faith, is the value of the logs at the place of severance, with interest from date, unaffected by enhancement of value through transportation, labor, etc., bestowed by the trespasser.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Trespass, Cent. Dig. §§ 137, 138; Dec. Dig. § 52.*]

On Motion to Dismiss.

2. APPEAL, AND ERROR (§ 773*)—ASSIGNMENTS OF ERROR—STATEMENT—SUFFICIENCY.

An appeal will not be dismissed for non-compliance with Supreme Court Rule 19, § 2 (66 S. E. vii), requiring all the exceptions relied on to be set out immediately after the statement of the case on appeal, where appellee was not prejudiced; there being only one exception taken, and that being stated in the record, though improperly.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Appeal and Error, Cent. Dig. §§ 3104-3110; Dec. Dig. § 773.*]

Allen and Walker, JJ., dissenting.

Appeal from Superior Court, Hertford County; Carter, Judge.

Consolidated actions by Mrs. Belle F. Wall and others against Luther H. Holloman. From a judgment for plaintiffs, defendant appeals, and appellees move to dismiss the appeal. Motion overruled, and judgment reversed.

The action is brought to recover for the wrongful conversion of certain sawmill logs cut from the Gatlin land, by Tully Gatlin, who transported them to the water at Sumner's Landing and there sold them to the defendant, Luther Holloman, for $84.07, admitted to be the value of the logs at the water. It is admitted that the logs measured 12,010 feet and were worth in the woods where cut and converted by Tully Gatlin $2 per 1,000 feet. Defendant before trial tendered judgment for $24 and costs. It is admitted that the plaintiffs, except Mrs. Wall, are entitled to recover the value of the logs in the woods or at the landing. His honor instructed the jury to award the latter sum as the measure of damages. Defendant excepted and appealed.

D. C. Barnes, for appellant. Winborne & Winborne, for appellees.

BROWN, J. [1] It is admitted that the logs were cut in good faith by Tully Gatlin under an agreement with Mrs. Wall, the life tenant of the Gatlin land, and that they were transported some distance and at considerable expense to the landing by Tully Gatlin and sold in good faith to defendant, a bona fide purchaser, without knowledge of any defect in the title. The only question presented relates to the measure of damages for the conversion of the timber.

If plaintiffs were suing Tully Gatlin for damages for a trespass upon the land, it is admitted they could recover no more than the value of the timber at the place of severance, where it was converted into a chattel together with any actual damage done the land in removing it therefrom. Gaskins v. Davis, 115 N. C. 85, 20 S. E. 188, 25 L. R. A. 813, 44 Am. St. Rep. 439; Dorsey v. Moore, 100 N. C. 44, 6 S. E. 270; Bennett v. Thompson, 35 N. C. 147.

There can be no doubt that, had plaintiffs brought an action in the nature of a claim and delivery for those logs at the landing, they would have been entitled to recover them as found, and the defendant would not have been entitled to any enhanced value by reason of the cost and expense of transporting them to the landing. This arises from the impracticability of giving the defendant the benefit of his labor. But where, as in this case, the owners of the logs voluntarily waive the right to reclaim them in specie, the difficulty of separating the enhanced value given to them by the labor of the trespasser in transporting them to the water no longer exists. "It is then," says the Supreme Court of Wisconsin, "entirely practicable to give the owner the entire value that was taken from him, which seems to be all that natural justice requires, without adding to it such value as the property may have afterwards acquired from the labor of the defendant." Weymouth v. Railroad, 17 Wis. 550, 84 Am. Dec. 763.

It is admitted that there are two rules for the admeasurement of damages in cases like this prevailing in the courts of this country—one the severe rule, which allows the defendant however innocent, nothing for enhanced value imparted to the chattel solely by his labor; and, the other, the lenient rule, which depends largely upon the intention or mala fides of the defendant, and, according to other authorities, upon the form of the action.

In referring to this the English author Mayne, in his work on Damages (page 488), says: "In America there is as usual a conflict"—quoting from both Kent and Story. In reference to the latter Mayne says: "On the other hand, Story, J., laid it down that the true rule is the value of the property at the market price at the time of the conversion, and this is the doctrine generally prevailing. Mr. Sedgwick takes same view." In the notes on same page the annotator to Mayne says: "The general rule in this country is that the measure of recovery is the market value of the property at the time of conversion with interest to the time of the trial"—citing a great many cases in support of his text.

Am. & Eng. Ency. p. 720, vol. 28, says: "The value of the property converted is to be estimated at the place of conversion." After adverting to the conflict of decisions, the editor says: "The better rule, which is now most generally recognized, is that where the original taking is without wrongful purpose or intent, and under the belief that the taker has a right to the property, the owner can recover only the unimproved value of the property; but, where the original taking was willful and without color or claim of right, the owner is entitled to recover the value of the property at the time of demand for its return and in its condition at that time, and in such a case it is not material that the wrongdoer has changed its character or by improvements greatly enhanced its value." Hale on Torts, 406-410, 417; 18 Cyc. 170; Cushing v. Longfellow, 26 Me. 310; Morgan v. Powell, 43 E. C. L. 734; Moody v. Whitney, 38 Me. 174, 61 Am. Dec. 239; Forsyth v. Wells, 41 Pa. 291, 80 Am. Dec. 617.

The last two cases were actions of trover, and hold that in such action where the property was converted in good faith by mistake the rule of damage should be the same as in trespass. The Pennsylvania case arose out of a conversion by mistake because of the uncertainty of boundaries, and the decision is based upon Baron Parke's judgment in Wood v. Morewood, 43 Eny. Com. Law, 810.

A very interesting and learned discussion of the subject will be found in Coal Co. v. Cox, 89 Md. 1, 17 Am. Rep. 525, where the cases are reviewed. Also, see Mining Co. v.

Hertin, 26 Am. Rep. 521, in the notes to which are collated a large number of cases sustaining our view.

We think the rule as laid down by the Supreme Court of Wisconsin in Weymouth v. Railroad, supra, is not only the better law and founded in principles of natural justice, but that it has received the distinct indorsement of this court in Gaskins v. Davis, supra, wherein the opinion is quoted from at length. This rule is founded upon the reasonable and just theory that, in the absence of willful wrongdoing, compensatory damages are intended as a pecuniary equivalent for the property lost by defendant's wrong and where property is lost, converted, or destroyed, the owner is compensated when he receives its full value in money.

The place where these logs were converted and taken from plaintiffs was in the woods at the time of severance. The enhanced value at the landing was imparted solely by the cost and expense of transporting them there. If between the time of severance and the date they were found at the landing the logs had increased in value from other causes, not imparted by the innocent trespasser's labor, plaintiffs would be entitled to recover such increased value; but no such claim is made in this case. It is not denied that the enhanced value arises entirely from the cost and expense of transportation to the water. Therefore we are of opinion that the plaintiffs are entitled to recover the value of 12,010 feet at $2 per 1,000 feet, the admitted value of the logs at the place of severance, with interest from that date.

Reversed.

On Motion to Dismiss Appeal.

[2] Appellee moves to dismiss the appeal for noncompliance with rule 19 (66 S. E. vii) in regard to assignments of error.

We are of opinion that the rule has not been fully complied with. Jones v. Railroad, 153 N. C. 419, 69 S. E. 427. But inasmuch as the appellant had the errors properly assigned, printed and attached to the record before the case was called, for reasons given by counsel and in the exercise of a sound discretion, we will not dismiss the appeal, as is usually done. Section 2 of rule 19 provides that "all the exceptions relied on, grouped and numbered, shall be set out immediately after the statement of the case on appeal." This assignment of errors must be a part of the transcript of appeal and embodied in it when sent to this court and printed so counsel for appellee can know what exceptions are relied upon and intended to be presented to the court and prepare accordingly. It is a rule which, when properly complied with, greatly facilitates the consideration of appeals. In this case the appellee has not been taken at any disadvantage, as there was only one exception taken on trial, and that was stated in the record but not properly stated.

Motion denied.

ALLEN, J. (dissenting). Tully Gatlin wrongfully cut timber trees on the lands of the plaintiff, and sold them to the defendant. The trees were worth $24.02 on the land after they were severed, and $84.07 at the time of sale to the defendant. The court is of opinion that the plaintiffs can recover $24.02, while I think they ought to recover $84.07. The amount involved is small, but the precedent to be established is important and may affect many transactions. It is for this reason I feel justified in stating the grounds of my dissent.

Four propositions are announced in the opinion of the court: (1) That in an action for conversion against the original trespasser, who has cut timber on the land of another, the measure of damage is the value of the trees on the land, after they have been severed. (2) That the owner of the land is not compelled to sue in conversion, but may follow the property and may reclaim the trees wherever he finds them, and although in the hands of a purchaser without notice. (3) That, if the owner elects to take the trees, he is not chargeable with any expense of cutting or transporting the trees, nor with any enhancement in value. (4) That the usual rule for the admeasurement of damages in actions for conversion is the value of the property at the time of the conversion. These principles seem to be well established, and are sustained by the authorities in this and other states; but, with great respect, I think they have been misapplied to the facts.

No authority is referred to in the opinion of the court which deals with the rights of the owner as against the purchaser. The plaintiffs here are not suing the original trespasser, but the purchaser from him, and there is no suggestion in the record that they had elected to sue for damages prior to the purchase by the defendant, or that they had abandoned their property in the trees. They are demanding damages of the defendant for his conversion, and, if we fix the time of the conversion, they are entitled to recover the value of the property as of that time.

Under the opinion of the court, the plaintiffs were the owners of and entitled to the possession of the trees at the time the defendant bought them. If so, the defendant bought the trees of the plaintiffs, and, by buying, converted them, and if it be conceded that there can be but one conversion, and the plaintiffs had done no act prior to the purchase by the defendants indicating an election to recover damages, and they had the right to recover the trees at the time of the purchase, the conversion then took place, and by the defendant. The person who sold the trees had committed a trespass, but it was with the plaintiffs to elect whether they would follow the trees or treat them as converted, and, until they exercised this right, no conversion had, in law, taken place. In other words, the theory upon which the law is administered in actions like this, as I understand it, is that the trespasser has wrongfully taken away the property of the owner, and that the owner may follow the property and reclaim it, or he may sue the trespasser for damages. If he sues the trespasser for damages and recovers, the title passes to the trespasser, and he may do with it as he pleases. If, however, the owner does not sue the trespasser, but elects to demand the property in specie, he may do so, and can recover it in the hands of an innocent purchaser. In both cases, that of the trespasser and the purchaser, there is an act of conversion; but the property has not been converted until the owner waives his right to the property itself by demanding its value in damages.

In the present case, the owner had the right to demand of the defendant the trees taken from his land. If he had done so, and there had been a refusal to surrender possession, can there be any doubt of the right of the owner to recover their value at the time of the refusal? If it should be held otherwise, and that he could only recover the value at the time of the severance of the trees on the land, the right of the owner of property would be dependent on the act of a wrongdoer, and not on his own consent. In the estimation of the law, the rule for which I contend can work no hardship, as the purchaser, if required to pay the value of the property, can recover the same amount from his vendor upon the implied warranty of title, which obtains in sales of personal property. On the contrary, to what results may the rule adopted by the court lead?

It may enable a wrongdoer to go upon the land of another and cut timber without the consent of the owner, and sell it for $84, and the purchaser gets a good title upon paying $24. That is the judgment of the court between the parties to this record.

It may also do a great injustice to the purchaser. Suppose the trespasser cuts timber worth $100 on the land after it is severed, and it deteriorates in value, and it is taken to market and is sold to a purchaser for its value at that time, $50. It is an old saying, and true, that "it is a poor rule that does not work both ways"; and under the rule adopted by the court the innocent purchaser must pay $100, the value of the trees when severed, for property worth $50.

There is eminent authority for the views I entertain. In Wooden Ware Co. v. United States, 106 U. S. 432, 1 Sup. Ct. 398, 27 L. Ed. 230, timber trees were cut on the lands of the government by a willful trespasser and sold to the Wooden Ware Company, "which was not chargeable with any intentional wrong or misconduct or bad faith in the purchase." The trees were worth $60.71 on the land after they were severed, and $850 at the time and place they were sold to the Wooden Ware Company. It was held that the government was entitled to recover $850, and the court says: "The timber at all stages of the conversion was the property of the plaintiff. Its purchase by defendant did not divest the title nor the right of possession. The recovery of any sum whatever is based upon that proposition. This right, at the moment preceding the purchase by defendant at Depere, was perfect, with no right in any one to set up a claim for work and labor bestowed on it by the wrongdoer. It is also plain that by purchase from the wrongdoer defendant did not acquire any better title to the property than his vendor had. It is not a case where an innocent purchaser can defend himself under that plea. If it were, he would be liable to no damages at all, and no recovery could be had. On the contrary, it is a case to which the doctrine of caveat emptor applies, and hence the right of recovery in plaintiff."

I would not be candid if I did not say that the court lays much stress on the fact that the original trespass was willful, and suggests that the rule might be different if it were not for this fact, but, in dealing with one who buys in good faith, I cannot see how the undisclosed motive of his vendor can affect him. In Wright v. Skinner, 34 Fla. 464, 16 South. 338, the Supreme Court of Florida says: "If the defendants are innocent vendees, without notice, of a willful trespasser, then the measure of damage against them would be the value of the logs at the time and place of their purchase thereof from such willful trespasser." In Nesbitt v. L. Co., 21 Minn. 491, the trees were cut on the land of the plaintiff without his permission, and sold to the defendant. The trees were worth $2.50 per M on the land, and $8 per M when sold to the defendant at Anoka. It was held that the plaintiff could recover $8 per M; the court saying: "That plaintiff did not lose his property in the logs by the wrongful removal of them is admitted. He was as much the owner of them at Anoka, where they were converted, as on his land, where they were wrongfully taken from him. This being so, his right to recover the logs themselves, or their value at the time and place of conversion, would seem to follow of course." The same principle is laid down in Tuttle v. White, 46 Mich. 487, 9 N. W. 528, 41 Am. Rep. 175.

For the reasons presented, and upon authority, I think the judgment should be affirmed.

WALKER, J., concurs in this opinion.

(156 N. C. 286)

GROGAN et al. v. ASHE et al.

(Supreme Court of North Carolina. Oct. 18, 1911.)

1. WILLS (§ 766*)—LEGACIES—ADEMPTION.

Where testatrix bequeathed one-third of $10,000 to G. for life, and, after her death, to her daughters, who should then be alive, or, if any were dead leaving issue, to her issue, the children taking the share of the parent, a gift by testatrix to G., during her lifetime of $2,500, to aid in constructing a home for G., did not adeem the legacy pro tanto, in the absence of proof that it was so intended.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Wills, Cent. Dig. §§ 1981-1985; Dec. Dig. § 766.*]

2. WILLS (§ 766*)—LEGACIES—ADEMPTION—TRANSFER OF PROPERTY.

A prior legacy may be adeemed by a payment or transfer of property to the legatee, made for that purpose by testator during his life, but whether he intended to so satisfy the legacy is a question of intention.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Wills, Cent. Dig. §§ 1981-1985; Dec. Dig. § 766.*]

3. WILLS (§ 770*)—LEGACIES—ADEMPTION—INTENTION—EVIDENCE.

Parol evidence is admissible to establish testator's intention to adeem a legacy by payment or transfer of property to the legatee in testator's lifetime.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Wills, Cent. Dig. § 1992; Dec. Dig. § 770.*]

4. WILLS (§ 766*)—LEGACIES—ADEMPTION—GIFT TO LEGATEE.

Where a bequest is made by one standing in loco parentis to the beneficiary, and subsequent thereto payments are made by the testator to the beneficiary equal to or less than the legacy, such payments are prima facie a complete satisfaction or a satisfaction pro tanto; but, if the testator does not stand in loco parentis, the payment does not prima facie have any relation to the prior legacy.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Wills, Dec. Dig. § 766.*]

5. WILLS (§ 770*)—LEGACIES—ADEMPTION—EVIDENCE—DECLARATIONS OF TESTATRIX.

Where testatrix bequeathed to G. $1,000 to "make her home comfortable according to her wishes," and testatrix borrowed $1,000 from a bank and paid it to G. during testatrix's life, evidence of her declarations when borrowing the money that G. and her husband were relatives to whom she expected to leave a bequest in her will, but, as they needed the money, testatrix would be glad if the bank from which it was obtained would loan it to them with testatrix as surety, which note, if not paid before testatrix's death, would be taken care of by the bequest intended for them, was admissible as showing testatrix's intention to satisfy the legacy.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Wills, Dec. Dig. § 770.*]

6. WILLS (§ 767*)—LEGACIES—ADEMPTION—SPECIFIC AND GENERAL LEGACIES.

A specific legacy is held to be adeemed when the testator has collected the debt, if the legacy consisted of specific notes, or has disposed of the devised chattels or stocks in his lifetime, whatever may have been his purpose in doing so, but, when a general legacy is given of a sum of money without reference to any special fund set apart to pay it, the intention of the testator is of the essence of ademption.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Wills, Cent. Dig. § 1986; Dec. Dig. § 767.*]

7. WILLS (§ 766*)—LEGACIES—ADEMPTION.

Where testatrix bequeathed a legacy of $1,000 to G. for the purpose of making her a comfortable home, and she testified that the proceeds of a $1,000 note were received by her from testatrix during her lifetime, and which her estate was compelled to pay for the specific purpose of assisting G. in building her home, there was an ademption of the legacy as a matter of law.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Wills, Dec. Dig. § 766.*]

8. EXECUTORS AND ADMINISTRATORS (§ 315*)—DISTRIBUTION OF ESTATE—ORDER OF COURT—PRESERVATION OF PROPERTY.

Where testatrix bequeathed a pecuniary legacy to G. for her life, and, after her death, to her daughters who should then be alive, or, if any were dead leaving issue, to such issue, the children taking the share of the parent, the court on distribution should make such orders and decrees as were necessary for the preservation of the principal of the fund and the payment of the income only to the legatee during her life.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Executors and Administrators, Dec. Dig. § 315.*]

Appeal from Superior Court, Wake County; Whedbee, Judge.

Action by Mary L. Grogan and others against S. A. Ashe and others, as executors of Henrietta Martin, to recover two legacies, one for $3,333.33 and one for $1,000, devised by defendants' testatrix to plaintiffs. From a judgment for plaintiffs as to the first legacy and for defendants as to the second, both parties appeal. Affirmed on both appeals.

At the conclusion of the testimony, it was agreed by the parties that his honor, acting for and instead of the jury, should answer the issues made by the pleadings, and that his answers should have the force and effect as if they were answered by the jury and no more, and should be subject to like objection, etc. His honor, after hearing the evidence, rendered his judgment, to which both parties excepted and appealed.

Aycock & Winston, for plaintiffs. R. H. Battle & Son, for defendants.

Defendants' Appeal.

BROWN, J. [1] It is admitted that in the second codicil of her will the testatrix devised one-third of $10,000 to "Mary Perkins Grogan for her life and after her death to her daughters who shall then be alive or if any be dead leaving issue, to her issue, the children taking the share of the parent." It is admitted that the legacy has not been paid to the plaintiffs, Mrs. Grogan and her daughters. The defendants, the executors, aver that at the time of the death of the testatrix she, said testatrix, had outstanding against her a note for $2,500 made to the People's National Bank of Winston, N. C., the proceeds of which note were obtained for the use of the plaintiff Mary, and for the benefit of her separate estate, and with the consent of her said husband, and that since the death of said testatrix said note has been paid by defendants at the suit of said bank, and defendants say that it was the intention of said testatrix that said note should be paid out of the legacy made in said codicil. The plaintiffs deny that said legacy was satisfied in the testatrix's lifetime or any part thereof, but aver that said $2,500 was a gift made to the plaintiff Mary P. Grogan to aid her in building a home while her aunt, the testatrix, was on a visit to her at Winston. The only evidence introduced was by the defendants. They proved by S. A. Ashe the payment of the $2,500 note out of the funds of the estate, and introduced the deposition of Mrs. Mary P. Grogan. The substance of her testimony is to the effect that the $2,500 was a gift, and so intended by the testatrix. Upon this evidence his honor adjudged that the legacy had not been adeemed.

[2, 3] A prior legacy may be adeemed or satisfied by a payment or transfer of property to the legatee made for that purpose by the testator during his lifetime. Gardner on Wills, 567. But whether the testator intended to satisfy a legacy during life by a subsequent gift made to the legatee is largely a question of intention. And parol evidence may be received to establish the plea. 1 Roper, 409; 2 Redfield, 539; Hopwood v. Hopwood, 7 House Lords, p. 741. In this case there is no evidence whatever that the $2,500 was intended as a satisfaction pro tanto of the legacy that had already been given in the will. The gift was to Mrs. Grogan, while the legacy was to her for life only and then to her daughters. There is no evidence of any declaration of the testatrix that she so intended the gift, nor are the defendants helped by any rule of presumption. The testatrix did not stand in loco parentis to Mrs. Grogan, and consequently no presumption of ademption arises.

[4] It has been held that where a bequest is made by one standing in loco parentis to the beneficiary, and subsequent thereto payments are made by the testator to the beneficiary equal to or less than the legacy, such payments are prima facie a complete satisfaction, or a satisfaction pro tanto. But, if the testator does not stand in loco parentis, such payment does not, prima facie, have any relation to the prior legacy. Gardner says that, although criticised, this doctrine has never been denied either in English or American jurisprudence. Wills, p. 569.

We are of opinion that there is no evidence that the testatrix intended the $2,500 as a pro tanto satisfaction of the legacy theretofore devised in the second codicil of her will to Mrs. Grogan and her daughters.

The judgment on defendants' appeal is affirmed.

Plaintiffs' Appeal.

BROWN, J. In item 8 of her will the testatrix devised $1,000 to Mary Perkins Grogan for the purpose of "making her home comfortable according to her wishes." This legacy has not been paid, and defendants aver that it has been satisfied in following manner, to wit: That shortly before her death testatrix borrowed from the Mechanics Savings Bank, of Raleigh, N. C., for the benefit of the plaintiff Mary Perkins Grogan, $1,000, and made her note therefor, along with plaintiff, said Mary Grogan, and her husband, J. S. Grogan, and with his written consent, signified by his joining in said note, and that the said $1,000 was received by the husband of said Mary P. Grogan as her agent and for her use and for the benefit of her separate estate, to wit, for the improvement of her home in Winston, and that it was the intention of said testatrix at the time of the transaction in procuring said money for Mrs. Grogan that the note given for the same should be paid out of the legacy to said Mary Perkins Grogan; that said note has been paid by defendants, and that such payment should be taken as a payment of the legacy. The plaintiffs reply, and admit that the testatrix borrowed the $1,000 as alleged by defendants, and that she paid it over to Mrs. Grogan, but they aver it was not intended by Mrs. Martin as an ademption and satisfaction of the thousand dollar legacy, and they further aver that Mrs. Grogan and her husband signed the note as sureties for the testatrix.

[5] The following evidence was introduced by defendants. Walter Durham testifies as follows: "I am cashier in a bank in Raleigh. I knew Mrs. Martin, the deceased." The $1,000 note is shown to witness, who states further: "Mrs. Martin applied for a loan, and said Mr. and Mrs. Grogan were engaged in building, and needed some money to complete the building, that they had applied to her for this money, and she did not have any money on hand. As they were relatives, she expected to leave them a bequest in her will, but, as it appeared that they needed the money at this time, she would be glad for the bank to make a loan of $1,000 on the note of Mr. and Mrs. Grogan, with herself as surety, which note, if not paid before her death, would be taken care of by the bequest she intended making them." The court admitted this evidence, and plaintiffs excepted. Mrs. Grogan admitted receiving this $1,000, but testified that it was given to her as a gift, that the testatrix signed the note as principal, that she and her husband signed it as sureties, and that the money was given to her to aid in the building of her home. Neither she nor her husband paid the note. We are of opinion that the testimony was competent and properly admitted as the declarations of the testatrix characterizing her act at the time, and manifesting her intention to satisfy the legacy already devised in her will. Taking the testimony of Durham as a true statement of the fact, which his honor sitting by consent as a trier of the facts as well as of the law did, it makes out a clear case of the ademption of the $1,000 general legacy to the plaintiff Mrs. Grogan.

[6] There is quite a difference between the ademption of a specific and a general legacy depending upon very different principles. A specific legacy is held to be adeemed when the testator has collected the debt (if the legacy consisted of specific notes) or has disposed of the devised chattels or stocks in his lifetime, whatever may have been his purpose in so doing. But when a general legacy is given of a sum of money, without regard to any especial fund set apart to pay it, the intention of the testator is of the very essence of ademption. Shaw, C. J., in Richards v. Humphreys, 15 Pick. (Mass.) 136, says: "The testator during his life has the absolute power of disposition or revocation. If he pay a legacy in express terms during his lifetime, although the term 'payment,' 'satisfaction,' 'release' or 'discharge' be used, it is manifest that it will operate by way of ademption, and can operate in no other way, inasmuch as a legacy during the life of the testator creates no obligation upon the testator or interest in the legatee, which can be the subject of payment, release, or satisfaction. If therefore a testator, after having made his will, containing a general bequest to a child or stranger, makes an advance, or does other acts which can be shown by express proof or reasonable presumption to have been intended by the testator as a satisfaction, discharge, or substitute for the legacy given, it shall be deemed in law to be an ademption of the legacy."

As we have shown in the opinion upon defendants' appeal in this case, all of the circumstances surrounding the case are to be considered, and parol evidence is admissible to aid in arriving at the testator's intention in making the gift or advancement. Carmichael v. Lathrop, 108 Mich. 473, 66 N. W. 350, 32 L. R. A. 232; In re Youngerman's Estate, 136 Iowa, 488, 114 N. W. 7. While declarations of the testator, made generally and at any time and place, are not generally admissible, these declarations of Mrs. Martin were made at the time she procured and advanced the money for Mrs. Grogan, and as such they are held to be competent as against the legatee because they characterize at the time the act of the testatrix, and are unmistakable evidence of her purpose and intention to give the thousand dollars in satisfaction of the legacy. 14 Ency. of Evidence, p. 486, and cases cited; Richards v. Humphreys, supra; 3 Elliott on

Ev. § 2087. These declarations made at the time of the advancement are not the only evidence of the purpose and intent of the testatrix. They are corroborated by the similarity in amount as well as purpose between the gift and the legacy as expressed in the will. This evidence, taken together, amply justifies the final judgment of the judge that "Mary P. Grogan is not entitled to recover the one thousand dollars given to her in item eight of the will of Mrs. Henrietta P. Martin."

[7] But assuming that the declarations of the testatrix are incompetent, and excluding them entirely from consideration, as matter of law upon the admitted facts, the thousand dollar legacy has been satisfied, and Mrs. Grogan, upon her own testimony, is not entitled to recover it. It is expressly declared in the will that this legacy is given to the legatee for the purpose of making her a comfortable home. Mrs. Grogan testifies that this thousand dollars (given to her by the testatrix long after the execution of the will) was given for the specific purpose of assisting her in building her home. Ademption, as a mode of payment or satisfaction of a legacy, is sometimes decreed as matter of law upon admitted facts. Thus it is very generally held that where a testator is given a legacy for a particular purpose, and afterwards gives the legatee the same sum for the same purpose, this is of itself an ademption of the legacy; nothing else appearing. Monck v. Monck, 1 Ball & B. 298; Wigram on Wills, p. 360; 1 Underhill on Wills, §§ 440-449; 2 Williams on Ex'rs, pp. 651-657. "Where the legacy is given for a special purpose, the accomplishment thereof by the testator is also an ademption, and in this connection the rule of ejusdem generis is often applied." 1 Am. & Eng. p. 619, and cases cited; Taylor v. Tolen, 38 N. J. Eq. 97; Pym v. Lockyer, 5 My. & Cr. 29.

It was held by Lord Chancellor Eldon in a leading case that where a father, after bequeathing property to a child, gives him in the father's lifetime a portion of the same property, a total satisfaction of the legacy takes place, though the amount of the portion given is less than the legacy. Ex parte Pye, 18 Ves. 152. Mr. Underhill says this rule of a total satisfaction by payment of only a part never found favor in this country, and has been repudiated in England. 1 Underhill, § 440.

But courts and text-writers all agree that, where the gift and the legacy are ejusdem generis, the sum given and the purpose named being practically and substantially identical, in both gift and legacy as in this case, the legacy is adeemed and satisfied by the subsequent gift.

The judgment of the superior court upon plaintiffs' appeal is affirmed.

Additional Opinion.

PER CURIAM. [8] The judgment of the superior court directs that the legacy of $3,333.33 be paid to Mrs. Mary P. Grogan to be held by her for her life, and, after her death, to her daughters who shall then be living, etc., according to the terms of the will.

When the opinion is certified down, the superior court will make such orders and decrees as are necessary for the preservation of the principal of the fund and the payment of the interest to Mrs. Grogan during her life.

(156 N. C. 283)

McKELLAR et al. v. McKAY et al.

(Supreme Court of North Carolina. Oct. 18, 1911.)

1. EVIDENCE (§ 178*)—SECONDARY EVIDENCE—DESTRUCTION OF RECORDS.

In partition, where defendants claimed under a special administration sale and deed, the records as to which had been destroyed by fire, it was open to plaintiffs, in attacking the defendants' deeds, to offer parol evidence of the contents of the destroyed records.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Evidence, Cent. Dig. §§ 580-594; Dec. Dig. § 178.*]

2. JUDGMENT (§ 485*)—COLLATERAL ATTACK—JUDGMENT VOID ON ITS FACE.

A proceeding absolutely void on its face may be attacked collaterally.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Judgment, Cent. Dig. § 919; Dec. Dig. § 485.*]

3. COURTS (§ 35*)—EVIDENCE (§ 82*)—PRESUMPTIONS—JUDICIAL PROCEEDINGS.

Every presumption is in favor of the jurisdiction of a court, and the regularity of a special proceeding therein for the sale of land.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Courts, Cent. Dig. §§ 140-146; Dec. Dig. § 35.* Evidence, Cent. Dig. § 104; Dec. Dig. § 82.*]

4. DISMISSAL AND NONSUIT (§ 48*)—DISMISSAL BEFORE PLAINTIFF RESTS—STATUTORY PROVISIONS.

Under the express provision of Revisal 1905, § 539, the granting of a motion to dismiss before plaintiff has rested his case is error.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Dismissal and Nonsuit, Cent. Dig. § 96; Dec. Dig. § 48.*]

Appeal from Superior Court, Cumberland County; Cooke, Judge.

Partition suit by Peter McKellar and others against Malcolm McKay and wife, J. H. Alexander, and the Buckthorn Lodge Association. Dismissal as against Alexander, and the Association and plaintiffs appeal. New trial.

Q. K. Nimocks and Sinclair & Dye, for plaintiffs. Rose & Rose, J. G. Shaw, J. A. Murchison, and King & Kimball, for defendants.

BROWN, J. This proceeding for partition of the land described in the pleadings was commenced in 1882, and appears never to have been brought to a final conclusion. It appears that on May 7, 1910, a new and amended petition for partition was filed, and other defendants, to wit, J. H. Alexander and the Buckthorn Lodge Association, made parties defendant. The latter answered, claiming sole seisin of the land under a deed from J. H. Alexander, which the plaintiffs aver in their petition is null and void.

On the trial, for the purpose of attacking them, plaintiffs introduced the three deeds under which the Lodge Association claims—A. M. McKay, administrator of Henrietta McKellar to Annabella McKay; W. T. McKay and wife to J. H. Alexander; and deed from the latter to the Lodge Association. Plaintiffs then introduced the clerk of the court, who testified as to loss of original petition in this proceeding, and J. A. Howard, who testified as to condition of the land. The record referring to Howard's evidence and subsequent proceedings contains the following: "To all of the foregoing evidence given by the witness Howard the defendants in apt time objected. Objections overruled, and defendants excepted. Q. Who sold the property, Mr. Howard? Objections by the defendants; sustained, and plaintiffs except. At this juncture the plaintiffs moved to amend their complaint. To this the defendants, and each of them, objected, and each moved the court to dismiss the action. The court overruled the motion by plaintiffs, so far as J. H. Alexander and the Buckthorn Lodge were concerned, to amend, and likewise the motion of the defendants, Malcolm McN. McKay and wife, V. C. McKay, and sustained the motion of J. H. Alexander and Buckthorn Lodge Association. The plaintiffs excepted. Judgment, and plaintiffs again excepted and appealed in open court to the Supreme Court."

The error assigned is that his honor prematurely dismissed the action as to the principal defendants before plaintiffs had rested their case.

[1,2] In doing so we are of opinion the learned and careful judge inadvertently erred. The principal defendant is the Lodge Association, which claims to be sole seised in fee of the land under an administration sale made in Harnett county in 1880. This sale and the deed made in pursuance of it are open to attack. It is true his honor refused to allow an amendment to the petition, asked presumably for the purpose of setting up facts upon which to ask equitable relief. But it was still open to plaintiffs to offer parol evidence, if they could, of the contents of the records in Harnett county destroyed by fire, with a view to show that the special proceeding by the administrator to sell the land was void on its face. It is well settled that a proceeding absolutely void on its face may be attacked collaterally. Harrison v. Hargrove, 109 N. C.

346, 13 S. E. 939. Perhaps plaintiff may have had other evidence to offer.

[3] It is true that every presumption is in favor of the jurisdiction of the Harnett court, and also of the regularity of the special proceeding to sell the land, and it may be the plaintiffs could offer no competent evidence to rebut and overturn such presumption; but they were cut off from the opportunity. We have no means of knowing what they could have offered in evidence.

[4] When plaintiff rested, it was the defendant's privilege to move to nonsuit and not before. The language of the statute is specific: "When on trial of an issue of fact in a civil action, or special proceeding, the plaintiff shall have produced his evidence and rested his case the defendant may move to dismiss the action, or for judgment as in case of nonsuit." Revisal, § 539.

New trial.

(156 N. C. 223)

BERGER v. SMITH et al.

(Supreme Court of North Carolina. Oct. 18, 1911.)

1. MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS (§§ 625, 626*)—POLICE POWER—ORDINANCE—REASONABLENESS.

A city ordinance prohibiting the construction and operation of mills within certain boundaries, in order to constitute a valid exercise of the city's police power, must not only be reasonable, but must apply impartially and fairly to all concerned.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Municipal Corporations, Dec. Dig. §§ 625, 626.*]

2. NUISANCE (§ 34*)—INJUNCTION—QUESTION FOR JURY.

While defendants were constructing a saw-mill and gin at the edge of the town of P., an ordinance was passed prohibiting the erection of any steam mill within certain boundaries, including the location of defendants' mill. On the block on which the mill was being erected there were only four residences and three stores, all on the east side of the block, while the mill was on the west side, which until then had been used for farming purposes. In a suit to restrain defendants' construction and operation of the mill, they answered that the ordinance was unreasonable, and that plaintiff, who operated a rival plant in the heart of the town, had procured it to be passed to prevent defendants' competition. Held that, since the construction and operation of such a mill was not a nuisance per se, though its location might make it a nuisance, it was error to grant a perpetual injunction without submitting the disputed facts to a jury, and on the issues found then determine the reasonableness of the ordinance.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Nuisance, Dec. Dig. § 34.*]

Appeal from Superior Court, Johnston County; Whedbee, Judge.

Suit by N. B. Berger against R. H. Smith and another for a perpetual injunction to restrain the construction of a mill. Decree for complainant, and defendants appeal. Modified.

Langston & Allen, for appellants. Aycock & Winston and M. T. Dickinson, for appellee.

CLARK, C. J. On January 18, 1911, the commissioners of the town of Pikeville passed an ordinance prohibiting the erection or operation of any sawmill or other steam mill within certain boundaries within said town, which are set out in the ordinance. Prior to the adoption of said ordinance the defendants had begun the erection of a sawmill and gin within said territory. Upon the block on which the mill was being erected there were only four residences and three stores, all on the east side of said block; the mill being on the west side, which till then had been used for farming purposes. The town of Pikeville is a village of 310 inhabitants. The defendant alleges that the plaintiff, Berger, owns a third interest in a rival plant of similar character which was being operated nearer the heart of the village. The defendants continued the erection of their plant until they were enjoined in this proceeding.

[1] "An ordinance must not be oppressive or discriminating, but must be reasonable and lawful." 2 Dill. Mun. Corp. (5th Ed.) § 589; 2 Abb. Mun. Corp. § 545. When an ordinance is "within the grant of power to the municipality, the presumption is that it is reasonable, unless its unreasonable character appears upon its face. But the courts will declare an ordinance to be void, because unreasonable, upon a state of facts being shown which makes it unreasonable." Id. § 591, and cases there cited. It is further said that "an ordinance must be impartial, fair, and general. It would be unreasonable and unjust to make, under the same circumstances, an act done by one person penal and done by another not so. Ordinances which have this effect cannot be sustained. Special and unwarranted discrimination, or unjust or oppressive interference in particular cases, is not to be allowed." Id. 593.

[2] Upon the allegations in the answer, if found to be true, the defendant was forbidden by this ordinance to erect and operate his steam mill in the edge of town, while the rival plant in which the plaintiff is interested is being operated much nearer the heart of town without restriction. The answer further alleges that this ordinance was procured to be passed by the influence of the plaintiff. While the courts cannot inquire into the motives in passing an ordinance, it is competent to inquire into allegations as to the ordinance being oppressive or discriminative. Ordinances in regard to a subject peculiarly within the duties of the town authorities, such as the regulation of streets and the like, are usually conclusive.

But when an ordinance like this depends upon the power to declare the subject-matter a nuisance, it is a subject of judicial review. In some cases the court will determine whether the subject-matter is a nuisance per se as a matter of law from its nature or from the attendant circumstances. Here there are disputed allegations of fact as to discrimination and whether the steam plant is in fact a nuisance. It is not a nuisance per se, though its location may make it such. In such case the disputed facts should be submitted to a jury, and upon the issues found the court will determine whether as a matter of law the ordinance is reasonable or not. In Small v. Edenton, 146 N. C. 530, 60 S. E. 413, 20 L. R. A. (N. S.) 145, it is said: "The reasonableness of an ordinance is for the court; the jury only being called in to find the facts, when in dispute"—citing Abb. Mun. Corp. § 545; Smith, Mun. Corp. § 1133. In that case it is said that the issue of nuisance in many cases must be found by the jury.

We are of opinion that the disputed issues of fact should have been submitted to the jury. The court should not have granted a perpetual injunction, but at the utmost should have granted the restraining order to the hearing. The judgment below is thus modified. The plaintiff will pay the costs of this appeal.

Modified.

WALKER, J. I concur in the conclusion reached by the court in this case, but it must not be understood that, in doing so, I am committed to the doctrine that the state, or any one of its municipalities, cannot, in the exercise of its police power, enact a law or pass an ordinance forbidding the erection of a mill within limited and defined territory, and declaring the same to be a nuisance. There are many reasons which can be assigned for holding, in view of the nature of such plants, with their smoke, noise, etc., that the right to legislate by statute or ordinance against them falls within the general police power. But any ordinance may be declared void, if in itself, or because of the peculiar facts and circumstances which gave rise to its adoption, or with reference to which it must be enforced, it will be unreasonable and oppressive in its operation. For this reason, I think the court is right in modifying the order and requiring that the injunction should extend only to the hearing, so that the facts in this particular case may be found by a jury, when we can the more intelligently pass upon the validity of the ordinance in question.

HOKE, J., concurs in this opinion.

(156 N. C. 273)

BIZZELL et al. v. ROBERTS et al.

(Supreme Court of North Carolina. Oct. 18, 1911.)

1. MORTGAGES (§ 401*)—MATURITY OF DEBTS.

A provision of a mortgage securing a debt payable in installments, providing that the entire debt shall mature on nonpayment of interest or any installment as it becomes due, is valid and enforceable, in absence of fraud or unconscionable advantage in executing it.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Mortgages, Cent. Dig. §§ 1160-1165; Dec. Dig. § 401.*]

2. MORTGAGES (§ 408*)—WAIVER OF FORFEITURE.

A provision of a mortgage securing a debt payable in installments that the entire debt shall mature on nonpayment of interest or any installment as it becomes due is waived by the mortgagee where the maturing of the debt is at his option and he accepts arrears with the intent to waive the forfeiture.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Mortgages, Dec. Dig. § 408.*]

3. PLEDGES (§ 30*)—NOTE—ENFORCEMENT.

A creditor, who takes a note as additional security for his debt, may upon its maturity collect it according to its terms, whether the principal debt is due or not, in the absence of stipulations to the contrary.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Pledges, Dec. Dig. § 30.*]

Appeal from Superior Court, Wayne County; Peebles, Judge.

Action by George D. Bizzell and others against J. B. Roberts and others. From a judgment overruling a demurrer to the complaint, defendants appeal. Affirmed.

Langston & Allen, for appellants. W. T. Dortch and M. T. Dickinson, for appellees.

HOKE, J. It appeared in the complaint: That on the 3d of March, 1909, defendants J. B. Roberts and Julia Kate Roberts became indebted to plaintiff in the aggregate sum of $2,750, payable by installments and evidenced by the promissory notes of said defendants under seal, first, for $600, payable 60 days after date; second, for $500, payable 1 year after date; third, for $500, payable 2 years after date; fourth, for $500, payable 3 years after date; fifth, for $650, payable 4 years after date. There was mortgage on real estate securing said indebtedness and containing the stipulation that, if default be made on the payment of either of said notes and interest thereon when due, then all of said notes should become "due and payable at once." That defendant Roberts had made payments on said notes as follows: "On the first of said notes was paid $141 on March 18, 1909, and said note was paid in full on the 9th day of November, 1909, and the second of said notes was paid in full on the 9th day of November, 1909, and on the third of said notes $252.62 was paid on the 9th day of November, 1909, and on the 17th day of February, 1911, there was paid on the balance due on said notes the sum of $1,050, which credit is subject to a deduction of $47.23, the amount paid by the plaintiffs for taxes on said land for the years 1909 and 1910, and that no further payment has been made upon said notes, and the remainder of said indebtedness, to wit, $565.21, with interest thereon from the 17th day of February, 1911, is now due and owing to the plaintiffs by the defendants." The complaint further stated that on the 3d of June, 1909, defendants J. B. and Julia Kate Roberts, and their codefendant Zilphia A. Warren, in further security of said first-mentioned notes, executed their promissory note under seal for $450, with interest, etc., payable January 1, 1910, and that no part of this note had been paid; and on these allegations plaintiff demanded judgment on the $565.21 balance due on the principal indebtedness and for $450, with interest, being the amount due on the collateral. The present action was instituted on May 16, 1911, and defendant demurred to the complaint, assigning for cause that no part of plaintiffs' claim had matured at the time of action commenced.

[1] Authority here and elsewhere is to the effect that where a debt is payable in installments, and same is secured by a mortgage containing provision that the entire debt shall mature on failure to pay the interest or specified portions of the principal as it comes due, or any other reasonable stipulation looking to the care and preservation of the property or the maintenance of the lien thereon, such stipulation, in the absence of circumstances tending to show fraud or oppression or "unconscionable" advantage, is enforceable as a valid contract obligation. Gore v. Davis, 124 N. C. 234, 32 S. E. 554; Parker v. Oliver, 106 Ala. 549, 18 South. 40; Odell v. Hoyt, 73 N. Y. 343; Insurance Co. v. Westerhoff, 58 Neb. 379, 78 N. W. 724, 79 N. W. 731.

[2] And it is also generally held, uniformly so far as examined, that a provision of this character is primarily for the benefit of the mortgagee. Jones on Mortgages, § 1183(a). And from this it would seem to follow that the same may be waived by him, and as a rule will be by the acceptance of all arrears, the occasion of the default. This is undoubtedly the correct position when the maturing of the debt is expressed to be at the option or election of the mortgagee, and he accepts the arrears with the expressed or implied intent to waive the forfeiture. Van-Vlissingen v. Lenz, 171 Ill. 162, 49 N. E. 422; Development Co. v. Post, 55 N. J. Eq. 559, 37 Atl. 892; Sire v. Wightman, 25 N. J. Eq. 102; Smalley v. Ranken, 85 Iowa, 612, 52 N. W. 507; Mfg. Co. v. Robinson, 56 Fed. 690, 6 C. C. A. 79; Jones on Mortgages, § 1186; 27 Cyc. p. 1532.

[3] It has been said, however, that this waiver will not result from the acceptance of arrears, when on the face of the mortgage or other instrument the stipulation as to the maturing of the debt is absolute, and not made to depend on the election of the mortgagee. Moore v. Sargent, 112 Ind. 484, 14 N. E. 466. Without final decision on this question, as the mortgage is not set out in "ipsisimis verbis," there seems to be no conflict of authority on the position that, where a creditor takes a note or other collateral as additional security for his debt and the same has matured, he may, in the absence of binding stipulation to the contrary, proceed to collect it according to its tenor, and whether the principal debt is due or not. Bank v. Doyle, 9 R. I. 76, 98 Am. Dec. 868, 11 Am. Rep. 219; Hunt v. Nevers, 15 Pick. (Mass.) 500, 26 Am. Dec. 616. The case of Hilliard v. Newberry, 153 N. C. 104, 68 S. E. 1056, is in recognition of the same general principle.

From this it follows that, whether the maturing of the principal indebtedness has been waived or otherwise, the plaintiff has an apparent right to prosecute the action on the collateral obligation of $450, which is past due, and the demurrer of defendant, therefore, was properly overruled.

Affirmed.

(156 N. C. 345)

THOMPSON v. SMITH et al.

(Supreme Court of North Carolina. Oct. 18, 1911.)

REFERENCE (§ 100*)—FINDINGS OF FACT AND LAW—REVIEW.

Where exceptions are taken to the referee's findings of fact and law, the superior court must consider the evidence, and give its own conclusion on the facts and law; and it is error to merely consider the evidence to ascertain whether there is any evidence to sustain the findings.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Reference, Cent. Dig. §§ 164-166; Dec. Dig. § 100.*]

Appeal from Superior Court, Wake County; Whedbee, Judge.

Action by Fannie H. Thompson against Marcellus Smith and another, administrators. From a judgment for defendants, plaintiff appeals. Reversed and remanded.

J. H. Fleming, for appellant. B. M. Gatling, for appellees.

WALKER, J. We have in this case a voluminous record and elaborate briefs upon several very interesting questions, involving the merits of the cause, and yet we must remand it to the court below for another hearing, because of what the learned and able judge said at the time he heard the case, indicating that he would not, independently as a judge, examine the evidence for the purpose of forming a conclusion as to the facts, where the findings of the referee had been the subject of exception, but only for the purpose of ascertaining if there was any evidence to sustain the referee's findings, and if there was he would adopt those findings as his own.

We do not consider this to be the rule in such cases. The party excepts to the finding of the referee, when one of fact, because he impliedly says it is not backed by a preponderance of the evidence, and if his exception is overruled by the referee he appeals to the judge. What is the use of appealing, if the judge can simply decide that the exception is not well taken, if there is any evidence to support the finding? It is for him to say, of course, not if there is any evidence, but if all the evidence adduced by the party, upon whom rests the burden of proof, is, by its greater weight, sufficient to establish the fact, which is essential to his success. The learned judge might as well have said that he would sustain the conclusions of law, if there was any authority to support them. But the rule adopted by his honor does not apply to the superior court, but only to this court. We have said that, where the evidence has been considered by the referee and by the judge, upon exceptions to the referee's findings, we will not review the judge's conclusions as to them, because the appellant has had two chances; and when two minds, one at least, and perhaps both, professionally trained and accustomed to weigh evidence, and to compare and balance probabilities as to its weight, arrive at the same conclusion, there is a strong presumption in favor of its correctness; or the same is true, even when the judge differs from the referee as to his findings, and we may safely rely on its correctness. The referee is selected in such cases in place of a jury, and the judge so acts when he reviews the referee. If there is any evidence to support the findings, and no error has been committed in receiving or rejecting testimony, and no other question of law is raised with respect to the findings, we accept what the judge has found as final, as we do in the case of a jury. Malloy v. Cotton Mills, 132 N. C. 432, 43 S. E. 951; Lambertson v. Vann, 134 N. C. 108, 46 S. E. 10; Clark's Code (3d Ed.) p. 564, and cases there collected; Ramsey v. Browder, 136 N. C. 251, 48 S. E. 651; Commissioners v. Packing Co., 135 N. C. 62, 47 S. E. 411. When exceptions are taken to a referee's findings of fact and law, it is the duty of the judge to consider the evidence and give his own opinion and conclusion, both upon the facts and the law. He is not permitted to do this in a perfunctory way, but he must deliberate and decide as in other cases, use his own faculties in ascertaining the truth, and form his own judgment as to fact and law. This is required, not only as a check upon the referee and a safeguard against any possible errors on his part, but because he cannot review the referee's findings in any other way. The point was presented clearly and directly in Miller v. Groome, 109 N. C. 148, 13 S. E. 840, and it controls this case. His honor did not review the findings of the referee, as he said, if there was any evidence to sustain them, he would affirm his rulings. He might have found some for that purpose; whereas, the preponderance may have been heavily the other way. We need not consider the numerous exceptions so ably argued before us by Mr. Gatling and Mr. Fleming.

It will be certified that there was error in the respect indicated, and the cause is remanded, with directions that the judge of the superior court review the referee's findings of fact, and his rulings as to the law, upon the exceptions thereto, in accordance with the usual practice in such cases.

Error.

(156 N. C. 293)

AUTRY v. ATLANTIC COAST LINE R. CO.
(Supreme Court of North Carolina. Oct. 18, 1911.)

RAILROADS (§ 274*)—INJURIES AT DEPOTS—NEGLIGENCE.

A railroad company's failure to keep its freight depot premises in a reasonably safe condition for persons coming thereon to transact business is actionable negligence if injuries result.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Railroads, Cent. Dig. §§ 868-872; Dec. Dig. § 274.*]

Appeal from Superior Court, Cumberland County; Cooke, Judge.

Action by E. V. Autry, administratrix of B. L. Autry, against the Atlantic Coast Line Railroad Company. From a judgment for plaintiff, defendant appeals. Affirmed.

The court submitted these issues:

"(1) Was the plaintiff's intestate, B. L. Autry, killed by the negligence of the defendant? Answer: Yes.

"(2) Did the said B. L. Autry, by his own negligence, contribute to his death? Answer: No.

"(3) What amount is the plaintiff entitled to recover as damages? Answer: $2,000."

From the judgment rendered the defendant appealed.

Rose & Rose, for appellant. H. L. Cook and Sinclair & Dye, for appellee.

BROWN, J. In apt time the defendant moved to nonsuit. His honor properly denied the motion.

There is abundant evidence in the record tending to prove that plaintiff's intestate, an employe of the Hope Mills Manufacturing Company, was sent with a wagon to defendant's freight depot for certain heavy boxes of mill machinery, that they were safely loaded on the wagon, and that on the way out from the depot the wagon wheel ran into a rut or hole eight inches deep, which caused the boxes to topple over, throwing the intestate out of the wagon, and the box which he had attempted to hold steady fell upon, and crushed his head. Plaintiff also introduced evidence tending to prove that "the place or hole where the wagon dropped in was 2½ feet from corner of depot. No other way to get out from the depot but to go that way. It was on the right of way, and it was not a public road along there." There was also evidence tending to prove that the mayor of the town had notified by letter defendant's general manager of the condition of the right of way and that he had written that it should be properly attended to. There was evidence also by defendant that the hole was not on the right of way, as well as other evidence contradicting plaintiff's averments. We think the jury were warranted by the evidence offered by plaintiff in finding that plaintiff's intestate was rightfully at the station removing the freight, that he took the only way out, that on the defendant's premises the wagon wheel ran into the deep rut, and caused the boxes to fall on the intestate and kill him.

[1] The negligence consists in evidence of defendant's failure to keep its premises in a reasonably safe condition to persons who come for the purpose of transacting business. Finch v. Railroad Co., 151 N. C. 105, 65 S. E. 742, and cases cited. Railroad v. Wolfe, 80 Ky. 82; Railroad v. Grush, 67 Ill. 262, 16 Am. Rep. 618. The disputed question as to whether the hole was on the defendant's premises was properly and fairly put to the jury. As to what was the proximate cause of the injury, instead of leaving it to the jury his honor might well have charged them that upon all the evidence it was the falling of the wagon wheel into the hole.

We have examined the several assignments of error, and think that none of them can be sustained. To discuss them seriatim is in our opinion needless.

No error.

(156 N. C. 123)

CARTER et al. v. BOARD OF DRAINAGE COM'RS OF MATAMUSKEET LAKE DRAINAGE NO. 1.

(Supreme Court of North Carolina. Oct. 11, 1911.)

1. DRAINS (§ 18*)—ISSUE OF BONDS BY COMMISSIONERS—INJUNCTION.

That a sum less than the amount of bonds, which drainage commissioners purpose to issue for maintenance of the drainage system during its construction, and for payment of interest on the bonds issued for cost of construction, will be sufficient for such purpose is matter for exception in the proceedings for their issuance, and not matter entitling the landowners who are subject to assessment to enjoin the issue.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Drains, Dec. Dig. § 18.*]

2. DRAINS (§ 18*)—POWER OF COMMISSIONERS TO ISSUE BONDS.

From the grant of power to drainage commissioners to issue bonds for costs of construction of a drainage system, power to issue bonds to pay the interest on the bonds for the cost of construction arises by implication.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Drains, Dec. Dig. § 18.*]

3. DRAINS (§ 69*)—LIMIT OF ASSESSMENT—WAIVER.

A land company having bought the lands of the state board of education to be drained by a proposed drainage system, the provision of Laws 1909, c. 509, made for the protection of such board and the state, to the effect that such lands should be liable for assessment for only $300,000 of the cost, could be waived by the company.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Drains, Dec. Dig. § 69.*]

4. DRAINS (§ 82*)—ASSESSMENT—COLLATERAL ATTACK.

The decree in drainage proceedings, that a certain amount would be necessary for construction of the work, not having been appealed from, may not be questioned in a suit to enjoin issuance by the drainage commissioners of bonds for a further amount, to pay the cost of maintenance of the work during the construction, and the interest on the bonds issued for cost of construction.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Drains, Dec. Dig. § 82.*]

5. DRAINS (§ 18*)—ISSUE OF BONDS BY COMMISSIONER—INJUNCTION.

The execution by drainage commissioners of the power, clearly conferred on them by Laws 1911, c. 67, § 15, to issue bonds for maintenance of the work during the construction, and to pay interest on bonds issued for cost of construction, will not be enjoined, unless their action is influenced or procured by fraud.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Drains, Dec. Dig. § 18.*]

6. DRAINS (§ 18*)—BONDS AND ASSESSMENTS—POWERS OF LEGISLATURE.

The Legislature, after providing, by Laws 1909, c. 442, for the creation of a drainage district and the issuance of bonds and an assessment for the construction, may, by a subsequent act, provide for issuance of other bonds, and for another assessment therefor.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Drains, Dec. Dig. § 18.*]

Appeal from Superior Court, Hyde County; Allen, Judge.

Action by H. C. Carter and others against the Board of Drainage Commissioners of Mattamuskeet Lake Drainage No. 1. Judgment for defendants. Plaintiffs appeal. Affirmed.

Ward & Grimes, H. C. Carter, Jr., and J. C. B. Ehringhaus, for appellants. Mann & Jones, for appellees.

CLARK, C. J. Under chapter 442, Laws 1909, the plaintiffs and other landowners filed a petition for the drainage of Mattamuskeet Lake and adjacent lands. The state board of education, by virtue of its ownership of the lake bottom, was made a party, and was chargeable with three-fourths of the expense of the drainage under chapter 509, Laws 1909. Said proceeding was prosecuted to a final decree. Exceptions were filed by plaintiffs and others which were sustained and the final judgment rendered, to which there were no exceptions or appeal. Under the judgment in that proceeding, $400,000 in bonds were directed to be issued for construction. Each tract of land was assessed its pro rata part for the payment of said bonds and interest thereon, upon payment of which its owner would be discharged from liability. No owner is responsible for other owners by reason of their failure to pay except through the method of assessment provided by the statute.

By virtue of Laws 1911, c. 67, the drainage commissioners purpose to issue $100,000 in additional bonds, $40,000 of which is to be expended in the maintenance of the system during the three years till its final completion, and $60,000 to provide interest on the other bonds during the two years, thus making a total bond issue of $500,000. Of this sum the Southern Land Reclamation Company is charged with three-fourths, by reason of its purchase from the state board of education, besides the charge upon the other lands to the extent of many thousands of dollars, which said reclamation company has purchased from other landowners within the drainage district.

This injunction is sought by the plaintiffs to restrain the issue of the additional $100,000 bonds. His honor properly held that the plaintiffs had not shown sufficient grounds to entitle them to such restraining order. The additional $100,000 in bonds is not an addition to the debt for the purposes of improvement, but to provide for those expenses which are the necessary and natural result. $60,000 is to provide interest on the other bonds during two years. This interest must be provided for either out of the pockets of the landowners, or by issuing bonds. It is the legal incident of the $400,000 in bonds, which are to be issued under a decree to which the plaintiffs were parties, and from which they did not appeal. Any one of them, or any other landowner, can pay his pro rata part of such interest, and thereupon the amount of bonds will be diminished accordingly. The same is true as to the $40,000, which are to be issued to maintain and keep the work in condition for the three years which will be required for its completion. The $400,000 being required, as adjudged by the final decree, for the construction of the work, money must be provided for the maintenance and good condition of the work as it is done, from time to time, until its final completion. This money must be raised by the property which is chargeable with the $400,000 of bonds, else there will be serious loss by impairment of the work while being constructed.

[1] It is open to the plaintiffs and any others to file exceptions as to these amounts and show, if they can, that a lesser sum will maintain the work during the progress of construction. They can also file exceptions in like manner, and show, if they can, that a less sum than $60,000 will discharge the interest accruing during the two years. But these are not matters which entitle the plaintiff to an injunction to restrain the issue of the bonds.

[2] In the original act, chapter 442, Laws 1909, § 34, authorized the commissioners to issue bonds for the full amount of the assessment for construction, "together with interest thereon, costs of collection or other incidental expenses." This section has been repealed by section 11, c. 67, Laws 1911, but it shows that the original act authorized the issuing of bonds for "interest and other incidental expenses." Indeed, the power to issue bonds for interest arises by implication even if there is no express delegation of this power in the statute. "The limitation of indebtedness does not, however, relate to interest coupons attached to the bonds, and, although they may swell the indebtedness beyond the limitation, the bonds are nevertheless valid." 21 A. & E. Enc. (2d Ed.) 43, and note 2.

[3, 4] The limitation in Laws 1909, c. 509, was to protect the state and the state board of education, because of the power in said act enabling the state to guarantee three-fourths of said bonds to be repaid out of the sales of land. This limitation has been waived by the Southern Land Reclamation Company, by proper resolutions of the stockholders and directors, which, as successor to the state board of education, it had power to do. Chapter 67, Laws 1911, was intended to cure any defect in the machinery of the tax levy, to take care of the bonds, and empower the defendant to issue bonds for interest. Unless there is a provision to take care of the interest for the two years, and to provide for maintaining the work, as it progresses, up to its completion, the board will doubtless be unable to dispose of the $400,000 bond issue. It will require that entire amount, according to the decree itself, to provide for the construction of the work. Hence the interest and the maintenance of the work during the progress of construction cannot be paid out of the $400,000. The decree adjudging $400,000 to be necessary for the construction of the work, and directing the issue of bonds for that amount, not being appealed from, the plaintiffs cannot now be heard to contest it.

[5] As already said, if there is any question as to the full amount of $100,000 being necessary to pay off the interest and for maintenance during construction, the plaintiffs can pay their assessment under protest, and bring suit to recover any amount in excess, as provided by the statute. But they should not be allowed to stay a work of great public improvement, affecting many hundreds of other people, upon the allegations made in this complaint. The power to issue the $100,000 additional bonds is clearly conferred upon the drainage commissioners by the statute (Laws 1911, c. 67, § 15), and the execution of their powers will not be interfered with, unless their action is influenced or procured by fraud. Sanderlin v. Luken, 152 N. C. 744, 68 S. E. 225. If there should be any misconduct on the part of the commissioners, they can be held responsible in an action against them; but the work itself will not be stayed, nor the issuance of the bonds for construction, interest, and maintenance, which is necessary for that end.

[6] The Legislature was not restricted to the amount of bonds, or the assessment made, under the first act passed in 1909. Durrett v. Davison, 122 Ky. 851, 93 S. W. 25, 8 L. R. A. (N. S.) 546, and cases cited in the notes thereto.

Affirmed.

HOKE, J., concurs in result.

(154 N. C. 326)

THEO. A. KOCHS CO. v. JACKSON et al.
(Supreme Court of North Carolina. Oct. 18, 1911.)

1. PARTIES (§ 76*)—OBJECTIONS—WAIVER.

The complaint in an action to recover personality designated plaintiff as the "Theo. A. K. Co." without alleging that it was a corporation, or, if a partnership, the names of the partners. Revisal 1905, § 478, provides that, if no objection for defect of parties or that plaintiff has not legal capacity to sue be taken by demurrer or answer, defendant shall be deemed to have waived the same. Held, that the defect of parties plaintiff or incapacity to sue did not appear on the face of the complaint, and that any objection on that ground was waived by defendants by answering to the merits, and not taking the objection by answer or demurrer; the question not being properly raised by a demurrer ore tenus at the trial, especially where the answer failed to deny the execution of the chattel mortgage sued on, and where defendant gave a replevy bond to plaintiff so as to retain possession pending the action.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Parties, Dec. Dig. § 76.*]

2. EXECUTION (§ 268*)—SALE OF PROPERTY—TITLE OF PURCHASER.

The purchaser at an execution sale of attached property only takes the title of the defendant in the attached property, and, where the judgment debtor had previously executed a chattel mortgage which was duly registered on the property, the purchaser took no title as against the mortgagee.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Execution, Dec. Dig. § 268.*]

Appeal from Superior Court, Cumberland County; Cooke, Judge.

Action by the Theo. A. Kochs Company against Andrew Jackson and others. From a judgment for plaintiff, defendants appeal. Affirmed.

This is an action to recover possession of personal property. The plaintiff is designated in the summons and complaint as the "Theo. A. Kochs Company," and there is no allegation that the plaintiff is a corporation, and, if a partnership, the names of the partners are not given. The plaintiff alleges in his complaint the execution of certain notes by one Andrew Jackson, payable to the Theo. A. Kochs Company, and the conveyance by chattel mortgage of the property described in the complaint to secure the same, that there has been a default in the payment of the notes, and that the property described in the mortgage is in possession of the defendants, which they have refused to surrender on demand. The defendants file an answer in which they deny the allegations of the complaint, except the allegation of the execution of the chattel mortgage to secure the payment of the notes, and they allege that they are the owners of the property by virtue of a purchase at a sale under execution against Andrew Jackson. The chattel mortgage was duly registered, and after its registration the said Jackson left the state, and under regular proceedings against him, to which the plaintiff in this action was not a party, said property was attached and sold, and the defendants became the purchasers at the sale. When the case came on for trial, the defendants demurred to the complaint ore tenus, for that it did not allege that Theo. A. Kochs Company was a corporation, or if not a corporation, but a partnership, it failed to allege the names of the partners. The motion was overruled, and the defendants excepted. His honor also held that the purchase by the defendants at the sale under execution was no defense against the claim of the plaintiff, and the defendants excepted. There was a judgment in favor of the plaintiff, and the defendants excepted and appealed.

Rose & Rose and H. L. Cook, for appellants. Newton, Herring & Oates, for appellee.

ALLEN, J. (after stating the facts as above). The demurrer ore tenus to the complaint was properly overruled.

[1] It was an objection to the complaint upon the ground of defect of parties, or that the plaintiff did not have the legal capacity to sue, and such objections are waived, unless taken by a written answer or demurrer, under the provisions of section 478 of the Revisal. Besides, it does not appear on the face of the complaint that there is a defect of parties, or an incapacity to maintain the action, and the defendants do not deny in their answer the execution of the chattel mortgage to secure the notes, and they have executed a replevy bond, payable to the plaintiff, by means of which they retain the property pending the action. A similar question was raised in Stanly v. Railroad, 89 N. C. 331, in which the court says: "The appearance and plea to the merits or answer is a concession of the sufficiency of the designation of the person, natural or artificial, and, if intended to be disputed, it should be under the present practice by answer." The defendants rely on Heath v. Morgan, 117 N. C. 505, 23 S. E. 489, as on authority in favor of their position, but an examination of the opinion in that case shows that the court acted upon the assumption that the plaintiff was a partnership, which does not appear in this case, and also that a demurrer was filed upon the ground that the names of the partners were not stated in the summons or complaint.

[2] The defendants acquired no title as against the plaintiff by purchase at the execution sale. The execution was against Jackson, who had executed to the plaintiff a chattel mortgage, which was duly registered. "The execution is issued by the clerk as a matter of course upon the judgment, and, under it, the property levied upon under the attachment is sold (if liable to sale), and what title the purchaser gets will be determined after the execution sale, for the purchaser buys only the right of the defendant in the attached property, as in all other sales under execution." Electric Co. v. Engineering Co., 128 N. C. 201, 38 S. E. 831.

We find no error.

No error.

(156 N. C. 307)

WYATT v. SEABOARD AIR LINE RY.

(Supreme Court of North Carolina. Oct. 18, 1911.)

1. PLEADING (§ 34*)—CONSTRUCTION OF PLEADING.

A pleading should be liberally construed with a view to substantial justice; every reasonable intendment being made in favor of the pleader.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Pleading, Cent. Dig. § 66; Dec. Dig. § 34.*]

2. RAILROADS (§ 478*)—FIRES—NEGLIGENCE—COMPLAINT.

The complaint in an action against a railroad company alleged that defendant's agents, "in operating and running an engine over said railway near the premises of the plaintiff above described, negligently and carelessly permitted said engine to emit sparks and coals of fire therefrom, which fell on plaintiff's property," and set fire thereto. Held, that the complaint sufficiently alleged negligence in emitting the sparks from the engine, so that evidence of defects in the engine was admissible.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Railroads, Dec. Dig. § 478.*]

3. RAILROADS (§ 464*)—FIRES—CAUSE—NEGLIGENCE.

Where the fire destroying buildings off of the right of way was not shown to have originated in combustible materials on the right of way, the property owner must show, to recover damages, that the fire was caused by a defect in an engine or by its negligent operation.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Railroads, Dec. Dig. § 464.*]

4. RAILROADS (§ 461*)—FIRES—INJURIES—CONTRIBUTORY NEGLIGENCE.

Failure of a property owner to repair buildings destroyed by fire set from a railroad engine so as to make them less combustible or remove weeds, etc., from his premises, is not contributory negligence, barring a recovery.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Railroads, Cent. Dig. § 1682; Dec. Dig. 461.*]

5. EVIDENCE (§ 524*)—OPINION EVIDENCE—VALUES.

The opinions of qualified experts as to the value of land, houses, etc., are admissible in evidence.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Evidence, Cent. Dig. § 2332; Dec. Dig. § 524.*]

6. EVIDENCE (§ 113*)—INJURY TO REAL PROPERTY—VALUE.

While in an action for damage to realty in estimating the value as an element of damage the jury is restricted to value at the time of the injury, evidence may be given as to the value of the property at other times as bearing on its value when injured.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Evidence, Dec. Dig. § 113.*]

7. DAMAGES (§ 174*)—VALUE OF PROPERTY—TAX ASSESSMENT—EVIDENCE.

In an action against a railroad company for injuries to a building by fire, evidence of the reduction of the valuation of the property for taxation after the fire was not admissible on the question of damage; plaintiff not controlling the action of the taxing officers, and the tax lister having testified that he did not recollect the amount of the reduction asked for by plaintiff.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Damages, Dec. Dig. § 174.*]

Appeal from Superior Court, Wake County; Whedbee, Judge.

Action by W. F. Wyatt against the Seaboard Air Line Railway. From a judgment for plaintiff, defendant appeals. Affirmed.

This action is to recover damages for the negligent destruction of property of the plaintiff by fire.

The allegation of negligence is as follows: "That on the 11th day of April, 1910, the employes and agents of the defendants, in operating and running an engine over said railway near the premises of the plaintiff above described, negligently and carelessly permitted said engine to emit sparks and coals of fire therefrom, which fell on plaintiff's property above described, and set fire thereto and burned up and destroyed the same, to his damage in the sum of five thousand dollars ($5,000), as he is informed and believes." The defendant denies negligence, and for a further defense alleges: "That if the plaintiff's property was destroyed by fire as alleged in the complaint, which the defendant denies, plaintiff by his own negligence contributed to bring about such injury, in that he permitted his property to become and remain in an inflammable state, and in a negligent condition and failed to provide a watchman therefor, and his contributory negligence is set up by the defendant in bar of plaintiff's right to recover in this action." The defendant does not contend that there is no evidence that the defendant set out the fire which burned the property of the plaintiff, but insists that the complaint alleges negligence in the operation of the train, and that this allegation is not supported by evidence of a defective spark arrester.

This contention is presented by two prayers for instruction, which were refused:

"There is no evidence of negligence in the operation of this engine by the employes of the defendant, and you will answer the second issue, 'No.'"

"In order to answer the second issue 'Yes,' you must find that the defendant's employes negligently operated the engine on the train which set out the fire, if you find that it was set out by an engine."

His honor instructed the jury to answer the issue of contributory negligence "No," and defendant excepted. The evidence in support of the plea of contributory negligence is as follows: "Plaintiff testified that he placed one of his buildings as near the railroad line as he could get it; that he had no tenant for the tannery or bark sheds. J. H. Harrison, witness for the plaintiff, said the roof of the bark house where fire started was rotten and very dry, and that he might have described it as burning like powder; that the tannery property was a loading place for hoboos, and there was one who cooked in the building one or two nights. The buildings were in a dilapidated condition. For the defendant A. L. Pritchett testified that the grade is north at the point of the fire. From the outside buildings were ragged looking, especially the roof; conditions around the buildings grassy and trashy looking. J. H. Edgerton said the buildings were in a very dilapidated condition; the shingles were turned up and mossy; grass and weeds around the building. Charles Creighton testified that the buildings were in a very bad state. They were all decayed and rotten; roof all rotten; doors off; windows off; and in every way in bad state. The property did not appear to ever be looked after, and it was in bad fix. Weeds as high as a man's head were in the yard around the buildings. It was a regular 'hold-out for hoboos.' W. T. Smith said the property was in pretty bad shape, mostly rotten down, the roof especially, and the shingles were curled up, and there was moss on the shingles. Sides of building were torn off, the floors up, windows out, the plastering knocked off in the cottage, and part of the flooring torn up. T. B. Moseley testified that the buildings were dilapidated and run down for want of repairs. They seemed neglected; grown up in weeds; 'the condition of an old settlement that has been abandoned.' J. J. Haywood testified that the property was in bad shape. It was all gone down and dilapidated; no windows at all; doors all down, and some panels knocked out. The building nearest the railroad was pretty near down. The weather boarding and roof were rotten. It was used by gamblers, white and colored, and disreputable women. The grounds around the buildings were grown up in dry weeds and grass. The buildings had been used by tramps, and it could be seen that they had built fires in the buildings."

Plaintiff asked the witness J. H. Harrison: "What in your opinion was the value of the property that was burned, in the condition the property was in at the time of the fire?" The witness answered, "Not less than $4,000, if it was mine." The defendant objected to the question and answer. John Briggs, who qualified as an expert, testified as follows: "Q. Taking the buildings as you saw them, what would you say they were worth? A. I base my calculation on them as of the last time I saw them, and I figured on the sizes from what I was told. I have no personal recollection of the sizes of the buildings, or of the size of the part I put up. Q. Can you give an opinion satisfactory to yourself as to their value? A. I think so. Q. Assuming that the jury should find from the evidence that the two tan bark houses were 25x100 feet and 30x80 feet, respectively, and taking into consideration your own personal knowledge of the construction of the two houses, what were they worth on the day of the fire? A. One tan bark house 25x100 feet I value at $1,000. One tan bark house 30x80 feet, with 30-foot basement, I value at $1,320. The three-story tannery, 25x50 feet, I valued at $1,500. The three-room cottage I valued at $650, making a total of $4,470. [That part of the answer as to the three-story tannery and cottage was excluded.] Q. Assuming that the jury should find from the evidence that the tannery was 25x50 and three stories high, from your own knowledge of the condition of it the last time you saw it, can you form an opinion satisfactory to yourself as to the value of the tannery? A. Yes. Q. What would you say the tannery was worth? A. Fifteen hundred dollars." The defendant excepted to the admission of this evidence. The defendant introduced M. R. Haynes, a tax lister of Wake county, and proposed to prove by him that after the fire the plaintiff, through his agent, asked for a reduction in the valuation of his property, and the amount of the reduction asked for. The witness testified that he did not know what reduction was asked for, that he only knew how much was made. He was then asked what reduction was made. This evidence was excluded, and the defendant excepted. The defendant also offered in evidence the abstracts before and after the fire to show the difference in valuation. This evidence was excluded, and the defendant excepted.

The jury returned the following verdict: "(1) Was plaintiff's property damaged by fire set out by defendant's engine? Answer: Yes. (2) If so, was the fire set out by sparks negligently emitted by the defendant's engine? Answer: Yes. (3) Did the plaintiff by his own negligence contribute to the cause of said fire? Answer: No. (4) What damage has plaintiff suffered by reason of said fire? Answer: Two thousand and five hundred dollars."

There was a judgment in favor of the plaintiff, and the defendant appealed.

Murray Allen, for appellant. Aycock & Winston and D. L. Ward, for appellee.

ALLEN, J. (after stating the facts as above). [1] The uniform rule prevailing under our present system is that the allegations of a pleading shall be liberally construed with a view to substantial justice between the parties, and that every reasonable intendment is made in favor of the pleader. Brewer v. Wynne, 154 N. C. 472, 70 S. E. 947. The just application of this rule tends to the trial of cases upon their merits, and we would not be justified in relaxing it in a case like this, where there has been a trial before a jury, and both parties have had full opportunity to present their evidence.

[2] It would require a very strict construction of the allegations of the complaint to give it the meaning contended for by the defendant, to wit, that it only alleges negligence in the operation of the train. If we give to the pleading every "reasonable intendment in favor of the pleader" and "construe it liberally," as our authorities require, the negligent act alleged in the third paragraph of the complaint is that the defendant "negligently and carelessly permitted said engine to emit sparks and coals of fire therefrom, which fell on plaintiff's property," etc., and the preceding language "in operating and running an engine" merely indicates where the engine was, and what was being done with it, at the time of the negligent act. If so, it was competent for the jury to consider evidence of defects in the engine under the allegations of the complaint. The defendant's counsel presented his contention as to the contributory negligence of the plaintiff with much force and ability, and cited authority from eminent courts in support of his position. We do not, however, agree with him that the weight of authority sustains his view, and we think his honor held correctly that there was no evidence to sustain the plea. The buildings which were destroyed by fire were on the land of the plaintiff, adjoining the right of way of the defendant, and the negligence alleged is that the plaintiff failed to repair them, and had permitted the roofs, where the fire began, to become rotten and highly inflammable. The buildings had been erected about 18 years, and there is no evidence they were ever ignited prior to the time they were destroyed.

[3] As the buildings were not on the right of way, and there is no evidence that fire caught in combustible matter on the right of way and was communicated to them, the plaintiff could not recover unless he succeeded in proving that the engine of the defendant was defective, or that it was negligently operated. Williams v. Railroad, 140 N. C. 624, 53 S. E. 448.

[4] If so, to hold that a failure to repair is contributory negligence would require the plaintiff to foresee the negligence of the defendant and to provide against it. We think the contrary is the rule, and that the plaintiff had the right to assume that the defendant would perform its duty, and that it would not operate an engine negligently or one that was defective. "The general rule is that every person has the right to presume that every other person will perform his duty and obey the law, and, in the absence of reasonable ground to think otherwise, it is not negligence to assume that he is not exposed to danger, which can come to him only from violation of law or duty to such other person. Hence failure to anticipate defendant's negligence does not amount to contributory negligence, even though he places his property in an exposed or hazardous position." 29 Cyc. p. 516. "Since a person is not required to anticipate the negligence of another, he will not be guilty of contributory negligence because the injury results in part from the defective condition of the property, or because its condition is such as to render the danger greater." Ib. 526. Again, it is said in 30 Cyc. p. 1343: "As a general rule, an owner of land has a right to use it in the ordinary and usual way, and is not bound to remove dry grass, weeds, leaves, or other combustible material from his land adjoining a railroad right of way, in anticipation of probable negligence on the part of the railroad company, and a failure to perform such acts will not make him guilty of contributory negligence so as to preclude a recovery for damages caused by a fire originating through the railroad company's negligence."

The following authorities, among many others, sustain the text: Salmon v. Railroad, 38 N. J. Law, 12, 20 Am. Rep. 356; Railroad v. Insurance Co., 82 Miss. 779, 35 South. 304; Kendrick v. Towle, 60 Mich. 371, 27 N. W. 567, 1 Am. St. Rep. 526; Walker v. Railroad, 76 Kan. 34, 90 Pac. 772, 12 L. R. A. (N. S.) 624, 123 Am. St. Rep. 119; Railroad v. L. Co., 125 Ala. 261, 28 South. 438, 50 L. R. A. 620; Matthews v. Railroad, 121 Mo. 334, 24 S. W. 591, 25 L. R. A. 161; Railroad v. Short, 110 Tenn. 718, 77 S. W. 936; Kalbfelsch v. Railroad, 102 N. Y. 521, 7 N. E. 557, 55 Am. Rep. 832; Railroad v. Burger, 124 Ind. 278, 24

N. E. 981; Railroad v. Shultz, 93 Pa. 345; Railroad v. Jones, 86 Ind. 500, 44 Am. Rep. 334; Railroad v. Medley, 75 Va. 506, 40 Am. Rep. 734; Caswell v. Railroad, 42 Wis. 199; Snyder v. Railroad, 11 W. Va. 28. We quote from only two of them. In the case from Pennsylvania the court says: "Again, complaint is made that the court refused to instruct the jury that if either Schultz, or the owner of the strip lying between his land and the railroad, allowed the accumulation of dry leaves, brushwood, and other rubbish on his property, which would be readily fired by sparks ordinarily issuing from a properly equipped locomotive, that might be regarded as contributory negligence. This was certainly an extraordinary proposition, first, because the learned judge throughout the trial held that, if the defendant's locomotive was properly equipped with spark-arresting appliances, the plaintiff could not recover whether he had been careful or negligent; second, because it is an attempt to impose upon property owners along the line of a railroad duties unknown and unnecessary before the building of the road; and, third, if this proposition means anything, it means that upon such property owners devolves the duty of guarding against the negligence of railroad companies and their servants, but this is simply absurd." And in the Michigan case: "The obligation of care to prevent the fire from the defendant's engine burning the plaintiff's mill rested upon the defendant, and the fact that old, combustible matter accumulated about the mill, and in near proximity to the railroad cannot be urged as contributory negligence on the part of the plaintiff. He had a right to use the offal of his mill to fill up the waste and low places with it, just as he was accustomed to do before the railroad was built. He was not obliged to guard his premises to relieve the defendant from liability for his negligent acts." The same principle has been recognized in Phillips v. Railroad, 138 N. C. 19, 50 S. E. 464: "The owner of premises is not bound to anticipate negligence of a railroad, and by way of prevention make provision against communication of fire."

[5] Opinions of witnesses as to value of land, houses, etc., have been very generally received when the witnesses by experience and information are qualified to speak, and we think there was no error in their admission in this case. 1 Wig. Ev. §§ 714-720; Whitfield v. L. Co., 152 N. C. 214, 67 S. E. 512.

[6] It is true that in estimating value as an element of damage the jury is restricted to the time of the injury, as his honor held, but a witness may speak of value at other times as bearing on the value when the injury occurred.

[7] The evidence as to reduction in the valuation of the property for taxation after the fire was properly excluded. Ridley v.

Railroad, 124 N. C. 37, 32 S. E. 379; Railroad v. Land Co., 137 N. C. 330, 49 S. E. 350, 68 L. R. A. 333. It was the act of the officers of the law which the plaintiff could not control, and the tax lister testified that he had no recollection of the amount of the reduction asked for by the plaintiff or his agent.

We have examined with care the entire record, and find no error.

No error.

(156 N. C. 319)

HOCKADAY v. LAWRENCE et al.

(Supreme Court of North Carolina. Oct. 18, 1911.)

1. JURY (§ 28*)—RIGHT TO TRIAL BY JURY—WAIVER—STATUTORY PROVISIONS.

Revisal 1905, § 540, which prescribes that the right to a trial by jury may be waived by failing to appear at the trial, by written consent filed with the clerk, or by oral consent entered in the minutes, excludes other modes of waiver.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Jury, Cent. Dig. §§ 176-196; Dec. Dig. § 28.*]

2. COSTS (§ 2*)—NATURE AND GROUNDS OF COSTS.

Items of cost as they arise in an action are in no legal sense the subject of the litigation, and arise only incidentally in the progress of the cause.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Costs, Cent. Dig. §§ 4, 26; Dec. Dig. § 2.*]

3. INSANE PERSONS (§ 103*)—ACTIONS—NEXT FRIEND—COSTS.

In an action by an insane person by his next friend appointed by the court, the next friend, unless guilty of bad faith or mismanagement, is not liable to costs.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Insane Persons, Cent. Dig. § 187; Dec. Dig. § 103.*]

4. JURY (§ 12*)—ACTION BY NEXT FRIEND—DEATH OF PLAINTIFF—ISSUE OF FACT.

An action was brought by an insane person by his next friend appointed by the court, and, after the decease of the insane person, his executor, made a party to the action by order of the court, answered, alleging that the action was not for the best interest of the estate of the decedent, and should be dismissed at the cost of the plaintiff and the surety on his prosecution bond. Held, that the answer raised no issue of fact as to the next friend's bad faith or mismanagement, so as to entitle the executor to a trial by jury.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Jury, Cent. Dig. §§ 27-34; Dec. Dig. § 12.*]

On petition of defendant Sikes to rehear, before Supreme Court. Dismissed.

Action by J. M. Hockaday, by his next friend, against C. M. Lawrence, in which, after Hockaday's death, his devisees and his executor, G. T. Sikes, were made parties by order of the court. From an order taxing costs against the executor, he appealed. This case was decided at the last term, and is now before the court upon a petition to rehear.

The following facts appear in the record: On the 4th day of February, 1907, W. N.

Fuller filed an application before the clerk of the superior court of Granville county for the appointment of a next friend for James M. Hockaday, who had been found by a jury to be non compos mentis, and on the same day H. C. Hockaday was appointed such next friend, and instituted this action for the purpose of setting aside certain deeds, executed by the said James M. Hockaday to the defendant, which purported to convey the timber on certain lands, and also to restrain the defendant from cutting said timber. A restraining order was issued in the action; and after notice, and upon a full hearing, the same was continued to the hearing. After the institution of the action, a guardian was appointed for the said James M. Hockaday, who was made a party, but who took no active part in the prosecution of the action. In 1908 or 1909 James M. Hockaday died, leaving a will, and his executor and devisees were made parties to the action by order of court, and they filed answers in which they say "that in their opinion the above-entitled action is not for the best interest of the estate of J. M. Hockaday, and should not be prosecuted further." A caveat was filed to said will, upon the ground that the testator did not have sufficient mental capacity to make a will and the will was sustained. At April term, 1910, of the superior court, an order was entered in the action dissolving the restraining order, and thereupon an arbitration was entered into between the defendant and the sureties on the prosecution bond, and an award was rendered in favor of the defendant for $82, which was paid. The cause again came on for hearing at November term, 1910, of said court. Both parties tendered judgment, the principal difference between them being as to costs, the defendant asking that judgment for costs be rendered against the next friend and the sureties on the prosecution bond, and the sureties asking that it be rendered against the executor of James M. Hockaday. His honor found as a fact that the action was instituted for the benefit of the estate of said Hockaday, and taxed the costs against the executor, and the executor excepted and appealed.

Graham & Devin, for appellant. A. A. Hicks and T. T. Hicks, for appellees.

ALLEN, J. The executor insists that he raised an issue of fact in his answer by alleging "that he is of opinion that this action is not for the best interest of the estate of James M. Hockaday, and should not be prosecuted further, but should be dismissed at the cost of plaintiff and the surety on his prosecution bond," and that as he has not waived the right in the mode prescribed by statute, he is entitled to have this issue passed on by a jury.

[1] It is true, as contended by the defendant, that Rev. § 540, prescribes only three ways in which a trial by jury may be waived: (1) By failing to appear at the trial. (2) By written consent filed with the clerk. (3) By oral consent entered in the minutes, and that there is no such waiver on this record. The statute was construed to exclude other modes of waiver in Hahn v. Brinson, 133 N. C. 8, 45 S. E. 359. If, therefore, an issue of fact is raised by the answer, the defendant is entitled to a reversal of the judgment.

In our opinion no issue is raised, and the former judgment of this court should stand.<sup>1</sup>

[2] Items of cost, as they arise in an action, are in no legal sense the subject of the litigation, and arise only incidentally in the progress of the cause. As was said in Martin v. Sloan, 69 N. C. 128, if parties at the beginning of a suit were to admit that they had no rights involved, but wished to see which could make the other pay the costs, the courts would refuse to hear them. The different sections of the Code in reference to costs clearly contemplate the action of the judge, and recognize his power to pass upon the questions that may arise in determining who is chargeable. "Costs may be allowed or not, in the discretion of the court." Rev. § 1267. "Costs shall be taxed." Section 1268, etc.

[3] If, however, the rule was otherwise, the defendant has not raised an issue in the answer, because he has failed to allege bad faith or mismanagement on the part of the next friend, who is not in the ordinary sense a party to the action. Tate v. Mott, 96 N. C. 19, 2 S. E. 176; Smith v. Smith, 108 N. C. 360, 12 S. E. 1045, 13 S. E. 113. In the last case Justice Clark uses language appropriate to this case. He says: "It is to be presumed that the order of the court appointing next friends was made regularly, after due inquiry, and in the interest of Larkin Smith. He is the party plaintiff in fact and in law, and appeared by next friends, who merely represented him, under the authority and appointment of the court. Code, § 180. It is contended, however, that, though not strictly parties to the action, the next friends in the case at bar in resisting the motion to discharge them were in fact (virtually found by the verdict of the jury) resisting the will of Larkin Smith, a person of full age and competent to appear for himself, that such next friends officiously and unnecessarily caused themselves to be appointed, and that they, and not Larkin Smith, should pay the costs incurred by their false clamor. There is some force in this suggestion. While 'next friends' may not be embraced in the strict letter of the Code (section 535), they come within the purview of that section. It was held error to tax trustees of an express trust who are parties to an action with the costs, unless the court had adjudged that they were guilty of 'mismanagement or bad faith in such action.' Smith v. King, 107 N. C. 273 [12 S. E. 57]. A fortiori, it is error to tax 'next friends' who are not parties without at least a similar finding. This is not alleged here in the answer or found by the court. Indeed, the presumption by virtue of their appointment by the court is that they acted in good faith, and they cannot be liable to costs unless there is an express finding against them of the facts requisite to tax them with costs."

[4] The allegation in the answer that in the opinion of the executor it is not for the best interest of the estate to further prosecute the action falls far short of an allegation of bad faith or mismanagement.

We find no error, and the petition is dismissed.

Petition dismissed.

(156 N. C. 296)

KIVETT et al. v. WESTERN UNION TELEGRAPH CO.

(Supreme Court of North Carolina. Oct. 18, 1911.)

1. TELEGRAPHS AND TELEPHONES (§ 67*)—
NEGLIGENT DELIVERY OF TELEGRAM—AC-TION—DAMAGES.

In an action by a father and son against a telegraph company for negligence in the delivery of a telegram to the son, announcing the death of his brother and informing him of the time fixed for the funeral, plaintiffs cannot recover substantial damages, unless they show that the son could and would have reached home in time for his brother's funeral, if the telegram had been promptly delivered.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Telegraphs and Telephones, Dec. Dig. § 67.*]

2. EVIDENCE (§ 471*)—OPINION EVIDENCE—
FACTS OR MATTERS OF OPINION.

The statement of plaintiff, in an action against a telegraph company for negligence in the delivery of a death message, that, had there not been a delay in the delivery of the message, he could and would have attended his brother's funeral at the time stated in the message, and that he had made railroad connections once, and knew the movements of the trains, is the statement of a fact, and not of an opinion.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Evidence, Dec. Dig. § 471.*]

3. TELEGRAPHS AND TELEPHONES (§ 66*)—
NEGLIGENT DELIVERY OF TELEGRAM—AC-TION—EVIDENCE—RELATIONSHIP OF PLAINTIFF TO DECEASED.

In an action for damages for the negligence of a telegraph company in delivering a message announcing the death of plaintiff's brother, and fixing the time for the funeral, evidence by plaintiff that his deceased brother had gone West with him, and had stayed with him in the West three years, was properly admitted as tending to prove a close association between them.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Telegraphs and Telephones, Dec. Dig. § 66.*]

*For other cases see same topic and section NUMBER in Dec. Dig. & Am. Dig. Key No. Series & Rep'r Indexes

<sup>1</sup> Affirmed per curiam.

4. TELEGRAPHS AND TELEPHONES (§ 66*)—NEGLIGENT DELIVERY OF TELEGRAM—ACTION—PRESUMPTION OF MENTAL ANGUISH.

In an action for negligence of a telegraph company in delivering a message announcing the death of plaintiff's brother, and fixing the date of the funeral, so as to prevent plaintiff from attending the funeral, which he would otherwise have done, mental anguish will be presumed.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Telegraphs and Telephones, Cent. Dig. § 61; Dec. Dig. § 66.*]

5. TRIAL (§ 260*)—INSTRUCTIONS—REPETITION.

A party whose instructions have been refused cannot complain, where they have been substantially given in the charge of the court.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Trial, Cent. Dig. §§ 651-659; Dec. Dig. § 260.*]

6. TELEGRAPHS AND TELEPHONES (§ 37*)—DELIVERY OF TELEGRAM—INQUIRY AT PLACE OF RESIDENCE.

Where a telegram is sent in care of another person, it is not sufficient to make inquiry for the sendee at the place of residence of such person, if it is not delivered to him.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Telegraphs and Telephones, Dec. Dig. § 37.*]

7. TRIAL (§ 252*)—NEGLIGENT DELIVERY OF TELEGRAM—ACTION—INSTRUCTIONS—APPLICATION TO EVIDENCE.

Where there is no evidence, in an action against a telegraph company for negligence in the delivery of a death message, that the company "offered" the message at plaintiff's boarding house, or "delivered" it at his place of business, instructions assuming an offer or delivery of the telegram as a fact are properly refused, as being inapplicable to the evidence.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Trial, Cent. Dig. §§ 596-612; Dec. Dig. § 252.*]

8. TRIAL (§ 251*)—INSTRUCTIONS—APPLICABILITY TO PLEADINGS.

Instructions, in an action by a father and son against a telegraph company for negligence in the delivery of a death message to the son, that it was the duty of the son to use all available means to have the funeral postponed, and to get there if possible, and that if he had not used his best efforts there could be no recovery, and that if the father, by the exercise of reasonable care, could have postponed the funeral and arranged for the attendance of the son, then only nominal damages could be recovered, are properly refused, since they were only appropriate to issues on contributory negligence, which was not pleaded.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Trial, Cent. Dig. §§ 587-595; Dec. Dig. § 251.*]

9. TRIAL (§ 251*)—INSTRUCTIONS—APPLICABILITY TO PLEADINGS.

In an action by a father and son against a telegraph company for negligence in the delivery of a death message to the son at Detroit, where plaintiffs did not seek any damages for failure to deliver a telegram sent from Detroit, the refusal of instructions that plaintiffs could not recover for alleged nondelivery of the telegram, alleged to have been sent from Detroit, is not error.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Trial, Dec. Dig. § 251.*]

10. TELEGRAPHS AND TELEPHONES (§ 74*)—NEGLIGENT DELIVERY OF TELEGRAM—ACTION—SUBMISSION OF ISSUES.

In an action by a father and son against a telegraph company for damages for delay in the delivery of a message to the son, announcing the death of his brother and the time of the funeral, so that he was unable to attend the funeral, the court's submission of issues as to whether defendant negligently delayed to deliver the telegram to the son, whether, had it been delivered promptly, he could have attended the funeral of his brother, and what damages the father and son could recover, enabled the parties to present their contentions before the jury.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Telegraphs and Telephones, Dec. Dig. § 74.*]

11. EVIDENCE (§ 244*)—ADMISSIBILITY—DECLARATION OF DEFENDANT'S AGENT.

In an action for damages for failure to deliver a death message, where the evidence showed that plaintiff, to whom the message was sent, had called at the defendant's place of business to inquire about the message, a declaration of defendant's agent that there was no message, made in the performance of a duty, is admissible.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Evidence, Dec. Dig. § 244.*]

Appeal from Superior Court, Harnett County; Cooke, Judge.

Actions by Z. T. Kivett and H. H. Kivett against the Western Union Telegraph Company, tried together. Judgment in each case for plaintiff, and defendant appeals. Affirmed.

These were two separate civil actions; each action being for the recovery of damages for mental anguish alleged to have been caused by the delay and nondelivery of telegrams, relating to the death of one Herndon H. Kivett. One suit was in the name of Z. T. Kivett, father of the deceased, and the other in the name of H. H. Kivett, twin brother of the deceased. By consent the two cases were tried together.

There was evidence on the part of the plaintiffs tending to establish the following facts: That on the 23d day of July, 1909, the plaintiff, Z. T. Kivett, was living at Bule's Creek, Harnett county, N. C., and the plaintiff H. H. Kivett, his son, was living at Detroit, Mich., and was boarding with a Mrs. Pack, at 28 Stimson Place, and was working at the Ford Motor Company shops in that city. That at 7 o'clock a. m. on the 23d of July, a message was delivered to the defendant at Benson, in the following words: "Bule's Creek, N. C., July 23rd, 1909. H. H. Kivett, Detroit, Mich., 28 Stimson Place. Herndon died this morning. Heart failure. Will bury Sunday evening. Wire if you come. Z. T. Kivett." That at 7:35 said message was promptly dispatched by the Benson office and was received at the office of defendant in Detroit at 7:23 a. m. (central time), being about an hour later. That about 8 o'clock the same morning this telegram was carried by a messenger boy of the defendant to 28 Stimson place, where he was told by the sendee's landlady, Mrs. Edith M. Pack, that the sendee, H. H. Kivett, was not at home, that he was at the Ford motor works. That she offered to pay the charges, but was told by the messenger boy that it must be delivered personally. That the said H. H. Kivett was at work at said motor works on said day, and the telegram was not delivered to him there. That on returning to the boarding place at 6 o'clock p. m. on the same day the telegram arrived, he was informed by his landlady that a telegram had come to the house for him during the day, and he thereupon went to the main office of the defendant company in Detroit, shortly after 6 o'clock p. m., and asked for the telegram, and was told by the defendant's agent in charge that none had come to his address during the day. That, after retiring for the night at about 12:30, the next morning the telegram was delivered to the plaintiff. That he immediately wired to his father that he could not reach home in time for the funeral, paid for both telegrams, and delivered this last one to the same messenger boy who had delivered the first. That if the telegram had been delivered at any time during the day up to 10 o'clock p. m. the plaintiff H. H. Kivett could and would have left Detroit in time to have reached his father's home in Buile's Creek before the funeral. There was also evidence tending to show that at the time the telegram was delivered at 12:30 a. m., July 24th, that it was impossible for plaintiff to reach Buile's Creek in time for the funeral.

A witness for the defendant, Mary Nolan, testified that on the date of the receipt of the telegram at Detroit she was in charge of a branch office of the defendant in that city; that she handled the message in controversy and sent it to the Ford motor works. She did not claim that she carried the message herself, and no witness was introduced who testified that he went to the motor works with the message.

The plaintiff, H. H. Kivett, was examined as a witness and testified that he had made the railroad connection between Detroit and Dunn once, and knew the movement of the trains. He was then asked: "Q. If the telegram had been delivered to you in the morning at the time Mrs. Pack, your landlady, told you it came there, or at a reasonable time thereafter at the Ford automobile shop, could or would you have gone home to the funeral? (Defendant objects.) A. I could and would have reached home. Q. If the company had delivered the telegram to you at or about the time they brought it to the landlady the second time at 10 o'clock, if they had delivered it to you at the Ford automobile shop, could you have gotten home? (Defendant objects; overruled. Exception.) A. I could have reached home if they had delivered that telegram any time before 9 o'clock p. m. Friday, July 23d. I could have reached home in time for my brother's funeral. I would have done it. I could have reached home at the time I inquired for it in time for my brother's funeral." He was also asked: "Q. When you went out West, state whether or not your brother went with you. A. He did. Q. How long did he stay with you? (Defendant objects.) A. About three years."

The defendant tendered the following issues: (1) Did the defendant negligently delay the delivery of the telegram sent to H. H. Kivett? (2) Did the defendant receive and negligently fail to transmit and deliver a telegram from Detroit, Mich., to Dunn, N. C., as alleged in the complaint of Z. T. Kivett? (3) Were the plaintiffs injured thereby? (4) What damages, if any, is the plaintiff Z. T. Kivett entitled to recover as mental anguish caused by such negligence, if any there was? (5) What damages, if any, is the plaintiff H. H. Kivett entitled to recover as mental anguish caused by such negligence, if any there was? Which his honor refused to submit, and defendant excepted.

His honor submitted the following issues: (1) Did the defendant negligently delay to deliver the telegram addressed to H. H. Kivett, in Detroit, Mich., as alleged in the complaint? (2) If the telegram had been delivered promptly, could and would plaintiff's son, H. H. Kivett, have attended the funeral of plaintiff's son, Herndon H. Kivett? (3) What damages, if any, is the plaintiff, Z. T. Kivett, entitled to recover of the defendant? (1) Did the defendant negligently delay the telegram sent to H. H. Kivett in Detroit? (2) If the telegram had been delivered promptly, could and would plaintiff have attended the funeral of his twin brother, Herndon H. Kivett? (3) What damage, if any, is the plaintiff, H. H. Kivett, entitled to recover of the defendant company? Defendant objected to the submission of the issues in both cases. Objection overruled, and defendant excepted.

The defendant tendered the following prayers for instructions:

"(1) That if the jury find from the evidence that the telegram as sent was directed to H. H. Kivett, at No. 28 Stimson place, Detroit, Mich., that the same was promptly transmitted to Detroit, and within a short time after its receipt there offered the same at the said address, the boarding place of the plaintiff, but the plaintiff was not there, then any effort made by the defendant to deliver at another place was not called for in the contract under which the message was sent, and you should answer the first issue, 'No.' Refused, and defendant excepted.

"(2) If the jury find from the evidence that the message was delivered within a reasonable time, to the Ford motor works, in pursuance of information furnished to the messenger boy, then the defendant has fulfilled its contract, and it was not the defendant's duty to locate plaintiff H. H. Kivett among the several employes of that company, and if you so find, you should answer the first issue, 'No.' Refused, and defendant excepted.

"(3) The plaintiffs cannot recover damages for any suffering occasioned by the death of Herndon Kivett, but, if at all, only such mental anguish as resulted directly from the inability of H. H. Kivett to get to the funeral, and the jury must be satisfied by the greater weight of the evidence that such inability to reach the funeral was caused directly by the negligence of the defendant." Refused, and defendant excepted.

"(4) It was the duty of the plaintiff H. H. Kivett to use all available means to have the funeral postponed, and to get there, if possible, before he is entitled to recover at all, and if you are not satisfied that he used his best efforts you should answer the second issue, 'No.'" Refused, and defendant excepted.

"(5) Mere disappointment, sorrow, or regret at not being able to reach the funeral, or at not having the son at such funeral, would not constitute what the law deems mental anguish, and if there is no more than this, then plaintiffs can recover only nominal damages; and there is no evidence in this case that either of the plaintiffs suffered more than disappointment, sorrow, or regret at the inability of H. H. Kivett to get to the funeral." Refused, and defendant excepted.

"(6) The plaintiff H. H. Kivett cannot recover for any alleged nondelivery of the telegram alleged to have been sent from Detroit to Z. T. Kivett at Dunn." Refused, and defendant excepted.

"(7) The plaintiff Z. T. Kivett cannot recover anything for an alleged nondelivery of the telegram claimed to have been sent from Detroit to Dunn, as there is no evidence that the laws of the state of Michigan allow such a recovery." Refused, and defendant excepted.

"(8) If the plaintiffs, by the exercise of reasonable care, could have postponed the funeral and arranged for the attendance of H. H. Kivett at the funeral, then the plaintiffs could only recover nominal damages." Refused, and defendant excepted.

His honor charged the jury as follows:

"First. It is the duty of a telegraph company to be diligent in transmitting and delivering messages which are received by it, and any failure of this duty on its part would be negligence, and if damage results from such negligence, either to the sender or the sendee of such message, it would be actionable negligence.

"Second. If the message refers to a case of sickness or death of some member of the immediate family of the sender or sendee, and there be actionable negligence on the part of the defendant company to deliver it, then the law would presume mental anguish, but there would be no presumption as to the amount of damages beyond nominal damages, and it would be upon the defendant to prove by the preponderance of the evidence that there was no mental anguish, and the burden would be upon the plaintiff to establish by the greater weight of the evidence the amount of damages beyond nominal damages. Mental anguish, for which a plaintiff would be entitled to recover, is not that which is due to the death, but it must be that which is caused by the negligence of the defendant. Sorrow and grief for the death of a member of the family, however does not constitute a cause of action, unless it is intensified by the negligence of the telegraph company until it becomes mental anguish, and mental anguish is a very intense mental suffering, so much so as to temporarily increase mental pain, and, although the fact that the negligence of the defendant made the cause of disappointment and regret attending upon the sorrow and grief, because of the act of negligence on the part of the defendant company, still, unless a greater feeling than that was produced, it would not amount to mental anguish.

"Third. The damages to be allowed for mental anguish are compensatory, and not exemplary, and should be limited to a satisfactory or reasonable compensation. These are psychological in their nature, and may be difficult of assessment, but still the jury should be careful to allow as damages whatever is a fair and reasonable compensation to the plaintiff for his mental anguish, caused by the negligence, and no further.

"Fourth. The two cases of Z. T. Kivett against the Western Union Telegraph Company and of H. H. Kivett against the Western Union Telegraph Company are by consent of the parties being tried together. The court further instructs the jury as follows: Now apply the principles of the law above expressed to the facts of these cases as the jury shall find them.

"Fifth. Then upon the first issues submitted in the case of Z. T. Kivett against the Western Union Telegraph Company, if the jury shall find by the greater weight of the evidence that the defendant negligently delayed to deliver the message addressed to H. H. Kivett in Detroit, as alleged in the complaint, the jury should answer the first issue, 'Yes.' If they should not so find, they should answer that issue, 'No'; if they should answer that issue, 'No,' they need not go any further, and this instruction is given as to the first issue in the other case of H. H. Kivett against the Western Union Telegraph Company; but if they should answer the first issue, 'Yes,' as to any of them, then as to both cases, if so answered, or as to the one whereof the answer is, 'Yes,' as the case may be, the jury shall proceed to consider the second issue, and upon that issue the court instructs the jury that, if they shall find by the greater weight of the evidence that if the message had been delivered with reasonable promptness H. H. Kivett could and would have reached his father's home in time to, and would have attended his brother's funeral or burial, they should answer said issue, 'Yes'; if they should not so find, they should answer that issue, 'No,' in both cases, and if they should answer that issue, 'No,' they need not go any further.

"Sixth. But if they should answer that issue, 'Yes,' upon the third issue the court instructs the jury that they must allow nominal damages in each case, and in addition thereto they should allow in each case a reasonable compensation for the mental anguish which they find the respective plaintiffs suffered because of the negligence of the defendant, which the court has heretofore advised, so that the damages allowed for this cause should be reasonable, and only in compensation for the anguish caused by the negligence of the defendant. The court charges you that in your deliberations on that subject a spirit of fairness should control."

Rose & Rose, for appellant. Baggett & Baggett and J. C. Clifford, for appellees.

ALLEN, J. (after stating the facts as above). [1, 2] The plaintiffs could not recover substantial damages, unless they established the fact that H. H. Kivett could and would have reached home in time for his brother's funeral, if the telegram had been promptly delivered. His evidence on this point was therefore material, and we do not think it is subject to the criticism of the defendant that the witness was stating an opinion, not a fact, and that he does not show that he was familiar with the schedules of the trains. He does not use the word "schedule," but says he had made the connection between Detroit and Dunn once, and knew the movement of the trains. We think the evidence competent.

[3] It was also competent for him to testify that his deceased brother had stayed with him in the West three years, as bearing upon the relationship between them.

[4] While mental anguish will be presumed under conditions presented by this record, when the relationship is that of brothers, this does not exclude other evidence tending to prove a close association between them.

[5] The third and fifth prayers for instructions were substantially given in the charge of the court, and we think there was no error in denying the others.

[6] The first of these prayers, if accepted as law, would relieve the telegraph company from any duty to make inquiry for the sendee of a message, when the street address is given, further than at the place indicated by the address, and is opposed to the doctrine in Hendricks v. Telegraph Co., 126 N. C. 312, 35 S. E. 543, 78 Am. St. Rep. 658, where it is held that, although a telegram is sent in care of another person, it is not sufficient to make inquiry at the place of business of such person, if not delivered to him. The rule contended for, if sustained, might relieve the defendant from liability in this case, but it would result in imposing additional burdens and expense on it, because under such a rule no one would add a street address to a telegram, and the defendant would have to search a city for a sendee.

[7] Again, there is no evidence that the defendant "offered" the message at the boarding house. On the contrary, the keeper of the house testified that she told the messenger boy she would pay for the message, and he said it must be delivered personally, and she was not contradicted.

The second prayer could not have been given, because there was no evidence of a delivery at the motor works. The only witness on this question was Mary Nolan, who was in charge of a branch office of defendant in Detroit, and who testifies to no fact, except that she gave the message to a messenger boy, who was not a witness.

[8] The fourth and eighth prayers relate to the conduct of the plaintiff, and, if containing correct statements of law, should have been directed to issues on contributory negligence, instead of to the issue of negligence. The fact that the defendant did not tender an issue on contributory negligence is very strong evidence that it did not arise. It would seem that if he had attempted to postpone the funeral it would not have availed him, as he had to communicate with his father by telegraph, and he sent a telegram which was not delivered.

[9] The court could, with propriety, have given the sixth and seventh prayers, but the refusal to do so is not error. The plaintiffs did not seek to recover damages for failure to deliver the telegram sent from Detroit, and the charge clearly and explicitly confines the jury to the consideration of the telegram sent from Bule's Creek.

[10] The issues submitted by the court are almost identical with those which were approved in Dobson v. Telegraph Co., 152 N. C. 766, 68 S. E. 176, and enabled the plaintiffs and the defendant to present their contentions before the jury. "It is not material in what form issues are submitted to the jury, provided they are germane to the subject of the controversy, and each party has a fair opportunity to present his version of the facts and his views of the law, so that the case, as to all parties, can be tried on the merits." Wilson v. Taylor, 154 N. C. 215, 70 S. E. 288.

[11] The record does not disclose that an exception was taken to the conversation with the agent of the defendant, when the plaintiff called at the telegraph office about 6 o'clock, and asked if there was a telegram for him; but, in any event, we think the evidence is competent, because the declarations were made in furtherance of a duty the agent was then performing for the defendant.

There was evidence of negligence, and the motion to nonsuit could not have been allowed.

No error.

(89 S. C. 545)

VERNER et al. v. MULLER et al., Board of Com'rs of Richland County.

(Supreme Court of South Carolina. Oct. 25, 1911.)

1. Towns (§ 52*)—TOWNSHIP BONDS—BRIDGES—"BUILD."

Const. art. 10, § 6, provides that the General Assembly shall not have power to authorize any county or township to levy a tax or issue bonds for any purpose, "except for educational purposes, to build and repair roads, buildings and bridges, etc." Act Feb. 20, 1908 (25 St. at Large, p. 1431), providing for free bridges across certain rivers between counties named, the purchase thereof by a township, and the issue of bonds, if approved by the electors for the purposes of such purchase, conferred authority to "build" or purchase and to maintain such bridge, etc. Held, that the purpose of the Constitution was to leave the Legislature free to authorize counties and townships to establish and maintain public roads, buildings, and bridges, and that the word "build" might be employed in the sense of obtain, secure, or acquire, as well as in the ordinary meaning, and that hence the purchase of standing bridges was not in violation of the Constitution (citing 1 Words and Phrases, 887).

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Towns, Dec. Dig. § 52.*]

2. EVIDENCE (§ 10*)—JUDICIAL NOTICE—GEOGRAPHICAL FACTS—LOCATION OF CITIES.

The court takes judicial notice of the geographical situation and the fact that the state capital (Columbia) is situated in Columbia township, near the confluence of the Congaree and Broad rivers.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Evidence, Cent. Dig. §§ 9-14; Dec. Dig. § 10.*]

3. STATUTES (§ 76*)—SPECIAL LAWS—FREE BRIDGES IN CERTAIN LOCATION.

Act Feb. 20, 1908 (25 St. at Large, p. 1431), undertaking to provide for free bridges across certain rivers in the state, is not a special law, in contravention of Const. art. 3, § 34, subd. 11, which provides that, "in all other cases where a general law can be made applicable, no special laws shall be enacted," since the object to be accomplished related to a corporate purpose of the township in which the bridges were to be provided, and the situation was one which could not have been dealt with by a general law.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Statutes, Dec. Dig. § 76.*]

Supplemental petition by James S. Verner and others to enjoin W. F. Muller and others, as members of the Board of County Commissioners of Richland County, from issuing certain township bonds for bridge purposes. Injunction denied, and petition dismissed.

See, also, 89 S. C. 117, 71 S. E. 654.

Weston & Aycock, for petitioners. Clarkson & Clarkson, for respondents.

JONES, C. J. Under the original petition in this case, petitioners sought to enjoin the board of county commissioners of Richland county from issuing certain bonds of Columbia township, in said county, for bridge purposes, pursuant to the act of February 20, 1908 (25 St. at Large, p. 1431), and the questions then presented were decided by this court in an opinion filed June 14, 1911, reported in 89 S. C. 117, 71 S. E. 654, in which the injunction sought was denied.

[1] Under a supplemental petition and with leave of the court, it is sought to renew the request for an injunction upon other grounds than those already considered. It is now contended that the act of 1908, construed to authorize the purchase of standing bridges, is obnoxious to section 6, art. 10, of the Constitution, which provides: "The General Assembly shall not have power to authorize any county or township to levy a tax or issue bonds for any purpose, except for educational purposes, to build and repair public roads, buildings and bridges, etc." The purpose of the Constitution was to leave the Legislature free to authorize counties and townships to establish and maintain public roads, buildings, and bridges. The word "build" may be employed in the sense of obtain, secure, or acquire, as well as the ordinary meaning. In Nebraska Loan & Building Ass'n v. Perkins, 61 Neb. 254, 85 N. W. 67, 1 Words and Phrases, 887, authority to loan funds for "building" homesteads was construed to include the idea of purchasing lots and buildings. In Bascom v. Oconee, 48 S. C. 55, 25 S. E. 984, authority to the county commissioners to open and establish a public road connecting with a bridge over a stream included power to purchase the bridge already constructed. In Dick v. Scarborough, 73 S. C. 153, 56 S. E. 86, it was held that authority to issue bonds for establishing municipal waterworks included the acquirement of waterworks by purchase.

[2, 3] It is also contended that the act of 1908 is a special law, in contravention of subdivision 11, § 34, art. 3, of the Constitution, which reads as follows: "In all other cases where a general law can be made applicable no special law shall be enacted." The purpose of the act was to provide for free bridges across the Congaree and Broad rivers in this state, between Columbia township, in Richland county, and the county of Lexington.

The court takes judicial notice of the geographical situation and the fact that the state capital (Columbia) is situated in Columbia township, near the confluence of these rivers. The object to be accomplished related to a corporate purpose of Columbia township, and the situation was one which could not have been dealt with by a general law. State v. Brock, 66 S. C. 362, 44 S. E. 931.

Injunction denied, and petition dismissed.

GARY, A. J., and WOODS and HYDRICK, JJ., concur.

(30 S. C. 535)

PINCKNEY v. ATLANTIC COAST LINE R. CO. et al.

(Supreme Court of South Carolina. Oct. 25, 1911.)

1. MASTER AND SERVANT (§ 243*)—RAILROADS—CAR REPAIRERS—INJURY—CONTRIBUTORY NEGLIGENCE.

A railway car repairer is guilty of contributory negligence in working under a car in disregard of a rule requiring him to protect himself by posting a flag at the head of the track, if he could comply with the rule with reasonable effort.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Master and Servant, Cent. Dig. §§ 682, 759-775; Dec. Dig. § 248.*]

2. MASTER AND SERVANT (§ 265*)—CONTRIBUTORY NEGLIGENCE—BURDEN OF PROOF.

The burden is on an employer, sued for personal injury, to show a rule requiring the employé to protect himself, and the latter's violation thereof.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Master and Servant, Cent. Dig. §§ 877-908; Dec. Dig. § 265.*]

3. MASTER AND SERVANT (§ 201*)—NEGLIGENCE OF FELLOW SERVANTS.

An employé cannot recover for injury proximately resulting from negligence of a fellow servant as the sole cause, or as a cause concurring with plaintiff's own negligence; but he can recover if the proximate cause was the negligence of defendant combined with that of the fellow servant.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Master and Servant, Cent. Dig. §§ 515-534; Dec. Dig. § 201.*]

4. MASTER AND SERVANT (§ 285*)—RAILROADS—CAR REPAIRERS—INJURY—JURY QUESTIONS.

In an action for injury to a railway car repairer by movement of a car under which he was working, held, under the evidence, a jury question whether the injury resulted from defendant's, a fellow servant's, or plaintiff's own negligence.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Master and Servant, Cent. Dig. §§ 1002-1053; Dec. Dig. § 285.*]

Appeal from Common Pleas Circuit Court of Colleton County; Ernest Gary, Judge.

"To be officially reported."

Action by J. B. Pinckney against the Atlantic Coast Line Railroad Company and another. Judgment for defendants, and plaintiff appeals. Reversed and remanded.

Legare & Holman and Howell & Gruber, for appellant. Jas. E. Peurifoy, W. H. Fitz-Simons, P. A. Willcox, and F. Barron Grier, for respondents.

WOODS, J. The plaintiff, a car repairer, was injured on the railroad yard at Yemassee by the impact of a moving freight train against the car under which he was working. In his complaint he alleged that he went under the car to work, relying on the assurance of the conductor of the train that he had finished his work at Yemassee, and was about to start for Augusta; and that the conductor, without notice to him, "carelessly, negligently, wantonly, and in gross and reckless disregard of the safety and rights of the plaintiff," moved the locomotive and train upon the siding, and struck and violently moved the car, and thus inflicted the injuries complained of. The defenses material to the appeal are: Denial of negligence; the allegation of contributory negligence, in that the plaintiff "carelessly and negligently went between and under said cars to work thereon, without placing the blue flag or signal to denote that he was at work under or about the cars, in direct violation of the rules of the company and his orders as car inspector"; and the allegation that the injuries received by plaintiff, if not due to his own negligence, were due to the negligence of a fellow servant or fellow servants of the plaintiff. At the close of plaintiff's testimony, the circuit judge ordered a nonsuit, summarizing as follows his reasons for holding that the plaintiff could not recover: "(1) He knew it was dangerous to go under that car. He made that statement. (2) That there was at the time a train in the yard. (3) That he knew the rule of the company to protect himself with a blue flag. (4) That he did not protect himself with a blue flag. (5) That in place of a flag he, by his own act, delegated that power, that trust, to his collaborer, Freeman. (6) That this collaborer or fellow servant, or partner, as he expressed it, did not warn him of the approach of the backing train. (7) That if the fellow servant had warned him he could have escaped the injury."

[1, 2] The case turns mainly on whether the evidence offered by the plaintiff proved conclusively that he had been guilty of contributory negligence in disregarding the rule of the company, requiring a car repairer working under a car to protect himself by a blue flag. If the plaintiff proved that he did disregard such a rule, known to him to be in force and so essential to his own safety, as well as the safety of other employes and the general public, when he could have complied with it by reasonable effort on his part, and thus prevented the injury, then the nonsuit was proper. Stephens v. Southern Ry. Co., 82 S. C. 542, 64 S. E. 601. The alleged contributory negligence in failing to use the protection of a blue flag, as required by the rule, being an affirmative defense, it was not incumbent on the plaintiff to prove that he had not violated the rule, or that he could not have complied with it by reasonable effort; on the contrary, the burden was on the defendants to prove the rule and its violation. Of course, the defendants could rely for such proof on the evidence offered by the plaintiff.

All the testimony on the subject was the following, adduced from the plaintiff: "Q. I want you to tell the jury what transpired before you were injured, and how you were injured. A. When I was working, I used a blue flag—that is, we used two or more flags; we placed them at the head of the tracks to warn out other trains; and I worked there about 25 days, and most of our flags were broken up the day before I went to work there. Q. The day before what? A. The day before I was injured I had both flags broken. (Objected to on the ground that there is no allegation in the complaint that improper appliances were furnished the plaintiff with which to work. Objection sustained by the court.) Q. Well, omit about the flags for the present. Now, at that time, Mr. Pinckney, just before you were injured, was there any freight train in the yard at that time?" Cross-examination: "Q. When you were working at Florence as repairer, you knew, of course, that the rules did not permit you to go under a car without displaying a blue flag? A. I had never been told so, but I learned it from working with them. Q. Now what kind of signal do you use at night under a car? A. I don't know. I never worked at night. Q. But you do know you use a blue flag in daylight? A. Yes, sir. Q. You say you did know that was the rule? A. Yes, sir. Q. That was the same rule you had with the C. & W. C. and A. C. L. before you went to Florence? A. Yes, sir. Q. Where did you put that blue flag? A. At the head of the track you were working on. Q. So the engineer would see the flag? A. Yes, sir. Q. And that would stop him? A. It was supposed to do that."

It thus appears that after plaintiff had told of the general use of the flags and of the condition of those furnished him, objection was made by defendants, and sustained, to his testimony that the flags were broken. There was no conclusive evidence that the blue flags were not used on this occasion, but, even if there had been, we are unable to agree that a nonsuit was proper without allowing the plaintiff to testify as to the condition of the flags furnished him; for it might have appeared that they were so broken as to be useless, and that he had been unable to procure others.

[3, 4] The testimony was direct that the conductor of the train assured plaintiff that he was through with his work, and was about to leave for Augusta, and that the plaintiff relied on this statement in going under the car. The act of the conductor in running his train back and striking the cars standing on the siding under these circumstances furnished some evidence of negligence on the part of the defendants. It may be that the plaintiff's fellow laborer, Freeman, who at plaintiff's request was on watch against the approach of a train, was negligent in not signaling the train to stop, and in not warning plaintiff of its approach, and that his negligence was a proximate cause of the accident. If the negligence of Freeman, the fellow servant, was the sole proximate cause, or one of the proximate causes, the negligence of the plaintiff being the other, then the plaintiff could not recover. But, if the proximate cause of the injury was the negligence of the defendants combined with the negligence of Freeman, the fellow servant, the plaintiff would not be precluded from recovery. Elms v. Sou. Power Co., 79 S. C. 502, 60 S. E. 1110; Roberts v. Virginia C. C. Co., 84 S. C. 283, 66 S. E. 298. We think the evidence required that these issues and the issue of contributory negligence growing out of the rule requiring the use of a blue flag should be submitted to the jury.

It is the judgment of this court that the judgment of the circuit court be reversed, and the cause be remanded to that court for a new trial.

JONES, C. J., GARY, A. J., and HYDRICK, J., concur.

(89 S. C. 540)

WEST et al. v. SMITH et al.

(Supreme Court of South Carolina. Oct. 25, 1911.)

WILLS (§ 634*)—ESTATE CONVEYED—VESTED REMAINDER.

A will bequeathed the remainder of testator's estate to two trustees, the income to be paid to testator's married daughter for her natural life, and provided that on her death the property should pass to his daughter's "child or children and to the issue of any deceased child or children; the child or children of such deceased child or children representing and taking the share or shares to which his, her, or their deceased parent or parents would have been entitled, had they survived the said" daughter. Held, that the daughter's children took a vested remainder, so that upon the death of three daughters of testator's daughter, without children, before their mother died, leaving a brother and their mother surviving, the latter inherited the shares of such daughters, and upon the brother's death without children his share passed by inheritance to his mother and his widow.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Wills, Cent. Dig. §§ 1488-1510; Dec. Dig. § 634.*]

Appeal from Common Pleas Circuit Court of Charleston County; E. C. Watts, Judge.

"To be officially reported."

Action by Emmett T. West and others against Gertrude I. Smith and others. From a judgment for defendants, plaintiffs appeal. Affirmed.

Smythe, Lee & Frost, for appellants. Ficken, Hughes & Ficken, for respondents.

WOODS, J. In this action the plaintiffs, as heirs at law of John Magee, seek to recover of the defendant Gertrude I. Smith all the property which passed under the following clause of John Magee's will: "I bequeath the remainder of my said estate to my friends, the said Thomas O'Brien and John Dougherty, to them and their heirs in trust to be invested in safe personal property and real estate, either or both, and the interest or income arising from the same shall be paid over to my daughter Mary Brown, the wife of the said Isaac Brown, her receipts alone to be taken by the said trustees as discharges in full for these payments, for and during her natural life, free from the control and in no manner whatsoever liable for the debts or contracts of her present or any future husband with whom she may intermarry. And upon her death the said investment or investments or the proceeds thereof shall pass to the said Mary Brown's child or children, and to the issue of any deceased child or children, the child or children of such deceased child or children representing and taking the share or shares to which his, her or their deceased parent or parents would have been entitled had they survived the said Mary Brown, to them and their heirs severally, forever."

The facts as stated by the master are not disputed. John Magee died in 1856. Mary Brown, his daughter, the life tenant mentioned in the residuary clause, had four children, three daughters and one son. The three daughters predeceased their mother and their brother, dying intestate, unmarried, and without issue. The son, Charles A. Brown, married and died intestate, and without issue, on October 16, 1904, leaving as his heirs and distributees his widow, Gertrude I. Brown, and his mother, the life tenant, Mary Brown. Mary Brown died in 1907, leaving a will in which she devised and bequeathed all her property to her daughter-in-law, Gertrude I. Brown, and appointed her executrix of the will. Gertrude I. Brown afterwards intermarried with one Smith, and in this action appears as the defendant Gertrude I. Smith.

The plaintiffs' claim depends on the proposition that the children of Mary Brown took under the will nothing more than a contingent remainder, and when they all died during the life of their mother, without issue, the property reverted to or became vested in the plaintiffs as heirs of John Magee.

The defendants' position is that the devise created a vested remainder in the children of Mary Brown, who took the property as soon as the will became operative, the title thus taken being subject only to defeasance by death with a child or children surviving, in which event the child or children would have taken; that upon the death of the three daughters without children their shares were inherited by their mother, Mary Brown, and their brother, Charles A. Brown, and upon the death of Charles A. Brown without children his interest, derived directly under the will and inherited from his sisters, passed by inheritance to the defendant, his widow, and Mary Brown, his mother; that when Mary Brown devised all her interest to the defendant her title became complete.

The master to whom the case was referred reported in favor of the defendants, and his report was confirmed by the circuit court. It is important to observe that the devise in remainder is not to the child or children of Mary Brown who may survive her, but to her child or children generally; for upon this distinction many of the cases cited by counsel depend. The subject has been so often and so fully considered by the court that it requires no extended discussion at our hands. In considering a devise of the same kind, Chief Justice McIVER thus states the rule now recognized in this state: "The authorities in this state appear to be somewhat conflicting, but it seems to us that the more recent cases support the view that the remainders vested in such of the issue as were in esse at the date of the deed, at that time, opening to let in other issue as they came into existence, whose interests were also vested at their birth, and that such vested interests were not divested by the death of any such issue, leaving no issue in the lifetime of the life tenant; and hence that the circuit judge erred in excluding the representatives of Robert L. Deas and Zephania from any participation in the division of the property. * * * It will be observed that the remainder is to the issue of Eliza C. Deas, not to her surviving issue, or to her issue then living, which would have been the words that most naturally would have been used, if the intention had been to confine the gift to such issue only as might be in esse at the death of the life tenant; but, on the contrary, as we have said, the remainder is to the issue generally, in such terms as import a fee simple, which was to vest in possession at the time of the death of the life tenant; and hence, as was said in Rutledge v. Rutledge, Dud. Eq. 201, 'necessarily all falling within the description of issue up to that time are entitled to an equal participation in the estate.'" Gourdin v. Deas, 27 S. C. 479, 4 S. E. 64.

On this point, there is no way of distinguishing the remainder in the Magee will from those considered in Boykin v. Boykin, 21 S. C. 513, and Brown v. McCall, 44 S. C. 503, 22 S. E. 823. In these cases it was held that the children who had died without issue during the life of the life tenant had taken a vested remainder, transmissible to their grantees or heirs. This conclusion is in accord with the general rules stated in the recent case of Walker v. Alverson, 87 S. C. 55, 68 S. E. 966, 30 L. R. A. (N. S.) 115, though the precise point now under consideration was not involved in that case. Reliance is placed on Earle v. Maxwell, 86 S. C. 1, 67 S. E. 962, 138 Am. St. Rep. 1012, as an authority to the contrary, where a devise somewhat similar to this, but with important differences, was treated as a contingent remainder. But the appeal in that case did not involve the point, and the case is not an authority, and has not the force even of a dictum on this subject. The circuit judge there held that Maxwell, the bankrupt, had only a contingent remainder, and that that remainder was property within the meaning of the bankrupt law, and therefore subject to sale as a part of the bankrupt estate. There was no appeal from his decision as to the nature of Maxwell's interest, and therefore the construction of the will under which he took was not before this court. Indeed, counsel conceded that the remainder was contingent. The only points decided by this court were that the remainder, necessarily treated as contingent because so finally adjudged by the circuit court, was subject to sale as a part of the property of the bankrupt, and that the circuit court was right in entertaining a suit instituted by the trustee before the sale to remove, as a cloud on the right of the trustee to the interest of Maxwell, the latter's claim that such interest did not pass to the trustee, and was not the subject of sale.

It is the judgment of this court that the judgment of the circuit court be affirmed.

JONES, C. J., GARY, A. J., and HYDRICK, J., concur.

(89 S. C. 539)

MILLER v. HAMILTON BROWN SHOE CO.

(Supreme Court of South Carolina. Oct. 25, 1911.)

1. LIBEL AND SLANDER (§ 111*)—MALICE—EVIDENCE.

In an action for slander, consisting of a charge that defendant was unfit for business because of the use of drugs, defendant was entitled to prove any facts tending to show that other reasonable men in the situation of its agent, who made the charge, would have drawn the inference that the plaintiff had, by the use of drugs, rendered himself unfit to be intrusted with important business, to rebut the charge of malice.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Libel and Slander, Cent. Dig. §§ 315-324; Dec. Dig. § 111.*]

2. LIBEL AND SLANDER (§ 111*)—EVIDENCE—PRIOR ACTS.

In an action for slander for charging plaintiff with being under the influence of drugs, as a reason for defendant's refusal to deliver samples to him on July 19, 1909, evidence that on the 17th of June previous plaintiff had been in a state of gross intoxication for five days was admissible, as bearing on the question whether plaintiff's condition, when he applied for samples, was due to drugs, or an attack of paralysis, as claimed.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Libel and Slander, Cent. Dig. §§ 315-324; Dec. Dig. § 111.*]

3. LIBEL AND SLANDER (§ 111*)—EVIDENCE—MATERIALITY.

Where, in an action for slander, consisting of a charge that plaintiff had rendered himself unfit for business by the use of drugs, a letter containing the alleged slander also stated that plaintiff had been given an opportunity to make good, but that at the time his best ability was required he had failed, evidence of plaintiff's total incapacity to attend to defendant's business because of drunkenness was admissible to show that the charge was well founded, and not malicious.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Libel and Slander, Cent. Dig. §§ 315-324; Dec. Dig. § 111.*]

4. LIBEL AND SLANDER (§ 111*)—EVIDENCE—MALICE.

In an action for slander, consisting of a charge that plaintiff had unfitted himself for business because of drugs, evidence that witness had expressed to defendant's agent, who made the alleged false charge, that plaintiff had been taking some kind of opiate was admissible in mitigation of damages, as tending to show that the charge was not made maliciously, or without foundation.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Libel and Slander, Cent. Dig. §§ 315-324; Dec. Dig. § 111.*]

5. TRIAL (§ 81*)—OBJECTIONS TO EVIDENCE—SUFFICIENCY.

On the reading of an answer from a witness' deposition, plaintiff's counsel stated: "I object to his answer there, on the ground of specific instances that he had heard he [plaintiff] was drinking at other times. I object to that, but read it because, under your honor's ruling, it would go in anyway." Held insufficient to move the court to pass on the admissibility of the testimony.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Trial, Cent. Dig. § 193; Dec. Dig. § 81.*]

6. EVIDENCE (§ 474*)—MENTAL CONDITIONS.

In an action for slander, consisting of a charge that plaintiff had rendered himself unfit for business by taking drugs, witnesses who testified that they had seen persons under the influence of drugs, and were familiar with their effects, were properly permitted to testify that they saw plaintiff shortly prior to the publication of the charge, and that, in their opinion, he was under the influence of the drugs.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Evidence, Cent. Dig. §§ 2196-2219; Dec. Dig. § 474.*]

Appeal from Common Pleas Circuit Court of Abbeville County; John S. Wilson, Judge. "To be officially reported."

Action by J. C. Miller against the Hamilton Brown Shoe Company. Judgment for defendant, and plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

Wm. N. Graydon, for appellant. Wm. P. Greene, for respondent.

WOODS, A. J. In this action of slander, the verdict was for the defendant and the plaintiff appeals, assigning error in the admission of testimony offered by the defendant.

The uncontroverted facts as they appear from the record are as follows: The plaintiff was a traveling salesman for the defendant, a corporation doing a wholesale shoe business in St. Louis, Mo. On and immediately after July 19, 1909, the plaintiff was in St. Louis for the purpose of obtaining his samples for use in soliciting business. John E. Ritchey, the agent of the defendant, through whom it dealt with its salesmen, charged the plaintiff in the presence of other employes, with being "doped," or under the influence of "dope," and refused to allow him to take samples. After the plaintiff had returned to his home in Abbeville, S. C., the same agent of the defendant wrote a letter to the plaintiff, and addressed it to him, reiterating the charge by saying, "You cannot make me believe anything different from what I told you last Tuesday." This letter was opened by plaintiff's wife, and the defendant afterwards sent a copy of it to M. T. Coleman. The plaintiff did not deny that he was in a very bad condition when he was in St. Louis, but alleged that his condition was due to an attack of paralysis, and was not caused by "dope," or the use of drugs.

[1] The issues in the case were: First, was the charge made by the defendant false? Second, was it a privileged communication, made to employees in the regular course of business? And, third, if false, was the charge maliciously made? On the last issue, it is manifest that the defendant had a right to prove any facts tending to show that other reasonable men in the situation of its agent would have drawn the inference that the plaintiff had, by the use of drugs, rendered himself unfit to be intrusted with important business.

[2] The first error assigned is the admission of the testimony of T. G. Patterson that he saw the plaintiff, at the Central Hotel, at Florence, S. C., very drunk, on June 13, 1909, and of V. O. Willis that he was in the same condition, at the same place, from the 15th to the 17th of June, 1909, when he last saw him. It is true, as argued by plaintiff's counsel, that the rule is against allowing proof of specific acts of past conduct, occurring at a different time, similar to that mentioned in the alleged slanderous charge; but the rule does not extend to the exclusion of testimony as to other specific acts which may be reasonably considered so closely connected in sequence with the alleged slanderous charge as to throw light on the inquiry as to its truth or falsity. According to the evidence of these witnesses, the plaintiff was in a state of gross intoxication from June 13 to June 17, 1909. The evidence does not disclose how long this condition continued, but there was no abatement when Mr. Willis left him on June 17th. The knowledge is common to all men that the use of drugs, popularly known as "dope," is very commonly resorted to after periods of extreme intoxication. In view of this fact, we do not think there ought to be any doubt that the evidence was competent on the sharp issue whether the sad condition in which the plaintiff appeared about a month later at defendant's store in St. Louis was due to "dope" or an attack of paralysis.

[3] But, aside from that consideration, the testimony was competent as bearing directly on one of the charges of the complaint. The letter written by defendant, alleged to be slanderous, contained this statement: "I gave you an opportunity to make good, and at the time your best ability was required you laid down on us." Evidence of the total incapacity of the plaintiff to attend to the business of the defendant because of drunkenness was competent, as tending to show that the charge in the letter was well founded, and not malicious.

[4] The case of Galloway v. Courtney, 10 Rich. 414, is conclusive that there was no error in admitting the statement of the witness Galloway that he expressed to Ritchey the opinion that the plaintiff had been taking some kind of opiate. According to that case, such testimony is admissible in mitigation of damages, as tending to show that the charge was not made maliciously, without any foundation whatever.

[5] Plaintiff's counsel asked R. Galloway, a witness on behalf of the defendant, whose testimony was taken de bene esse, "What was Miller's general reputation among traveling men, prior to this charge made against him, made in St. Louis by Ritchey and others?" The witness answered: "I never heard anything against Mr. Miller until the early part of this year, when I received a letter from Mr. Lee Willis, of Charlotte, N. C., in which he mentioned that Mr. Miller had been on a spree for several days in Florence, S. C. I have since heard of his drinking at other times. I have seen very little of Mr. Miller myself, but I have heard that as a rule he was popular among the traveling men." We do not think the point that this testimony was incompetent was made available by proper objection. In reading this answer, plaintiff's counsel said: "I object to his answer there, on the ground of specific instances that he had heard he was drinking at other times. I object to that, but read it because, under your honor's ruling, I suppose it would go in anyway." The presiding judge was not called on to pass on the admissibility of the testimony, and we are unable to find that in ruling on any other objection he had decided that a witness, not representing the defendant in the charge made against the plaintiff, could testify to having heard of specific instances of intemperance by the plaintiff.

[6] The remaining exceptions allege error in the admission of the testimony of a number of witnesses, who saw the plaintiff in St. Louis, that, in their opinion, he was under the influence of a drug. Before giving this opinion, every one of these witnesses testified that he had seen persons under the influence of drugs, and was familiar with their effects. The testimony was clearly admissible. The recognized rule is thus well stated in Hardy v. Merrill, 56 N. H. 227, 22 Am. Rep. 449, cited with approval in Jones v. Fuller, 19 S. C. 66, 45 Am. Rep. 761: "Courts and text-writers all agree that, upon questions of science and skill, opinions may be received from persons specially instructed by study and experience in the particular art or mystery to which the investigation relates. But, without reference to any recognized rule or principle, all concede the admissibility of the opinions of nonprofessional men upon a great variety of unscientific questions arising every day, and in every judicial inquiry. These are questions of identity, handwriting, quantity, value, weight, measure, time, distance, velocity, form, size, age, strength, heat, cold, sickness and health; questions also concerning various mental and moral aspects of humanity such as disposition and temper, anger, fear, excitement, intoxication, veracity, general character, and particular phases of character, and other conditions and things, both moral and physical, too numerous to mention." That the opinion of a witness as to whether a person under his observation was drunk or sober is admissible will hardly be doubted. On the same principle, a witness who has observed some of the numerous victims of the drug habit may express his conclusion, based on observation, that the condition of a certain person was due to the influence of a drug. Wigmore on Evidence, § 1974; Elliott on Evidence, § 676; Burt v. Burt, 168 Mass. 204, 46 N. E. 623.

It is the judgment of this court that the judgment of the circuit court be affirmed.

JONES, C. J., GARY, A. J., and HYDRICK, J., concur.

(137 Ga. 30)

WRIGHT v. GARLAND.

(Supreme Court of Georgia. Oct. 12, 1911.)

(Syllabus by the Court.)

APPEAL AND ERROR (§ 977*)—REVIEW—GRANT OF NEW TRIAL.

The law and the facts of this case did not require the verdict returned, and, as the judgment complained of is the first grant of a new trial, it will not be disturbed. Civil Code 1910, § 6204.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Appeal and Error, Cent. Dig. § 3863; Dec. Dig. § 977.*]

Error from Superior Court, Pike County; E. J. Reagan, Judge.

Action between Susan Wright and J. W. Garland. From the judgment, Wright brings error. Affirmed.

B. H. Manry and R. L. Berner, for plaintiff in error. Cleveland & Goodrich and Henry O. Farr, for defendant in error.

EVANS, P. J. Judgment affirmed. All the Justices concur, except BECK, J., absent.

COLEMAN v. BARBER.

(Supreme Court of Georgia. Oct. 11, 1911.)

(Syllabus by the Court.)

1. SPECIFIC PERFORMANCE (§ 114*)—PROCEEDINGS—PLEADING.

Coleman brought an action for specific performance against Barber. The substance of the petition was: Defendant sold to plaintiff a named city lot. At the time of the sale defendant gave to plaintiff the following receipt: "Received of G. L. Coleman $25, to close trade on lot corner Crawford and Mill streets, balance payable $750 on delivery of papers. This 12th day of January, 1910. [Signed] J. A. Barber." The agreed purchase price was $775, to be paid $275 cash, and five shares of stock of the Moultrie Telephone Company, of the value of $100 each. Plaintiff paid $25 cash, and, subsequently to the execution of the receipt, tendered to defendant $250 cash and five shares of stock of the Moultrie Telephone Company, and demanded of defendant a deed in accordance with the contract. Defendant refused to accept such tender and to convey the property to the plaintiff. Held, the petition was properly dismissed on general demurrer, for the reason, if for no other, that the receipt, so far as the petition showed, contained the whole contract and expressed the intention of the parties; that is, that the sum of $750, balance of the purchase price of the lot, was to be paid in cash (see Wellmaker v. Wheatley, 123 Ga. 201, 51 S. E. 436; Southern Bell Tel. & Tel. Co. v. Smith, 129 Ga. 558, 59 S. E. 215; Hawkins v. Studdard, 132 Ga. 265, 63 S. E. 852, 131 Am. St. Rep. 190), and therefore a tender of the $250 cash and five shares of the corporate stock of the telephone company was not a tender of the balance of the money due defendant under the contract, and he was under no obligation to accept the same and to execute a deed to plaintiff.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Specific Performance, Dec. Dig. § 114.*]

2. EVIDENCE (§ 419*)—PAROL EVIDENCE AFFECTING WRITING—ADMISSIBILITY.

In the absence of an allegation that the real contract was that $500 of the price of the lot was to be paid in five shares of the stock of the telegraph company, and that this part of the contract was not inserted in the writing because of fraud, accident, or mistake, parol evidence would not be admissible to show that such was the real contract. Civil Code 1910, § 5788, 2 Enc. Ev. 443, b, and cases cited in note 61.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Evidence, Cent. Dig. §§ 1912-1928; Dec. Dig. § 419.*]

Error from Superior Court, Colquitt County; J. H. Merrill, Judge.

Action by G. L. Coleman against J. A. Barber. Judgment for defendant, and plaintiff brings error. Affirmed.

Edwin L. Bryan, for plaintiff in error. Shipp & Kline and L. L. Moore, for defendant in error.

FISH, C. J. Judgment affirmed. All the Justices concur, except BECK, J., absent.

*For other cases see same topic and section NUMBER in Dec. Dig. & Am. Dig. Key No. Series & Rep'r Indexes

(137 Ga. 36)

KAIGLER v. BRANNON.

(Supreme Court of Georgia. Oct. 12, 1911.)

*(Syllabus by the Court.)1. FRAUDS, STATUTE OF (§§ 84, 116*)—SALES OF PERSONALTY—CONTRACT OF AGENT.

Brannon brought suit against Kaigler, making in the original and amended petition substantially the following allegations: The defendant directed the plaintiff, on April 26, 1909, to sell for him 20 bales of cotton at 10 cents per pound, to be delivered October 1, 1909. Plaintiff, in accordance with such instructions, sold Ford & Co. 20 bales of cotton, to be delivered October 1, 1909. The defendant refused to deliver the cotton, and the plaintiff was compelled to pay Ford & Co. "the difference between the price of cotton at 10 cents, at which it was sold, and the price of 13½ cents, its market value at the date of settlement. Petitioner made such settlement at the instance and request of G. O. Kaigler, who promised then and there to repay petitioner the sum of $312, which petitioner paid out for said Kaigler, and had failed and refused so to do, although petitioner has made demand for said sum." The defendant, among other things, pleaded that, if there was any contract between him and the plaintiff, it was not binding because of the statute of frauds. A verdict was rendered in favor of the plaintiff, and to the order of the court refusing the defendant a new trial he excepted. The evidence authorized a finding that the following was true: In the spring and summer of 1909 Kaigler orally directed Brannon, when he was able to do so, to sell for him 20 bales of cotton at 10 cents per pound, to be delivered on October 1, 1909, and both parties contemplated an actual delivery of the cotton by Kaigler, should Brannon make the sale as directed. No writing existed between them in regard to the matter. McGinty, who was a representative of Ford & Co., would not buy any cotton from Kaigler for future delivery, and soon after the directions were given Brannon made written contracts with McGinty, acting for Ford & Co., whereby Brannon sold the latter, at 10 cents per pound, 50 bales of cotton, to weigh at least 480 pounds each, and to be delivered on October 1, 1909. This was a legal contract and binding on Brannon. Twenty of the bales thus sold were sold by Brannon for Kaigler, and the remaining 30 were sold by him for other parties. Brannon signed the contract individually, and not as agent for Kaigler, whose name was not signed to the contract, nor mentioned therein. Soon after making the contract Brannon notified Kaigler that he had sold 20 bales of cotton for him at 10 cents per pound. Brannon sold 50 bales of his "own cotton in a separate contract." After October 1, 1909, upon being requested by Brannon to deliver the cotton, Kaigler told Brannon he was not ready to deliver it, and directed Brannon to pay Ford & Co. the difference between the contract price of the 20 bales and the market value of the cotton at the time and place of delivery, and that he (Kaigler) would reimburse Brannon the amount thus paid, and Brannon subsequently made such payment, amounting to $320. Held, if the facts set forth in the foregoing statement existed, which the jury were authorized to find did exist, they required a verdict in favor of the plaintiff, though there was no written contract between Kaigler and Brannon with respect to the sale of the cotton, or in reference to the payment made by the latter to Ford & Co.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Frauds, Statute of, Cent. Dig. §§ 141, 251-260; Dec. Dig. §§ 84, 116.*]

2. FRAUDS, STATUTE OF (§§ 84, 116*)—SALES OF PERSONALTY—CONTRACT OF AGENT.

The charges of the court excepted to, being in accordance with the foregoing ruling, were not subject to the exceptions thereto, to wit: That they were not correct statements of the law applicable to the facts of the case, and were not adjusted to the evidence in the case. There is no evidence of any binding contract between Kaigler and Brannon, or between Kaigler and any other person. The charges ignore the contention of Kaigler that "the contract between him and Brannon falls within the statute of frauds." "The evidence tends to show that, if Brannon paid any money to B. B. Ford & Co., it was on a contract made for 50 bales of cotton in his own name, and in which contract Kaigler was in no way concerned." "The court erred in charging the jury, under the circumstances stated, the fact that, though no written contract was made, it would still be binding upon the plaintiff if he made an oral contract; the charge being error, because under the evidence in this case the contract falls within the statute of frauds."

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Frauds, Statute of, Cent. Dig. §§ 141, 251-260; Dec. Dig. §§ 84, 116.*]

3. FRAUDS, STATUTE OF (§§ 84, 116*)—SALES OF PERSONALTY—CONTRACT OF AGENT.

The court did not err in refusing a new trial on the ground that "the court ignored the contention of the defendant that said contract was within the statute of frauds"; nor on the ground that "there was no evidence that G. O. Kaigler had made any written contract, either with Brannon or with any other person, which was binding on him"; nor on the ground that "the evidence tends to show that, if Brannon paid any money to B. B. Ford & Co., it was on a contract made for 50 bales of cotton and in his own name, and in which contract Kaigler was in no way concerned."

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Frauds, Statute of, Cent. Dig. §§ 141, 251-260; Dec. Dig. §§ 84, 116.*]

4. FRAUDS, STATUTE OF (§§ 84, 116*)—SALES OF PERSONALTY—CONTRACT OF AGENT.

The court did not err in failing to charge the jury as follows: "I charge you that any contract for the sale of goods, wares, and merchandise, in existence or not in esse, to the amount of $50 or more, except the buyer shall accept part of the goods and actually receive the same, or give something in earnest to bind the bargain or in part payment, must be in writing and signed by the party to be charged therewith, or some person by him lawfully authorized." Nor in failing to charge the jury "upon the subject of statute of frauds, and upon one of his contentions and upon his special plea filed in said case, wherein movant pleaded in said case, if there was any contract of sale made, that the same was within the statute of frauds, and therefore void."

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Frauds, Statute of, Cent. Dig. §§ 141, 251-260; Dec. Dig. §§ 84, 116.*]

Error from Superior Court, Quitman County; W. C. Worrill, Judge.

Action by L. G. Brannon against G. O. Kaigler. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendant brings error. Affirmed.

G. Y. Harrell and Rosser & Brandon, for plaintiff in error. J. R. Pottle and M. C. Edwards, for defendant in error.

HOLDEN, J. Judgment affirmed. All the Justices concur, except BECK, J., absent.

(136 Ga. 861)

MANNING v. WEBB.

(Supreme Court of Georgia. Sept. 26, 1911.)

*(Syllabus by the Court.)1. EVIDENCE (§ 501*)—OPINION EVIDENCE—EXAMINATION OF WITNESSES—FACTS FORMING BASIS OF OPINION.

The testimony of the plaintiff, offered as a nonexpert witness, to the effect that the continuance of the alleged nuisance arising from the discharge of sewage and pollution of a stream near his house was calculated to injure the health of himself and family, based on facts previously stated by him, was not subject to the objection that the witness had not given enough facts to authorize him to state his opinion.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Evidence, Cent. Dig. §§ 2292-2305; Dec. Dig. § 501.*]

2. APPEAL AND ERROR (§ 692*)—GROUNDS—EXCLUSION OF EVIDENCE.

The refusal by the trial court to permit a witness called by the party examining him to answer a question will not be cause for the grant of a new trial, where it does not appear what answer the witness was expected to give, or would have given, to the question propounded.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Appeal and Error, Cent. Dig. §§ 2905-2909; Dec. Dig. § 692.*]

3. WATERS AND WATER COURSES (§ 77*)—PRIVATE NUISANCE—ACTIONS TO ENJOIN—ADMISSIBILITY OF EVIDENCE.

Evidence that a third party had built a barn in the rear of his house, near the branch alleged to have been polluted by the sewer complained of as a nuisance, was irrelevant, and should have been excluded; such third party not having testified in the case.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Waters and Water Courses, Dec. Dig. § 77.*]

4. WATERS AND WATER COURSES (§ 77*)—PRIVATE NUISANCE—ACTIONS TO ENJOIN—ADMISSIBILITY OF EVIDENCE.

Under the facts and pleadings in the case, it was competent to show by a witness, who was a tenant of the plaintiff and occupied lands affected by the alleged nuisance, that if the same continued he would be compelled to move from the premises because of the nature of the nuisance, and the effect which it had and would have on the health of his family.

It was further competent to show that the tenant just referred to advised his landlord, the plaintiff in the court below, that in the event the sewer was continued he would be compelled to vacate the premises which he was then occupying as a tenant.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Waters and Water Courses, Dec. Dig. § 77.*]

5. EVIDENCE (§ 366*)—PUBLIC RECORDS—MODE OF PRODUCING.

It was material in this case to inquire into the question of the solvency or insolvency of the defendant; and it was error for the court to exclude the original execution against the defendant, which issued from the superior court of the county in which this case was being tried, and which counsel for plaintiff had obtained from the clerk of the court, who voluntarily turned it over to him; and the fact that the fi. fa. referred to had not been brought into court by a notice to produce, or a subpoena duces tecum, was not a valid ground for excluding it.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Evidence, Cent. Dig. §§ 1521-1539; Dec. Dig. § 366.*]

6. WATERS AND WATER COURSES (§ 77*)—ACTION FOR INJUNCTION—QUESTION FOR JURY.

There was some evidence in this case from which the jury would have been authorized to find that the continued use of the sewer complained of would constitute a continuing nuisance, which, if not enjoined, would result in the infliction of injuries upon the plaintiff, irreparable in their character, and for which he could not be adequately compensated in pecuniary damages; and the court should not have granted a nonsuit upon the conclusion of the plaintiff's testimony, but should have submitted the case, under an appropriate charge, to the jury.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Waters and Water Courses, Dec. Dig. § 77.*]

Error from Superior Court, Milton County; N. A. Morris, Judge.

Action by T. H. Manning against R. J. Webb. Judgment for defendant, and plaintiff brings error. Reversed.

G. B. Walker and Gober & Griffin, for plaintiff in error. J. P. Brooke and Mozley & Moss, for defendant in error.

BECK, J. T. H. Manning filed an equitable petition against R. J. Webb, seeking to enjoin the defendant from constructing a sewerage system in the town of Alpharetta in connection with a hotel lately erected by the defendant, alleging that the sewage from said hotel would be emptied into a certain tan-yard branch, along and near to which petitioner owned a large tract of land, and near to which were petitioner's dwelling and those of two of his tenants. He alleged that the stream referred to would become so contaminated as to render it unfit for the use of cattle and stock, and hence destroy his adjacent lands for pasturage purposes; likewise that a small spring within a few feet of said branch, used by his tenants for drinking purposes, would become contaminated and destroyed for such use; that his health and that of his family and his tenants would be seriously endangered on account of the stench which would arise from the branch, if the proposed sewerage system were permitted to be constructed; that the branch into which it was proposed to empty the sewage from the hotel is weak and does not flow sufficient water to prevent an accumulation of filth therein, especially in dry weather; that he would suffer a loss in the rents and profits from his lands and houses; that the defendant is insolvent; and that the damage and injury to petitioner would be irreparable. By way of amendment he alleged that the defendant had completed the construction of the sewerage system, that the same emitted vapors and noxious gases injurious to the health of petitioner and his family, and that the stench and effluvia were so offensive as to render his home undesirable. Upon the trial at the conclusion of the evidence offered by the plaintiff, the court granted a nonsuit. The plaintiff excepted.

[1] 1. Counsel for the plaintiff propounded the following question to him when he was on the witness stand: "Now, from having seen all this, and having experienced a year and a half of the operation of this sewer, and from having noticed particularly the conditions down there, I will get you to state as a nonexpert whether or not it is calculated to injure the health of you and your family." It is alleged that the witness would have answered this question in the affirmative. Counsel for defendant objected to the question, on the ground that the plaintiff had not given enough facts to answer the question. The witness had previously stated: "The point of discharge of the sewer is, I guess, 250 yards from my home. * * *

As to the character of the stream [the stream into which the sewer emptied], it is weak. At this season of the year, it flows a right smart of water; but in the summer time I have seen it dry up. In the summer and fall the stream is very weak. Along this last fall, it was pretty dry; and you get in the branch and the pasture old green stuff just all over it, within 50 or 60 yards of the discharge. At the spring, during the seasons I have referred to, there is a stench, and along that branch since this sewer was put in there is an accumulation of filth. It is discharged in a liquid form, and on the edges of the stream there is a green scum, on the edges and along the banks. * * *

As to the conditions as to the discharge of this sewer, and as to whether or not there is an almost continual flow of the liquid matter from the sewer, I will say that I have never been along there but what it was running. I have been along there, and from this sewer there was running a stream, and that stream goes into the tan-yard branch, and in dry weather it smells pretty bad. The effect of it on my home is that at times I have smelled it—a half dozen times or more. This last year was very favorable on it; give it two weeks dry weather, and you can smell it when it is dry; and in the summer and fall, when the branches dry up, the conditions are very bad. There is a scent and green along the banks of the branch, and sides of the spring are as green as poison." Having so testified, we think the witness should have been permitted to state whether or not, in his opinion, the continued maintenance of the sewer would injuriously affect the health of himself and his family. The question involved was one of opinion, and in regard to such matters a nonexpert witness may state the facts upon which he bases it, and then state to the jury his opinion thus founded. "Where it is sought to have a nonexpert witness give his opinion, formed from facts or observation, the proper practice is to let the witness testify to the facts, and then state to the jury his opinion based upon those facts." Credille v. Credille, 131 Ga. 42, 61 S. E. 1042; Georgia So., etc., Railway Co. v. Walker, 5 Ga. App. 155, 62 S. E. 720. We think that in formulating his question, the answer to which was rejected, in view of the testimony of the witness immediately preceding the question which was held to be objectionable, there was a substantial conformity to the practice indicated as being the correct practice in the case just referred to.

[2] 2. Exception is taken to the ruling of the court refusing to permit the plaintiff to answer the following question, which was propounded to him by his counsel: "I will get you to state whether or not, from having the experience, and all of a year and a half of the discharge down there, and from having inhaled the gases and effluvia down there, the maintenance of that sewer is calculated to injure the health of you and the people living in the vicinity of that stream and of your tenants." It is not shown what answer the witness thus interrogated was expected to give, or would have given, to this question. And, as this court has frequently ruled, before the refusal by the trial court to permit the propounding of a question to a witness called by the party examining him can be held to constitute reversible error, it must be made to appear what answer was expected from the witness.

[3] 3. Evidence that a person living in the neighborhood had built a barn in the rear of his house, near the branch alleged to have been polluted by the sewer complained of as a nuisance, was irrelevant, and should have been excluded; such person not having testified in the case.

[4] 4. One of the grounds of complaint in the petition being that, on account of the character of the sewer, the maintenance of which the plaintiff sought to enjoin, the plaintiff would suffer a loss in rents and profits of certain lands occupied by tenants in case the sewer were maintained, it was competent to show by one of the tenants of plaintiff, then occupying a portion of the land alleged to be affected by the sewer and the pollution of the stream into which the sewer emptied, that, "on account of the stench, effluvia, and noxious gases emanating from the sewer," and the effect which such conditions would have upon the health of his family, he would be forced to move. It was further competent to show that the tenant just referred to advised his landlord (the plaintiff in the court below) that in the event the sewer was continued he would be compelled to vacate the premises which he was then occupying as tenant.

[5] 5. The fi. fa. referred to in the fifth headnote was relevant and material upon the question of the solvency or insolvency of the defendant. Other than as indicated above, no error is shown in the rulings of the court on the question of the admissibility of evidence.

[6] 6. We are of the opinion that the court erred in granting a nonsuit in this case. The evidence was sufficient to make out a prima facie case for submission to the jury. See, in this connection, Farley v. Gate City Gas Light Co., 105 Ga. 337, 31 S. E. 193; Georgia Chemical Co. v. Colquitt, 72 Ga. 172.

Judgment reversed. All the Justices concur.

(138 Ga. 372)

MOORE v. SOUTHERN RY. CO.

(Supreme Court of Georgia. Sept. 26, 1911.)

(Syllabus by the Court.)

RAILROADS (§ 381*)—INJURIES TO TRESPASSER.

At the conclusion of the testimony introduced by the plaintiff, there was no evidence before the court and jury that would have authorized a recovery against the defendant, and the court did not err in granting a nonsuit.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Railroads, Cent. Dig. §§ 1285-1293; Dec. Dig. § 381.*]

Error from Superior Court, Spalding County; E. J. Reagan, Judge.

Action by Mrs. Lou Moore against the Southern Railway Company. Judgment for defendant, and plaintiff brings error. Affirmed.

R. B. Arnold and T. E. Patterson, for plaintiff in error. C. E. Battle and Howell Hollis, for defendant in error.

BECK, J. The plaintiff, Mrs. Lou Moore, brought suit against the Southern Railway Company to recover for the killing of her son, Travis Moore, near the Griffin Mills, in the city limits of Griffin, about 9 o'clock at night in the month of August, 1908. It was alleged, that the decedent was upon the track of the defendant, and was run upon and over by an engine and train of the defendant running at the rate of 40 miles an hour; that this was a negligent and reckless rate of speed under the circumstances; that the presence of the decedent upon the track was discovered by the engineer for a distance of 400 yards away, but, notwithstanding his knowledge of this fact, the engineer failed to exercise ordinary care to avoid striking the decedent; that by the exercise of such care he could have stopped the train before reaching him; and that the employees of the defendant failed to give proper signals of approach by bell and whistle. The place at which Moore was killed was alleged to have been in a "district thickly populated; there is a path and footway across the track at this point, a public road runs parallel to the defendant railway company's track on both sides, and there is a path from one side to the other, used daily by hundreds of people in going to and from the church and the various settlements on both sides of the railroad." Upon the trial of the case, at the conclusion of the evidence offered by the plaintiff, the court granted a nonsuit, and the plaintiff excepted.

One of the witnesses, the father of the decedent, testified: "I went to look at the place where he was killed. It was about in the center of the middle path. There were three paths. He was sitting down about on one of the three paths coming across there, on the end of two cross-ties. Seemed to be there, where they knocked him from, right in front of the church door. * * *

I saw the headlight of the engine. I did not hear it coming. I could see down the track from Experiment towards Griffin to the point where he was said to have been killed. My son was prevented from seeing the train coming along by bushes and weeds as high as your head that had grown up by the side of the railroad track. They might have prevented the engineer from seeing him. My son was sitting in front of the church door. * * * His foot signs were where he was sitting on the cross-ties. That is where they knocked him off in the bushes. * * * I don't know how long he had been sitting there. * * * There were three of the paths that crossed there. They do not make a connection, and come together and go down the bank to the railroad. They are 15 to 20 feet apart, where you go down. The paths were about 10 feet apart at the place he was. He was between the middle path and the left-hand path; about 10 feet from the left-hand path. He had been sitting near the center path, a little to the left of it. He must have been sitting on the cross-ties with his back to the track, leaning over. The church was about 30 or 40 feet from the track. At the time of the accident, that clump of bushes was between there and the church. That is where he was hit, near that clump of bushes in front of the church. They are between the church and the railroad track. He was sitting on the cross-ties, sitting with his face towards the church."

The only other witness who testified was John Noland, who testified, in part, as follows: "I don't know whether he [the engineer] seen him or not. He might have seen him, if he had looked for him. The fellow that was killed could have seen the engine, if he had looked at all. I believe he could. There was a headlight on the engine. If he was on the track, the light of the headlight was on him. I stated that I heard a man on the engine say he saw something on the cross-ties stooping over. He thought it was a dog. He was sitting on the cross-ties. He said he saw the object when he was up at the Griffin Mills. That was between three and four hundred yards away. I saw the party who made the statement on the engine. He came down the track on the east side. I was then on that side. The bushes were as close to the track as to this wall here. The embankment is low, and bushes hung over. Not close enough to be touched by the train."

The inference from this testimony is that the decedent, at the time of his death, was not only a trespasser upon the track of the defendant railway company, but was guilty of gross neglect and of an entire failure to exercise any degree of care or caution for his own safety. Under these circumstances, we do not think, taking the most favorable view of the testimony for the plaintiff, that she was entitled to a recovery. Under no case decided by this court, to which our attention has been called, has it been held that a recovery could be had for the death of a trespasser upon the track of a railway company, who, at the time of the homicide, was guilty of carelessness and negligence so gross as was shown on the part of the decedent in this case. The decedent was evidently sitting upon the end of the cross-ties when he was struck by the engine; it was night. While it is true that one of the witnesses testified that the engineer said he saw him at a distance of several hundred yards ahead, but thought it was a dog, there is nothing in the evidence to show that the engineer was aware of the presence of a man upon the track at the point where the decedent was struck, or had any knowledge of his peril. Under the evidence for the plaintiff, the decedent was on the end of the cross-ties, sitting in such a position as to be struck by the passing locomotive; and the character of the object at the end of the cross-ties was not only obscured on account of the darkness, but the uncontroverted testimony is that there were "weeds and bushes" at the point where the decedent was sitting; and one witness, the father, testified that these weeds and bushes were as high as a man's head. It is not suggested that the train was not running on schedule time. The headlight was burning. The rate of speed was only 20 to 25 miles per hour. There is no suggestion that other trains were passing which would have rendered it impossible or difficult for one on the track to hear the approaching train. We cannot conceive of a case more clearly showing that death came to one as a result of his own voluntary exposure to peril than the instant case.

In the case of Southern Railway Co. v. Hogan, 131 Ga. 157, 62 S. E. 64, it was said: "One who knowingly and voluntarily takes a risk of injury to his person and property, the danger of which is so obvious that the act of taking such risk, in and of itself, amounts to a failure to exercise ordinary care and diligence for his own safety and that of his property, cannot hold another liable for damages from injuries thus occasioned." The quotation given contains the ruling made in the case announced in the first headnote. And in the conclusion of the opinion it was said: "The plaintiff having knowingly and voluntarily taken the risk of so obvious a danger, and the act of taking it being so manifestly a failure to exercise ordinary care and diligence for his own safety and that of his property, he could not hold the railroad company liable for the resulting damages, and the court should have granted a new trial on the general ground that the verdict was without evidence to support it."

In the case of Western & Atlantic R. Co. v. Ferguson, 113 Ga. 708, 39 S. E. 306, 54 L. R. A. 802, it was said: "If at the time of the injury an ordinarily prudent person, in the exercise of that degree of care and caution which such a person generally uses, would have reasonably apprehended that the defendant might be negligent at the time and place where the injury occurred, and, so apprehending the probability of the existence of such negligence, could have taken steps to prevent the injury, then the person injured cannot recover, if he failed to exercise that degree of care and caution usually exercised by an ordinarily prudent person to ascertain whether the negligence which might have been reasonably apprehended existed." After citing a number of cases, Mr. Justice Cobb continued: "If there is anything present at the time and place of the injury which would cause an ordinarily prudent person to reasonably apprehend the probability, even if not the possibility, of danger to him in doing an act which he is about to perform, then he must take such steps as an ordinarily prudent person would take to ascertain whether such danger exists, as well as to avoid the consequences of the same after its existence is ascertained; and if he fails to do this, and is injured, he will not be allowed to recover, if by taking proper precautions he could have avoided the consequences of the negligence of the person inflicting the injury."

In the case of Southern Railway Co. v. Hogan, supra, Chief Justice Fish, delivering the opinion, on page 160 of 131 Ga., on page 66 of 62 S. E., said: "Another case directly in point is Mansfield v. Richardson, 118 Ga. 250, 45 S. E. 269, wherein it was held: 'In cases of personal injuries, the plaintiff, as a conscious human agent, is bound to exercise ordinary care to avoid the consequence of the defendant's negligence, by remaining away, going away, or getting out of the way of a probable or known danger.' And that 'He can avoid danger by refraining from going into what he knows is an unsafe place.' On the same line are May v. Central R. Co., 80 Ga. 363, 4 S. E. 330; Atlanta & Charlotte R. Co. v. Leach, 91 Ga. 419, 17 S. E. 619, 44 Am. St. Rep. 47; Evans v. Charleston R. Co., 108 Ga. 270, 33 S. E. 901; Hicks v. Georgia Southern R. Co., 108 Ga. 304, 32 S. E. 880; Steele v. Central R. Co., 123 Ga. 237, 51 S. E. 438, and cases cited." Other cases are cited by Chief Justice Fish, in the Hogan Case, in addition to those set forth in the extract quoted above. See, in this connection, the following cases: Southwestern R. Co. v. Johnson, 60 Ga. 667; Savannah, Florida & Western Ry. v. Stewart, 71 Ga. 427; Parish v. Western & Atlantic R. Co., 102 Ga. 285, 29 S. E. 715, 40 L. R. A. 364.

In the case of Southwestern Railroad v. Hankerson, 61 Ga. 114, it was said: "If one voluntarily becomes drunk, and consequently falls down, or lies down, in a state of insensibility on a railroad track, so that he is injured by a passing train, he cannot recover for injuries so received, even though there may have been contributory negligence on the part of employes of the road." The facts of that case render the rule peculiarly applicable to the case at bar. A full discussion of the questions analogous to the ones involved in this case are to be found in several of the cases cited, which render unnecessary any elaborate discussion here.

Under the law and the evidence, the court ruled rightly in directing a nonsuit.

Judgment affirmed. All the Justices concur.

(136 Ga. 868)

LOUISVILLE & N. R. CO. v. CLINE.

(Supreme Court of Georgia. Sept. 26, 1911.)

(Syllabus by the Court.)

1. RAILROADS (§ 394*)—OPERATION—INJURIES TO PERSON ON TRACK—PLEADING.

The petition in this case stated a cause of action, good as against a general demurrer.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Railroads, Dec. Dig. § 394.*]

2. RAILROADS (§ 395*)—OPERATION—LIABILITY FOR INJURIES—EFFECT OF LEASE.

Whether, under the terms of a lease of the Western & Atlantic Railroad, the Louisville & Nashville Railroad Company can legally operate trains over the track of the Western & Atlantic Railroad Company is not a question that can be raised in a damage suit against the latter company, based upon the alleged tortious homicide of a child of the plaintiff, to which neither the state nor the Western & Atlantic Railroad Company is made a party.

(a) Except as indicated in the second headnote, the grounds of special demurrer were without merit.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Railroads, Dec. Dig. § 395.*]

Error from Superior Court, Bartow County; A. W. Fite, Judge.

Action by M. C. Cline against the Louisville & Nashville Railroad Company. To a judgment overruling general and special demurrers to the petition, the defendant brings error. Affirmed, with direction that certain paragraphs of the petition be stricken.

Neel & Neel, D. W. Blair, and Tye, Peeples & Jordan, for plaintiff in error. Colquitt & Conyers, for defendant in error.

BECK, J. The father of Lillie May Cline, a 12 year old child, brought suit against the Louisville & Nashville Railroad Company to recover damages for the killing of said child by a fast-moving locomotive and train while she was attempting to rescue a 6 year old boy companion and playmate, who had fallen upon the track in an effort to get out of the way of the train when he became aware of its approach. The defendant demurred generally and specially to the petition. The court overruled the demurrer, and defendant excepted.

[1] 1. In the case of Crawford v. Southern Railway Co., 106 Ga. 870, 33 S. E. 826, it was said: "Conduct which might, under one set of circumstances, show that all ordinary and reasonable care and diligence had been observed, might, under a different set of circumstances, be insufficient to show an observance of such care and diligence. We think that such a rule could mean no more than this: Taking the locality where the train is running and all the surrounding circumstances, if those in control of the movement of the train have no reason to apprehend that there may likely be a human being on the track in front of the engine, they are under no duty to one who may in fact be there, until they have actually discovered that he is there. But if, from the locality or surrounding circumstances, there is reason to apprehend that the track in front of the locomotive may not be clear of human beings, then, it seems to us, it is the duty of the employes of the company to keep a lookout ahead of the train; most assuredly so unless they are performing some duty which prevents their looking out upon the track in the direction in which the train is moving. Suppose that a locomotive engineer knows that, in a particular locality, people, and especially children, without even an implied license of the railroad company, are likely to be upon the railroad track; can he, while his train is rushing at great velocity through this locality, fail to look down the track in front of him, without being guilty of negligence relatively to a child who may be injured or killed by the locomotive? Are people, children as well as adults, likely, at least in daylight, to be very near or upon a railway track within the limits of a populous city, at points where they have no right to go upon the right of way of the company? If they are, is a man charged with the running and control of a railroad train, which may in an instant become so terrible and tremendous an instrument of destruction to people in its pathway, under no duty, relatively to such people, when his train is running through such city, either to slacken its speed or to look ahead of his engine? These are questions which we feel sure no court can, as mere matters of law, decide in the negative."

Applying what was said in the extract above quoted and the ruling made in the first headnote of the case, it is clear that a question for decision by the jury was raised by the allegations of the petition in this case, as to whether or not the position of peril of the 6 year old child, in attempting to rescue whom Lillie May Cline was killed, was due to a failure upon the part of the employes of the defendant company to exercise due care in the running of the locomotive and train. The point at which the little boy was placed in imminent peril of his life was, according to the allegations of the petition, "within a few feet of a grade crossing owned by said railroad company, near the town of Emerson. The Tennessee Coal & Iron Company has an extensive plant at and near said place; * * * and upon both sides of said track near said place are houses occupied by the operatives of the said Tennessee Coal & Iron Company. The crossing aforesaid was frequently and commonly used by the residents of said neighborhood, men, women, and children, and was a regular crossing for both pedestrians and vehicles. Said crossing has been continuously used by members of the public at will as a common highway for more than 80 years." It also appears from the petition that at the place referred to there is a regular and well-beaten trail alongside of and within three feet of the railroad track, and that the travel thereon is constant, open, and uninterrupted by pedestrians to and from the said locality to the town of Emerson, and this usage has existed for many years. The territory from and including said point to the depot in the town of Emerson is practically a continuous town or village, and travel over and near said track and over the crossing was without objection from the defendant railroad company. Under the facts and circumstances thus distinctly alleged, it was within the province of the jury to decide what was due care on the part of the railroad company and its employes in reference to the speed maintained by the locomotive and train in passing this locality, and what was the duty resting upon the employes of the company in charge of the engine with reference to maintaining a lookout to ascertain the presence of any one who might be upon the track. If Lillie May Cline's companion, the 6 year old boy, was within a few feet of the crossing referred to, and in the path 3 or 4 feet from the railroad track, between a wire fence upon the edge of a deep fill on one side of her and the railroad track on the other, as was alleged, and this position of the 6 year old child could have been seen 500 feet away by the employes of the defendant on the engine, surely it was a question for the jury to decide, when the issue is raised by the pleadings, as to whether the employes of the defendant were negligent in continuing to run the train at the rate of 40 miles an hour, and in not anticipating that a little child might attempt to cross the track so as to reach a place farther from the spot at which the rushing train would pass than he could possibly do if he remained where he was when the train first came in sight. We have no hesitancy in holding that the questions of duty and negligence raised by the petition in this case are questions proper for submission to the jury, as regards the deadly peril in which the little boy was placed when he first attempted to cross the track in view of the approaching train.

Having reached that conclusion, we think it necessarily follows that if Lillie May Cline, moved by an impulse which was perfectly natural, sprang upon the track in an attempt to save a child younger than herself, who was prone and helpless in front of an approaching locomotive, and was struck and killed by the locomotive while thus endeavoring to rescue her companion, the question as to whether or not the negligence of the employes of the company, if the jury should find that they were negligent under the attendant facts and circumstances, was the proximate cause of the death of the little girl, would be for decision by the jury. In the case of Eckert v. Long Island Railroad Co., 43 N. Y. 502, 3 Am. Rep. 721, it appears that a man of mature age, seeing the danger of a child of tender years who was sitting on a railway track in front of a train which was approaching at the rate of 12 to 14 miles an hour, ran and seized the child and threw it from the track, but that he himself was struck by the engine and was so injured that he died. Suit was brought by the wife of the decedent to recover damages for the wrongful and negligent killing of her husband, and in the course of the opinion affirming a judgment in favor of the plaintiff the New York Court of Appeals said: "But the evidence further showed that there was a small child upon the track, who, if not rescued, must have been inevitably crushed by the rapidly approaching train. * * * The law has so high a regard for human life that it will not impute negligence to an effort to preserve it, unless made under such circumstances as to constitute rashness in the judgment of prudent persons. For a person engaged in his ordinary affairs, or in the mere protection of property, knowingly and voluntarily to place himself in a position where he is liable to receive a serious injury, is negligence, which will preclude a recovery for an injury so received; but when the exposure is for the purpose of saving life, it is not wrongful, and therefore not negligent, unless such as to be regarded either rash or reckless." See, also, Linnehan v. Sampson, 126 Mass. 506, 30 Am. Rep. 692; Gibney v. State, 137 N. Y. 1, 33 N. E. 142, 19 L. R. A. 365, 33 Am. St. Rep. 690; Wilson v. Central Ry. Co., 132 Ga. 215, 63 S. E. 1121.

[2] 2. Paragraphs 11, 12, and 13 of the petition, basing the charge of negligence on the part of the defendant's employes upon the ground that the defendant had no right or authority to run and operate a train at the place and upon the track where the homicide complained of occurred, and that the operation of a train then and there by the defendant was a nuisance, are to be construed in connection with paragraph 14 of the petition, which charges that the "track at the time and place where said homicide was committed belonged to the state of Georgia, and had been leased to the Western & Atlantic Railroad Company for the operation of its trains thereon, and the defendant, Louisville & Nashville Railroad Company, had no legal right or authority under said lease or otherwise to operate a train upon said track, but that the operation of the train by defendant constituted a nuisance." The four paragraphs last referred to were specially demurred to, on the ground that they were immaterial and irrelevant. We are of the opinion that the question as to whether or not the defendant company could legally operate a train upon the track which had been leased by the state to the Western & Atlantic Railroad Company cannot be raised in a suit for damages based upon an alleged tortious homicide committed by the defendant company, to which suit neither the state nor the Western & Atlantic Railroad Company are parties. See the case of Hazlehurst v. Seaboard Air Line Ry., 118 Ga. 859, 45 S. E. 703. We therefore think that, while the general demurrer to the petition as a whole was properly overruled, the demurrer to the paragraphs last referred to should have been sustained.

The judgment of the court below is therefore affirmed, with the direction that the paragraphs of the petition last referred to be stricken. The other grounds of special demurrer were without merit.

Judgment affirmed, with direction. All the Justices concur.

(137 Ga. 40)

FOWLER v. BRITT-CARSON SHOE CO.
et al.

(Supreme Court of Georgia. Oct. 12, 1911.)

(Syllabus by the Court.)

SALES (§ 318*)—FRAUD OF PURCHASER—INSOLVENCY—RIGHT OF RECLAMATION—LAOCHES.

In order for the vendor of personal chattels to exercise his equitable right of reclamation on the ground that the purchaser, being insolvent at the time of obtaining the goods, committed a fraud by misrepresenting his solvency and financial standing in statements to the seller, made for the purpose of procuring the goods, and thereby deceiving him and inducing him to act to his injury, it is incumbent upon the vendor, promptly upon discovery of the fraud, to repudiate the contract and make his reclamation. If he omits to do so, but does some affirmative act recognizing title in the purchaser, such as by suing out an attachment for purchase money, and causing the property to be sold as property of the purchaser, he will thereafter be estopped, in a contest over the proceeds of sale (brought into court by the sheriff) with the trustee in bankruptcy of the purchaser, from asserting his right of reclamation.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Sales, Dec. Dig. § 318.*]

Error from Superior Court, Montgomery County; J. H. Martin, Judge.

Application by James Fowler for rule requiring the deputy sheriff to turn over funds derived from the sale of goods alleged to belong to James E. Ricks. The Britt-Carson Shoe Company intervened. Judgment for intervener, and Fowler brings error. Reversed.

L. O. Underwood, for plaintiff in error.
M. B. Calhoun, for defendants in error.

ATKINSON, J. On November 15, 1910, a deputy sheriff levied an attachment, which had been issued on November 6th from a justice court in favor of the Britt-Carson Shoe Company against James E. Ricks, on certain personal property as the property of the defendant in attachment, and on the 4th day of January, 1910, sold it accordingly. On the 2d day of January, 1910, less than four months from the date of the issuance of the attachment, James E. Ricks was adjudicated a bankrupt, and James Fowler became trustee of the bankrupt's estate. After the sale of the property by the sheriff, the trustee applied to the superior court for a rule requiring the sheriff to turn over to him the funds derived from the sale of the goods upon which the levy had been made. In his answer the sheriff admitted all of the allegations contained in the petition for rule, except those relative to the title of the trustee in bankruptcy, set up his want of knowledge on this subject, and answered, further, that he was holding the fund subject to the order of the superior court. The Britt-Carson Shoe Company, the plaintiff in attachment, intervened and asserted a right to the fund. It admitted all of the allegations of the petition, except those relative to the title of the trustee, which were denied. It set up that the proceeds of sale in the hands of the sheriff were derived from a certain bill of goods which had been purchased from it by Ricks, the bankrupt; that title never passed from intervener to Ricks, for the reason that he, being insolvent, purchased the goods under specified representations as to his solvency and financial standing, which were false and falsely made for the purpose of deceiving and inducing credit; that, having obtained the goods by deception in such manner, neither Ricks nor the trustee in bankruptcy of his estate acquired title; "that as soon as intervener learned that a fraud had been perpetrated upon it by said Ricks, by making said false statement, it sued out an attachment for the purchase money due upon said goods in question, and had as many of said shoes as could be found in the possession of said Ricks levied upon under said attachment; and that the money now in the sheriff's hands came from the sale of its said goods under said attachment for purchase money." It was further set up that the superior court had assumed jurisdiction of the goods and money in question long before the petition for adjudication in bankruptcy had been filed, and the superior court, having first acquired jurisdiction, should retain jurisdiction of the funds in question. The intervention was allowed, and the case was afterwards submitted to the judge, upon consent of all parties that the court should hear and determine all issues of law and fact and adjudge to whom the money in the hands of the sheriff should be paid, without submitting any question to the jury. After hearing evidence, which in effect presented the matter as above stated, a judgment was entered finding that the Britt-Carson Shoe Company was entitled to the funds in the hands of the sheriff. and ordering the same turned over to it after payment therefrom of all costs of court. To this judgment the trustee excepted.

By objection to evidence, and motion to strike certain portions of the intervention of the Britt-Carson Shoe Company, and by exceptions to the finding of the court, the single question was made as to the right of the Britt-Carson Shoe Company to have the fund. The contention was: That, after knowledge of the fraud, the Britt-Carson Shoe Company had the election of two remedies: (a) To waive the fraud, affirm the contract, and sue for the purchase price; or (b) to repudiate the contract on account of the fraud, and reclaim the goods. That having elected, after knowledge of the fraud, to sue out the attachment, and cause the property to be sold as that of Ricks, the intervenor should be held to have ratified the sale and to be estopped from repudiating it and claiming the goods or their proceeds in the hands of the sheriff. The position thus taken by the trustee in bankruptcy is sound, and the judge committed error by his ruling. While upon discovery of the fraud the Britt-Carson Shoe Company could elect to repudiate the sale and reclaim the goods or their proceeds (Newman et al. v. Clafin Co. et al., 107 Ga. 89, 32 S. E. 943; Mashburn & Co. v. Dannenburg Co., 117 Ga. 567, 44 S. E. 97; Silvey & Co. v. Tift, Trustee, 123 Ga. 804, 51 S. E. 748, 1 L. R. A. [N. S.] 386), it was incumbent upon it to do so promptly. After knowledge of the fraud, if intervenor failed to repudiate it, but did something showing its intention to abide the contract, it would be held to have waived the fraud and to have ratified the contract. Tuttle v. Stovall, 134 Ga. 325, 328, 329, 67 S. E. 806, and citations. Suing out an attachment for the purchase money would be a ratification of the contract.

Judgment reversed. All the Justices concur, except BECK, J., absent.

(137 Ga. 27)

MAYS v. FLETCHER et al.

(Supreme Court of Georgia. Oct. 12, 1911.)

(Syllabus by the Court.)

1. WILLS (§ 88*)—REQUISITES—CONSTRUCTION.

An instrument drafted in the form of a deed, declared to be a deed in the body thereof, attested as a deed, and containing a reservation of a life estate to the grantor, is to be construed as a deed passing title in present, with the right of possession postponed until the grantor's death.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Wills, Dec. Dig. § 88.*]

2. DEEDS (§ 208*)—DELIVERY—EVIDENCE.

The record of a properly executed deed is prima facie evidence of its delivery, and in the absence of rebutting proof such record is sufficient to prove the delivery of the deed.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Deeds, Dec. Dig. § 208.*]

3. TRIAL (§ 296*)—INSTRUCTIONS—CONSTRUCTION AS A WHOLE.

Where the jury are instructed that both signing and delivery are essential to the validity of a deed, a charge on an issue as to the mental capacity of the grantor, to the effect that the mental condition of the grantor relates to the time of making the deed, is not erroneous, as confining the inquiry of the grantor's mental capacity to the time of signing the deed, without reference to its delivery.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Trial, Dec. Dig. § 296.*]

4. APPEAL AND ERROR (§ 1067*)—REVIEW—HARMLESS ERROR—INSTRUCTIONS.

The failure to give a proper request to charge will not require a new trial, where the record discloses that the facts were such that the omission was not calculated to harm the party making the request.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Appeal and Error, Cent. Dig. § 4229; Dec. Dig. § 1067.*]

5. INSTRUCTIONS.

The charge fairly submitted the issues, and no sufficient reason appears why a new trial should be granted.

Error from Superior Court, Butts County; E. J. Reagan, Judge.

Action by H. M. Fletcher and others against S. H. Mays. Judgment for plaintiffs, and defendant brings error. Affirmed.

Jno. R. L. Smith, for plaintiff in error. H. M. Fletcher, for defendants in error.

EVANS, P. J. This is an action of ejectment by H. M. Fletcher, R. W. Mays, and John Billie Mays, a minor suing by next friend, against R. H. Mays. Plaintiffs and defendant claimed title from a common grantor, Mrs. M. R. Mays. The first muniment of the plaintiffs' title was an instrument, in the form of a deed and attested as such, from Mrs. Mays to R. L. Mays, Mary Mays, and John Billie Mays, dated March 21, 1899, and recorded April 25, 1899, containing in the body thereof this recital: "I hereby reserve title in the above-described land for and during my natural life, and at my death this deed to be a fee-simple title to the above-named parties." Mary Mays married H. M. Fletcher, and died leaving him as her sole heir. R. L. Mays conveyed his interest to R. W. Mays. The defendant pleaded that the instrument under which the plaintiffs claimed title was testamentary in character, and not a deed, and, not being executed and probated as a will, was void as a muniment of title; that at the time of its execution the grantor, Mrs. Mays, was mentally incapacitated to make a deed. He further pleaded that Mrs. Mays had previously signed a deed to her grandson, Homer Mays, who owned an equitable interest in the land, and in March, 1895, Mrs. Mays entered into a parol contract of sale with the defendant, whereby she sold the land to the defendant in consideration of services to be rendered to the grandson, who was afflicted with disease; that he entered into possession under the parol contract and fully complied with its terms. The verdict was for the plaintiffs.

[1] 1. An instrument attested as a deed, drafted in the form of a deed, and declared in the body thereof to be a deed is not rendered testamentary by a reservation of a life estate to the grantor. Such an instrument is to be construed as a deed passing title in present, with the right of possession postponed until the grantor's death. Isler v. Griffin, 134 Ga. 192, 67 S. E. 854.

[2] 2. One of the issues in the case concerned the delivery of the deed from Mrs. M. R. Mays to R. L. Mays and others, under which the plaintiffs claimed title. The grantees in the deed were the grandchildren of the maker, and the deed was executed at the house of the maker's son, who was the father of the grantees. At the time the maker signed it she was in bed. She had previously requested the scrivener, who was the clerk of the superior court, to prepare the deed, and it was signed by the maker in the presence of the clerk and another person, both of whom attested it as witnesses and left the deed with the maker. The deed was properly attested for record, and was recorded 35 days after its date. Mrs. Mays died 6 years after the record of the deed. On the trial the deed was produced as coming from the possession of the plaintiffs. The delivery of a deed is necessary to its validity, but delivery may be inferred from various circumstances. Attestation of a deed by an officer authorized to witness a deed is presumptive proof of delivery. Ross v. Campbell, 73 Ga. 309. Possession of a deed by a grantee, or one taking an interest thereunder, raises a presumption of delivery. Black v. Thornton, 30 Ga. 361; Rushin v. Shields, 11 Ga. 636, 56 Am. Dec. 436. The record of a properly executed deed is sufficient, but not conclusive, evidence of delivery. Gordon v. Trimmer, 91 Ga. 473, 18 S. E. 404. The mere retention by the grantor is insufficient to overcome the circumstances which afford an inference of the delivery of the deed. Black v. Thornton, supra. And especially so where the grantor reserves a life estate to himself. Brown v. Brown, 97 Ga. 531, 537, 25 S. E. 853, 33 L. R. A. 816. Accordingly it was not error to charge that "the record of a deed properly executed is prima facie evidence of its delivery, and it becomes conclusive evidence if it is not rebutted by proof." And as there was no controversy that the deed was properly executed and came from the possession of the grantees, it was proper to decline to charge that, if the deed was not delivered at the time of its attestation, it would not convey title, unless there was other evidence showing that it was in fact delivered.

[3] 3. In an instruction upon the degree of mental capacity of a grantor to make a deed, it is not error to charge that the mental condition related to the time of the grantor's making the deed. Such an instruction, in view of the context of the charge as to the execution and delivery of the deed, to which the charge applied, was not calculated to mislead the jury that the time referred to by the court was confined to the moment of signing, without reference to the time of delivery.

[4] 4. A written request was made of the court to charge the jury, in his instruction upon the parol contract of sale claimed to have been made by Mrs. Mays with the defendant, that the jury might consider the deed from Mrs. Mays to Homer Mays for the purpose of identifying the land referred to in any conversation that may have been had between Mrs. Mays and the defendant, if the deed was referred to in any such conversation. One of the defenses was that Mrs. Mays had orally contracted with the defendant that the land should be his in consideration of his taking care of her grandson, Homer. This request to charge was pertinent to that issue; but the omission to charge it, under the facts of the case, was not calculated to harm the defendant. It appeared in the pleadings and evidence that the land in controversy was the same as that described in the deed, and the same which the defendant claimed under the parol contract. It also appeared that Mrs. Mays had no other land, and that the various contentions of the parties concerned the whole tract, and not any part of it. Under these circumstances the jury could not have been misled that the land was other than that described in the deed to Homer Mays.

[5] 5. Other requests to charge, which were legal and pertinent, were covered by the general charge. The case was fairly submitted, and the evidence supports the verdict.

Judgment affirmed. All the Justices concur, except BECK, J., absent.

(137 Ga. 21)

JONES v. STATE.

(Supreme Court of Georgia. Oct. 11, 1911.)

*(Syllabus by the Court.)1. DYING DECLARATIONS.

While the charge of the court may have been to some extent subject to criticism, especially the instructions in regard to dying declarations, under the evidence and in the light of the general charge, there was nothing in the grounds of the motion for a new trial complaining of excerpts from it which required a new trial.

2. CRIMINAL LAW (§ 1170*)—APPEAL—EXCLUSION OF EVIDENCE.

Under the evidence, although a witness for the state had testified on cross-examination that she did not say, in a certain conversation, that the deceased was to blame for the whole trouble and that he began it, it will not require a new trial that the presiding judge, on objection by the solicitor general, excluded testimony that such witness had said that the deceased was in fault, and there would have been "none of it," had it not been for him.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Criminal Law, Dec. Dig. § 1170.*]

3. NEWLY DISCOVERED EVIDENCE.

The ground of the motion for a new trial setting up newly discovered evidence was not such as to require a new trial.

4. SUFFICIENCY OF EVIDENCE.

The evidence supported the verdict.

Error from Superior Court, Milton County; N. A. Morris, Judge.

Lee Jones was convicted of murder, and brings error. Affirmed.

G. B. Walker and Mozley & Moss, for plaintiff in error. J. P. Brooke, Sol. Gen., and T. S. Felder, Atty. Gen., for the State.

LUMPKIN, J. Judgment affirmed. All the Justices concur, except BECK, J., absent.

(137 Ga. 30)

ROBERTS v. SMITH.

(Supreme Court of Georgia. Oct. 12, 1911.)

*(Syllabus by the Court.)1. EXECUTORS AND ADMINISTRATORS (§ 372*)—ADMINISTRATION OF ESTATE—SALES—REFUSAL TO COMPLY WITH BIDS—RESALE.

A purchaser at a public sale of land by an administrator will not be relieved of liability because he was under the impression at the time of the bidding that a different tract of land was being offered for sale, when neither the administrator nor other party interested in the sale was responsible for such erroneous impression and the purchaser by the exercise of the slightest diligence could have avoided his mistake.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Executors and Administrators, Dec. Dig. § 372.*]

2. EXECUTORS AND ADMINISTRATORS (§ 371*)—ADMINISTRATION OF ESTATE—SALES—REFUSAL TO COMPLY WITH BIDS—RESALE.

In case a purchaser at an administrator's sale refuses to comply with his bid, where the administrator elects to resell the land at the purchaser's risk, he should do so at the earliest practicable time. Ordinarily, if the purchaser repudiates his bid before the crowd disperses and within the legal hours of sale, the second sale should occur on the same day; but where the purchaser refuses to comply with his bid because of a contention that he is not liable thereon on account of having bid on the land through a mistake that another tract was being sold, and, in response to the administrator's offer to resell at his risk, makes a reply authorizing an inference that he declined the administrator's offer, and the administrator advertises the sale to occur on a sale day 60 days after the first sale, it is for the jury to say whether the administrator, under these and other attendant circumstances, acted with reasonable promptness, so as to make the purchaser liable for any deficiency in the second sale.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Executors and Administrators, Cent. Dig. § 1517; Dec. Dig. § 371.*]

Error from Superior Court, Jones County; H. G. Lewis, Judge.

Action by J. D. Roberts, administrator of W. H. J. Wood, against J. W. Smith. Judgment for defendant, and plaintiff brings error. Reversed.

E. T. Dumas and Hardeman, Jones, Callaway & Johnston, for plaintiff in error. J. B. Jackson and Johnson & Johnson, for defendant in error.

EVANS, P. J. J. D. Roberts, administrator of W. H. J. Wood, brought this action against J. W. Smith to recover the difference in the amount of a bid made by the defendant on certain land at an administrator's sale and the actual price received by the administrator at a resale of the same property two months later. After the plaintiff had submitted his evidence, a nonsuit was granted, and he excepts.

It appeared from the evidence that on the first Tuesday in November, 1908, the administrator, after legal notice, exposed for sale certain lands of his intestate, being advertised as lots Nos. 1, 2, and 3, and each separately described in the advertisement. Lot No. 2 was first offered for sale. Then lot No. 3 was offered for sale, and the defendant appeared at the sale, began to bid thereon, and it was finally knocked off to him for the sum of $1,510. The auctioneer then proceeded to sell lot No. 1, when the defendant informed him that he had just purchased that lot. The auctioneer replied that he was mistaken, and that he had bid in lot No. 3, whereupon the defendant immediately told the auctioneer to sell it again, as he did not buy lot No. 3—that he had bought lot No. 1, the description of which had just been read by the auctioneer. After this conversation the defendant approached the administrator and said that he did not want lot No. 3, and that he wanted him to sell it, to which the administrator replied, "I will sell it at your risk." The defendant said, "Risk nothing." Thereupon the administrator said: "I have no right to resell the lot. It has been bid off and knocked down." While the sale of lot No. 3 was in progress, the auctioneer heard a conversation between one of the bidders and his brother. When the bids had reached $1,350, the brother remarked to the bidder, "Quit, that is high enough," to which he replied, "I think he [the defendant] thinks he is bidding on the land next to the station, and I am going to make him pay $2,000 for it." The administrator afterwards saw the defendant and inquired of him if he was going to take the land; the defendant replying: "No; I wish, Dawson [the administrator], you would get the Wood boys to take it off my hands." The administrator readvertised the property for sale on the first Tuesday in January, 1900, and sold it on that day for $1,050, and the difference between the first and last bid was $460, with the additional sum of $10.50, the cost of resale. It was admitted that the orders of sale and resale, and the advertisements and the price the land brought at the resale, were as alleged, and legal in all respects.

*For other cases see same topic and section NUMBER in Dec. Dig. & Am. Dig. Key No. Series & Rep'r indexes

[1] The defendant contends that under this evidence he was not liable upon the first sale, for the reason that he bid on the land under a mistake of fact that a different lot was being offered for sale. If the party by reasonable diligence could have knowledge of the truth, equity will not relieve. Civil Code, § 4581. No pretense is made that the administrator, or any one interested in the sale of the land, said or did anything which induced the defendant to bid upon the lot of land. The land was accurately described by boundaries, and the different lots had entirely different boundaries. The slightest diligence on the part of the defendant when he began to bid would have disclosed the particular tract which was being cried by the auctioneer. Instead of making inquiries or informing himself as to the particular lot of land which was being sold, he boldly rushed into the bidding and bid upon it with the assurance of one who knew what he was doing. The evidence disclosed that the bidding was sharp and competitive. It is true that the other bidder testified that he observed from the expression upon the defendant's face that he was under the impression that he was bidding on lot No. 3 as being lot No. 1. Still he said nothing to encourage the mistake, and bid with the full knowledge that, if the land was knocked off to him, he would be bound by his bid. The last bid before it was knocked off to the defendant was within ten dollars of the final bid, and this bidder would have been liable to the estate for the amount of this bid. To relieve the defendant of the consequences of his bid because of his alleged mistake would be to grant him absolution, when he had not exercised the slightest degree of diligence to protect himself, and occasion loss to the estate of the last bid preceding his. Civil Code 1910, §§ 4581, 4571.

[2] The defendant further urges, as a reason why the plaintiff should not prevail, that the administrator failed to offer the land for resale on the same day when he informed the administrator of his mistake and requested a resale. When a purchaser at administrator's sale refuses to comply with the terms of the sale when requested so to do, he shall be liable for the amount of the purchase money; and at the option of the administrator he may proceed against such purchaser for the full amount of the purchase money, or resell the real estate and then proceed against the first purchaser for the deficiency arising from such sale. Civil Code 1910, § 6071. If the administrator elects to resell the land at the purchaser's risk, he should offer it for resale as soon as practicable. If the bidder on the day of sale refuses to comply before the crowd disperses and the hours of sale terminate, that day is the proper time to resell; if that cannot be done, just as soon as the property can be readvertised, after notice of refusal to comply with the terms of the sale. Saunders v. Bell, 56 Ga. 442. The administrator cannot delay an unreasonable time, so as to speculate at the risk of the purchaser; nor, on the other hand, is there any cast-iron rule that he should resell the property on the same day. The purchaser in the present case depends, first, upon the ground that he is not bound by the first sale, and, secondly, that the administrator should have resold the property on the same day after notice of his repudiation of the sale. The last defense involves the idea that he was bound by his purchase in the first instance, and if nothing more appeared in this case than the mere request to the administrator to resell the property on the day of the first sale, and that the crowd had not dispersed and the hours of sale had not terminated, there would be considerable force in the contention; but when the defendant approached the administrator, upon discovery that he had bid upon lot No. 3, and requested a resale of it, the administrator proposed to resell it at his risk. The purchaser's reply was, "Risk nothing," which, according to his other statements, could only mean that he was not bound in the first instance, and therefore he did not propose to pay the deficiency in case of a resale. Under such circumstances the administrator was entitled to time to look into the matter. He allowed one month to elapse before inserting an advertisement for the next sale. When we come to consider that the law requires sales to occur on the first Tuesday in the month, after previous advertisement for 30 days, the time between the first sale and the insertion of the advertisement of the second sale may or may not have been sufficient for the administrator to have complied with the law in this respect. At all events it would be for the jury to say as to whether his failure was such a lack of diligence as to relieve the first purchaser of liability for the deficiency between the first and second sales.

For these reasons, we think the court should not have withdrawn the case from the jury by judgment of nonsuit.

Judgment reversed. All the Justices concur, except BECK, J., absent.

(137 Ga. 22)

GIDDENS v. LEWIS et al.

(Supreme Court of Georgia. Oct. 11, 1911.)

(Syllabus by the Court.)

1. EXECUTION SALE.

The facts set forth in the petition and the exhibits attached thereto, in the case of Giddens v. Alexander, 127 Ga. 734, 56 S. E. 1014, which case was decided on general demurrer to the petition, and upon which the first three headnotes in that case were predicated, are the same as in the present case. According to the undisputed evidence, therefore, under the rulings stated in the first three headnotes of the case cited, the sale by the sheriff of the land of the plaintiff was illegal, and he was entitled to have canceled, as a cloud upon his title, the deed made by the sheriff to the purchaser at such sale, and, accordingly, the court erred in directing a verdict in behalf of the defendants.

2. REVIEW ON APPEAL.

The plaintiff, according to the undisputed evidence and the rulings made in the case cited, being entitled to a verdict and decree declaring the sheriff's sale illegal and canceling the deed made in pursuance of such sale, it is unnecessary to pass on the other assignments of error.

Error from Superior Court, Berrien County; J. H. Merrill, Judge.

Action between John O. Giddens and J. B. Lewis and others. From the judgment, Giddens brings error. Reversed.

Hendricks & Christian, for plaintiff in error. Denmark & Griffin, W. H. Griffin, Buile & Knight, and Alexander & Gary, for defendants in error.

FISH, C. J. Judgment reversed. All the Justices concur, except BECK, J., absent.

(137 Ga. 53)

WRIGHT v. VAUGHAN.

(Supreme Court of Georgia. Oct. 12, 1911.)

(Syllabus by the Court.)

1. SALES (§ 11*)—GAMING (§ 14*)—CONTRACTS (§ 141*)—VALIDITY OF CONTRACT—FUTURE DELIVERY.

In the case of Forsyth Manufacturing Company v. Castlem, 112 Ga. 199, 37 S. E. 485, 81 Am. St. Rep. 28, it was ruled: "(1) An executory agreement for the sale of goods to be delivered at a future day is valid, though at the time the seller has not the goods in his possession, has not contracted to purchase them, and has no expectation of acquiring them, otherwise than by producing, manufacturing, or purchasing them at some time before the day of delivery. (2) Such a transaction is not rendered invalid by the provisions of section 3537 of the Civil Code [1895], unless it is made to appear that neither of the parties contemplated an actual delivery of the goods, and that it was the intention of both that there should be no actual delivery, but that on the day fixed for delivery there should be a settlement of their differences, based on the market value of the goods on that day. In that event the transaction would be speculation upon chances, but not otherwise. (3) When a contract is valid upon its face, or, when taken in the light of the circumstances surrounding the parties at the time it was entered into, appears to be valid, it is incumbent upon him who attacks the contract to show its invalidity." See Watson v. Hazlehurst, 127 Ga. 298, 56 S. E. 459; Northington Co. v. Farmers' Co., 119 Ga. 851, 47 S. E. 200, 100 Am. St. Rep. 210; Sanders v. Allen, 135 Ga. 173, 68 S. E. 1102.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Sales, Cent. Dig. § 21; Dec. Dig. § 11; * Gaming, Cent. Dig. §§ 22, 25, 26; Dec. Dig. § 14; * Contracts, Cent. Dig. § 1760; Dec. Dig. § 141.*]

2. SALES (§ 411*)—VALIDITY—CONTRACT FOR FUTURE DELIVERY.

Under the rulings above quoted the court did not err in overruling the general demurrer of defendant to the petition, nor in overruling the demurrer based on the ground that "the allegations of said petition fail to show that the cotton forming the subject-matter of the alleged contract set forth in paragraph 4 of said petition had any actual or potential existence at the time of the alleged execution of said alleged contract, or that such cotton had such an existence as to be capable of being identified at said time so as to be the subject-matter of sale, or a contract of sale, or that said cotton was identified by said parties." Nor did the court err in striking the following allegation in defendant's answer: "For the reason that the cotton therein referred to had no actual or potential existence at the time of the execution of said alleged contract, and says that said alleged cotton, not being in existence at said time, was incapable of identification and was not identified by the parties, and could not be and form the subject-matter of any sale."

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Sales, Dec. Dig. § 411.*]

3. SALES (§§ 19, 20*)—CONTRACTS (§ 10*)—VALIDITY—CONSIDERATION—MUTUALITY.

The contract was not without consideration, nor was it invalid and unenforceable for the want of mutuality. Northington Co. v. Farmers' Co., 119 Ga. 851 (3), 47 S. E. 200, 100 Am. St. Rep. 210; Rearden Mercantile Co. v. Madison Oil Co., 128 Ga. 695, 698, 58 S. E. 200.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Sales, Dec. Dig. §§ 19, 20; * Contracts, Dec. Dig. § 10.*]

4. NEW TRIAL (§ 27*)—GROUNDS—OVERRULING DEMURRER.

If the court erred in refusing to sustain the ground of demurrer complaining that specified allegations were irrelevant, and that other allegations were mere conclusions of the plaintiff as to the meaning of the contract, such error was not such as to require a new trial.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see New Trial, Cent. Dig. § 41; Dec. Dig. § 27.*]

5. EVIDENCE (§ 437*)—PAROL EVIDENCE—INVALIDITY OF CONTRACT.

The provision in the contract that "it is fully understood and expressly agreed by the parties to this contract that the same cannot be settled by payment of money, but only by delivery of the actual cotton in square mercantile bales weighing an average of 500 pounds, as aforesaid," did not preclude defendant from showing that the contract was illegal, in that an actual delivery of the cotton was not contemplated by either of the parties, and that it was the intention of both that no such actual delivery should be made, but that at the time fixed in the contract for delivery there should be a settlement between them, based on the difference between the contract price of the cotton and the actual market value thereof at the time and place of delivery specified in the contract. Roberts v. Arnall (Ga. App.) 71 S. E. 590.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Evidence, Cent. Dig. §§ 2025–2029; Dec. Dig. § 437.*]

6. SALES (§ 420*)—REMEDIES OF PARTIES—DIRECTION OF VERDICT.

The defendant assumed the burden of proof, and the only testimony was his testimony, which failed to show that the contract was illegal; and the defendant in his plea having admitted that the market value of the cotton at the time and place of delivery specified in the contract was 14½ cents per pound as alleged in the petition, the court did not err in directing a verdict for plaintiff for the amount of the difference between such market value and the contract price of the cotton, with interest on such amount.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Sales, Dec. Dig. § 420.*]

Error from Superior Court, Heard County; R. W. Freeman, Judge.

Action by J. L. Vaughan against W. C. Wright, executor. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendant brings error. Affirmed.

Defendant in error (hereinafter called plaintiff) brought suit against plaintiff in error (hereinafter called the defendant) for damages, making substantially the following allegations: Plaintiff and defendant on June 30, 1909, entered into a written contract, of which the following is a copy:

"6/30/1909. For a consideration of the sum of one dollar to me in hand paid by J. L. Vaughan, as part payment of the cotton herein purchased, the receipt whereof is hereby acknowledged, I hereby agree to sell to J. L. Vaughan 100 bales of cotton, delivered at Carrollton, Ga., between the first and last days of November next. The delivery to be made at such time, at seller's option, in lots of not less than 100 bales, cotton to average 500 pounds per bale. If cotton does not average 500 pounds per bale, I will deliver a sufficient number of bales to bring up the average to 500 pounds per bale. The cotton to be of any grade between strict ordinary and fair, inclusive, at the price of 11 cents per pound for Atlanta 4's, said grade being good, middling, American standard classification, with deduction and addition for other grades according to ruling differences in effect on the day of delivery. It is fully understood and expressly agreed by the parties to this contract that the same cannot be settled by payment of money, but only by delivery of the actual cotton, in square mercantile bales weighing an average of 500 pounds, as aforesaid. B. H. Tompkins.

"We accept the above contract, with its conditions and obligations. J. L. Vaughan."

At the date of the contract plaintiff paid the defendant the $1 referred to therein. On November 30, 1909, cotton of the grade referred to in the contract was worth 14½ cents per pound at Carrollton, Ga. Defendant refused to deliver any of the cotton. Plaintiff sues to recover the difference between the contract price and the market value of the cotton at the time and place of delivery of same specified in the contract. A verdict was directed in favor of plaintiff for the amount for which suit was brought, and defendant excepted.

W. C. Wright and Frank S. Loftin, for plaintiff in error. Sidney Holderness and Hall & Jones, for defendant in error.

HOLDEN, J. Judgment affirmed. All the Justices concur, except BECK, J., absent.

(138 Ga. 357)

KENT & DOWNS v. WADLEY SOUTHERN RY. CO.

(Supreme Court of Georgia. Sept. 26, 1911.)

(Syllabus by the Court.)

1. CARRIERS (§ 45*)—TRANSPORTATION OF GOODS—DUTY TO FURNISH FACILITIES.

The court did not err in directing a nonsuit in this case.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Carriers, Dec. Dig. § 45.*]

(Additional Syllabus by Editorial Staff.)

2. EVIDENCE (§ 378*)—DOCUMENTARY EVIDENCE—AUTHENTICATION.

The mere receipt in due course of mail of letters on paper stamped with the letter head of the parties purporting to sign them, without any proof of the genuineness of the signatures, does not render them admissible in evidence.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Evidence, Cent. Dig. §§ 1648–1655; Dec. Dig. § 378.*]

Error from Superior Court, Johnson County; B. L. Rawlings, Judge.

Action by Kent & Downs against the Wadley Southern Railway Company. Judgment for defendant, and plaintiffs bring error. Affirmed.

Hines & Jordan, for plaintiffs in error. R. L. Gamble, for defendant in error.

BECK, J. The firm of Kent & Downs filed a petition against the Wadley Southern Railway Company to recover the value of 25,000 feet of lumber, which the plaintiffs alleged they were unable to deliver to a customer because of the failure and refusal of the railway company to furnish cars for its transportation. It was alleged that the plaintiffs, on January 10, 1907, offered the lumber for shipment at Kite, Ga., which is one of the places on the defendant's line of road at which it receives such goods for shipment; that the same was to be carried to Wadley, Ga., which is the terminus of said railway, and there to be delivered to a connecting carrier to be carried to Michigan City, Ind., for delivery to the Haskell-Barker Car Company; that the plaintiffs requested the railway company to place at Kite two 40-foot cars on which to load the lumber, such cars being the ordinary and usual cars used in carrying lumber of the dimensions offered; that the defendant company failed and refused to furnish the cars, and refused to accept the lumber; that the Haskell-Barker Car Company was to pay $18.50 per 1,000 feet for the lumber, but, owing to the failure of the railway company to furnish cars for its transportation, the car company, on May 10, 1907, canceled its order; and that, the plaintiffs being unable to use or sell the lumber, it became a total loss. On the trial, at the conclusion of the evidence offered on behalf of the plaintiffs, the court granted a nonsuit; and the plaintiff excepted.

[1] The plaintiffs were not entitled to recover in this case without proof of the execution of the letters from Daugherty, Morrison & Co., which contained the orders for the lumber to be shipped to Haskell-Barker Car Company. The basis of their action was their inability to fill these orders, or delay in filling them, which it is alleged resulted from a failure of the defendant railway to furnish cars on which to transport the lumber. It is true that in the record there appears a general statement by a member of the plaintiffs' firm that "he had a verbal order for this lumber," but the terms of the verbal order and from whom it came were unstated; and besides, as remarked above, the suit was predicated upon certain definite, precise orders for a certain number of pieces of lumber of specific dimensions. When the letters referred to above, which contained those orders, were excluded from evidence, there was no evidence before the court and jury of the existence of the orders which it was essential to prove in order to make out the plaintiffs' cause of action. It was shown by the plaintiffs' own testimony that the lumber which was left at the designated station on the defendant's line of railway, and which remained there until it rotted from exposure, had no market value unless it could be used for the purposes indicated in the letters of Daugherty, Morrison & Co., because of the dimensions into which it had been cut. To prove loss it was essential to the plaintiffs' case to show an order for the lumber sawed into such dimensions as this lumber was. The petition set forth all the essential facts. It showed the existence of such an order as that referred to; but, when put to the proof, the case failed because of a lack of evidence to establish the fact of the existence and execution of the orders set forth in the petition.

[2] The plaintiffs attempted to prove the execution of the letters containing the orders, by showing that they were received by due course of mail; but there was no proof whatever of the genuineness of the signatures to the letters. In fact, it appears that the signatures were typewritten, and no witness attempted to identify the signatures as those of the parties whose names were purported to be signed. The mere fact that these letters were received in due course of mail and upon paper stamped with the letter head of the parties purporting to sign the letters was not sufficient to render them admissible in evidence. Freeman v. Brewster, 93 Ga. 649, 21 S. E. 165. In the absence of the letters, as we have pointed out, the plaintiff's case had no foundation and could no longer stand. A nonsuit necessarily followed, and the court did not err in so directing.

Judgment affirmed. All the Justices concur.

(137 Ga. 50)

GEORGIA MILK PRODUCERS' ASS'N v. CRANE.

(Supreme Court of Georgia. Oct. 12, 1911.)

(Syllabus by the Court.)

CORPORATIONS (§ 428*)—CONDITIONAL SALES —NOTICE TO OFFICER OF CORPORATION.

Crane levied an attachment for the purchase money on certain personalty sold to Crosby. At the time the property was sold Crane took from Crosby a note wherein the title to the property was retained in Crane until the purchase price was paid. The note was not recorded in the county wherein Crosby resided. A corporation filed a claim to the property. The evidence authorized the following findings of fact: Crane sold the property to Crosby individually, and the latter sold it to the claimant while he was general manager and secretary and treasurer thereof. The purchase money was paid by the claimant to Crosby in the issuance of stock to him, and this latter sale was made and the stock issued while the president and other stockholders of the claimant were present. Held, under the circumstances named, the fact that Crosby held the offices stated at the time of the sale by him to the corporation would not charge the latter with notice of the retention of title by Crane. Pursley v. Stabley, 122 Ga. 362, 50 S. E. 139; People's Bank v. Exchange Bank, 116 Ga. 820 (3), 43 S. E. 269, 94 Am. St. Rep. 144, 31 Cyc. 1592.

(a) Under the above ruling, it was error requiring a new trial to charge the jury as follows: "If you believe that this claimant had notice, personal notice to its general officers or agents, that this property was purchased from Mr. Crane, and that he retained title, and had not been paid for it, then they could not acquire a good title to it by subsequently buying it from Mr. Crosby, and they would not be entitled to prevail in this case. If they did not have notice personally, but if Mr. Crosby was the general agent and general manager of this concern, then the fact that he knew that this property had not been paid for would be counted as notice to them; but the fact that he had entered into a contract with them, under seal, would not, of itself, be notice to them, but the question would be: Did he, as the general manager or as the secretary and treasurer of the company, have such charge of the business as would authorize him in the due course of business to have a transaction like this? If he made such a transaction, then the company could not buy from him without paying the balance of this purchase money, so as to defeat the plaintiff of his right under the reserved title, if you believe he had reserved title."

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Corporations, Cent. Dig. §§ 1748-1761; Dec. Dig. § 428.*]

Error from Superior Court, Fulton County; W. D. Ellis, Judge.

Attachment proceedings by A. J. Crane against one Crosby, in which the Georgia Milk Producers' Association filed a claim to the property. Judgment for plaintiff, and claimant brings error. Reversed.

J. J. Barge, for plaintiff in error. Willis M. Everett, for defendant in error.

HOLDEN, J. Judgment reversed. All the Justices concur, except BECK, J., absent.

(137 Ga. 23)

POLLAK BROS. v. NIALL-HERIN CO.

(Supreme Court of Georgia. Oct. 11, 1911.)

(Syllabus by the Court.)

BANKS AND BANKING (§ 166*)—COLLECTIONS—INSOLVENCY OF COLLECTING BANK.

Where a bank sends an accepted draft to a correspondent for collection, who receives in payment the check of the acceptor on itself in the regular course of business, the acceptor being a depositor with the collecting bank and having on deposit a sum in excess of the check, and the collecting bank surrenders the draft to the acceptor and remits its own check to the initial bank, which check is not paid because of the failure of the remitting bank, such transaction constitutes a payment of the draft as between the drawer and the acceptor, although the collecting bank may have been insolvent at the time; its insolvency not being known to its officials or the depositor.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Banks and Banking, Dec. Dig. § 166.*]

Error from Superior Court, Fulton County; J. T. Pendleton, Judge.

Action by Pollak Bros. against the Niall-Herlin Company. Judgment for defendant, and plaintiffs bring error. Affirmed.

Anderson, Felder, Rountree & Wilson, for plaintiffs in error. Candler, Thomson & Hirsch, for defendant in error.

EVANS, P. J. Pollak Bros. sold to the Niall-Herlin Company, a corporation, a certain quantity of matting, and the action is on account to recover the purchase price. The defendant admitted the purchase of the goods at the price stated and pleaded payment. The case was tried before the judge without a jury, upon an agreed statement of facts, which may be condensed as follows: Plaintiffs drew a draft on the defendant for the purchase price of the matting, payable six months after sight to the order of the Hongkong & Shanghai Banking Corporation. The draft was duly accepted by the defendant on June 21, 1907, and on the day of its maturity, to wit, December 21, 1907, the draft was presented to the defendant by the Neal Bank, to the order of which bank the draft had been made payable by the indorsement of the Hongkong & Shanghai Banking Corporation. At the time of its presentation the defendant had on deposit with the Neal Bank a sum of money largely in excess of the amount of the draft. Upon the presentation of the draft the defendant gave to the Neal Bank its check on the Neal Bank and against its deposit account therein for the amount of the draft. This check was given in payment of the draft, and the draft was marked "Paid" and surrendered to the defendant. The Neal Bank was the collection agent of the Hongkong & Shanghai Banking Corporation, and immediately upon receiving the check upon itself given by the defendant it passed the amount of the check upon its books to the credit of the Hongkong & Shanghai Banking Corporation. On the same day the Neal Bank received the defendant's check it mailed to the Hongkong & Shanghai Banking Corporation, who were the agents of the plaintiffs, its check for $2,176.70, drawn on the Fourth National Bank of New York, less its collection charge of $2.17. Three days later the check was presented to the Fourth National Bank of New York, and payment thereof was refused; the Neal Bank having failed in the meantime, and a receiver having been appointed for it. At the time of the foregoing transaction the Neal Bank was insolvent, but this fact was unknown to the defendant or to the officers of the bank. It was further agreed that the Hongkong & Shanghai Banking Corporation intervened in the receivership case, alleging that the defendant had paid the draft, that the Neal Bank in collecting the draft was acting as its agent, and prayed that the amount collected upon the draft by the Neal Bank be decreed to be trust funds in the hands of the receiver, to be specially accounted for to the Hongkong & Shanghai Banking Corporation. Its intervention, in the light of the answer of the receiver and the admitted facts upon the hearing, was denied, upon the ground that the draft referred to was paid only by the check of the defendant against its own deposit in the Neal Bank, the collecting agent of the Hongkong & Shanghai Banking Corporation. Upon the foregoing facts the court rendered judgment for the defendant, and the plaintiffs except.

The plaintiff in error contends that these facts are insufficient to constitute payment, because an agent to collect can only accept money in payment of his principal's debt. We recognize the general rule that an agent authorized merely to collect a demand or to receive payment of a debt cannot bind his principal by an arrangement short of an actual collection and receipt of the money. Ward v. Evans, 2 Ld. Raymond, 928. But we think the circumstances under which the draft was paid in this case are equivalent to the actual receipt of the money by the agent. Courts should deal with practical problems in a practical way, and give the same sense to a plain and ordinary business transaction which is uniformly attached to it by the business world. As remarked by Justice Field: "We cannot shut our eyes to matters of public notoriety and general cognizance. When we take our seat on the bench we are not struck with blindness and forbidden to know as judges what we see as men." Ho Ah Kow v. Nunan, Fed. Cas. No. 6,546. Our Code declares that judicial notice will be taken of the general customs of merchants and similar matters of public knowledge. Civil Code 1910, § 5734. In British & Amer. Mortgage Company v. Tibballs, 63 Iowa, 468, 19 N. W. 319, the Supreme Court of that state said that "the system by which nearly all the banks in this country transact monetary affairs by the use of checks, drafts, and certificates of deposit, and without the actual handling of bank notes or coin, is so well known and understood that no business man, much less a company whose sole occupation is loaning money, should be allowed to profit by pleading ignorance of it." We dare say that no depositor who paid a note or draft payable at his own bank ever went through the senseless ceremony of first taking out his money at one window and immediately paying it in at another window. He pays the note or demand which his bank holds against him with his check, and if he has the money to his credit and the bank is a going concern, with money on hand sufficient to cash the check, the payment is equivalent in law and in fact to a payment in money. What sound reason can be advanced to require, as essential to the validity of the payment, the useless formality of the depositor taking his money from the bank officer and immediately restoring it to him. The draft was in the possession of the bank, who had a legal right to receive the money in payment, which was also in its custody, and when the bank accepted its depositor's check in payment of the draft, cancelling and delivering it to him, and entered the transaction on its books, thenceforward the draft was paid, and the bank held the money as the agent of the drawer. The bank's failure after the remittance of the collection by check, and the consequent inability of the drawer to realize on the check, did not and could not affect the past transaction. And it has accordingly been held that where the drawer of an accepted draft deposits it with a bank, who sends it to its correspondent bank for collection, and the drawee delivers to the latter bank his check on it, having at the time on deposit a sum in excess of his check, receiving from the bank the accepted draft, and appropriate entries are made on the books of the collecting bank, who remits its own check to the initial bank, such a transaction constitutes a payment of the draft by the drawee to the drawer, notwithstanding the check remitted by the collecting bank is not paid because of its failure; neither the officers of the remitting bank nor the acceptor knowing the bank's insolvency at the time. Howard v. Walker, 92 Tenn. 452, 21 S. W. 897; British & American Mortgage Company v. Tibballs, 63 Iowa, 468, 19 N. W. 319; Daniel v. St. Louis National Bank, 67 Ark. 223, 54 S. W. 214; Welge v. Batty, 11 Ill. App. 461; Scott v. Gilkey, 153 Ill. 168, 39 N. E. 265; Nineteenth Ward Bank v. First National Bank of South Weymouth, 184 Mass. 49, 67 N. E. 670; Morse on Banks (4th Ed.) § 248; 2 Bolles on Modern Law of Banking, 557.

*For other cases see same topic and section NUMBER in Dec. Dig. & Am. Dig. Key No. Series & Rep'r Indexes

It is no reply to say that payment of the draft as between drawer and drawee cannot result, unless the facts of the transaction impress a trust in favor of the drawer upon the assets of the collecting bank. Other and additional elements are to be considered in determining the existence or enforceableness of the trust. Some authorities are to the point that, notwithstanding the transfer of the drawee's funds held on deposit by the collecting bank to the credit of the drawer, no trust can arise unless the bank converts the money represented by the check into a specific fund or other assets capable of identification. People v. M. & M. Bank of Troy, 78 N. Y. 269, 34 Am. Rep. 532; Sherwood v. Milford Bank, 94 Mich. 78, 53 N. W. 923; Billingsly v. Pollock, 69 Miss. 759, 13 South. 828, 30 Am. St. Rep. 535; Anheuser-Busch Brewing Ass'n v. Clayton, 56 Fed. 759, 6 C. C. A. 108.

Judgment affirmed. All the Justices concur, except BECK, J., absent.

(137 Ga. 38)

WHITE SEWING MACH. CO. et al. v. COBLE et al.

(Supreme Court of Georgia. Oct. 12, 1911.)

(Syllabus by the Court.)

1. EXECUTORS AND ADMINISTRATORS (§ 200*)—SETTING APART SUPPORT TO WIDOW—PROCEEDINGS TO SET ASIDE.

Proceedings by creditors of the estate of a decedent to set aside a judgment of the ordinary setting apart a year's support to the widow and minor children of the decedent must be commenced within three years from the rendition of the judgment. Civil Code 1910, § 4358; Wicker v. Howard, 126 Ga. 119, 54 S. E. 821.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Executors and Administrators, Dec. Dig. § 200.*]

2. EXECUTORS AND ADMINISTRATORS (§ 200*)—ALLOWANCE TO WIDOW—SETTING ASIDE.

If the judgment setting aside the year's support was void in so far as it undertook to set apart the real estate therein referred to, on the ground that it was insufficiently described, the judgment creditors and the mortgage creditor of the estate did not need the aid of a court of equity in having such property sold to pay such judgments and mortgage.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Executors and Administrators, Dec. Dig. § 200.*]

8. DISMISSAL OF PETITION.

The court did not err in dismissing the petition.

Error from Superior Court, Wilcox County; U. V. Whipple, Judge.

Action between the White Sewing Machine Company and others and Mamie Coble and others. From the judgment, the Sewing Machine Company and others bring error. Affirmed.

Eldridge Cutts and Hal Lawson, for plaintiffs in error. J. L. Bankston and E. D. Graham, for defendants in error.

HOLDEN, J. Judgment affirmed. All the Justices concur, except BECK, J., absent.

(137 Ga. 55)

JARRELL, Sheriff, et al. v. DAVIS et al.

(Supreme Court of Georgia. Oct. 12, 1911.)

(Syllabus by the Court.)

1. SCHOOLS AND SCHOOL DISTRICTS (§ 106*)—TAXATION—SUBMISSION OF QUESTION TO POPULAR VOTE.

On December 21, 1905, the county board of education of Meriwether county laid off that county into school districts. A map of the county thus laid off was filed with the ordinary of the county. On June 12, 1909, an election was held in the Bullochville school district of such county on the question as to whether the funds received from the state public school fund should be supplemented by levying a tax for educational purposes in such district, and on June 23, 1909, the ordinary of the county declared the result of such election to be in favor of local taxation for public schools. In 1910 the secretary of the board of trustees of such district, with the aid of the county school commissioners of the county, made a digest of all property in such district subject to taxation. The trustees determined the amount necessary to be raised by local tax on the property in the district for local taxation for public schools therein. In 1910 the secretary of the board of trustees, with the aid of the county school commissioners, levied a tax of five mills on such property. The trustees had erected a schoolhouse for such district in Bullochville, for which they still owe about $1,000. Held, where an election was held in June, 1909, in a school district laid off under the act of 1905 (Acts 1905, p. 425), on the question as to whether there should be local taxation to supplement the public school fund for public schools in such district, the fact that the district was laid off under the act of 1905, and before the passage of the act of 1906 (Acts 1906, p. 61), did not render such election invalid. See Griffin v. Brooks, 129 Ga. 698, 59 S. E. 902.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Schools and School Districts, Dec. Dig. § 103.*]

2. SCHOOLS AND SCHOOL DISTRICTS (§ 68*)—BUILDINGS—LOCATION OF SCHOOL SITES—JURISDICTION.

A controversy arising as to the location of the school site in a particular district in a county which has been laid off into school districts must be determined by the county board of education, and a court of equity will not entertain jurisdiction of such matter, but will remand the parties to their legal remedy. Meadows v. Board of Education, 71 S. E. 146.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Schools and School Districts, Dec. Dig. § 68.*]

3. SCHOOLS AND SCHOOL DISTRICTS (§ 111*)—TAXES—RESTRAINING COLLECTION—GROUNDS.

Where a school site has been located in a school district by the proper officials, a school building been erected thereon, and a tax levied by the proper authorities on the property in the district, for the purpose of paying for such building and the maintenance of the school therein for a given year, the collection of such tax will not be enjoined at the instance of a taxpayer of such district, living within three miles of such school site, on the ground that the district contains territory more than three miles distant from the school site, which territory was included in the district without the written consent of two-thirds of the qualified voters thereof.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Schools and School Districts, Dec. Dig. § 111.*]

4. SCHOOLS AND SCHOOL DISTRICTS (§ 111*)—TAXES—RESTRAINING COLLECTION—GROUNDS.

The failure upon the part of the officials whose duty it is to levy and collect the school tax of a district under the act of 1905, as amended by the act of 1906, to enforce the same against certain property in the district belonging to one whose name was inadvertently, or even purposely, left off the regular digest of the property in the district, affords no reason for restraining the collection of the tax against other taxpayers. Mabry v. Fuller, 133 Ga. 831, 833, 67 S. E. 91.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Schools and School Districts, Dec. Dig. § 111.*]

5. INTERLOCUTORY INJUNCTION—COLLECTION OF SCHOOL TAX.

The judge of the superior court erred in granting an interlocutory injunction.

Error from Superior Court, Meriwether County; R. W. Freeman, Judge.

Action by C. L. Davis and others against J. B. Jarrell, Sheriff, and others. Judgment for plaintiffs, and defendants bring error. Reversed.

Howell & Hatcher and N. F. Culpepper, for plaintiffs in error. McLaughlin, Jones & Jones, for defendants in error.

PER CURIAM. Judgment reversed. All the Justices concur, except BECK, J., absent.

(137 Ga. 89)

PELHAM v. SMITH.

(Supreme Court of Georgia. Oct. 12, 1911.)

(Syllabus by the Court.)

1. BOUNDARIES (§ 37*)—ESTABLISHMENT—SUFFICIENCY OF EVIDENCE.

An owner of land made a deed to a part of it containing the following description: "All that tract or parcel of land lying, situate, and being in the 8th land district of said county of Colquitt, in said state of Georgia, and known and distinguished in the plan of said district as a part of land lot number eighty-five (85), the tract of land herein conveyed described by dimensions and bounded as follows: Commencing at a point 558 feet from the corner of land lots 85, 86, 53, and 54, and running east along the land line between 85 and 54 to a stake, the commencing point of this land, and thence east 1,800 feet along said last-mentioned land line to a corner, thence south from said corner, 1,800 feet, thence west 1,260 feet to a stake or corner, thence north thirty degrees east to place of commencing, containing 64 acres." In an action of ejectment, the controlling question was whether this deed conveyed land only on the east side of a public road, or whether it also included a small triangular strip on the west side of such road. The plaintiff testified that he bargained and sold the land only on the east side of the road, showed the defendant, who was his grantee, where the lines would run and about how many acres there would be, and with the consent of the defendant had a surveyor to survey the land along the east side of the road and fix the corner, though the defendant was absent when the survey was made; that the southern line of the tract was not measured, but stepped, and that the defendant remained satisfied for about a year and a half, and then told the plaintiff that the degrees mentioned in the deed would cut him (the defendant) off from the public road; that the plaintiff procured the county surveyor, and with the help of the defendant measured the land and fixed the southwest corner on the east side of the public road, and the defendant agreed thereto and drove a stob there. The evidence of the surveyor was also introduced to show that, if the southern line described in the deed were measured as 1,260 feet, it would extend across the road, but in that event the west line would not run at an angle of 30 degrees; that the two descriptions were inconsistent, and both could not stand; and that to stop the south line on the east side of the public road would make the last line correspond with the degrees mentioned, and make the tract contain about 57 acres on the east side of the road. Held, that the verdict in favor of the plaintiff was supported by the evidence.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Boundaries, Dec. Dig. § 37.*]

2. EVIDENCE (§ 460*)—PAROL EVIDENCE AFFECTING WRITINGS—EXPLANATION OF AMBIGUITY.

The description in the deed was so ambiguous and conflicting that there was no error in admitting the evidence of the plaintiff that "defendant's land was put on the east side of the road, and [he] was satisfied [until] in January, 1906, when defendant told plaintiff that the degrees mentioned in this deed would cut defendant off from the public road, and that plaintiff told the defendant that he would get the county surveyor, J. S. Robinson, and come and run the degrees in said deed to fix his land on the east side of said public road." This evidence was admissible, in connection with the further evidence that the survey was made, the defendant took part in it, fixed and agreed upon the corner, and drove a stob there, and afterwards obtained permission of the plaintiff to get firewood from the strip west of the public road, which is now in dispute.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Evidence, Cent. Dig. §§ 2116-2122; Dec. Dig. § 460.*]

Error from Superior Court, Colquitt County; J. H. Merrill, Judge.

Action by J. P. Smith against E. H. Pelham. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendant brings error. Affirmed.

J. D. McKenzie, for plaintiff in error. Shipp & Kline and J. H. Tipton, for defendant in error.

LUMPKIN, J. Judgment affirmed. All the Justices concur, except BECK, J., absent.

(136 Ga. 839)

WILENSKY v. CENTRAL OF GEORGIA RY. CO.

(Supreme Court of Georgia. Sept. 26, 1911.)

(Syllabus by the Court.)

CARRIERS (§ 91*)—TRANSPORTATION OF GOODS —ACTION FOR BREACH OF CONTRACT.

A shipper, who is both consignor and consignee, cannot maintain against a carrier an action ex contractu for the value of goods consigned to the carrier for shipment and not delivered, when the carrier tenders the goods at destination in a damaged condition, but refuses to deliver them unless the shipper pays the usual freight charges, notwithstanding the damages to the goods amount to more than the freight charges, and the shipper demands that the damages to the shipment be offset against the freight bill, on the theory that the refusal to deliver under the circumstances is a breach of the contract of carriage.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Carriers, Dec. Dig. § 91.*]

Certified Question from Court of Appeals.

Action by H. Wilensky against the Central of Georgia Railway Company. Judgment for defendant, and plaintiff brings error. Question certified by Court of Appeals to Supreme Court. Answered in favor of defendant in error.

Jesse M. Wood, for plaintiff in error. Payne, Little & Jones and M. F. Goldstein, for defendant in error.

FISH, C. J. The Court of Appeals has certified to the Supreme Court the following question:

"Can a shipper, who is both consignor and consignee, maintain against a carrier an action ex contractu for the value of goods consigned to the carrier for shipment and not delivered, when the carrier tenders the goods at destination in a damaged condition, but refuses to deliver them unless the shipper pays the usual freight charges, notwithstanding the damages to the goods amount to more than the freight charges, and the shipper demands that the damages to the shipment be offset against the freight bill, on the theory that the refusal to deliver under the circumstances is a breach of the contract of carriage?"

In Brown, Shipley & Co. v. Clayton, 12 Ga. 564 (6), this court held that "a consignee cannot abandon damaged goods, and thereby discharge the liability of the shipper for freight." The point was directly involved in that case, and was learnedly and exhaustively treated by Nisbet, J., who pronounced the opinion of the court. He said: "It has been much mooted whether, when the goods became greatly deteriorated on the voyage, the consignee is bound to take them and pay the freight, or whether he may not abandon them to the master in discharge of the freight. The better opinion is that he cannot abandon the goods and thereby discharge the freight." The following authorities were cited: 3 Kent's Com. 224, 225; Griswold v. New York Ins. Co., 3 Johns. (N. Y.) 821, 3 Am. Dec. 490; 1 Bell's Com. 570; Jordan v. Warren Ins. Co., 1 Story, 342, 353, 354, Fed. Cas. No. 7,524; Pothier Charte Partic. No. 59. I quote further extracts from the opinion as follows: "The * * * law allows to the carrier his freight when the goods are delivered, irrespective of damage. * * * If the carrier and the owners [of the ship] are liable for damage, the shipper and his consignee must resort to their action to recover them. * * * This obligation to pay freight grows out of the contract. It is entire, and cannot be apportioned. Upon a bill of lading like this, in which freight is agreed to be paid upon delivery, a delivery is a condition precedent to a right to it, and upon delivery or tender the freight is earned, and the shipper is liable for it. The carrier may retain the goods if it is not paid, or he may waive that and rely upon the liability of both the consignee and the shipper (if the shipper is also the owner) for his freight."

*For other cases see same topic and section NUMBER in Dec. Dig. & Am. Dig. Key No. Series & Rep'r Indexes

It is the contention of counsel for the shipper, who is also the owner, in the case now under consideration, that the doctrine announced in the case in 12 Ga. 564, above cited, was overturned by the adoption by the General Assembly of Civil Code 1895, § 2287, which is as follows: "The carrier has a lien on the goods for his freight, and may retain possession until it is paid, unless this right is waived by special contract or actual delivery. This lien exists only when the carrier has complied with his contract as to transportation." The decision in Brown v. Clayton, 12 Ga. 564, was rendered in 1853, prior to the adoption of any Civil Code in this state. By an act of the General Assembly approved December 9, 1858, provision was made for the election of three commissioners "to prepare for the people of Georgia a Code, which should, as near as practicable, embrace in a condensed form the laws of Georgia, whether derived from the common law, the Constitution, the statutes of the state, the decisions of the Supreme Court, or the statutes of England, of force in this state." Laws 1858, p. 95. The Code prepared by the commissioners was adopted by an act of the General Assembly approved December 19, 1860 (Laws 1860, p. 24); but, by an act of 1861 (Laws 1861, p. 28) it did not go into effect until January 1, 1863. That Code contained a section (section 2049) in the identical language of section 2287 of the Code of 1895, and each of the intermediate Codes has contained a section with similar provisions. Section 2741 of the Civil Code of 1910 is the same as section 2287 of the Civil Code of 1895. This section did not have its origin in a statute of this state. It appears for the first time in the Code of 1863. It has, however, all the binding effect of an original act of the Legislature, because of the adoption by the Legislature of the Code wherein it appears. Central Ry. Co. v. State, 104 Ga. 831, 31 S. E. 531, 42 U. R. A. 518. It has been several times held by this court that a section of the Code, not of original statutory origin, would be construed merely as a codification of the existing law, unless there be words in the section which manifestly demand a construction which would change the rule in force at the time the Code was adopted. Brandon v. Pritchett, 128 Ga. 286, 55 S. E. 241; Mitchell v. Georgia & Alabama Ry., 111 Ga. 760, 36 S. E. 971, 51 L. R. A. 622, and cases cited.

At the time of the adoption of the Code of 1863, the law on the subject now under discussion was "that a consignee cannot abandon damaged goods, and thereby discharge the liability of the shipper for freight," as has been decided by the Supreme Court in Brown v. Clayton, 12 Ga. 564, and one of the sources from which the commissioners appointed to prepare a code of the laws of this state were to seek the existing law was "the decisions of the Supreme Court." Are there any words in the section of the Code now under consideration which manifestly demand the conclusion that the codifiers intended to change the law as it previously existed? There is nothing in the section by which it can be contended that the doctrine announced in 12 Ga. 564, was changed, unless it be the following language: "This lien exists only when the carrier has complied with his contract as to transportation." It certainly cannot be successfully urged that it was ever at any time held that the carrier could not retain goods transported by it until the usual freight charges thereon should be paid. It is contended, in effect, that as the duty of the common carrier is to transport goods received for carriage safely and within a reasonable time, and as this duty, being imposed by law, becomes a part of the contract of carriage, even though not expressed therein, it follows that, if the goods have been damaged by the fault of the carrier before reaching their destination, then the carrier has not complied with his contract as to transportation, and no lien exists on the goods for freight. If this be true, then the carrier would have no lien for freight on the goods if they should be injured in transportation by the carrier's fault to any appreciable extent, as the contract to safely transport, in such a case, would not have been complied with. Now, how can it be logically contended that a carrier has a lien on goods transported which have been damaged by the carrier's fault in transit, when the freight on the goods amounts to more than the damage, but has no lien where the damage amounts to more than the freight? Could it be successfully urged, where the freight amounted to $100 and the damage by the carrier to the goods amounted to $99, that the carrier would have a lien for the entire freight, but, if the damage amounted to $101, then no lien would exist? As was ruled in Brown v. Clayton, 12 Ga. 575, 576: When the goods become greatly deteriorated on the voyage, the consignee is bound to take them and to pay the freight. "He cannot abandon the goods and thereby discharge the freight. * * * This obligation to pay freight grows out of the contract. It is entire, and cannot be apportioned."

Code 1863, § 2045, declared that "the common carrier is bound not only for the safe transportation and delivery of goods, but also that the same be done without unreasonable delay"; and this section has been embodied in all the subsequent Codes. Therefore it is as much the duty of such carrier to transport goods without unreasonable delay as it is to safely transport them, and, as we have said, both of these duties being imposed by law, they became by implication a part of the contract of carriage. Civil Code 1895, § 2319 (Civil Code 1910, § 2773), is in this language: "Where a carrier fails to deliver goods in a reasonable time, the measure of damages is the difference between the market value at the time and place they should have been delivered and the time of actual delivery." This section is a codification of the rulings of this court in Columbus & Western Railway v. Flournoy, 75 Ga. 745, Atlanta, etc., R. Co. v. Texas Grate Co., 81 Ga. 602, 9 S. E. 600, and East Tennessee R. Co. v. Johnson, 85 Ga. 497, 11 S. E. 809, wherein it was decided what damages are recoverable against a common carrier for the breach of the contract of carriage in failing to deliver goods within a reasonable time. This measure of damages by delay is exclusive. If the delivery of goods has been unreasonably delayed by the carrier, the owner must sue for the damage prescribed in this section of the Code. He may not abandon the goods and sue for their value. The title to the goods in such a case remains in the owner. Mere delay in delivery does not amount to a conversion by the carrier. Where the goods have been merely damaged, and not destroyed or lost, by the fault of the carrier in transportation, and their identity has not been substantially destroyed, why does not the title to them still remain in the owner? How can such damage amount to a conversion of the goods by the carrier? Why can he abandon them in such a case and sue the carrier for their value, when he could not do so if damage had occurred to him by unreasonable delay in the delivery of the goods? If he must accept the goods when tendered and pay the freight when he has been damaged by an unreasonable delay in their delivery, why should he not be required to do the same thing when he has been damaged by injury to the goods caused by the fault of the carrier in transportation? No satisfactory reason occurs to us for making a disinction in the respects indicated between the two cases. Of course I do not mean to hold that the same rule as to the measure of damages is applicable to the two cases; but what we urge is that, as the Code fixes the measure of damages in case of delay, no action will lie in such a case for the value of the goods, and that unreasonable delay in transportation and delivery is as much a breach of the contract of carriage as damage in transit, and that there can be no valid reason for allowing the owner to abandon the goods in the latter case and sue for their value, when the damage is more than the freight, when he cannot do this in the former case.

The section of the Code declaring that the carrier has a lien on the goods for the freight, and may retain the possession until it is paid, unless this right be waived, and that this lien exists only when the carrier has complied with his contract as to transportation, has never been directly construed by this court since its insertion in the first Code. In Breed v. Mitchell, 48 Ga. 533, it was held that "where goods arrive at their point of destination, and the packages or casks are, by the fault of the carrier, in a damaged condition, so that they cannot be handled without loss or further damage, it is the duty of the carrier to repair the casks, if possible, before the owner can be compelled to receive them; and if he refuses to do this the owner may refuse to receive the goods and may recover the value, and this without offering to pay the freights, since the carrier has not completed his undertaking." In the opinion, which was delivered by McCay, J., it was said that "if a carrier has, by his fault, so injured the cask in which a liquid is contained as that it cannot be moved without further damage, [then] he cannot compel the owner to take it in that condition. It is practically a total loss. If left as the carrier has by his fault made it, the loss will be total. This is not like the case of rotting goods, or even of damaged goods. Here the parties have provided a safe barrel to hold their oil, and the carrier has damaged that barrel so that to move it will cause the loss of the oil. It is capable of repair. * * * As the carrier in this case had something more to do, the freight was not demandable." Here there is a clear intimation that where the goods shipped are not practically or totally lost on account of the fault of the carrier, but that they have been merely damaged, the freight, upon the tender of the goods to the owner, would be demandable.

In Robinson v. Dover, etc., R. Co., 99 Ga. 480, 27 S. E. 713, there was one shipment of two carboys of acid. One of them was lost, and the railroad company refused to deliver the other until the freight should be paid on both. It appears from the record in that case on file in this court that the freight on both carboys amounted to $2.90, and that the value of each carboy was $3, so that the damage by the loss of one carboy was more than the freight on both; yet it was said: "Upon the carboy of sulphuric acid actually delivered the carrier was entitled to a lien for the amount of freight charges due, but the lien for freight charges attaches only to the goods upon which the freight is actually due. The consignee tendered the amount of freight charges upon the article of freight actually transported by the defendant, and was therefore entitled to receive it; and inasmuch as no lien for freight due upon other goods attached to the specific article demanded, it could not lawfully withhold from the consignee the possession of such article. * * *

As to the carboy lost, neither it nor the connecting line had completed the contract of carriage, and therefore no lien for freight could arise in favor of either company against the consignee for charges upon the goods which were lost." While the carrier has no lien for freight on goods lost in transportation, for the obvious reason that in such a case the contract of carriage was never completed, a different question arises when goods shipped have not been lost, but merely damaged, and delivery is tendered to the owner in a damaged condition. As this court, in Breed v. Mitchell and in Robinson v. Dover, etc., R. Co., supra, has clearly intimated that there is a difference as to the right of a carrier to demand freight on lost goods and goods merely damaged, and as it was held in several decisions of this court, after the codification of the section declaring that the "lien exists only when the carrier has complied with his contract as to transportation," that the measure of damages for delay in transportation and delivery was the difference in the value of the goods at their destination when they should have been delivered and when they were actually delivered, which decisions were subsequently codified, and as there can be no good reason for a rule that would not allow the owner to sue for the value of the goods when he has been damaged by delay in their delivery, but would give him the right to sue for their value when they had been damaged in transit by the carrier's fault, I have reached the conclusion that the section of the Code first appearing as section 2049 in the Code of 1863, containing the language last above quoted, and which has been embodied in all subsequent Civil Codes, was merely a codification of the then existing law as it had been declared by the decision of the Supreme Court in Brown v. Clayton, 12 Ga. 564, since, for the reasons above stated, there is nothing in the section which manifestly demands a construction that would change the rule in force at the time that Code was adopted. It follows, therefore, that where property is injured in transportation through the negligence of the carrier, but the substantial identity of the property has not been destroyed by the damage, the owner, upon the tender of the property at its destination by the carrier, cannot decline to pay the usual freight charges, refuse to accept the property, and sue for its value, though the damage may amount to more than the freight. Many good reasons occur to me in support of the soundness of this rule, but I deem it unnecessary to state them, as I am satisfied to rest my conclusion upon the decision of this court in Brown v. Clayton, supra, where it was stated that, while it was a much-mooted question, it was decided that the better opinion is that the consignee is bound to take the goods, though deteriorated on the voyage, and pay the freight, and that he could not abandon them to the carrier in discharge of the freight.

Counsel for the consignor, who is also the consignee, ask leave, in the event that the doctrine announced in Brown v. Clayton, 12 Ga. 564, was not changed by section 2049 of the Code of 1863, that such case be reviewed and overruled. After an examination of all the authorities I have been able to find on the subject, I am of the opinion that the correct rule was stated in that case, and that it should not be disturbed. The same rule prevails in England, as well as in some of the states of this Union. In 3 Hutchinson on Carriers (3d Ed.) § 1365, it is said: "As a general rule, the doctrine that, where goods are injured, the owner may abandon them as for a total loss and sue for their value, does not apply to contracts of affreightment [citing Silverman v. Railway, 51 La. Ann. 1785, 26 South. 447]. The fact, therefore, that the goods are injured upon the journey, through causes for which the carrier is responsible, does not in itself justify the consignee in refusing to receive them; but he must accept them and hold the carrier responsible for the injury [citing Corso v. N. O., etc., R. Co., 48 La. Ann. 1286, 20 South. 752; Brand v. Weir, 27 Misc. Rep. 212, 57 N. Y. Supp. 731; Gulf, etc., Ry. Co. v. Pitts, 37 Tex. Civ. App. 212, 83 S. W. 727; Gulf, etc., Ry. Co. v. Everett, 37 Tex. Civ. App. 167, 83 S. W. 257]. Wherever, however, the damage is such that the entire value of the goods is destroyed, the consignee may refuse to receive them and sue the carrier for their value."

From what I have said, the question certified to this court by the Court of Appeals is answered in the negative. I am authorized to say that ATKINSON, J., concurs in the foregoing opinion.

LUMPKIN, J. I concur in the opinion that the question propounded by the Court of Appeals must be answered in the negative. The general trend of authority in the United States is to the effect that where goods are damaged by a common carrier in the course of transit, or where damages arise by reason of delay in transportation, the consignee has a right to demand delivery of the goods without paying the freight, provided the damages equal or exceed the amount of the freight charge. Missouri Pacific Ry. Co. v. Peru-Van Zandt Implement Co., 73 Kan. 295, 85 Pac. 408, 87 Pac. 80, 6 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1053, 117 Am. St. Rep. 468, 9 Am. & Eng. Ann. Cas. 790, 794, and note. In all, or nearly all, of the cases on this subject, the action involved was one of replevin or trover to recover the goods, or damages for conversion. No case has come to my attention where it has been held that the shipper or consignee could sue, not to recover the property or damages for its conversion, or for a breach of the contract of carriage, but on an implied contract on the part of the carrier to pay him the value of the goods. However it may be in other jurisdictions in the United States, I feel confident that no such action can be brought in this state, under Civil Code 1910, § 2741, which has been brought forward since the original Code of 1863, and the decision, from which it was evidently codified, in Brown, Shipley & Co. v. Clayton, 12 Ga. 564. In that case Clayton shipped certain cotton to Brown, Shipley & Co. That firm sold the cotton and sent to him an account of the sales. He was dissatisfied with it, and the suit resulted. One question discussed by the court was whether the consignees were negligent in not abandoning the consignment to the carrier for the freight. It was said that "the better opinion is that he cannot abandon the goods, and thereby discharge the freight." There was a contention that the consignees were negligent in not withholding the freight charge to an amount equivalent to the damage. In fact, the damage was less than the freight. But the decision was not placed upon that ground. In the eleventh headnote it was said: "The owners of the ship and the master are liable for loss, to the shipper or the consignee, happening to goods shipped as common carriers, except so far as that liability is restricted by the terms of the charter party, or bill of lading, or by statute. They have a lien upon the goods for freight, and may detain them for payment, whilst they, at the same time, have recourse personally upon the owner of the goods, unless the lien and the personal liability of the owner are waived or modified, in the contract of shipment." In the opinion it was said (page 575): "But a more serious point was made in the argument, which my duty constrains me to notice. The consignees cannot recover, say the counsel, or rather cannot be allowed to retain the amount of repairs done to the cotton, because they were guilty of negligence in not withholding freight to an equivalent sum. The answer to this proposition is that the law allows the carrier his freight when the goods are delivered, irrespective of damage. The consignee had no legal authority to withhold the freight as a satisfaction for damages. If he receives the goods, the law raises a promise to pay the freight; and if he does not do so, both he and his principal are liable for it. If the carrier and the owners are liable for damage, the shipper and his consignee must resort to their action to recover them. * * * In Shields v. Davis it was ruled that the consignee accepting goods could not defend himself from the payment of freight upon the ground that they were damaged by the master in the transportation. The master, said Gibbs, Chief Justice, is liable to a cross-action. 6 Taunton, 65." The volume cited is not accessible to me. But in 4 Camp. 119, I find what is apparently the same case, sub nomine Sheels v. Davies. In the report last cited it appears that the action was one of assumpsit for freight on account of a quantity of butter carried in a ship, and received by the defendant under the bill of lading. The defense proposed to be set up was that the butter had been injured, by bad stowage, to a degree much beyond the amount of the freight. It was stated that "Gibbs, C. J., held that the bad stowage of the goods was the subject of a cross-action, and did not affect the right to the freight." If this is the same case cited from 6 Taunton's Reports as authority in the Brown, Shipley & Company Case, it involved damages in excess of the freight charged, and this fact shows clearly that this court was not dealing with the case because the amount of the damage was less than the amount of the freight, but on the ground that the carrier had a right to retain the goods until the freight was paid, unless he waived such right, and that this could not be destroyed by claiming damages for delay or bad stowage. The decision followed what the court considered the English rule on that subject.

We need not stop to consider whether, under our statute in regard to recoupment, this rule has been so far modified as that, if the carrier should bring an action to recover the freight charge against the shipper or consignee, the defendant could recoup the amount of damages arising from failure of duty by the carrier. That is a different proposition from the question whether the carrier, upon every claim that unliquidated damages have arisen to the consignee greater in amount than the freight charges fixed by contract or law, must waive his lien, deliver the goods, and rely upon a suit against the consignee, or else, though he may honestly contest the existence or amount of such damage, become, in effect, a purchaser of the goods, under an implied contract to pay their value, should a jury ultimately find the question of damages against him. I am aware that in some of the American authorities above mentioned the argument is strongly presented that, if the amount of the damages exceeds the amount of the freight, the consignee should be allowed to claim that no freight is due, and that if no freight is due there can be no lien. If this argument be pursued to its logical end, however, and if a consignee can pay or extinguish freight charges by setting up unliquidated damages equal to them, it would seem that if the damages amount to one-half or some other proportion of the freight charges, he ought to be allowed to extinguish such charges to that extent, tender the balance of the freight in money, and demand the delivery of the goods. If unliquidated damages are good as a payment or discharge in whole, apparently they should be good as a payment or discharge in part, if the balance is tendered in money. The suggestion is not met by the reply that the lien is entire, and not apportionable. If it is discharged in full in damages plus money, this is as much a discharge as if made by setting up damages alone. But no case has come to my attention which holds that this can be done. In view of the decision in the case of Brown, Shipley & Co., the fact that our Code adopts the common law where not changed or modified, that the language of the Code is that the lien exists only when the carrier has complied with the contract "as to transportation," and of the other authorities cited in the opinion of the Chief Justice, I am of the opinion that the decision in the Brown, Shipley & Co. case is binding, that what was said on this subject was not obiter dictum, and that the ruling there made has not been changed by the Code. A request was made to review the case of Brown, Shipley & Co., supra; but the requisite number of members of this court do not concur in the opinion that it should be reviewed and reversed, and, under the statute, it must stand.

EVANS, P. J., and HOLDEN, J. We concur that the question propounded by the Court of Appeals should be answered in the negative, but we are unable to give full concurrence to the reasoning of other members of the court by which they arrive at this conclusion. At common law the carrier was entitled to receive his freight, notwithstanding the goods may have been damaged in transit. This resulted from the application of the principle that unliquidated damages could not be set off against liquidated demands. But under the practice in this state, at least since the adoption of the first Code, the defendant was given the right "to have a deduction from the amount of the plaintiff's damages for the reason that the plaintiff has not complied with the cross-obligations or independent covenants arising under the same contract," and such deductions were pleadable "in all actions ex contractu where from any reason the plaintiff under the same contract is in good conscience liable to the defendant." Code of 1863, §§ 2850, 2853. Subsequently, by the act of 1878, the plea of recoupment was enlarged, so that, if the damages of the defendant exceeded in amount those of the plaintiff, the defendant was allowed to recover the excess. The English rule that in a suit for freight the defendant cannot plead damages in reduction of the amount sought to be recovered, or have a judgment for the excess, if the damages exceed the freight, has been changed by our statute, and no reason occurs to us why a rule founded solely upon an artificial rule of pleading should be adhered to, when such rule has been abrogated or repudiated in this state. The right of the carrier to retain the goods depends upon his right to claim the freight. If the consignee owes no freight, then the carrier has no right to the possession of the goods. If the damage occasioned in the performance of the contract of transportation equals or exceeds the freight, then the carrier's lien for freight is lost, and he has no right to the possession of the goods; and an action of trover may be maintained for their recovery, without payment of freight. Missouri Pacific Ry. Co. v. Peru-Van Zandt Implement Co., 73 Kan. 295, 85 Pac. 408, 87 Pac. 80, 6 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1058, 117 Am. St. Rep. 468, 9 Am. & Eng. Ann. Cas. 790; Dyer v. Grand Trunk R. Co., 42 Vt. 441, 1 Am. Rep. 350; Moran v. Northern Pacific R. Co., 19 Wash. 266, 53 Pac. 49, 1101; Boggs v. Martin, 13 B. Mon. (Ky.) 239; Cutting v. Grand Trunk R. Co., 13 Allen (Mass.) 381; Miami Powder Co. v. Port Royal, etc., R. Co., 47 S. C. 324, 25 S. E. 153, 58 Am. St. Rep. 880. 1 Jones on Liens (2d Ed.) § 331. But it does not follow that, because the consignee or consignor may recover the goods in an action of trover, he is entitled to abandon them to the carrier and sue in assumpsit for their value. The right of the consignee to the possession of the goods, without the payment of freight, where the damage equals or exceeds the freight, is one thing; and the right of the consignee to abandon the goods under such circumstances and bring assumpsit for their value, based on a breach of the contract of carriage, is another thing. Woodruff v. Zaban, 133 Ga. 24, 65 S. E. 123, 134 Am. St. Rep. 186.

We do not think any point actually decided in Brown, Shipley & Co. v. Clayton, 12 Ga. 564, precludes an action of trover for the recovery of the goods without the payment of freight, where the damage to the goods caused by the carrier equals or exceeds the freight. That case concerned an action between a bailor and his factor, to whom goods had been consigned. The factor claimed credit for the freight which he had paid to the carrier, and the owner of the goods sought to have this claim disallowed because the goods had been damaged by the carrier in transit, contending that the factor was negligent in paying the freight without first adjusting the damage, which was less than the freight; and the ruling of the court was to the point that the factor was not so negligent, and was entitled to a credit to the extent of the freight which he had paid to the carrier.

(137 Ga. 43)

VAN WINKLE v. HARRIS.
SAME v. PETTY.

(Supreme Court of Georgia. Oct. 12, 1911.)

(Syllabus by the Court.)

1. BROKERS (§ 94*)—AUTHORITY—SCOPE AND EXTENT.

Where an agent was "authorized and directed" by the owner of a described tract of land to "make sale" of it for $5,200, "one thousand [dollars] of which was to be paid in cash," the agent under such authority did not have the right to bind the owner by a written contract with the plaintiff wherein it was provided: "This agreement is made subject to right of purchaser to investigate titles to the property and to decline to perform if titles of the vendor be legally insufficient and she fails to perfect the same within a reasonable time. * * * Cash payment to be made when vendor complies with her obligation to make satisfactory showing as to title."

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Brokers, Dec. Dig. § 94.*]

2. BROKERS (§ 94*)—AUTHORITY—SCOPE AND EXTENT.

Where the owner of a tract of land employed an agent to find a purchaser for the land upon the "conditions that the purchase price would net" the owner $5,000, of which $1,000 "was to be paid cash and the balance to be paid at such time as would suit the purchaser, the time not to exceed five years, and the deferred payments to bear interest at seven per cent. (7%)" and directed the plaintiff to "close contract of sale upon the terms herein named," a written contract made by the agent, having in it the provisions quoted in the preceding note, was not one upon the terms upon which the agent was directed by the owner to close a contract with the purchaser.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Brokers, Dec. Dig. § 94.*]

Error from Superior Court, Fulton County; Geo. L. Bell, Judge.

Separate actions by J. L. Harris and by M. L. Petty against Mrs. Mary J. Van Winkle. Judgment for plaintiff in each case, and defendant brings error. Reversed.

In the first case stated, namely Van Winkle v. Harris, J. L. Harris (hereinafter called the plaintiff) brought suit against Mrs. Mary J. Van Winkle, plaintiff in error (hereinafter called the defendant), alleging that the defendant was the owner and in possession of a described tract of land or on before May 16, 1910. The second, third, and fourth paragraphs of the petition are as follows:

"(2) That some time prior to May 16, 1910, the said Mrs. Mary J. Van Winkle placed the above tract or parcel of land in the hands of one M. L. Petty, a real estate agent or broker, in the city of Atlanta, who is engaged in the business of selling property for people who may intrust their property to him for sale. And on or about May 16, 1910, the said M. L. Petty was authorized and directed by the defendant to make sale of said property to your petitioner at and for the sum of fifty-two hundred dollars ($5,200.00), one thousand of which was to be paid in cash, and the balance to be divided in three installments, of fourteen hundred dollars ($1,400.00) each, payable, respectively, 24, 42, and 60 months after date, with interest at 7 per cent.; the said defendant then and there authorizing and instructing the said Petty to give to your petitioner such terms on the deferred payments, not exceeding five years, as petitioner might desire.

"(3) That on May 16, 1910, your petitioner agreed with said M. L. Petty, as agent for the defendant, to purchase said property at and for the sum of five thousand two hundred dollars ($5,200.00), and entered into a written agreement with the said M. L. Petty for the purchase of said property on the day aforesaid, and paid to the said agent the sum of one hundred dollars ($100.00) earnest money to be applied as a credit on the cash payment to be made as provided in said contract. A copy of said contract is as follows:

"Georgia, Fulton County. Memorandum of agreement between J. L. Harris (as purchaser) and Mrs. Mary J. Van Winkle (as vendor) respecting sale of property described below: This agreement is made subject to right of purchaser to investigate titles to the property, and to decline to perform if titles of the vendor be legally insufficient and she fails to perfect the same within a reasonable time. Subject-matter of sale: House and lot in the city of Atlanta known as #150 Auburn Ave. Terms: Purchase price, $5,200. Cash payment, $1,000.00. Balance to be divided into three installments, payable after date fixed for each payment as follows: (1) $1,400 due 24 months after said date; (2) $1,400 due 42 months after said date; and (3) $1,400 due in 60 months, at 7% interest. Cash payment to be made when vendor complies with her obligation to make satisfactory showing as to title. Purchase-money notes for deferred payments to be given at same time, bearing interest from date at the rate of 7 per cent. per annum, falling due as indicated above, and payable at or before maturity. Special stipulations: I assent to the terms of the foregoing agreement. This 16th day of May, 1910. J. L. Harris (Purchaser). M. L. Petty, Agt. for (Vendor).

"Received from the purchaser, as earnest money, $100.00, the same to be applied as a credit on the cash payment above provided for. This 16th day of May, 1910. M. L. Petty, Agent for the Vendor."

"(4) Your petitioner shows that he contracted for the purchase of said property in good faith, and believed he was paying a fair and reasonable valuation for the same, and that said M. L. Petty, as an agent for the defendant, was authorized by the defendant to make sale of said property to your petitioner upon the terms and conditions named in the foregoing written contract, and that the said Petty acted in good faith in the sale of said property to your petitioner, and that said defendant was and is bound by the terms of said agreement to carry out the same with your petitioner."

The petition further alleged substantially as follows: Petty promised to procure from defendant the "title deeds" to the property and deliver them to the plaintiff, so that he could have the same examined and comply with the contract. On application by Petty to defendant, she refused to furnish the deeds for examination and "repudiated the contract, and stated that she had received a better offer for the property. And petitioner, after making repeated efforts to get title deeds to have the same examined and to get the defendant to carry out her contract, and failing in each of said efforts, finally had said titles examined without being furnished with the title deeds. Your petitioner shows that on July 12, 1910, your petitioner presented the defendant his three promissory notes, dated July 12, 1910, and due, respectively, on the 12th day of July, 1912, on the 12th day of January, 1914, and on the 12th day of July, 1915, for the sum of $1,400.00 each, payable to the order of said Mrs. Mary J. Van Winkle, signed by your petitioner, copies of said notes being hereto attached and marked Exhibits A, B, and C, and at the same time your petitioner tendered to said defendant the sum of one thousand dollars ($1,000.00), the same being a part in cash money, and the balance in checks, your petitioner offering to have the checks cashed and deliver to her the money if she preferred, and at the same time your petitioner presented to the defendant a bond for title, a copy of which is hereto attached marked 'D,' and requested the defendant to accept the money, checks, and notes in payment for said land and to execute the bond for title to your petitioner, it being usual and customary, in all cases where there is a partial payment for land and notes given for the balance, for the vendor to make to the vendee a bond for title, retaining the title to the land as security for the debt. Your petitioner further shows that the defendant, upon the tender of the money, notes, checks, and the bond for title to be signed by her, repudiated the contract of her said agent, stated that she had not authorized him to make sale of her land, that she had been offered more money for the land since the time said Petty claimed to have made the trade with petitioner, to wit, the sum of six thousand dollars ($6,000.00), and that she would not be bound by any contract made by the said Petty, as agent, with your petitioner. The petitioner's attorney then and there asked her if she desired petitioner to have the checks cashed and present her with the entire one thousand dollars ($1,000.00) in cash. The defendant said, 'No.' She would not accept the money, and would not sign the bond for title, and would not be bound by the contract made by Petty with your petitioner." Defendant has a good title to the property and is able to comply with the terms of the contract. "She is acting in bad faith, and that her only reason for not carrying out said contract is the fact that some one offered her more money for the property than the amount she had agreed to receive from your petitioner, before it was possible for your petitioner to have titles examined and the trade consummated."

Attached to the petition was a copy of the bond for title in the usual form and copies of the notes referred to. The notes were payable "on or before" the dates referred to in the petition. The plaintiff prayed that the defendant be required to specifically perform the contract; that she be decreed to execute the bond for titles, or such other bond for titles "as may be reasonable and just"; that she be required to receive the $1,000 and accept the notes tendered, or such other notes as may be proper in form and substance to carry out the contract; and that the title to the property be decreed to be in the plaintiff upon final payment of all the purchase money. The plaintiff amended the petition, "by adding the words 'by parol' after the word 'authorized' in paragraph 2, and the same words after the word 'directed' in the same paragraph." To the order of the court overruling the defendant's general demurrer to the petition, the defendant excepted.

The facts in the other case will be stated in the second division of the opinion.

L. R. Ray, for plaintiff in error. Simmons & Simmons, for defendants in error.

HOLDEN, J. (after stating the facts as above). [1] The defendant in error, J. L. Harris, filed a petition against the plaintiff in error, Mrs. M. J. Van Winkle, to require her to specifically perform a contract alleged to have been made by her through her agent, M. L. Petty. To the order of the court overruling the general demurrer to the petition, Mrs. Van Winkle excepted. The allegations in the second paragraph of the petition state that Petty was appointed the agent of Mrs. Van Winkle to sell the property, and set forth in detail the terms of the contract of sale he was authorized to make as her agent. The third paragraph, among other things, sets forth a copy of the contract made by Petty, as agent of Mrs. Van Winkle, with Harris, the purchaser of the property. The fourth paragraph alleges that "said M. L. Petty, as an agent for the defendant, was authorized by the defendant to make sale of said property to your petitioner upon the terms and conditions named in the foregoing written contract, and that the said Petty acted in good faith in the sale of said property to your petitioner." The allegations quoted should be construed as the conclusion of the pleader that, under the authority set forth in paragraph 2 of the petition, Petty was authorized to sell the property upon the terms and conditions set forth in the written contract. Whether perol authority given an agent to sell land of another is sufficient to authorize him to enter into a written contract binding on the latter need not be considered. If the parol authority given Petty by Mrs. Van Winkle was sufficient to authorize the former to make a written contract for the sale of the land binding on the latter, we do not think the petition sets forth a cause of action, and should have been dismissed on demurrer. Paragraph 2 of the petition sets forth the terms of the contract of sale Petty, as the agent of Mrs. Van Winkle, was authorized by the latter to make. It is therein alleged that she authorized Petty to make sale of the property for $5,200, "one thousand of which was to be paid in cash." The written contract made by Petty, as the agent of Mrs. Van Winkle, with Harris, provided: "This agreement is made subject to right of purchaser to investigate titles to the property and to decline to perform if titles of the vendor be legally insufficient and she fails to perfect the same within a reasonable time. * * * Cash payment to be made when vendor complies with her obligation to make satisfactory showing as to title." In the contract of sale Petty was authorized to make, $1,000 was to be paid by the purchaser cash, and not to be paid "when vendor complies with her obligation to make satisfactory showing as to title." Petty had no authority to impose on Mrs. Van Winkle any obligation to make any "showing" as to her title, and she gave him no authority to make the payment of the $1,000 conditioned upon her making "satisfactory showing as to title." Nor did she give him authority to make an agreement respecting the sale of the property "subject to right of purchaser to investigate titles to the property, and to decline to perform if the titles of the vendor be legally insufficient and she fails to perfect the same within a reasonable time." When Petty made the contract only $100 was paid, the balance of the $1,000 being tendered nearly two months thereafter. Petty had no authority to make a contract for the sale of the property unless $1,000 of the purchase money was paid cash, and he had no authority to make a contract providing for the payment of the whole, or a part of it, upon conditions, or at a future time without conditions. Larned v. Wentworth, 114 Ga. 208, 39 S. E. 855; Arnett v. Tuller, 134 Ga. 609, 68 S. E. 330; Emery v. Atlanta Exchange, 88 Ga. 321, 328, 14 S. E. 556; Corcoran v. White, 117 Ill. 118, 7 N. E. 525, 57 Am. St. Rep. 858; 9 Cyc. 267. The contract made with Harris by Petty as agent of Mrs. Van Winkle not being one Petty was authorized to make, the latter had a right to repudiate it and to refuse to comply with it. Moreover, under the authority given Petty, the deferred payments should have been payable 24, 42, and 60 months after date; whereas the notes provided for in the contract were to be payable "at or before maturity," and the notes tendered were payable "on or before" maturity, thereby giving the right to Harris to pay the note before maturity. If it be conceded that the parol authority of Petty authorized him to make a written contract for the sale of the land of Mrs. Van Winkle binding on her, the written contract he made was not binding on her, as it was not the one he was authorized by parol to make, and the court erred in overruling the general demurrer.

[2] 2. In the second case stated, namely, Van Winkle v. Petty, the latter (hereinafter called the plaintiff) brought suit against the former (hereinafter called the defendant), making substantially the following allegations: The defendant owned a described tract of land on May 16, 1910. At that time the plaintiff was a real estate broker engaged in the business of negotiating and effecting sales of real estate. "That on or before the 16th day of May, 1910, the defendant employed the plaintiff to find a purchaser for the above-described property upon the following conditions: That the purchase price would net the defendant $5,000.00, of which $1,000.00 was to be paid cash and the balance to be paid at such time as would suit the purchaser, the time not to exceed five years, and the deferred payments to bear interest at seven per cent. (7%), and directed the plaintiff to close contract of sale upon the terms herein named. That the plaintiff, in pursuance of the agreement above mentioned, procured a purchaser in the person of one J. L. Harris, who contracted to purchase the above-described property. A copy of this contract is attached to this petition and marked 'Exhibit A' and made a part thereof. That the said Harris was able and willing to purchase the said property, and that he made a legal tender of the $1,000.00 required to be paid cash, and presented the notes for the deferred payments and demanded a bond for title, and was in every way bona fide ready to carry out the contract. That the plaintiff was to be paid for his services in bringing the purchaser in touch with the defendant and negotiating said sale. That there was no stipulation between the parties as to what the commission of the plaintiff should be," but there is a universal custom of brokers, known to the defendant, to charge commissions on a specified basis, which in this case would amount to $180, which was a reasonable value of his services, and for which he prayed judgment. The plaintiff amended his petition by adding the word "orally" after the word "defendant," where it first appears in the quotation from the petition. He further amended the petition by attaching a copy of the notes referred to therein, which were tendered by Harris, and by adding that the $1,000 and the notes were tendered by Harris on July 12, 1910. The notes and contract referred to in the petition were in every respect like the copy of the contract set out in the petition in the case referred to in the preceding division of the opinion and the copies of the notes attached thereto. To the order of the court overruling her general demurrer to the petition Mrs. Van Winkle excepted.

According to the allegations of paragraph 4 of the petition, Petty was not only employed to find a purchaser for the property at a price which would net the owner $5,000, of which $1,000 was to be paid cash, but he was to "close contract of sale upon" certain terms, one of which was that $1,000 of the purchase money was to be paid cash. As hereinbefore demonstrated, the contract he made was one wherein the $1,000 was not to be paid cash, and it was not therefore such a contract as he was authorized and "directed" to make. The written contract had provisions Petty was not authorized to make, two of which are the provisions first copied in this opinion. Petty having violated his instructions and not having "closed contract of sale upon the terms" upon which he was authorized and "directed" to close one, he earned no commissions, and the court erred in not dismissing the petition on general demurrer thereto. This is true, though Harris, after the written contract between him and Petty was signed, offered the $1,000, as the duty of Petty, under his employment, was not simply to find a purchaser who would pay $1,000 cash, but also "to close contract of sale upon" certain terms, one of which was the payment of $1,000 cash, and no such contract was closed. But if it can be said that any "contract of sale" was closed by Petty, the contract closed by him was entirely different from one providing for the payment of $1,000 cash. The instructions to Petty evidently meant that he was not only to find a purchaser, but was to make a contract with the latter binding on him to pay the $1,000 cash. No contract with Harris was ever closed binding on him to pay $1,000 cash. The written contract was made May 16th, and the $1,000 was tendered July 12th. The petition should have been dismissed on general demurrer.

Judgment reversed in both cases. All the Justices concur, except BECK, J., absent.

(126 Ga. 869)

SOUTHERN PRINTING CO. v. POTTER.
(Supreme Court of Georgia. Sept. 26, 1911.)

(Syllabus by the Court.)

SALES (§ 483*)—CONDITIONAL SALES—ASSIGNMENT BY PURCHASER—EFFECT.

The assignee of a bond for title for the conveyance of certain personal property to the obligee when the latter has paid all the notes given for the purchase money as they might fall due upon the respective dates of their maturity, it being provided in the bond that the vendor should have the right to retake possession of the property upon default in payment of any one of the notes, could not maintain suit against the obligor, who had taken possession of the property upon default in payment of the notes by the obligee according to the terms of the contract of sale, to recover the amount of a loan to the obligee in the bond, although such assignee had taken the assignment of the bond to secure the payment of the loan, and the loan was made with the knowledge of the obligor for the purpose of enabling the payee to meet one of the partial payment notes at the time of its maturity.

(a) Conceding that the assignment of the bond for title would operate as a partial assignment of any amount which the vendor, who had retaken possession of the property under circumstances which rendered such retaking a rescission of the contract of sale, would owe to the vendee on account of payments made by the latter under the contract of sale after making proper deductions from the sum paid by the vendee for rent, etc., a partial assignment is enforceable only in equity in a suit to which the vendor and the assignor and the assignee are all parties.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Sales, Dec. Dig. § 483.*]

Error from Superior Court, Haralson County; Price Edwards, Judge.

Action by Mrs. D. L. Potter against the Southern Printing Company. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendant brings error. Reversed.

H. J. McBride, for plaintiff in error. M. J. Head, for defendant in error.

BECK, J. Mrs. D. L. Potter brought suit against the Southern Printing Company, alleging that the defendant is indebted to her in the sum of $350 by reason of the following facts: The Southern Printing Company sold to one Burd a newspaper plant and printing outfit, taking a cash payment and notes for the balance, and executing to Burd a bond for title to the property sold. In order to pay off one of the notes, Burd, "at the instance of said printing company," secured a loan of $350 from petitioner's husband, and paid the same over to the printing company. Her husband took a transfer of the bond for title conditioned to secure this loan, and the printing company "had full knowledge of said loan and transfer of said bond for title." It was stipulated in the bond that Burd should not encumber the property without the consent of the printing company. Upon Burd's default in paying one of the notes at maturity, the printing company sued out an action of bail trover against him, and, he failing to replevy the property, the printing company took charge of and sold the same, "thereby depriving petitioner of her security"; it being alleged that petitioner's husband, to whom the transfer of the bond for title had been made, has since died, and petitioner was his sole heir and legatee. The defendant demurred on various grounds, among them that the petition did not set forth a cause of action. To the overruling of this ground of demurrer the defendant excepted.

We do not perceive upon what ground the plaintiff's cause could find standing in a court of law. The defendant had not been guilty of the commission of any tort against the plaintiff. The mere assignment of the bond for title executed by the vendor of the property in controversy to the vendee could scarcely be held to create a lien in favor of the plaintiff against the maker of the bond. Even if the assignment of such a bond as this could ever have the effect of creating a lien in favor of the assignee of the bond, it could hardly do so in the present case, when the bond itself contained an express stipulation that the obligee therein should not create an incumbrance upon the property. The vendor of the property, in taking possession of the same, acted within his rights as stipulated in the bond. The property was taken by the vendor on May 3, 1909, and there had long been default, as appears from the allegations of the petition, in the payment of a part of the note due March 1, 1908.

Nor could the plaintiff maintain this action upon the ground that there was any implied contract on the part of the vendor to pay to her the indebtedness of the purchaser of the property involved in this controversy. It may be that the seizure of the property by the vendor amounted to a rescission by it of the contract of sale to Burd. And, conceding that this is true, then the printing company, the vendor, would be under obligation to repay to the vendee the money which the latter had paid to the printing company, or such portion thereof, if any, as might be due the vendee on a fair settlement between the vendor and the vendee, in which settlement account could be taken of the value of the hire or rent of the property, and any other matter proper in such an accounting. Wilson v. Burks, 71 Ga. 862; Dukes v. Baugh, 91 Ga. 33, 16 S. E. 219. But the implied contract to restore the status upon a rescission of a contract of sale was a contract affecting the rights of the vendor and the vendee, and not the assignee of the bond. Certainly the assignment of the bond to the plaintiff in the court below could not be treated as an assignment of the entire amount which would be due from the vendor to the vendee after the rescission of the contract of sale, if it should appear that the vendor, upon a settlement between him and his vendee, would be indebted to the latter in a larger sum than the amount of the loan from Potter, to secure which it is alleged the bond was assigned. If the transfer or assignment of the bond for title can be treated as having the effect of assigning only so much of the claim arising in favor of Burd, upon rescission of the contract of sale by the vendors, as would satisfy the obligation of Burd which is evidenced by the note executed to Potter, then Potter—or Mrs. Potter, who is the plaintiff, and who claims to stand in the place of her husband relatively to the note—would have the right only of an assignee of a portion of a debt and be entitled to the remedies only which could be enforced by the holder of a partial assignment. And while such an assignment is enforceable in equity, it must be enforced in an action to which the assignor is before the court, as well as the assignee and the debtor to the assignor. If the printing company could be proceeded against in a suit like that which is now before the court, and a recovery could be had against it of a part of the amount which it might be shown it owes to Burd, subsequently Burd, or some other assignee of Burd of another part of the indebtedness, might institute other proceedings. Under the law a debtor cannot be subjected to the annoyance of several suits growing out of a single obligation to pay. Conceding that the assignment of the bond for title referred to above operated as an assignment pro tanto of the amount which the printing company should be bound to pay Burd after having rescinded the contract of sale, the only remedy which the plaintiff in the court below had was by a suit in equity, to which Burd as well as the printing company should be made parties, so that the rights and conflicting claims of all can be settled in one suit. See Rivers v. Wright, 117 Ga. 81, 43 S. E. 499.

It follows, from what we have said above, that the general demurrer to the petition in this case should have been sustained, and the court erred in refusing to sustain it.

Judgment reversed. All the Justices concur.

(137 Ga. 51)

SHEARER v. SHEARER (two cases).

(Supreme Court of Georgia. Oct. 12, 1911.)

(Syllabus by the Court.)

1. ASSIGNMENTS (§ 30*)—BILLS AND NOTES (§ 310*)—VALIDITY—PARTIAL ASSIGNMENTS.

The petition, among others, made substantially the following allegations: Prior to August, 1910, the plaintiff had in hand for collection notes in which A. had an interest amounting to more than $90. On August 12, 1910, A. gave an order on the plaintiff to B., who brought suit at law against the plaintiff on the order, wherein the plaintiff was directed to pay to B. $90 of the amount collected, and wherein there was made to B. an assignment of the interest of A. in the notes to the extent of $90. After the order was given, and while plaintiff had in hand money collected on the notes, A. directed the plaintiff not to pay the order for reasons specified. Plaintiff prayed that A. and B. be required to interplead and for injunction. Held, a partial assignment of one's interest in a promissory note is not binding on the maker of the note, unless accepted by the latter, who may ignore such assignment and pay the assignor, where there is no suit in equity to which all persons interested are parties. 7 Cyc. 812; 4 Am. & Eng. Enc. of Law, 278 (a). Nor is a partial assignment of one's interest in a fund in the hands of another binding on the latter, unless accepted by him, who may deal with the assignor as if no such assignment had been made, in the absence of the institution of a suit of the character above indicated. 2 Am. & Eng. Enc. of Law, 1089; 3 Page on Contracts, § 1285; Rivers v. Wright, 117 Ga. 81, 43 S. E. 499; Southern Printing Co. v. Potter, 72 S. E. 427, decided September 26, 1911.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Assignments, Cent. Dig. §§ 55-60; Dec. Dig. § 30;* Bills and Notes, Dec. Dig. § 310.*]

2. ASSIGNMENTS (§ 126*)—RIGHTS OF PARTIES—ACTION TO ENFORCE.

The plaintiff had a complete defense to the suit pending against him, brought by the payee of the order on the plaintiff.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Assignments, Dec. Dig. § 126.*]

3. INJUNCTION (§ 26*)—INTERPLEADER (§ 12*)—RIGHT OF ACTION—EXISTENCE OF CONTROVERSY.

The above principles of law are well settled, and the allegations of the petition to require A. and B. to interplead did not entitle plaintiff in such petition to an injunction or an order for interpleader.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Injunction, Cent. Dig. §§ 24-61; Dec. Dig. § 26;* Interpleader, Dec. Dig. § 12.*]

Error from Superior Court, Fulton County; W. D. Ellis, Judge.

Action between Mrs. M. V. Shearer and F. H. Shearer. From the judgment, both parties bring error. Judgment on main bill of exceptions reversed, and judgment on cross bill of exceptions affirmed.

Thomas & King, for plaintiff in error. A. L. Richards and Etheridge & Etheridge, for defendant in error.

HOLDEN, J. Judgment on main bill of exceptions reversed. Judgment on cross bill of exceptions affirmed. All the Justices concur, except BECK, J., absent.

(9 Ga. App. 857)

PHILLIPS v. STATE. (No. 8,495.)

(Court of Appeals of Georgia. Oct. 23, 1911.)

(Syllabus by the Court.)

INTOXICATING LIQUORS (§ 236*)—CRIMINAL LAW (§ 1172*)—ILLEGAL POSSESSION—INSTRUCTIONS.

The evidence authorized the verdict of guilty. While the charge of the judge, to the effect that if the defendant rented a portion of the store to another person, and knew that whisky was being kept there, he would be guilty, is not abstractly a correct statement of the law, the undisputed testimony so incontrovertibly supports the inference of the defendant's guilt that the error is harmless.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Intoxicating Liquors, Cent. Dig. §§ 300-322; Dec. Dig. § 236;* Criminal Law, Cent. Dig. §§ 3154-3163; Dec. Dig. § 1172.*]

Error from Superior Court, Fulton County; Geo. L. Bell, Judge.

John W. Phillips was convicted of violating the prohibitory law, and brings error. Affirmed.

Phillips was convicted of a violation of the state prohibition law in keeping on hand at his place of business liquor. The evidence for the state shows that the police officers entered Phillips' store at 63 South Broad street one afternoon with a search warrant, and found in the rear of the store one full barrel and one half barrel of quart bottles of whisky, and also a portion of a barrel of pint bottles of whisky. There were also about two barrels of empty bottles of the same kind just outside the store, and on the window sill some empty whisky glasses and some spoons. The defense relied on was that the particular portion of the store in which the whisky was found had been sublet by Phillips to one J. H. Payne, who conducted a fish and oyster business therein. The portion thus sublet to Payne was a space about 12 by 14 feet in area, being from the rear of the store up to the fifth post. At this point there was a sign reading "Office J. H. Payne, Fish & Oyster Dealer." This sign was written on a piece of pasteboard from the top of a whisky barrel. The uncontradicted testimony is to the effect that the sole stock of merchandise carried by Payne consisted of the barrels containing whisky referred to above, there being no fish or oysters in the store. There was no partition. There is evidence of a sale of whisky by Payne at his house, but no evidence of a sale at the store by either Payne or Phillips. There was an entry on Phillips' cash book denominated as $10 rent from Payne. The judge charged the jury that if they believed from the evidence that the whisky was kept, with knowledge of Phillips, in the portion of the store rented to Payne, Phillips would be guilty.

Hewlett & Dennis and Malvern Hill, for plaintiff in error. H. M. Dorsey, Sol. Gen., and Lowry Arnold, Sol., for the State.

RUSSELL, J. We think that the evidence was sufficient to authorize the jury to convict, and the judge's charge referred to in the statement of facts was not prejudicial to the defendant, even though not correct as an abstract proposition of law. In view of the issues made by the evidence and the admissions of the defendant, we think that the renting of a portion of the store under the circumstances we have stated, and with knowledge that whisky was being kept there, would make Phillips particeps criminis. The landlord must hide his knowledge behind something more substantial than a sign made from a piece of pasteboard taken from the top of a whisky barrel, advertising the sale of fish and oysters consisting of quart and pint bottles of whisky. A landlord cannot, under the circumstances shown in this case, say that he did not aid and abet the crime which he knew was being committed by his tenant under his very nose.

Judgment affirmed.

*For other cases see same topic and section NUMBER in Dec. Dig. & Am. Dig. Key No. Series & Rep'r indexes

POWELL, J. (specially concurring). My Associates vote for an affirmance on the ground that, while there was error, it was harmless. I vote for the same judgment on the ground that there was no error. The question is as to how far the proprietor of a place of business absolves himself from responsibility as to the keeping of intoxicating liquors in the room where the business is carried on by letting a definite portion of the space to another. We all agree that if the leasing of the space was a mere subterfuge, or was consummated with knowledge that the space would be used for the keeping of liquors, the lessor and the lessee would both be guilty of violating the law. I go further. In my opinion, if one having possession and control of a room, and occupying it as his place of business, lets space therein to another (no matter how free from any subterfuge or illegal intention the letting of the space may be at the time it is made), and thereafter the lessee of the space puts liquor therein, and the proprietor of the business knows of it and allows it, he is guilty of violating the statute. My Associates think that, if the lease of the space is made in good faith, the landlord who operates the business so far loses control of the space as to exempt him from criminal responsibility for such uses as the lessee may make of it.

Penal Code 1910, § 426 (the general prohibition law), among other things, makes it unlawful for any and all persons to "keep on hand at their place of business" any intoxicating liquors. This has been given a settled construction to the effect that the proprietor of the business must not only personally refrain from keeping liquors in the place of business, but he must not knowingly allow others to keep them there. We all agree to this as a general proposition. Now put this case: A. has a room in which he conducts a business. His goods and wares do not fill the whole room. In the rear is a space, say 20 by 25 feet in size. He stores liquors back there. We all agree that he violates the law. Now, say that, instead of personally storing the liquors in this unused space, he permits a friend to store them there, without actually leasing to him the space. We all agree that he violates the law. Again, say that, instead of permitting this friend to put the liquors there, he leases the space to this friend, and the latter uses his leased space to store liquors. We find all the physical conditions the same as in the previously stated propositions (the one room with a business conducted therein, and with the space in it, so far as not used for that business, used for the storage of liquors—manifestly one of those physical situations which the statute was designed to prevent), and yet my Associates seem to hold that unless these conditions come about through a lease made as a sham, or made for the purpose of allowing this condition to come about, no law is violated. The lease, a mere private contract between the parties, has converted a physical situation normally abhorrent to a public criminal statute into one of innocence. The lessee (the storer of the liquors) cannot be indicted, for the mere storing of liquors is not a business, and his keeping is not a keeping on hand at his place of business. The lessor cannot be indicted, because by leasing the space he has lost control over it, and hence is not responsible for the keeping of the liquors at his place of business. Now, I do not believe that it is this easy to avoid a criminal statute. In my opinion he is just as guilty in the last case as in the first, if he knowingly permits the lessee of the space to keep intoxicating liquors in it. The position of my Associates is, in effect, that the making of the lease affects the situation and changes the operation of the law. My position is that the situation affects the lease, and the law changes its operation.

I realize that the owner of the business must have the power to prevent the keeping of the liquors in the leased space, before he can rightfully be held criminally accountable for their being kept there. If the leasing of the space gives to the lessee such exclusive control over it that, if the lessor should enter upon it and put the liquors out, he would be guilty of a trespass, either civil or criminal, then the law will not hold the owner of the business (the lessor) criminally responsible because the lessee, thus holding the exclusive control, keeps the liquors there. But does the making of the lease give the lessee any such exclusive control as to bring about any such result? Can a lease be made which will have this effect? I say, No. The law will not let the owner of a room in which he himself conducts a business make such a contract as to space in that room as that the lessee of the space may use it in such a way as to bring about a condition which is directly repugnant to the legislative object and policy, as expressed in a public statute. Even if the minds of the parties are free from any thought or contemplation of such a condition at the time the contract is made, so that the contract as made is silent on this subject, the mind of the law, so to speak, is still upon it, and writes into the contract an implied exception; the exception being that this space in this room which is used as a place of business must not be used for the keeping of liquors or for the bringing about of any other situation repugnant to the policy of the law. So that when space in a business room is thus let out the conditions are these: If the parties expressly contract that it may be used for the storage of liquors, the contract is void, and the proprietor of the premises is guilty of violating the law (the proposition as to which we are all agreed). If the parties expressly contract that it shall not be used for the storage of liquors, and the lessee nevertheless so uses it, the lessor, as a matter of course, may remove the liquors without any trespass; and if they are, under these circumstances, kept there with the lessor's knowledge, they are kept there by his acquiescence and implied consent. Hence he violates the law. If the contract is silent on the subject, the law writes in the exception against the keeping of the liquors in the room where the business is conducted, and the lessor would be equally exempt from an imputation of trespass in removing the liquors, and consequently equally guilty of violating the law if he acquiesces in their remaining there.

There is nothing novel in the proposition that the law will not permit the proprietor of a business so to let out space in his room as that he cannot still exercise such general control over the premises as is necessary to the full observance of all police regulations that attend upon the conduct of that business. For example, under the statute against keeping open a tippling house on the Sabbath, if the proprietor of a barroom should let space in his room to a druggist (who could lawfully open up and sell on Sunday), he could not, when the doors were found open on the Sabbath, excuse himself from liability by saying that they were opened in order to allow the druggist access. It is common to speak of the transaction by which the owner of a room, in which he conducts a business, contracts to allow another to occupy space therein for some purpose as a lease, or as a contract of tenancy. For many purposes it is so, but not for all purposes. It is merely a concession in the nature of a tenancy, and is subject to limitations and implications which do not attend an ordinary tenancy. Such arrangements are not so common in this state as they are in some other parts of the country, where the courts have been more often called upon to define the status of the parties. See Underhill on Landlord and Tenant, §§ 193, 198. The concessioner takes space in a room or building already devoted to business purposes, and from this circumstance the law readily implies limitations upon his occupancy, not to be implied in cases of ordinary tenancy. I think that my Associates fail to see the importance of distinguishing between the case of one who lets out an entire room or building, and one who lets out a mere concession of space in a room already devoted to a business. One who lets out a building or room with knowledge, that it is to be used for the purpose of violating the law does, as my Associates hold, become an accomplice of him who uses it for his unlawful practices; and in such cases knowledge (or such connivance as to be an equivalent of knowledge) is an ingredient of the landlord's offense.

This rule has often been applied to statutes against maintaining places for the sale of intoxicating liquors, in other states as well as our own. See, for example, Commonwealth v. Hayes, 167 Mass. 176, 45 N. E. 82; also Commonwealth v. Churchill, 136 Mass. 148 (noticing in this case, however, that the conclusion reached as to the manner in which the proprietor of the building should be indicted does not hold in this state, when all standing in any accessorial relation to a statutory misdemeanor may be indicted as principals). See, also, State v. Denton, 154 N. C. 641, 70 S. E. 839, holding that where the defendant knowingly permitted another to sell liquor in his (the defendant's) house, even though on only a single occasion, the defendant could be convicted as if he himself had sold the liquor, because one who permits liquor to be sold in his house, having the power to prevent it if he would, is an aider and abettor of the seller. But these cases, sound as they are, do not, in my judgment, state the full rule as applied to cases such as the one now before us. In my opinion, no lease or concession of space in a room used as a place of business can be made in such a way as that the concessioner can keep liquors in the space granted, with the knowledge of the proprietor, without rendering the latter subject to the penalties of the law which forbids a person from keeping liquors on hand at his place of business

(9 Ga. App. 857)

PHILLIPS v. CITY OF ATLANTA.

(No. 3,494.)

(Court of Appeals of Georgia. Oct. 23, 1911.)

(Syllabus by the Court.)

ILLEGALLY KEEPING WHISKY.

The evidence was sufficient to authorize the inference that the whisky was kept for the purpose of illegal sale.

Error from Superior Court, Fulton County; J. T. Pendleton, Judge.

John W. Phillips was convicted of keeping whisky for illegal purposes, and brings error. Affirmed.

Hewlett & Dennis and Malvern Hill, for plaintiff in error. J. L. Mayson and W. D. Ellis, Jr., for defendant in error.

PER CURIAM. Judgment affirmed.

(9 Ga. App. 878)

DUNCAN v. STATE. (No. 3,652.)

(Court of Appeals of Georgia. Oct. 23, 1911.)

(Syllabus by the Court.)

1. CRIMINAL LAW (§§ 763, 764*)—INSTRUCTIONS—INVASION OF PROVINCE OF JURY.

On the trial of an indictment for assault with intent to murder, the judge, referring to the statutory offense of shooting at another, used the following language: "If you find such a verdict, the form of that verdict should be, 'We, the jury, find the defendant guilty of the offense of shooting at another not in his own defense,' or under other circumstances of justification according to the principles of the Code. If you find him guilty of that offense, and desire to return such a verdict, and are at a loss to recall the language which the court has given you which is proper to clothe the verdict with, you may, instead of a portion of that language, use the words, 'We, the jury, find the defendant guilty of unlawfully shooting at another, or of shooting at another unlawfully,' and that would be a verdict which would stand in law." The last paragraph of this charge is objected to on the ground that it was an intimation by the court that sufficient evidence had been produced to warrant a verdict for the offense of shooting at another. Held, that the excerpt is not justly subject to the objection urged against it.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Criminal Law, Cent. Dig. §§ 1731-1743; Dec. Dig. §§ 763, 764.*]

2. CRIMINAL LAW (§ 939*)—NEW TRIAL—NEWLY DISCOVERED EVIDENCE.

There was no abuse of discretion in refusing to grant a new trial on the ground of alleged newly discovered evidence, since the affidavit of the witness relied upon to give such evidence clearly shows that it was not in fact newly discovered, but could have been procured on the first trial by the exercise of ordinary diligence. Besides, it was merely cumulative.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Criminal Law, Cent. Dig. §§ 2318-2323; Dec. Dig. § 939.*]

3. SUFFICIENCY OF EVIDENCE—NO ERROR.

No error of law appears, and the evidence supports the verdict.

Error from Superior Court, Madison County; D. D. Meadow, Judge.

Asa Duncan was convicted of crime, and he brings error. Affirmed.

Adams & Brown and J. E. Gordon, for plaintiff in error. Thos. J. Brown, Sol. Gen., for the State.

HILL, C. J. Judgment affirmed.

(9 Ga. App. 876)

GREENWOOD v. STATE (No. 3,665.)

(Court of Appeals of Georgia. Oct. 23, 1911.)

(Syllabus by the Court.)

1. ASSAULT AND BATTERY (§ 57*)—CRIMINAL PROSECUTION—INSTRUCTION.

It is not error for the court to instruct the jury, as to the statutory offense of shooting at another, not in self-defense or under other circumstances of justification, that the state need not show either malice or an intent to kill.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Assault and Battery, Dec. Dig. § 57.*]

2. CRIMINAL LAW (§ 822*)—TRIAL—INSTRUCTION—CONSTRUCTION AS A WHOLE.

The other charge complained of was not erroneous.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Criminal Law, Cent. Dig. §§ 1990, 1991, 1994, 1995; Dec. Dig. § 822.*]

Error from Superior Court, Chatham County; W. G. Charlton, Judge.

Albert Greenwood was convicted of the statutory offense of shooting at another, and brings error. Affirmed.

Robt. L. Colding, for plaintiff in error. Anton P. Wright and Walter C. Hartridge, Sol. Gen., for the State.

POWELL, J. [1] 1. The instruction dealt with in the first paragraph of the syllabus is as follows: "In considering the offense of shooting at another, it is not necessary to show either malice or the specific intent to kill. It would make no difference, if the defendant shot at the prosecutor, not in his own defense or under circumstances of justification, according to the principles of the Code, with what intent he shot him—whether to kill him or not; and it would make no difference whether he had malice or not."

[2] 2. The other assignments of error complained of are excerpts from the following instruction, which, however, should be considered as a whole for a proper understanding of it: "If the assault made upon him, if you find one was made, did not amount to a felony, but was an assault less than a felony, such as an assault and battery, then he would not have the right to shoot at another, either as a defense for the offense of assault with intent to murder, if you find that element is in it, or as a defense for the offense of shooting at another not in his own defense. If an assault was made upon him, although it was a bare assault, and did not amount to a felony, it would reduce the offense, if one has been committed by the defendant, from assault with intent to murder to shooting at another; but it would not justify him in using a deadly weapon—shooting a pistol. * * * If you find that he shot after an assault had been made upon him, and that assault amounted to a felony, then he would have the right to shoot, and he would be guilty of nothing. If you find that the assault made upon him was less than a felony—assault and battery—then that would reduce the offense, if he is otherwise guilty of one, from assault with intent to murder to shooting at another; but it would not justify shooting at another if it was a bare assault. If you find, however, that the assault made upon him amounted to a felony, or that the surroundings were such as to create apprehension in his mind, as a reasonably courageous man, and not of a coward, that his life was in danger, or that a felony was about to be committed upon him, then he would not be guilty either of assault with intent to murder or of shooting at another not in his own defense."

Judgment affirmed.

*For other cases see same topic and section NUMBER in Dec. Dig. & Am. Dig. Key No. Series & Rep'r Indexes

(9 Ga. App. 574)

LOVE v. STATE (No. 3,661.)

(Court of Appeals of Georgia. Oct. 23, 1911.)

(Syllabus by the Court.)

1. SUFFICIENCY OF EVIDENCE.

The evidence is sufficient to authorize the verdict.

2. CRIMINAL LAW (§ 824*)—TRIAL—INSTRUCTIONS—CIRCUMSTANTIAL EVIDENCE.

The conviction does not rest so exclusively on circumstantial evidence as to have required the judge, in the absence of request, to charge the jury the rule that, "to warrant a conviction on circumstantial evidence, the proven facts must not only be consistent with the hypothesis of guilt, but must exclude every other reasonable hypothesis save that of the guilt of the accused."

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Criminal Law, Cent. Dig. § 1999; Dec. Dig. § 824.*]

Error from City Court of Miller County; C. C. Bush, Judge.

John Love was convicted of larceny, and brings error. Affirmed.

W. I. Geer, for plaintiff in error. P. D. Rich, Sol., for the State.

POWELL, J. [2] As to the point dealt with in the second paragraph of the syllabus: The charge against the accused is simple larceny. The prosecutor, a physician, laid his watch down on the bed of a patient whom the accused was nursing, and the accused saw it. The prosecutor swore he left the watch there. The accused said that he found the watch lying near a woodpile near where the prosecutor's automobile was standing, and found it soon after the prosecutor left. The accused took the watch and traded it off. That the watch of the prosecutor was lost from his possession, that the accused found it and took it and appropriated it to his own use, knowing that it was somebody else's property, and probably knowing that it was the prosecutor's, are salient facts proved by direct and uncontroverted testimony. The only feature of the case left to inference was whether there was an intent to steal. Intent, in practically all cases, must be shown by the inference arising from the facts shown. We do not think that, from a practical standpoint, it is correct to say that it is "a conviction on circumstantial evidence," where all the salient facts of the case (including the facts on which the inference itself rests) are directly proved, and only the intent with which proved acts were committed is a matter of inference. If so, it would be proper to speak of a conviction for homicide as being "a conviction on circumstantial evidence," where eyewitnesses see the killing, but the jury must infer the malice or heat of passion, as the case may be, from circumstances surrounding the transaction.

Judgment affirmed.

(9 Ga. App. 565)

BERRY v. STATE. (No. 3,628.)

(Court of Appeals of Georgia. Oct. 23, 1911.)

(Syllabus by the Court.)

1. CRIMINAL LAW (§ 868*)—EVIDENCE—RES GESTÆ.

The fact that the declarant is a girl of tender years may be taken into consideration in determining whether, under the res gestæ rule, her declarations are so free from the suspicion of device or afterthought as to be admissible in evidence.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Criminal Law, Cent. Dig. § 806; Dec. Dig. § 368.*]

2. WITNESSES (§ 45*)—COMPETENCY—AGE.

The competency of the witness whose testimony was objected to was sufficiently evident. The evidence amply warranted the verdict, and none of the grounds of the motion for a new trial present any reason authorizing a reversal of the judgment.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Witnesses, Cent. Dig. §§ 105, 106; Dec. Dig. § 45.*]

Error from Superior Court, Madison County; D. W. Meadow, Judge.

Henry Berry was convicted of involuntary manslaughter in the commission of an unlawful act, and brings error. Affirmed.

Berry was convicted of involuntary manslaughter in the commission of an unlawful act. He admitted that he shot and killed the deceased, Velma Eberhart, a child not quite 3 years old, but contended it was an accident. The only eyewitness to the shooting was Lillian Lee, a girl 12 years old, who testified for the state. According to her testimony the defendant came into the room where she and the deceased and another baby were. The deceased was standing by the fireplace. The defendant said to her, "Come here, Vel." The child replied, "I am not going to do it." The defendant had a breech-loading gun in his hand, which he had just gotten from behind the bed, and was standing in the doorway. When the child refused to come to him, he placed a shell in the gun, said, "Old lady is going to lay her body cold," took deliberate aim, and emptied the entire load of shot in the child's head. In his statement the defendant claimed that he did not know the gun was loaded; that after he picked up the gun, and while he was looking at it, the hammer slipped out of his hand, and the child was accidentally killed.

John E. Gordon and J. F. L. Bond, for plaintiff in error. Thos. J. Brown, Sol. Gen., for the State.

RUSSELL, J. [1] 1. At the time of the fatality, the deceased child's grandfather was on the front porch, and on hearing the gunshot ran into the house. He was allowed, over objection of the defendant's counsel, to relate the entire conversation, both as to what was said by the defendant and what was said by Lillian Lee, the only other eyewitness. It is contended that the sayings of Lillian Lee were inadmissible, because hearsay. We think the conversation was admissible as a part of the res gestæ. Declarations of third persons or bystanders, when so connected with the main fact as to be free from the suspicion of device or afterthought, are admitted under this rule. The age of the declarant is a circumstance entitled to some consideration in determining whether sufficient time has elapsed for the return of deliberate reason, so as to change the nature of the declarations from verbal acts, to inadmissible hearsay. When the grandfather ran into the room he asked Lillian Lee what was the matter. She replied, "Henry Berry has shot Velma." She then detailed the tragedy to her grandfather identically as she did on the witness stand the day of the trial. That Berry did shoot Velma is undisputed. The only dispute is as to the manner in which the shooting took place. A child so young, in the presence of such a tragedy, with the excitement which such an occurrence would naturally produce on her mind, could not do any after-thinking in such a brief period of time. Her declarations were spontaneous and almost involuntary acts, just as much so as would be an exclamation of pain if her hand had come in contact with a red-hot iron. This being so, the fundamental requirement of the res gestæ rule was complied with. Mitchum v. State, 11 Ga. 615; Flanagan v. State, 64 Ga. 52.

[2] 2. The competency of the witness Lillian Lee was challenged by the defendant on the ground that she did not have sufficient intelligence to appreciate the sanctity of an oath and did not know right from wrong. It appears that she was 12 years old. She testified that she knew right from wrong, that she knew she ought to do right, and that it was wrong to tell a lie and right to tell the truth. On being asked where she would go after death if she failed to do right, she said she did not know; and stress is laid on this. We are fully convinced that the answer of the child does not make her incompetent as a witness. She could hardly be expected to give a categorical answer to a question which has been from time immemorial, and which still is, puzzling some of the wisest men of all times. Children sometimes display great wisdom both in answering and in asking questions. The writer of this opinion recently read of one of the greatest preachers of the present age relating a conversation which was alleged to have taken place between him and a little girl of the same age as this witness. The child said to him, "Does God want everybody to do right?" and on receiving an affirmative reply from the preacher she continued, "Does the devil want everybody to do wrong?" To this question also the preacher replied in the affirmative. The child then said, "Can God do anything he wants to do?" The preacher was a firm believer in the omnipotence of the Almighty, and was therefore forced to answer again in the affirmative. Whereupon the child continued the catechism by asking, "Then why doesn't God destroy the devil?" The preacher answered the question somewhat evasively by telling the child to "run along now and play." There are some things which must be accepted on faith, and about which all of us do not yet know. The witness was not asked as to her belief, but as to her knowledge. But, however that may be, we are of the opinion that she showed sufficient intelligence, and sufficient appreciation of the sanctity of an oath, and of the difference between right and wrong, to permit her testimony to go before the jury.

The tragedy was without excuse, and the defendant is not legally blameless. The trial was free from error, and the judgment of the lower court is affirmed.

(9 Ga. App. 845)

WALL v. SCHWARZ. (No. 3,171.)

(Court of Appeals of Georgia. Oct. 23, 1911.)

(Syllabus by the Court.)

1. PLEADING (§ 237*)—AMENDMENT.

As the amendment simply amplified the allegations of the original petition, it should have been allowed.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Pleading, Cent. Dig. §§ 603-619; Dec. Dig. § 237.*]

2. SALES (§ 359*)—ACTION FOR PRICE—NONSUIT.

The evidence introduced by the plaintiff substantially supporting the allegations of the petition and showing prima facie a right to recover, a nonsuit was improperly awarded.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Sales, Dec. Dig. § 359.*]

(Additional Syllabus by Editorial Staff.)

3. WORDS AND PHRASES—"LAGNIAPPE."

"Lagniappe" is defined to be a trifling present given to customers by tradesmen; a gratuity.

Error from Superior Court, Chatham County; W. G. Charlton, Judge.

Action by A. M. Wall against John Schwarz. Judgment for plaintiff before a justice was reversed on appeal by the superior court, and plaintiff brings error. Reversed.

Wall sued Schwarz in a justice's court for $100. The petition, in substance, alleged that in May, 1908, he sold to the defendant a mare named "Alcyon" for $200 in cash; that, as a further consideration, Schwarz agreed to raise two colts from the mare, and to deliver to petitioner the second colt when it reached the age of six months, and that upon this agreement plaintiff accepted the $200 in cash and delivered the mare to the defendant; that sufficient time had elapsed for the defendant to perform his agreement in reference to the colt, but that he failed to do so, and absolutely refused to keep and perform this agreement; that it was understood at the time of the trade that the colt would be of the value of $100 when six months old, and the suit was brought to recover this amount. Judgment was rendered for the plaintiff for the full amount, and the case was appealed to the superior court.

On the trial in the superior court the plaintiff proved, in support of his allegations, that Schwarz, the defendant, desired to buy from him the mare in question, and that he asked Schwarz $300 for her; that, after some negotiations between the two, it was expressly understood and agreed that the plaintiff would sell the mare for $200 cash, and, as a further part of the agreement and of the consideration for the sale of the mare, the defendant agreed that he would breed the mare, and would give its second colt, when six months old, to the plaintiff, keeping the first colt for himself. The plaintiff asked for a written agreement to this effect. The defendant said that his word was as good as his bond, and he would do what he said. The plaintiff said, "All right," that the defendant could take the mare for $200 and deliver to him the second colt when it was six months old. The mare was delivered to Schwarz, and subsequently a colt was bred from her. The plaintiff proved that after waiting for a sufficient time to elapse in which to give ample opportunity for the second colt to be bred from the mare, and notwithstanding the fact that the mare was in condition for breeding a second colt, and that he demanded of the defendant that he comply with his contract and have the colt bred and delivered to him when six months old, the defendant declined to breed the mare further. The plaintiff proved also that a colt bred from the mare in question at six months old would be worth at least $100. The evidence further showed that the name of the mare was not "Alcyon," but "Ajulai," and was known as "Dr. Duke's mare." There was no question in the evidence, however, as to the identity of the mare sold to the defendant, whatever may have been her name. The plaintiff offered an amendment to the petition, alleging that the mare which he had sold to defendant was a sorrel mare known as "Dr. Duke's mare," and was well known to the defendant; and the refusal to allow the amendment is assigned as error. At the conclusion of the plaintiff's evidence the court sustained a motion to nonsuit, and this judgment is brought here for review.

The motion to nonsuit was based upon the following grounds: First, that the plaintiff had sold a mare named "Alcyon," and it now developed that the mare was named "Ajulai," and that "Alcyon" was the mother of the mare sold. Second, that the promise on the part of Schwarz to give Wall the second colt was a nudum pactum and without consideration, and was no part of the agreement to purchase the mare. Third, that the burden was upon the plaintiff to prove his damages, and that there was no proof of the value of the colt at six months old. The court sustained the motion to nonsuit on the ground that there was a material variance as to the name of the mare in the petition and the proof; that the colt was not included in the agreement of purchase, but was "something thrown in for good measure; that in New Orleans would be called 'lagniappe,'" and that there was no proof of damages.

Oliver & Oliver, for plaintiff in error.
O'Byrne, Hartridge & Wright, for defendant in error.

HILL, C. J. (after stating the facts as above). [1] 1. The proposed amendment should have been allowed. It was simply an amplification of the allegations contained in the original petition, to meet an apparent variance. We can see no reason why the plaintiff should not have been permitted to explain it by giving a full description of the animal. Murphy v. Peabody, 63 Ga. 522.

[2] 2. The promise to give a colt to the plaintiff bred by the mare when it was six months old, according to the undisputed evidence, was distinctly a part of the consideration for the sale. The plaintiff refused to sell for $200 until the agreement to give the colt was expressly made by the defendant. We think that this agreement was not nudum pactum, but was based upon a valuable and valid consideration. No attack is made upon the agreement on the ground that it is indefinite, unreasonable, or impossible of performance; on the contrary, the proof shows that the promise was made a part of the agreement, and there was no contention that the defendant, for any reason, could not have performed this agreement.

[3] We cannot agree with the learned judge that the colt, which the evidence shows would have been worth $100 when six months old, was not included in the agreement of purchase, but was simply "something thrown in for good measure, that in New Orleans would be called 'lagniappe.'" "Lagniappe" is defined to be "a trifling present given to customers by tradesmen; a gratuity." Whatever it may be called in New Orleans, the agreement in this case called it "a colt," and the proof shows that the colt could have been bred from the mare, and would have been worth, when six months old, at least $100.

The evidence introduced by the plaintiff substantially proved the allegations of the petition and made out a prima facie right to recover. The judgment awarding a nonsuit was therefore error.

Judgment reversed.

(9 Ga. App. 855)

STRICKLAND v. STATE. (No. 3,310.)
(Court of Appeals of Georgia. Oct. 23, 1911.)*(Syllabus by the Court.)WEAPONS (§ 3*)—CARRYING WEAPONS—CONSTITUTIONAL LAW.

The only question raised by the record in this case was whether the act of the General Assembly approved August 12, 1910 (Pub. Acts 1910, p. 134), regulating the right to bear firearms in this state, was in violation of article 1, § 1, par. 22, of the Constitution of this state, and this question having been certified to the Supreme Court for instruction, and that court having sustained the constitutionality of the act in question, the judgment of the trial court is affirmed.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Weapons, Dec. Dig. § 3.*]

Error from City Court of Carrollton; Jas. Beall, Judge.

J. L. Strickland was convicted of carrying concealed weapons, and brings error. Case certified to the Supreme Court. On opinion of the Supreme Court (72 S. E. 260), judgment affirmed.

R. W. Adamson, for plaintiff in error. C. E. Roop, Sol., for the State.

HILL, C. J. Judgment affirmed.

(9 Ga. App. 877)

COOPER v. STATE. (No. 3,688.)
(Court of Appeals of Georgia. Oct. 23, 1911.)*(Syllabus by the Court.)INDICTMENT AND INFORMATION (§ 72*)—ALTERNATIVE ALLEGATIONS—SUFFICIENCY.

An accusation which charges, in the alternative, that on a certain day the accused "did play and bet for money, or other thing of value, at a game played with cards," is bad, and should have been quashed on special demurrer. Haley v. State, 124 Ga. 216, 52 S. E. 159.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Indictment and Information, Cent. Dig. §§ 195-199; Dec. Dig. § 72.* Gaming, Cent. Dig. § 224.]

Error from City Court of Ocilla; H. E. Oxford, Judge.

Smith Cooper was convicted of gaming, and brings error. Reversed.

Newbern & Meeks, for plaintiff in error. H. J. Quincey, Sol., for the State.

HILL, C. J. Judgment reversed.

(9 Ga. App. 879)

CAIN v. STATE. (No. 3,731.)
(Court of Appeals of Georgia. Oct. 23, 1911.)*(Syllabus by the Court.)SUFFICIENCY OF EVIDENCE.

The assignments of error of law are manifestly without merit, and the evidence strongly supports the verdict.

Error from City Court of Cordele; E. F. Strozler, Judge.

John Cain was convicted of crime, and brings error. Affirmed.

J. T. Hill and J. W. Dennard, for plaintiff in error. M. M. Eakes and W. F. George, Sol. Gen., for the State.

HILL, C. J. Judgment affirmed.

(9 Ga. App. 879)

JONES v. STATE. (No. 3,712.)
(Court of Appeals of Georgia. Oct. 23, 1911.)*(Syllabus by the Court.)CRIMINAL LAW (§ 1159*)—APPEAL—SUFFICIENCY OF EVIDENCE.

The only ground in the motion for a new trial insisted on before this court relates to the sufficiency of the evidence; and, there being some evidence to support the verdict, it must stand.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Criminal Law, Cent. Dig. §§ 3074-3083; Dec. Dig. § 1159.*]

Error from Superior Court, Campbell County; L. S. Roan, Judge.

Jesse Jones was convicted of crime, and brings error. Affirmed.

Lester C. Dickson, for plaintiff in error. C. S. Reid, Sol. Gen., for the State.

HILL, C. J. Judgment affirmed.

(9 Ga. App. 848)

WEATHERLY LUMBER CO. v. ROBSON & EVANS. (No. 3,175.)
(Court of Appeals of Georgia. Oct. 23, 1911.)*(Syllabus by the Court.)APPEAL AND ERROR (§ 78*)—APPEALABLE ORDER.

An order overruling demurrer to the defendants' pleas is no such final, or conditionally final, judgment as will support a writ of error. Hodges v. Case Threshing Machine Co., 9 Ga. App. —, 72 S. E. 189; American Agricultural Chemical Co. v. Shy, 9 Ga. App. —, 71 S. E. 876, and citations.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Appeal and Error, Cent. Dig. § 467; Dec. Dig. § 78.*]

Error from Superior Court, Baldwin County; J. B. Park, Judge.

Action between the Weatherly Lumber Company and Robson & Evans. From the judgment, the Lumber Company brings error. Dismissed.

Allen & Pottle, for plaintiff in error. Hines & Vinson, for defendants in error.

RUSSELL, J. Writ of error dismissed.

(9 Ga. App. 873)

LITTLE v. CITY OF JEFFERSON. (No. 3,708.)
(Court of Appeals of Georgia. Oct. 23, 1911.)*(Syllabus by the Court.)1. JUSTICES OF THE PEACE (§ 208*)—REVIEW OF DECISIONS—CERTIORARI.

Though one of the assignments of error in a petition for certiorari may be that the verdict or judgment complained of is contrary to the evidence and without evidence to support it, it is not (so far as this ground is concerned) the duty of the judge of the superior court to sanction it, if there is a legal adequacy of testimony to support the verdict or judgment, and the weight of the testimony is not so strongly against the correctness of the finding as that, if on final hearing the answer supported the petition, the judge would feel that the interests of justice required a new trial. The judge of the superior court, on certiorari, should at the final hearing grant a new trial if he is satisfied that the finding complained of is wrong, because contrary to the weight of the credible testimony in the case; but where, on the case as made by the petition, he sees that the finding is so well supported by evidence that he would not set it aside, even if the answer verified the case as made by the petition, it is proper for him to refuse to sanction the petition.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Justices of the Peace, Cent. Dig. § 816; Dec. Dig. § 208.*]

2. APPEAL AND ERROR (§ 671*)—RECORD—QUESTIONS PRESENTED FOR REVIEW.

Attacks upon a municipal ordinance cannot be considered, when a copy of the ordinance does not appear in the record.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Appeal and Error, Cent. Dig. § 2871; Dec. Dig. § 671.*]

3. APPEAL AND ERROR (§ 724*)—ASSIGNMENTS OF ERROR—SUFFICIENCY.

Complaint in general terms that illegal rulings were made, without setting out the nature of the rulings, constitutes no sufficient assignment of error.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Appeal and Error, Cent. Dig. §§ 2997-3001; Dec. Dig. § 724.*]

Error from Superior Court, Jackson County; D. W. Meadow, Judge.

Action between Jim Little and the City of Jefferson. From the judgment, Little brings error. Affirmed.

Ray & Ray, for plaintiff in error. C. L. Bryson, for defendant in error.

POWELL, J. Judgment affirmed.

(9 Ga. App. 856)

LAVENDER v. STATE. (No. 3,432.)

(Court of Appeals of Georgia. Oct. 23, 1911.)

(Syllabus by the Court.)

CRIMINAL LAW (§§ 1036, 1037*)—OBJECTIONS TO ARGUMENT—WAIVER—OBJECTIONS TO EVIDENCE.

The evidence practically demanded a verdict of guilty, and no error of law appears.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Criminal Law, Cent. Dig. §§ 1691, 2645; Dec. Dig. §§ 1036, 1037.*]

Error from Superior Court, Fulton County; L. S. Roan, Judge.

Dave Lavender was convicted of assault, and brings error. Affirmed.

Thos. L. Bishop, for plaintiff in error. H. M. Dorsey, Sol. Gen., for the State.

RUSSELL, J. Lavender was convicted of assault with intent to rape. The evidence for the state is overwhelming, both as to the assault and as to the identity of the defendant as the guilty party. The defendant relied on an alibi. The state fixed the time at about 2 o'clock p. m. Two or three witnesses testified that at this hour the defendant was at work in a hotel some distance from the scene of the crime. In arguing the case to the jury the solicitor general contended that the apparent conflict in the evidence as to the time of day could be reconciled on the theory that at Atlanta both Central and Eastern time are used, and that there is an hour's difference between the two. The defendant's counsel objected to the argument, on the ground that there was no evidence to support it. The solicitor general argued to the court that judicial cognizance could be taken of the difference in these times; but, on seeing that the court was about to rule to the contrary, he yielded and ceased to argue on the point. The defendant's counsel did not invoke a ruling by the judge. No motion for mistrial was made, nor was the court requested to charge the jury that they should disregard the argument.

We do not deem it necessary to decide whether judicial cognizance can be taken of the difference between Central and Eastern times. This is a fact of such common and universal knowledge that we are inclined to agree with the learned solicitor general that proof thereof can be dispensed with. It is unnecessary to prove that which all men know. But, irrespective of that, the defendant has waived his right for a new trial because of this supposed error. He should have invoked a ruling, or made a motion for a mistrial, or at least have requested the court to instruct the jury to disregard the argument. By acquiescing in the abandonment of the argument by the solicitor general, and in failing to take prompt and immediate action to cure the supposed error, he has precluded himself from complaining thereof. Ga. Ry. & Elec. Co. v. Dougherty, 4 Ga. App. 614, 62 S. E. 158.

In the fourth and fifth grounds of the motion for a new trial complaint is made of the admission of certain evidence as to a gun. These grounds are incomplete, in that they fail to state that the plaintiff in error informed the court of his objection thereto at the time the evidence was offered. Furthermore, the evidence was highly relevant for the purpose of identifying the prisoner, and was not inadmissible for any of the reasons here urged. The evidence practically demanded a verdict of guilty, and no error of law appears.

Judgment affirmed.

(3 Ga. App. 871)

WILLIAMS v. STATE. (No. 3,651.)
(Court of Appeals of Georgia. Oct. 23, 1911.)

(Syllabus by the Court.)

SUFFICIENCY OF EVIDENCE.

This case is fully controlled by Plummer v. State, 1 Ga. App. 507, 57 S. E. 969.

Error from City Court of Ft. Gaines; J. D. Rambo, Judge.

Ed Williams was convicted of crime, and brings error. Affirmed.

King & Castellow, for plaintiff in error.
P. C. King, Sol., and B. M. Turnipseed, for the State.

POWELL, J. Judgment affirmed.

(9 Ga. App. 842)

DANIEL v. PERKINS LOGGING CO.
(No. 3,167.)
(Court of Appeals of Georgia. Oct. 23, 1911.)

(Syllabus by the Court.)

1. LANDLORD AND TENANT (§ 133*)—POSSESSION OF PREMISES—DISTURBANCE BY THIRD PERSON.

Bare possession alone, either of land or chattels, authorizes the possessor to recover damages from any person who wrongfully in any manner interferes with such possession.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Landlord and Tenant, Cent. Dig. §§ 465-469; Dec. Dig. § 133.*]

(Additional Syllabus by Editorial Staff.)

2. LANDLORD AND TENANT (§ 133*)—POSSESSION OF PREMISES—DISTURBANCE BY THIRD PERSON—MEASURE OF DAMAGES.

Where an intruder illegally interferes with or evicts a tenant, the tenant can recover the value of the premises for rent during the remainder of the time, this value ordinarily being ascertained by proof of the difference in the market value of the term before and after the trespass; but where the tenancy is at will, or for any other reason has no market value, the actual damages must be ascertained by the jury in the light of the relevant proved facts and circumstances.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Landlord and Tenant, Cent. Dig. § 469; Dec. Dig. § 133.*]

3. LANDLORD AND TENANT (§ 142*)—POSSESSION OF PREMISES—DISTURBANCE BY THIRD PERSON—MEASURE OF DAMAGES.

In an action by a tenant against a third person for trespass, the mere general allegation in the petition that the destruction of a bridge, which was leased to the plaintiff together with farm land, and the consequent deprivation of its use, had caused plaintiff actual damages to the extent of $25, is insufficient, in the absence of allegations showing why or how the damage accrued.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Landlord and Tenant, Cent. Dig. §§ 509-515; Dec. Dig. § 142.*]

4. LANDLORD AND TENANT (§ 142*)—POSSESSION OF PREMISES—DISTURBANCE BY THIRD PERSON—MEASURE OF DAMAGES.

A tenant is not entitled to recover of an intruder as damages for the breaking down of a fence, depriving the tenant of the use of a pasture, the expense incurred in feeding the stock for five months; but he may recover the actual cost of feeding the stock while he was rebuilding or repairing the fence, or the difference between the value of the tenancy before and after the trespass.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Landlord and Tenant, Cent. Dig. §§ 509-515; Dec. Dig. § 142.*]

5. LANDLORD AND TENANT (§ 142*)—POSSESSION OF PREMISES—DISTURBANCE BY THIRD PERSON—MEASURE OF DAMAGES.

A tenant is not entitled to recover of a third person trespassing on the land the value of the oats crop which he might have grown thereon, if the season had been good, but may recover the difference between the value of the whole tenancy at the date of the trespass and after the trespass.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Landlord and Tenant, Cent. Dig. §§ 509-515; Dec. Dig. § 142.*]

6. TRESPASS (§ 56*)—POSSESSION OF PREMISES—PUNITIVE DAMAGES.

Civ. Code 1910, § 4503, providing that in the event of aggravating circumstances in a tort, either in the act or the intention, the jury may give additional damages, either to deter the wrongdoer from repeating the trespass, or as compensation for the wounded feelings of the plaintiff, applies to the tort of a trespasser who recklessly, willfully, and wantonly wrongs one whose only property is the bare possession of land.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Trespass, Cent. Dig. § 144; Dec. Dig. § 56; * Damages, Cent. Dig. § 204.]

7. LANDLORD AND TENANT (§ 142*)—POSSESSION OF PREMISES—DISTURBANCE BY THIRD PERSON—PLEADING.

A petition by a tenant for trespass by a third person, claiming punitive damages, should name some amount as punitive damages.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Landlord and Tenant, Dec. Dig. § 142.*]

Error from City Court of Millen; R. P. Jones, Judge.

Action by James Daniel against the Perkins Logging Company. Judgment for defendant, and plaintiff brings error. Reversed.

The petition alleged substantially the following facts: The plaintiff, James Daniel, was tenant in possession of described farm property, on which there was a bridge across a boggy branch separating a cultivated field from the remainder of the farm. Plaintiff made constant use of the bridge in going to and from the field. The bridge belonged to his landlord, but had been rented to him for use along with the land, all of which was known to the defendant, Perkins Logging Company. Without authority from the plaintiff or from the owner of the land, the Perkins Logging Company tore up said bridge and hauled it away, thus depriving plaintiff of the use of same. It was alleged that this illegal trespass was done recklessly and wantonly, and that the actual damage to the plaintiff in being deprived of the use of the bridge was $25. It was further alleged that as a part of his tenancy there was a pasture containing sufficient cane and other food supplies to sustain 2 cows and 13 hogs; that there was a fence around said pasture, and the cows and hogs above named were in said pasture; that the defendant tore down the fence, by pulling logs over the same with skidders, and burst and broke the rails to such an extent that plaintiff was forced to remove said animals from the pasture and shut them up and feed them for five months, at a total expense of $90. It was alleged that this trespass was likewise wanton and reckless, and was wholly unauthorized either by the plaintiff or his landlord. In addition to the $90 just referred to, the plaintiff asked for punitive damages in whatever sum might be allowed, but no specific sum was named. It was likewise alleged that on a part of the land of which the plaintiff was tenant the defendant made a log yard, and thus deprived the plaintiff of the use of eight acres; that this land was highly suitable for growing oats, and the illegal trespass of the defendant had prevented the plaintiff from growing an oats crop on said land, and thereby caused damage in the sum of $50; and since this conduct was reckless and wanton, he likewise asked an unnamed sum as punitive damages. The court sustained a general demurrer to this petition and the plaintiff excepts.

Jas. A. Dixon and Willie Woodrum, for plaintiff in error. E. L. Brinson and A. S. Anderson, for defendant in error.

RUSSELL, J. [1] Bare possession, either of land or a chattel, authorizes the possessor to recover damages from any person who wrongfully in any manner interferes with such possession. Civil Code 1910, §§ 4472, 4482; Connally v. Hall, 84 Ga. 198, 10 S. E. 738. The petition in the present case alleges both possession in the plaintiff and illegal interference therewith by the defendant; and this alone would entitle the plaintiff to the recovery of general damages, so as to make the petition good as against a general demurrer. Civil Code 1910, § 4507.

[2] Where an intruder illegally interferes with or evicts a tenant, the tenant can recover the value of the premises for rent during the remainder of the time. Bass v. West, 110 Ga. 698, 36 S. E. 244. Ordinarily this value is ascertained by proof of the difference in the market value of the term before and after the trespass; but where the tenancy is at will, or for any other reason has no market value, the actual damages must be determined by the jury in the light of the relevant proved facts and circumstances. Hayes v. City of Atlanta, 1 Ga. App. 26 (4), 57 S. E. 1067; Bass v. West, 110 Ga. 698 (4), 36 S. E. 244.

[3] The petition in the present case alleges that the plaintiff was tenant in possession of the property, but fails to allege the nature or duration of the tenancy; nor is there any allegation from which the value of his tenancy can be ascertained, or from which it can be determined legally wherein or how that value was decreased or lessened by the trespasses of the defendant. The mere general allegation that the destruction of the bridge and the consequent deprivation of its use by the plaintiff had caused him actual damages to the extent of $25 is insufficient, in the absence of allegations of fact showing why or how that damage accrued. Ordinarily the measure of damage for that trespass would be the difference in the market value of the tenancy, with and without the bridge, during the remainder of the term after its destruction. But if for any reason the tenancy has no market value, then the value before and after the trespass must be determined by the jury, in the light of all the proved relevant facts. The cost of replacing the bridge, the possibility of some other means of access to the field being resorted to with ease, and all other facts and counter facts can be given to the jury. The plaintiff could not, of course, recover for mere inconvenience, nor can the jury guess. The difference in the value of the tenancy before and after the trespass is the proper measure of damage, and this is the issue for the jury, and all evidence legally illustrating that issue is admissible.

[4] The same general principles apply to the other items of damage alleged. The plaintiff could not recover the expense he incurred in feeding the stock for five months; but he could recover the actual reasonable cost of feeding the stock while he was rebuilding or repairing the fence, or he could recover the difference between the value of the tenancy before and after the trespass, this difference to be determined as stated above.

[5] Likewise as to the eight acres of land used as a log yard. The value of the oats crop which the plaintiff might have grown on the land, if seasons had been good, or the other usual hazards of agriculture had been successfully passed, is not ordinarily the proper measure of damage. The value of the eight acres can be best ascertained by taking the value of the whole tenancy at the date of the trespass, and then determining how much that value has been lessened or diminished by the illegal trespass of the defendant; or the rental value of the eight acres may be shown. This is compensation for the injury done, and ordinarily this is the measure of damage.

[6, 7] As to punitive damages, it is only necessary to say that in every tort there may be aggravating circumstances either in the act or in the intention, and in that event the jury may give additional damages, either to deter the wrongdoer from repeating the trespass, or as compensation for the wounded feelings of the plaintiff. Civil Code 1910, § 4508. This principle applies to the tort of a trespasser who recklessly, willfully, and wantonly wrongs one whose only property is the bare possession of land. The petition should, however, name some amount as punitive damages.

It appears that the petition is good in substance, but subject to a multitude of special demurrers. The judgment sustaining the general demurrer is reversed, and direction is given that the plaintiff be permitted a reasonable time to amend his allegations as to the recovery of damages in conformity with this opinion. On the allegations made the plaintiff can recover only general damages. If he seeks other damages, he should amend by alleging facts as to the kind and duration of his tenancy, or any other fact showing that he had property which was lessened in value by the wrongful acts of the defendant. Judgment reversed.

(9 Ga. App. 365)

IRVIN v. STATE. (No. 3,610.)
(Court of Appeals of Georgia. Oct. 23, 1911.)

(Syllabus by the Court.)

1. HOMICIDE (§ 62*) — MANSLAUGHTER — INVOLUNTARY MANSLAUGHTER.

Where one intentionally pointed and aimed a pistol at another, in violation of section 349 of the Penal Code of 1910, and, believing that the pistol was unloaded, pulled the trigger, and the pistol unexpectedly exploded, causing the death of the person at whom it was pointed, a verdict of involuntary manslaughter in the commission of an unlawful act was authorized.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Homicide, Cent. Dig. § 85; Dec. Dig. § 62.*]

2. CRIMINAL LAW (§ 761*) — INSTRUCTIONS — INVADING PROVINCE OF JURY.

The excerpt from the charge is not justly subject to the criticism that it was in violation of section 4863 of the Civil Code of 1910.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Criminal Law, Cent. Dig. §§ 1731-1771; Dec. Dig. § 761.*]

(Additional Syllabus by Editorial Staff.)

3. CRIMINAL LAW (§ 772*) — INSTRUCTIONS — DUTY OF JURY — "DETERMINE."

In an instruction in a prosecution for homicide that the jury are not only to find and determine the physical facts, but also the intention, the word "determine" means to find out or ascertain the truth about the occurrence.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Criminal Law, Dec. Dig. § 772.*]

For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, vol. 3, pp. 2038-2040.]

Error from Superior Court, Burke County;
H. C. Hammond, Judge.

Len Irvin was convicted of involuntary manslaughter in the commission of an unlawful act, and brings error. Affirmed.

C. B. Garlick, for plaintiff in error. J. S. Reynolds, Sol. Gen., and John M. Graham, for the State.

HILL, C. J. 1. On an indictment for murder the plaintiff in error was convicted of involuntary manslaughter in the commission of an unlawful act, and the judge overruled his motion for a new trial. The record raises only two questions: (1) Is there any evidence in support of the finding that the homicide was involuntary in the commission of an unlawful act? (2) Did the trial judge, in a certain instruction to the jury complained of, express or intimate any opinion as to what had been proved?

[1] A brief statement of the facts will elucidate the first proposition. According to the evidence of the state's witnesses, the killing was the result of an unlawful act, to wit, intentionally pointing a pistol at the person killed. Penal Code 1910, § 349. Under the evidence the jury were fully authorized to find that when the accused pointed the pistol at the decedent he did not know it was loaded. It seems that just previous to the homicide the accused had fired his pistol several times in the yard of the house where the homicide took place, and thought he had shot every cartridge. After shooting his pistol he went into the house and began a playful scuffle with the decedent, a young girl. During the scuffle he playfully pointed the pistol at the girl, snapping it several times, until, reaching a loaded cartridge still remaining in the pistol, it fired; the ball going through her body, killing her almost instantly. There was no manifestation of temper or ill will between the two. It appears simply to have been a frolic between them, without any intention on the part of the accused to injure the girl in any manner. According to the witnesses for the accused, and the statement of the accused, the pistol was discharged accidentally, while he and the girl were engaged in a playful struggle for its possession. The girl when shot, called out: "Oh, Len; you have shot me!" And the accused exclaimed: "Oh, I would not have shot you for anything in the world!" He ran out to hitch a mule to a buggy to go for a doctor, and, on being told that the girl was dead, "turned a nail keg upside down, and sat there until 2 or 3 o'clock in the afternoon."

It will thus be seen that the evidence was in conflict as to how the decedent was shot. Did the accused point the pistol at her and snap it several times, until it fired and killed her? Or did the two playfully struggle for its possession, and did it go off accidentally, there being nothing to show which one had pulled the trigger? If the first, the case was one of involuntary manslaughter; if the second, an accidental killing by misadventure. The jury were the exclusive arbiters of this issue, and they decided that it was involuntary manslaughter in the commission of an unlawful act. The question of law arises: Where one points a pistol at another, in violation of section 349 of the Penal Code of 1910, and, thinking that it is not loaded, pulls the trigger, and the pistol unexpectedly explodes, killing the person at whom it is pointed, is the act of homicide thus caused involuntary manslaughter in the commission of an unlawful act? We see only one answer to this question. Section 349 of the Penal Code expressly declares that "any person who shall intentionally point or aim a gun or pistol, whether loaded or unloaded, at another, not in a sham battle by the military, and not in self-defense or in defense of habitation, property, or person, or other instances standing upon like footing of reason and justice, shall be guilty of a misdemeanor." Under this statute the accused was guilty of the unlawful act of intentionally pointing a pistol at the girl, although he believed it was unloaded at the time. But, as he did not intend to kill her, the homicide was involuntary, and therefore his offense, under the law, was involuntary manslaughter in the commission of an unlawful act. The very purpose of the statute just quoted is to protect life and limb from the reckless and careless pointing of guns or pistols at another; and, in view of the many unintentional homicides from such conduct, the statute in question would seem to be a wise one. A case clearly analogous to the one under consideration is that of Cook v. State, 93 Ga. 200, 18 S. E. 823. The trial judge very properly submitted to the jury the law of involuntary manslaughter in the commission of an unlawful act, and, as illustrating the question, in also charging section 349 of the Penal Code of 1910.

[2] 2. The following excerpt from the charge is excepted to on the ground that it was an expression of an opinion that certain facts which were contested had been proved: "Gentlemen of the jury, you are not only to find and determine in the case the physical facts that force put in motion by the defendant, namely, the pulling of a trigger of a pistol and sending a ball into the body of the deceased, causing her death—not only that physical fact is to be determined by you, but also the intention, the purpose, the motive, the heart, the spirit, with which the defendant acted when he committed the deed are for your consideration and determination." It is insisted that this was telling the jury that the defendant pulled the trigger and sent a bullet into the body of the decedent, thereby causing her death, and that this was the vital question at issue; the accused denying that he either pointed the pistol at the girl or pulled the trigger, and contending that the pistol was accidentally discharged in the struggle for its possession, not by him, but by the girl herself. We do not think this criticism is well founded. The judge had just stated the contentions of both the prosecution and the defense, and then he told them in this instruction that they must "find and determine," first, the physical facts; and, secondly, the intention with which these facts were put in motion.

[3] The meaning of the word "determine" is to "find out or ascertain the truth" about an occurrence. If the judge meant to state that the physical facts he mentioned were proved, then these facts were not to be "found and determined" by the jury. In other words, the language expressly refutes the construction attempted to be given to it, for it leaves to the "consideration and determination" of the jury the existence of both fact and intention.

Judgment affirmed.

(9 Ga. App. 871)

RAGAN v. STATE. (No. 3,638.)

(Court of Appeals of Georgia. Oct. 23, 1911.)

(Syllabus by the Court.)

1. INTOXICATING LIQUORS (§ 236*)—CRIMINAL PROSECUTION—SUFFICIENCY OF EVIDENCE.

No error of law appears, and the evidence supports the verdict.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Intoxicating Liquors, Dec. Dig. § 236.*]

(Additional Syllabus by Editorial Staff.)

2. INTOXICATING LIQUORS (§ 223*)—CRIMINAL PROSECUTION—ISSUES AND PROOF.

Where an indictment alleged the sale of liquor between certain buildings in a town, though the allegation was needlessly specific, the evidence of the offense should be confined to the limits alleged in the indictment.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Intoxicating Liquors, Cent. Dig. § 266; Dec. Dig. § 223.*]

3. INTOXICATING LIQUORS (§ 233*)—CRIMINAL PROSECUTION—ADMISSIBILITY OF EVIDENCE.

In a prosecution for violation of the prohibition law, the court properly allowed testimony as to a conversation between the accused and the witness, prior to a preceding sale, as to where the witness might obtain liquor, to remain in evidence, as tending to prove defendant was dealing in liquors and the subsequent sale by the accused to the witness.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Intoxicating Liquors, Dec. Dig. § 233.*]

Error from Superior Court, Mitchell County; Frank Park, Judge.

G. W. Ragan was convicted of a violation of the prohibition law, and brings error. Affirmed.

E. E. Cox, for plaintiff in error. W. E. Wooten, Sol. Gen., and F. A. Hooper, for the State.

HILL, C. J. Ragan was convicted of a violation of the prohibition law, and his motion for a new trial was overruled.

The indictment against him (omitting the mere formal parts) charged that the defendant did "unlawfully, * * * between the Moye Building and De Witt's stables, in the town of Sale City, in said county and state, barter and sell, for valuable consideration, to one C. J. Merritt, alcoholic, spirituous, malt, and intoxicating liquors," etc. In support of this allegation the state proved by C. J. Merritt that he went to the accused and asked him for whisky, and in reply the accused stated that he did not have any, but he thought he knew where he could get him some. "I went on, and directly he came to me and told me I might find it on the stair steps going up in Dr. Branch's office. That was not the only transaction I had with him. That same evening I went to him again, and he told me the same thing. * * * And after a while he came to me and told me to go look in a buggy and I would find it. The buggy was out at De Witt's stables, between the Moye Building and De Witt's stables. He did not tell me where he was going to get it. I told him I wanted a half pint. I did not give him the money then. He told me to go and look in the buggy and I might find it; and I went and looked in the buggy and found it, and left the money there. I found a half pint of Cotton Blossom whisky in the buggy. It was rye whisky. I left a dollar in lawful silver money in the buggy."

This was in substance the only evidence, and it is insisted that it is insufficient to show guilt. A motion was made to exclude that part of the testimony which referred to the first transaction between the witness and the accused, on the ground that the evidence did not show that this transaction took place between the Moye Building and De Witt's stables, as alleged in the indictment, and thus the state's evidence must be confined to a sale, or sales, in the county and in the town of Sale City between the Moye Building and De Witt's stables. The trial judge refused to exclude this evidence, and error is assigned on this ruling.

[1] The evidence was sufficient to support the verdict. It comes squarely up to the repeated rulings of the Supreme Court and of this court as to what would make out a prima facie case against the accused, either as the seller or as being interested in the sale, in the absence of any proof that he had no interest in the sale, but was acting exclusively as agent for the purchaser. Holt v. State, 7 Ga. App. 77, 68 S. E. 279; Highsmith v. City of Waycross, 7 Ga. App. 611, 67 S. E. 677, and cases there cited.

[2] The allegation in the indictment that the sale took place between the Moye Building and De Witt's stables in the town of Sale City was needlessly specific, unless the purpose of the pleader was to limit the locus of the offense in such manner as to prevent a plea of former jeopardy for another offense of a similar character committed by the accused in the same county. Having made the unnecessary allegation, however, it would seem that the evidence of the commission of the offense should be confined between the limits of the two places alleged in the indictment, in order that the accused might not be taken unawares, and not prepared to make his defense; for the general principle of law is that all circumstances of person, place or thing which are described in the indictment with extreme or unnecessary particularity must be proved strictly. And the evidence in behalf of the prosecution, in so far as the consummated act of sale is concerned, does prove strictly the specific allegation in the indictment that the sale was between the Moye Building and De Witt's stables. There was no other sale shown. The other transaction did not show a completed sale. It simply goes to the extent of showing that the accused told the state's witness that he might find some whisky on the stair steps going up into Dr. Branch's office, and it failed to show that the witness ever went to get the whisky on the stair steps, or that he left any money there in payment for the whisky. The only place where he got the whisky, and where he left the money in payment for the whisky, was in the buggy between the Moye Building and De Witt's stables.

[3] The court properly allowed the testimony, however, of the first conversation between the accused and the witness to remain in evidence for the reason that it tended to show that the accused was dealing in whisky. It was not evidence of another transaction, but, in so far as it had any probative value at all, it tended to prove the subsequent consummated sale by the accused to the witness.

Judgment affirmed.

(9 Ga. App. 351)

FORD v. STATE. (No. 3,234.)

(Court of Appeals of Georgia. Oct. 23, 1911.)

(Syllabus by the Court.)

CRIMINAL LAW (§ 1159*)—APPEAL—CONCLUSIVENESS OF VERDICT—SUCCESSIVE VERDICTS.

Considered separately and apart from the evidence and the charge as a whole, some of the excerpts quoted in the motion for a new trial contain slight abstract inaccuracies of expression, but no material error appears which would authorize the setting aside of a second successive verdict of guilty of the same offense, on conflicting evidence largely preponderating against the plaintiff in error.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Criminal Law, Cent. Dig. §§ 3074-3083; Dec. Dig. § 1159.*]

Error from Superior Court, Worth County; Frank Park, Judge.

George Ford was convicted of voluntary manslaughter, and brings error. Affirmed.

Tison & Cause, Forehand & Son, and Claude Payton, for plaintiff in error. W. E. Wooten, Sol. Gen., and F. A. Hooper, for the State.

RUSSELL, J. The verdict now under review is the second successive conviction of the defendant of voluntary manslaughter. The first conviction was set aside by this court for the reasons shown in the opinion as published in the previous report of the case. See Ford v. State, 2 Ga. App. 834, 59 S. E. 88. The evidence on the second trial is substantially the same as formerly, and would have authorized a verdict of deliberate murder, or any grade of manslaughter, or an acquittal on the theory of self-defense. The motion for a new trial is based solely on alleged errors in the court's charge, with the exception of some alleged newly discovered evidence, which is merely impeaching and cumulative, and which would not, in the absence of other harmful error, justify a reversal of the judgment. The ability and skill of learned and astute counsel are fully evinced in the 20 grounds of the amended motion, all based on alleged errors in the judge's charge. After a very careful and painstaking consideration of every ground, and an examination of the authorities cited by counsel and the arguments presented, we have concluded that the ends of justice have been attained, and that a new trial ought not to be granted.

This being a second successive verdict of guilty, on conflicting evidence largely preponderating in favor of the verdict rendered, a new trial should not be granted, except for harmful error. Taken as a whole, the charge was fair and full, and was notably free from error. By quoting excerpts from various portions of the charge, learned counsel have been able to find inaccuracies in the abstract, which, when considered in the light of the charge as a whole, manifestly appear not to have harmed the defendant. In fact, so skillfully has the charge been riddled in an effort to find some portion of it which contains error, that we are reminded of the ingenuity of England's Attorney General in drafting the information against Stockdale, the Piccadilly bookseller, who published the book of Rev. Mr. Logan containing a defense of Warren Hastings, and which the government claimed contained libelous observations on the House of Commons. The Attorney General included in the information only excerpts from the book, selected at random, and which, when read successively and apart from the book as a whole, were colorably libelous. In arguing the case for Stockdale, the brilliant Lord Erskine called attention to the fact that the book as a whole would have to be read before any part of it could be called libelous. To illustrate his point, he said that by the method adopted the Attorney General could prove by the Bible itself that there is no God. Whereupon he picked up the Bible and turned to the first verse of the fourteenth Psalm and read the following: "There is no God." He then read the verse as a whole, as follows: "The fool hath said in his heart there is no God." So, oftentimes in determining whether an excerpt from a judge's charge is harmfully erroneous, it must be considered in the light of the charge as a whole, and also in the light of the evidence and the whole case as developed on the trial. We have so considered the alleged errors in the excerpts from the charge in the present case, and are fully convinced that no reason appears why a new trial should be granted.

Judgment affirmed.

(9 Ga. App. 840)

GEORGIA, F. & A. RY. CO. v. F. R. PENN TOBACCO CO. (No. 3,164.)

(Court of Appeals of Georgia. Oct. 23, 1911.)

(Syllabus by the Court.)

1. APPEAL AND ERROR (§ 390*)—AMENDMENT OF BOND.

An appeal bond may be amended by correcting a misnomer in the initials of the appellee, and by inserting the name of the usee in the body of the bond after the name of the formal party to the case.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Appeal and Error, Cent. Dig. §§ 2077-2088; Dec. Dig. § 390.*]

2. JUSTICES OF THE PEACE (§ 164*)—APPEAL—SUFFICIENCY.

Where an appeal from a justice's court shows that a judgment has been rendered therein with which the appellant is dissatisfied, Civil Code 1910, § 4738, is substantially complied with. The appeal need not set forth the judgment.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Justices of the Peace, Dec. Dig. § 164.*]

Error from Superior Court, Calhoun County; Frank Park, Judge.

Action by the F. R. Penn Tobacco Company, for the use of the Eufaula Grocery Company, against the Georgia, Florida & Alabama Railway Company. From a judgment dismissing the appeal, defendant brings error. Reversed.

Calhoun & Rambo, for plaintiff in error. Smith & Miller, for defendant in error.

RUSSELL, J. The only question in this case is whether or not an appeal from a justice's court to a jury in the superior court should have been dismissed for alleged defects in the bond. The bond is as follows:

"Georgia, Calhoun County. R. J. Penn Tobacco Co., for the Use of Eufaula Gro. Co., v. Georgia, Florida & Alabama Railway Company. In Justice Court, 1,316th District, G. M., Calhoun County. The above-named defendant, Georgia, Florida & Alabama Railway Company, being dissatisfied with said judgment and having paid the cost, now, within the time allowed by law, enters an appeal from said judgment to a jury in the superior court of said county, and tenders B. H. Askew as his security upon this appeal bond. And thereupon said Georgia, Florida & Alabama Railway Company, and said B. H. Askew as security, hereby acknowledge themselves jointly and severally bound, and bind their heirs, executors, administrators, and assigns, to said R. J. Penn Tobacco Co., for the eventual condemnation money in said case, whatever it may be. Witness our hands and seals, this 12th day of October, 1910. Georgia, Florida & Alabama Railway Company [L. S.], by its Attorneys at Law, Calhoun & Rambo. [L. S.]. B. H. Askew, Sr., Security. [L. S.]”

“Attested and approved by James R. Strickland, J. P.”

[1] The tobacco company moved to dismiss the appeal because it was named in the bond as the “R. J. Penn Tobacco Co.,” whereas its right name is the “F. R. Penn Tobacco Co.,” as appears from the original summons in the case, and also because the usee was not named in the body of the bond. The clerical error in the initials was a mere misnomer and was amendable. Civil Code 1910, §§ 5686, 5687; Watkins v. Smith, 17 Ga. 68; Murphy v. Peabody, 63 Ga. 522. The usee not being a formal party to the case, it would seem to be unnecessary to insert its name in the body of the bond; but, irrespective of that, this defect was amendable. See Smith v. Jackson, 122 Ga. 857, 50 S. E. 930; Hayes v. Eubanks, 125 Ga. 349, 54 S. E. 174.

[2] It is further contended that the appeal was rightly dismissed, because it does not appear that any judgment had been rendered from which an appeal could be entered. It appears, from the recitals of the appeal and bond, that a judgment had been rendered in the justice's court, with which the appellant was dissatisfied, and we think this is sufficient. Civil Code 1910, § 4738.

Judgment reversed.

(9 Ga. App. 848)

MORRIS v. JACKSON. (No. 3,178.)

(Court of Appeals of Georgia. Oct. 23, 1911.)

(Syllabus by the Court.)

BROKERS (§ 50*)—SALE OF REALTY—RIGHT TO COMMISSIONS.

There being no evidence of bad faith or fraud on the part of the owner in selling the property, after the expiration of the agency contract, to a person with whom the agent had been negotiating prior thereto, and it further appearing that the sale was made for a sum less than that named in the agency contract, as to which time was of the essence, the agent was not entitled to commissions on the transaction, even though the sale was made by the owner to the same person and at the price offered by him prior to the expiration of the agency contract.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Brokers, Cent. Dig. § 68; Dec. Dig. § 50.*]

Error from City Court of Atlanta; A. E. Calhoun, Judge.

Action by T. W. Jackson against J. M. Morris. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendant brings error. Reversed.

A real estate agent sued the owner of a farm for $300, commission on a sale of the farm. The jury returned a verdict for $250, and the defendant moved for a new trial, on the general grounds, also assigning error on one excerpt from the judge's charge. The material facts as settled by the verdict are that the owner listed the farm with the agent, agreeing to give him exclusive control of the property for 120 days, to pay him a commission of 5 per cent. on the purchase price, and further providing that if the owner “should, after the expiration of the 120 days, sell said property to the [agent's] customer or client, direct or through any one else,” the agent should nevertheless have his commission. The contract was renewed successively, so as to make it expire on January 1, 1909. The agent put a “For Sale” sign on the property. One Maddox saw the sign and went to Haynes, the tenant in possession, found out the name of the owner, and went directly to him. The owner then went with Maddox to see the property, but no trade was consummated. About 60 days later the agent called on Maddox and again interested him in the property, and finally obtained from him an offer to give a piece of city property and $1,000 “to boot” for the farm. This offer was communicated to the owner of the farm, and was by him declined. This happened in December, 1908. Subsequently the owner notified the agent that the property would be taken out of his hands on January 1, 1909, which was done, and during February, 1909, the owner sold the farm to Maddox on the same terms which he had declined when dealing through the agent, to wit, for the city property and $1,000. The price at which the farm was originally listed was $6,000, $3,000 cash, and the remainder in deferred payments, with interest at the rate of 7 per cent. per annum. The value of the city property, which, in addition to the $1,000 cash, the owner received, was estimated at $4,000; so that he obtained only the equivalent of $5,000 for his farm, or $1,000 less than the price at which he authorized the agent to consummate the sale.

Jas. L. Key and Nathan Coplan, for plaintiff in error. Hill & Wright, for defendant in error.

RUSSELL, J. (after stating the facts as above). There is no evidence that in declining to accept the offer made prior to January 1, 1909, as to the exchange of the properties, the owner did so with the concealed intention at the time to accept the offer after the expiration of the agency contract, simply for the purpose of evading the payment of the agent's commission. The relation of principal and agent requires good faith inter sese, and the law will not tolerate one taking an unfair advantage of the other. Williams v. Moore-Gaunt Co., 3 Ga. App. 756, 60 S. E. 372; Emery v. Atlanta Real Estate Exchange, 88 Ga. 321, 14 S. E. 556. It is evident that the parties considered time of the essence of the contract. Where an owner gives to an agent exclusive control of his property for a named number of days or specified time, the time named is such a material part of the contract as to go to its essence. Emery v. Atlanta Real Estate Exchange, supra. The mere fact that after the expiration of the agency contract the owner sells the property for a lesser sum than therein named, when taken alone, indicates nothing so far as the agent's right to commissions is concerned; nor is the fact that the sale is made to a person with whom the agent had been negotiating to be considered, otherwise than as it bears on the words, agent's "client or customer," as used in the agency contract. Doonan v. Ives, 73 Ga. 295 (1, a).

*For other cases see same topic and section NUMBER in Dec. Dig. & Am. Dig. Key No. Series & Rep'r Indexes

These words, as used in the contract in the instant case, must receive a reasonable construction. Certainly it was not the intention of the parties that every person to whom the agent had offered the property should afterwards be considered the agent's client or customer. They were intended to prevent a sale by the owner after the expiration of the agency contract to a purchaser procured prior thereto on the terms therein authorized. The terms authorized in the agency contract in the instant case were $6,000. The agent did not procure a purchaser at that figure, for the undisputed evidence is that the city property offered was worth only $4,000. The owner had a right to stand on his contract with the agent, and refused to sell for less than the sum therein named, and subsequently to change his mind and sell to the same person for a less sum. In the absence of bad faith or fraud, any other rule would be manifestly unjust to the owner, who, after the expiration of the contract with his agent, is absolute owner of his property, to do with it as he sees fit.

There being no evidence of any bad faith or fraud, and the parties having made their own contract, according to the terms of which the agent failed to earn his commission, the verdict is contrary to law and without evidence to support it.

Judgment reversed.

(9 Ga. App. 879)

BRASWELL v. STATE. (No. 3,716.)
(Court of Appeals of Georgia. Oct. 23, 1911.)

(Syllabus by the Court.)

INTOXICATING LIQUORS (§ 224*)—ILLEGAL SALE—BURDEN OF PROOF.

The only question raised in this case is fully controlled by the repeated decisions of this court and of the Supreme Court to the effect that where it is proved that money was given to the accused to buy intoxicating liquor, and subsequently he delivered the liquor to the person who gave him the money with which to buy it, a prima facie case of guilt is established, and the burden is cast upon him to prove that he was not the seller, had no interest in the sale, and acted solely as the agent of the purchaser. Holt v. State, 7 Ga. App. 77, 66 S. E. 279; Highsmith v. City of Waycross, 7 Ga. App. 611, 67 S. E. 677, and cases there cited. Whether this burden is successfully carried is a question of fact to be determined by the jury. Where more than one transaction is proved by the state, this burden relates to all of them.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Intoxicating Liquors, Cent. Dig. §§ 275-281; Dec. Dig. § 224.*]

Error from City Court of Oglethorpe; R. L. Greer, Judge.

Cleve Braswell was convicted of crime, and brings error. Affirmed.

Jerre M. Moore, for plaintiff in error. Jule Felton, Sol., for the State.

HILL, C. J. Judgment affirmed.

(9 Ga. App. 876)

MAXWELL v. STATE. (No. 3,862.)
(Court of Appeals of Georgia. Oct. 23, 1911.)

(Syllabus by the Court.)

ROBBERY (§ 17*)—INDICTMENT AND INFORMATION (§ 61*)—SUFFICIENCY—"DOLLAR."

An indictment for robbery (omitting formal parts) charged that the accused "did unlawfully, fraudulently, and violently take from the person of W. Archer fifty dollars in money, of the value of fifty dollars, the personal property of him, the said W. Archer, by force." Held, that the description of the property alleged to have been forcibly taken was sufficient, and the court properly overruled a special demurrer to the indictment, on the ground that it was not alleged whether the $50 in money was in gold, silver, or paper money, and the denominations thereof were not given. Berry v. State, 10 Ga. 518; Watson v. State, 64 Ga. 61.

It was also sufficient on the question of value, to allege that the "fifty dollars in money" was "of the value of fifty dollars," as the courts will judicially recognize that the word "dollar" is the money unit of the United States and is of the value of 100 cents. McDonald v. State, 2 Ga. App. 633, 58 S. E. 1067.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Robbery, Cent. Dig. §§ 16-28; Dec. Dig. § 17; Indictment and Information, Cent. Dig. § 183; Dec. Dig. § 61.*]

For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, vol. 3, pp. 2160-2164.]

Error from Superior Court, Floyd County; John W. Maddox, Judge.

Irwin Maxwell was convicted of robbery, and brings error. Affirmed.

Eubanks & Mebane, for plaintiff in error. John W. Bale, Sol. Gen., for the State.

HILL, C. J. Judgment affirmed.

(9 Ga. App. 878)

BUTLER v. STATE. (No. 3,702.)
(Court of Appeals of Georgia. Oct. 23, 1911.)

(Syllabus by the Court.)

CRIMINAL LAW (§ 563*)—CORPUS DELICTI—SUFFICIENCY OF EVIDENCE.

The evidence relied upon to support the verdict consists only of incriminatory statements by the accused, and there is no evidence whatever, aliunde these statements, tending to prove the corpus delicti. The verdict is therefore contrary to law.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Criminal Law, Dec. Dig. § 563.*]

Error from City Court of Americus; J. A. Hixon, Judge.

Charlie Butler was convicted of crime, and brings error. Reversed.

Hollis Fort, for plaintiff in error. Zach Childers, Sol., for the State.

HILL, C. J. Judgment reversed.

(9 Ga. App. 855)

MCBRIDE v. STATE. (No. 3,312.)

(Court of Appeals of Georgia. Oct. 23, 1911.)

(Syllabus by the Court.)

CRIMINAL LAW (§ 1159*)—APPEAL—EVIDENCE. The evidence, though very weak and entirely circumstantial, is sufficient to authorize the verdict of guilty, and this court is without power to interfere.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Criminal Law, Cent. Dig. §§ 3074-3083; Dec. Dig. § 1159.*]

Error from Superior Court, Bulloch County; B. T. Rawlings, Judge.

Walter McBride was convicted of crime, and brings error. Affirmed.

Anderson & Speer, for plaintiff in error. Alfred Herrington, Sol. Gen., Hines & Jordan, and A. M. Deal, for the State.

RUSSELL, J. Judgment affirmed.

(9 Ga. App. 871)

PERRY v. STATE. (No. 3,637.)

(Court of Appeals of Georgia. Oct. 23, 1911.)

(Syllabus by the Court.)

REVIEW OF EVIDENCE.

The evidence, though circumstantial, fully supports the verdict.

Error from Superior Court, Mitchell County; Frank Park, Judge.

Bubber Perry was convicted of crime, and brings error. Affirmed.

E. E. Cox, for plaintiff in error. W. E. Wooten, Sol. Gen., and F. A. Hooper, for the State.

POWELL, J. Judgment affirmed.

(9 Ga. App. 877)

WHITE v. STATE. (No. 3,691.)

(Court of Appeals of Georgia. Oct. 23, 1911.)

(Syllabus by the Court.)

SUFFICIENCY OF EVIDENCE.

Only a question of fact is presented. The jury has conclusively settled that. Plummer v. State, 1 Ga. App. 507, 57 S. E. 969.

Error from Superior Court, Cobb County; N. A. Morris, Judge.

Homer White was convicted of crime, and brings error. Affirmed.

Clay & Morris, for plaintiff in error. J. P. Brooke, Sol. Gen., for the State.

POWELL, J. Judgment affirmed.

(9 Ga. App. 883)

WALKER v. STATE. (No. 3,521.)

(Court of Appeals of Georgia. Oct. 23, 1911.)

(Syllabus by the Court.)

1. LARCENY (§ 15*)—WHAT CONSTITUTES.

When one person hands to another money for the purpose of having it changed, neither the title nor the legal possession passes; and if the person to whom the money is thus handed takes and carries it away with intent to steal, formed either at the time when the money is handed him or subsequently when it is in his charge, he is guilty of simple larceny.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Larceny, Cent. Dig. §§ 39-42; Dec. Dig. § 15.*]

2. CRIMINAL LAW (§ 55*)—INTOXICATION AS A DEFENSE.

While drunkenness may be a circumstance from which the jury may infer that one who has taken and carried away another's property did not intend to steal it, still, if the intention to steal is present, drunkenness is no excuse for the crime, even though the intent to steal be caused by the drunkenness itself.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Criminal Law, Cent. Dig. § 67; Dec. Dig. § 55.*]

3. LARCENY (§ 55*)—EVIDENCE—SUFFICIENCY.

The evidence, though weak, is legally sufficient to support the verdict.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Larceny, Dec. Dig. § 55.*]

Error from City Court of Polk County; F. A. Irwin, Judge.

Edward Walker was convicted of larceny, and brings error. Affirmed.

Wm. H. Trawick, for plaintiff in error. J. A. Wright, Sol., and E. S. Ault, for the State.

POWELL, J. The prosecutrix asked the defendant to change a $5 bill. He took it, and stepped into a store as if to get the change, and then disappeared. Next morning, after a warrant had been sworn out for his arrest, he came to the prosecutrix and told her that he was drunk on the day before, and that for that reason he failed to come back with the change, and he gave her the money in silver dollars. The judge charged the jury that if the defendant took the money, and intended to steal it at the time, or if afterward, while he had it, he formed the intention to steal it, and carried it away and appropriated it to his own use, he would be guilty of simple larceny.

[1] It is well settled in this state that, when one person hands another money for the purpose of making change, the title does not pass, and the possession of the person to whom the money is handed is the possession of the owner thereof until the change has been made, and that, if a person to whom money has thus been handed takes it and carries it away with an intent to steal it, he is guilty of simple larceny. Finkelstein v. State, 105 Ga. 617, 31 S. E. 589. A question is here presented which was not presented in that case, however. Suppose that the person to whom the bill is handed for the purpose of changing it takes it without intending to steal it at the time, and then subsequently forms the intention to steal it, is the offense simple larceny? Some of the language used in the course of the opinion in the case of Buckine v. State, 121 Ga. 337, 49 S. E. 257, suggests that the court had this question in mind, but did not decide it. In Abrams v. State, 121 Ga. 170, 48 S. E. 965, it was held that where one borrows another's property, with no intention, at the time, of converting it to his own use, a conversion thereafter, pursuant to a subsequently formed intent, is not simple larceny. As pointed out in Rice v. State, 6 Ga. App. 160, 64 S. E. 575, there is a difference between the cases wherein the defendant obtains the property as a result of a bailment, and where he merely gains physical control over it without there being any change of legal possession. As was pointed out in the Finkelstein Case above, there is no bailment and no change of legal possession, where one person merely hands money to another to be changed; consequently in cases of this character it is immaterial whether the intention to steal was formed at the moment the money was handed over, or formed later. If the defendant, having the money in his temporary control, but not in his legal possession, and not having it for the purpose of any bailment, forms an intention to steal it, and takes and carries it away for that purpose, his crime is simple larceny. There are similar cases in which the crime may be both simple larceny and larceny after trust; but in these cases there must be a change of possession in the nature of a bailment. Bryant v. State, 8 Ga. App. 389, 69 S. E. 121.

[2] 2. The court charged the jury that, though they should find that the defendant was drunk, this would be no excuse for the crime, if he really intended to steal the money. Chief Justice Jackson, in Bernhard v. State, 76 Ga. 613 (a prosecution for cotton stealing), says: "Cotton making, ginning, and packing would be a poor business in Georgia, if drunkenness excused a man for stealing it, unless the prohibition of selling intoxicating liquors prevailed everywhere in the state; and if it did, plenty of rogues would get drunk on cider and domestic wines in order to steal." We think that counsel for the plaintiff in error is correct when he asserts that a jury may consider the intoxication of the accused, for the purpose of explaining his conduct and determining whether he carried the money away with an intent to steal it, or with mere lack of intention. A drunken man, coming into possession of another's money, might put it in his pocket and fail to return it to the owner simply because he was too drunk to act as a normal man would under the circumstances. He might even spend it, thinking in his drunkenness that it was his own, when a sober man would have known that it was another's; and in such cases the drunken man's conduct might be entirely exempt from any animus furandi. A drunken man might handle another's property in such a way as that, if he were sober, the jury would believe he intended to steal it, and yet the jury, taking into consideration his drunkenness, might believe that he did not intend to steal it. As thoroughly as we agree with counsel in his assertion as to these principles, we do not agree with him that the court erred in charging the jury that, if the defendant did intend to steal it, his drunkenness would be no excuse for his crime. If the instructions of the court were not full enough upon this subject to satisfy counsel, he should have made a request for further instructions.

[3] 3. The evidence of the defendant's intention to steal the money, in the light of his well-proved drunken condition, is somewhat weak and unsatisfactory; but it is not legally insufficient to support the verdict.

Judgment affirmed.

(9 Ga. App. 853)

NORFLETT v. STATE. (No. 3,305.)

(Court of Appeals of Georgia. Oct. 23, 1911.)

(Syllabus by the Court.)

LARCENY (§ 32*)—LARCENY AFTER TRUST—INDICTMENT.

Where, under section 192 or section 194 of the Penal Code of 1910, it is sought to charge a violation of a trust, in that the accused failed to apply the property to the use or benefit of one other than the person delivering it, the indictment should allege ownership of the property.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Larceny, Cent. Dig. §§ 81-92; Dec. Dig. § 32;* Indictment and Information, Cent. Dig. § 281.]

Error from Superior Court, Warren County; B. F. Walker, Judge.

John R. Norflett was convicted of larceny after trust, and brings error. Reversed.

L. D. McGregor and E. P. Davis, for plaintiff in error. Thos. J. Brown, Sol. Gen., for the State.

RUSSELL, J. Norflett was indicted for larceny after trust, the indictment being in two counts. The jury found him guilty on the first count, and he was sentenced to three years' imprisonment. The bill of exceptions complains of the overruling of a demurrer to the indictment, and also of the court's refusal to grant the motion for a new trial filed by the defendant in the court below. Inasmuch as we have concluded that the court erred in overruling the demurrer to the indictment, it is unnecessary to consider any other assignment of error.

The material part of the first count of the indictment is as follows: "In the name and behalf of the citizens of Georgia, charge and accuse John R. Norflett with the offense of larceny after trust, for that the said John R. Norflett, on the 20th day of October, 1908, in the county aforesaid, was intrusted with thirty-five dollars in money, of the value of thirty-five dollars, by T. T. Thomas, for the use and benefit of Laborers' Mercantile & Investment Co., a corporation of said state, and for the purpose of having the said John R. Norflett to deliver and pay said sum of thirty-five dollars to said Laborers' Mercantile & Investment Co.; and said John R. Norflett did, on the day and year aforesaid, in the county aforesaid, fraudulently convert the said thirty-five dollars to his own use, to the injury and without the consent of said T. T. Thomas, and to the injury and without the consent of said Laborers' Mercantile & Investment Co., and without paying to either said T. T. Thomas or said Laborers' Mercantile & Investment Co. the said thirty-five dollars, or any part thereof." The defendant demurred to the indictment, because the ownership of the money alleged to have been converted was not set forth. We think this demurrer well taken. It is necessary that the indictment should aver every material fact necessary to make the crime complete.

An examination of the definitions of the various classes of embezzlements and larcenies after trust, as contained in the Penal Code of 1910, discloses that the indictment fails to charge all the elements necessary to make a complete crime under any of them. It may not be necessary in every case to allege ownership of the goods claimed to have been fraudulently converted by the defendant. In fact, under section 189, one who wrongfully converts goods intrusted to him by a mere bailor thereof violates the law, provided he fails, on demand, to make proper restitution. But it is evident that the pleader was not proceeding under this section, for the reason, among others, that no demand is alleged. If the indictment can stand at all, it must be under section 192 or section 194. An examination of those sections, however, shows that one of the necessary elements of the crimes therein defined is that the property shall have been delivered to the accused on trust to be applied to the use and benefit either of the owner or of the person delivering it.

The indictment in the present case expressly negatives the idea that the property was to be applied to the use and benefit of Thomas, the person delivering it; for the allegation is that it was to be applied to the use and benefit of the Laborers' Mercantile & Investment Company. But nowhere is it alleged that that company was the owner of the money. Under the sections named, where the violation of the trust is the failure to apply the property to the use and benefit of one other than the person delivering it, the indictment must allege that the other is the owner of the property; otherwise it is fatally defective. Penal Code 1910, § 192; Keys v. State, 112 Ga. 392, 37 S. E. 762, 81 Am. St. Rep. 63; Smith v. State, 121 Ga. 618, 49 S. E. 677; Jackson v. State, 76 Ga. 551; Hagood v. State, 5 Ga. App. 80, 62 S. E. 641; Birt v. State, 1 Ga. App. 150, 57 S. E. 965.

Judgment reversed.

(156 N. C. 412)

FIELDS v. BYNUM.

(Supreme Court of North Carolina. Oct. 25, 1911.)

1. TRIAL (§ 350*)—SPECIAL INTERROGATORIES.

In slander, in which the answer merely alleged that the allegations of the complaint as to the utterance of slanderous words were untrue, and denied any damage to plaintiff, the court submitted three special issues, to wit, whether defendant spoke to plaintiff in the hearing of others the words alleged in paragraphs 3 and 4 of the complaint, or such words in substance, and what damage, if any, plaintiff was entitled to recover. Held, that the special issues submitted were proper; defendant being entitled thereunder to offer evidence of any defense alleged by him.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Trial, Dec. Dig. § 350.*]

2. LIBEL AND SLANDER (§ 50*)—PRIVILEGED COMMUNICATIONS.

The alleged slander was a charge that plaintiff burned a sawmill; plaintiff claiming that defendant called him out of his residence, and, in the presence of several others, charged that plaintiff burned a mill the night before, and also burned a mill on the same site in June past. Defendant's version was that he asked plaintiff about trying to convey timber to others after he had sold it to defendant, and then stated that he believed that plaintiff had burned the mill, and that his neighbors also believed it. Held, that it could not be said that the communication to plaintiff was fairly made on a proper occasion, and in a proper manner, so as to be privileged, on the ground that he made the statement as to the burning of the mill to further his own interests, because he was having timber sawed at it; to make the communication privileged, it being necessary that defendant should have made it on a proper occasion, and under a sense of duty, with the bona fide purpose of ascertaining the origin of the fire.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Libel and Slander, Cent. Dig. §§ 149, 150; Dec. Dig. § 50.*]

3. LIBEL AND SLANDER (§ 41*)—PRIVILEGED COMMUNICATIONS—PRESENCE OF THIRD PERSON.

While the accidental presence of a third person will not always prevent a statement from being a privileged communication, so as not to be actionable slander, it is deprived of its privileged character if defendant intentionally makes the statement in the presence of a number of others.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Libel and Slander, Cent. Dig. §§ 127-129; Dec. Dig. § 41.*]

4. LIBEL AND SLANDER (§ 50½*)—PRIVILEGED COMMUNICATIONS.

While answers to questions asked by plaintiff will be privileged communications if otherwise so, though made in the presence of third persons, any privileged character which the words would otherwise have is lost by their repetition by defendant in the presence of third persons.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Libel and Slander, Dec. Dig. § 50½.*]

5. LIBEL AND SLANDER (§ 113*)—DAMAGES—"GENERAL DAMAGES."

"General damages" include actual or compensatory damages, and the injuries which the law presumes to have naturally and necessarily resulted from the utterance of words slanderous per se, such as a charge of arson, including injury to the feelings and resulting mental suffering, and may also include punitive damages.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Libel and Slander, Cent. Dig. § 842; Dec. Dig. § 113.*]

For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, vol. 4, pp. 3059, 3060; vol. 8, p. 7669.]

6. LIBEL AND SLANDER (§ 33*)—DAMAGES—PLEADING—GENERAL DAMAGES.

General damages need not be pleaded or proved in an action for damages resulting from words slanderous per se.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Libel and Slander, Cent. Dig. § 112; Dec. Dig. § 33.*]

7. LIBEL AND SLANDER (§ 5*)—DAMAGES—COMPENSATORY DAMAGES—MALICE—NECESSITY.

Malice by defendant in uttering words slanderous per se is not essential to authorize the recovery of compensatory damages.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Libel and Slander, Cent. Dig. § 278; Dec. Dig. § 5.*]

8. LIBEL AND SLANDER (§ 120*)—DAMAGES—PUNITIVE DAMAGES.

The jury may award punitive damages in a slander action, if the slanderous words were uttered from personal malice, with intent to injure plaintiff, or with a wanton and reckless disregard of his rights; but, if the defendant was not actuated by malice, only compensatory damages may be allowed.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Libel and Slander, Cent. Dig. §§ 350-351; Dec. Dig. § 120.*]

9. LIBEL AND SLANDER (§ 123*)—DAMAGES—PUNITIVE DAMAGES.

The issue of punitive damages was properly submitted to the jury, in an action for slander in charging the burning of a mill, where plaintiff testified that defendant came to his residence and called him out, and stated in the presence of others, "You burned the mill up last night," and further stated that he would blow plaintiff's brains out if he opened his mouth, and that plaintiff was the man who also burned the mill in June.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Libel and Slander, Cent. Dig. §§ 356-364; Dec. Dig. § 123.*]

Appeal from Superior Court, Chatham County; Allen, Judge.

Action by Henry T. Fields against Thomas M. Bynum. From a judgment for plaintiff, defendant appeals. Affirmed.

These issues were submitted to the jury.

"(1) Did the defendant speak to the plaintiff, in the presence and hearing of Willie J. Bright and others, the words set out in paragraph 3 of the complaint, or words of the same substance? Answer: Yes. (2) Did the defendant speak to the plaintiff, in the presence and hearing of Willie J. Bright and others, the words set out in paragraph 4 of the complaint, or words of the same substance and meaning? Answer: Yes. (3) What damage, if any, is plaintiff entitled to recover? Answer: $500 (five hundred dollars)." From the judgment rendered, the defendant appealed.

W. P. Bynum, Hayes & Bynum, and Robert C. Strudwick, for appellant. H. A. London & Son, for appellee.

*For other cases see same topic and section NUMBER in Dec. Dig. & Am. Dig. Key No. Series & Rep'r indexes

BROWN, J. [1] 1. The defendant excepted to the issues, and tendered two others. Those submitted have been practically approved by this court in several cases. McCurry v. McCurry, 82 N. C. 296; Wozelka v. Hettrick, 98 N. C. 10; Rice v. McAdams, 149 N. C. 29, 62 S. E. 774. Under the issues submitted, the defendant had opportunity to present evidence of any defense set up in his answer. Deaver v. Deaver, 187 N. C. 246, 49 S. E. 118.

[2] 2. The defendant contends that the occasion when the words were uttered was a privileged one, exempting him from civil liability for their utterance. Defendant tendered certain prayers for instruction, presenting that view, which were refused. We are of opinion that the occasion was not privileged, and that the prayers were properly refused. The contention of the defendant is that he had a direct personal interest in the burning of the mill, although it belonged to Buile, as he was engaged in sawing defendant's timber with it, and another mill had been burned on the same site the June previous; that he sought the plaintiff in good faith, to ascertain who burned the mill, and in the discharge of a private duty in the prosecution of his own interests.

We do not differ with the learned counsel as to the law, but only in its application to the facts of this case. The plaintiff's version of the facts is that the defendant came to his residence and called him out, saying, "You burnt the mill up last night." "I told him I did not. Jim Campbell, Norfus Barber, and Willie Bright were present. Defendant said he would blow my brains out if I opened my mouth; said I was the man that burnt it in June, and, 'I know you did it.' I did not burn either mill." Several witnesses testified to plaintiff's good character. There was no evidence that his character was bad. Defendant testifies: "I then asked him [the plaintiff] about trying to deed the timber to other parties after he had sold it to me; that I believed he had burned the mill and that his neighbors believed it. I never charged him with burning the mill, only as above stated." In order to bring himself within the protection which attaches to communications made in the fulfillment of a duty, the defendant must show something more than an honest belief in the truth of his utterance. He must show that what he said was a communication, made in a sense of duty, with the bona fide purpose of ascertaining the origin of the fire, and that it was made on an occasion which justified the making of it. Dawkins v. Lord Paulet, L. R. 5 Q. B. 102; Newell on Slander, p. 477.

[3] Then, again, where the expressions employed are allowable in all respects, the manner in which they are made public may take them out of the privilege. In the case of spoken words, the defendant must be careful in whose presence he speaks. While the accidental presence of a third person will not always take the case out of the privilege, it is otherwise if the defendant purposely selects an occasion where a number of persons are present. Odgers on Libel and Slander, 199.

[4] It is generally held that answers to questions put by the plaintiff himself will in general be privileged, though made in the presence of third persons. Palmer v. Hammerstone, 1 Cab. & El. 36; Billings v. Fairbanks, 139 Mass. 66, 29 N. E. 544. But even in reply to plaintiff's questions the defendant is not protected by privilege, if he repeats, in presence of third persons, charges of a slanderous character which he has previously made. Griffiths v. Lewis, 53 E. O. L. 61; Sanborn v. Fickett, 91 Me. 364, 40 Atl. 66; 18 Am. & Eng. 1032. Assuming the communication to have been made in manner and form as testified by the plaintiff, it is manifestly not privileged. And we think, taking the defendant's version of the occurrence, it was not a privileged occasion. The response was not elicited in reply to questions asked by plaintiff. Nor is the inference justified that the defendant sought the plaintiff for the sole purpose of ascertaining the origin of the fire. Defendant put no questions to the plaintiff, and asked for no information. According to defendant's own testimony, he did not ask plaintiff if he burned the mill, but at once charged plaintiff with attempting to sell timber which he had already sold plaintiff, and then substantially charged him with burning the mill. "I believe you burned the mill, and your neighbors believe it." "You know you burned the mill," etc. These are words of accusation, and not those which should be used in an inquiry intended only to elicit the truth. The defendant did not seek the plaintiff in privacy, and demand to know what plaintiff had to say concerning the burning of the mill, but made the accusation openly, in the presence of three persons. "Confidential communications," says Mr. Newell, "must not be shouted across the street for all passersby to hear." "He should choose a time when no one else is by, except those to whom it is his duty to make the statement." Page 477. From all the evidence it cannot be inferred that the communication was fairly and impartially made on a proper occasion, in a proper manner, and without other defamatory matter. These are essentials to a privileged communication, especially where the matter communicated charges, as in this case, a felony. Newell, p. 477.

The cases strongly relied upon by the learned counsel for the defendant are Adcock v. Marsh, 30 N. C. 360, and Brown v. Hathaway, 13 Allen (Mass.) 239. In the former, the communication was in private, and was in the strictest sense privileged; made, as held by this court, in the performance of a high moral duty. In the latter, the communication was made in the house of the plaintiff, and in reply to inquiries put by plaintiff, in presence of a police officer, who accompanied the defendant for the purpose of searching the house for stolen goods. The Supreme Court of Massachusetts held that the circumstances surrounding it made the communication privileged.

[5-§] 3. Upon the issue of damage, the defendant contended that there is no evidence upon which damages can be awarded, and further requested the court to charge: "It is incumbent on the plaintiff to show to the jury evidence that he has suffered damage, before he can ask you to award any to him." His honor refused to give the instruction, and the defendant excepted. The plaintiff asked for general damages and pleaded no special damages. General damages include actual or compensatory damages, and embrace compensation for those injuries which the law will presume must naturally, proximately, and necessarily result from the utterance of words which are actionable per se, such as the charge made in this case. Such damages include injury to the feelings, and mental suffering endured in consequence. General damages need not be pleaded or proved. 18 Am. & Eng. 1081, 1082, 1083, and cases cited in notes. General damages are sometimes called substantial damages, and are based upon the theory that it is competent for the jury to award, where the words are actionable per se, a figure which will fairly compensate the plaintiff for the injury sustained. Newell, p. 841. The right to recover compensatory damage is in no way dependent on the existence of malice upon the part of the defendant. 18 Am. & Eng. Enc. p. 1069. General damages also include punitive damages, which a jury in proper cases may exercise their discretion in awarding. His honor charged the jury: "That if, after considering this view of the evidence, the jury are satisfied by the greater weight of the evidence that the charge was made from personal malice, with the design and purpose to injure the plaintiff, or that the charge was made in such a manner that it showed a wanton and reckless disregard of the plaintiff's rights, the jury may, in addition to compensation, give exemplary or punitive damages, which is allowed as a kind of punishment, with a view of preventing similar wrongs in the future." His honor further charged that if the defendant was not actuated by malice the plaintiff can recover only compensatory damage. This is a clear and correct statement of the law. Odger, p. 291; 18 Am. & Eng. Enc. p. 1091, and cases cited; Newell, p. 842.

[9] The version of the occurrence given by plaintiff is sufficient evidence to be submitted to the jury as a basis for punitive damages.

No error.

(156 N. C. 353)

DALRYMPLE v. COLE

(Supreme Court of North Carolina. Oct. 25, 1911.)

1. PLEADING (§ 216*)—DEMURRER.

A demurrer points out the defects in the pleading demurred to, and extraneous matters cannot be called in aid to supply deficiencies, but the demurrer must stand or fall by the face of the pleading.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Pleading, Cent. Dig. §§ 535-539; Dec. Dig. § 214.*]

2. SPECIFIC PERFORMANCE (§ 114*)—COMPLAINT—SUFFICIENCY.

A complaint by a purchaser for specific performance, which shows that the vendor was married and that his wife did not join in the contract, but which does not show the existence of a judgment lien on the property at the date of the contract, or any prior mortgage reserving the homestead, or that the contract was void as to creditors and no homestead allotted in other land, is not demurrable; but defendants must answer, so that the facts may be disclosed and the vendor establish, if he can, the facts rendering the contract invalid under Const. art. 10, § 8, forbidding any disposition of the homestead except by deed signed by the owner and his wife.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Specific Performance, Cent. Dig. §§ 356-372; Dec. Dig. § 114.*]

Appeal from Superior Court, Moore County; Cooke, Judge.

Action by M. G. Dalrymple against T. W. Cole. From a judgment of dismissal, rendered on sustaining a demurrer ore tenus, plaintiff appeals. Reversed.

This action was brought to compel the specific performance of a contract to convey land, and was heard below upon a demurrer to the complaint, which alleged: That on the 15th day of October, 1910, the defendant for a valuable consideration, contracted and agreed in writing with the plaintiff to make, execute, and deliver to the plaintiff, his heirs and assigns, a good and sufficient deed of conveyance to the tract of land described in the complaint, with covenants of warranty, upon the payment to the defendant of the sum of $1,400, the purchase price agreed upon, within 90 days from the date of the contract; that the contract was duly recorded, and within the 90 days fixed in the contract the plaintiff notified the defendant that he elected to take and purchase the land in accordance with the terms of the contract, and would tender the $1,400 within the 90 days, and that he did actually tender said sum within the 90 days and demanded that the defendant make, execute, and deliver a deed in accordance with the terms of the contract, but that the defendant neglected, failed, and refused to execute and deliver the deed; and that the plaintiff is still ready, able, and willing to comply with the terms of the contract and pay the purchase money, upon the execution and delivery of the deed. That after the execution of said contract, the plaintiff actually paid or assumed the payment of $133.65 for the benefit of the defendant, which sum, it was agreed by the defendant, should be applied pro tanto to the purchase price of the lands under the contract. It was further alleged in the complaint that, at the time of the tender of the purchase money and the demand that the defendant execute and deliver the deed, there were mortgages executed by the defendant and his wife to certain parties named in the complaint and duly recorded in Moore county, which were and are liens on the land, and also a judgment docketed against the defendant, which was also a lien on said land, in favor of Mrs. S. D. Cole, the plaintiff in the judgment, and against the defendant, for the sum of $100, with interest and costs. The case on appeal states: "The court finds as a fact that the judgment referred to in the complaint was docketed May 6, 1910."

The defendant demurred upon the following ground: "That a cause of action is not alleged in the complaint, in that it appears upon the face of the complaint that the defendant is, and was at the time of the execution of the alleged contract referred to in the complaint, a married man, and that defendant's wife did not join in the execution of said alleged contract, and at the time of the execution of said alleged contract there was a docketed judgment, as well as recorded mortgages, both liens thereon, and that execution could have been issued upon said docketed judgment, and the alleged contract is therefore void and inoperative." It was admitted upon the argument of the demurrer that the defendant was at the time of the execution of the contract, and still is, a married man. That admission also appears upon the face of the complaint. At the hearing, and upon consideration of the demurrer, which was ore tenus, the court sustained the same, and dismissed the action of the plaintiff, and he appealed.

U. L. Spence and G. W. McNeill, for appellant. H. F. Seawell and R. L. Burns, for appellee.

WALKER, J. (after stating the facts as above). The defendant demurred to the complaint, upon the ground that it appeared therefrom that the plaintiff was a married man at the time the contract was made, that his wife is living, and that at said time there was a judgment against him which was duly docketed in the superior court and constituted a lien on his real estate, and that, as execution could have been issued on the judgment at any time after it was docketed, the contract was void, for the reason that it was an executory agreement to convey his land, and this could not be done, as he was entitled to a homestead, and his wife had not joined in the execution of the contract with privy examination, relying upon the provision of the Constitution (article 10, § 8) forbidding any disposition of the homestead, except by deed of the homesteader and "the voluntary signature and assent of his wife [thereto, which shall be] signified on her private examination, according to law."

It was said by Justice Avery in Hughes v. Hodges, 102 N. C. 250, 9 S. E. 441: "As between the creditor having a lien on the one side, and the debtor and his family on the other, the Constitution does create a right to a home for the benefit of the debtor's family in his lands—a home that may never be marked out by metes and bounds. The debts may be discharged before the homestead is allotted, and then the inchoate right, as applied to the debtor's land, no longer exists. But when the creditor reduces his claim to judgment, the law places him and the debtor at arm's length, and frustrates every effort of either to evade the section of the Constitution that gives the wife the veto power, by requiring an allotment of the homestead as antecedent to any sale, and her assent, with privy examination, before the improvident husband can dispose of it; so, if the debtor sells to defraud his creditor, when the latter moves in the court to set aside his deed and subject the land to his claim, the Constitution gives first the right to an undefined homestead, and the law, made in pursuance of the Constitution, ascertains its bounds as soon as he seeks to sell." He further says: "Until the owner contracts debts, there can be no undefined homestead right attaching to his land, and, unless his homestead has already been allotted, section 8, art. 10, of the Constitution, does not restrict his power to convey. If, however, the homestead has once been laid off at the instance of creditors, though the debts may be discharged, the restriction remains, and renders the joinder of the wife essential to a valid conveyance of it. The definition given in Adrian v. Shaw [82 N. C. 474] must be considered as modified and restricted in its application, so as to conform to the views we have expressed in this opinion." In the defendant's appeal in Hughes v. Hodges, at page 262 of 102 N. C., and page 441 of 9 S. E., Justice Avery, for the court, thus sums up the law: "The presumption of law is in favor of the validity of this and every other deed executed in due form. If the defendant seeks to have it declared void, because it was made in disregard of the requirements of section 8, art. 10, of the Constitution, the burden is upon him to show that the homestead right attached to the land and vitiated the conveyance, for the want of the joinder of the wife, with privy examination, for one of the three following reasons: (1) That a homestead had been allotted to him in the land described in the mortgage deed, either on his own petition or by an officer in accordance with law. (2) That there was an unsatisfied judgment or judgments that constituted a lien upon the land, when conveyed, and upon which execution might still issue, and make it necessary to have his homestead allotted, or a mortgage reserving an undefined homestead, and constituting a lien on the land that could not be foreclosed without allotting a homestead to the mortgagor in the land. (3) That the mortgage deed was void, because executed with intent to defraud the defendant's creditors, and that the mortgagor did not have a homestead allotted already in other lands. In order to rebut the presumption of validity by bringing the deed under the prohibition contained in section 8, art. 10, of the Constitution, one of these grounds of objection mentioned must be made to appear by any person who would raise a question as to the effect of the conveyance."

It is this construction of the Constitution upon which the defendant relies to invalidate the contract of sale or option. Justice Merrimon dissented from the judgment and opinion of the court, and held the view that the homestead right, and the protection guaranteed by the Constitution against a transfer thereof, without the assent and privy examination of the wife, does not depend upon any state of indebtedness, nor is it required that the homestead should have been actually allotted, or that a judgment lien or other conditions indicated in the opinion of the court, should exist before the provision of article 10, § 8, of the Constitution, which forbids a conveyance of the homestead without such assent and privy examination, would become operative. He also thought that the opinion of the court in Hughes v. Hodges was in conflict with prior decisions of this court in Jenkins v. Bobbitt, 77 N. C. 385, Lambert v. Kinnery, 74 N. C. 348, Beayan v. Speed, 74 N. C. 544, and Adrian v. Shaw, 82 N. C. 474, which he contended had settled the law to be that, without regard to any indebtedness of the husband, the homestead could not be conveyed without the assent and privy examination of the wife, but that the husband's deed was effectual to pass title to the land subject to the homestead. In Hughes v. Hodges the mortgage was executed January 8, 1876, when defendant's first wife, who did not join in the deed, was living. She died in 1881, and he was again married in 1882. There was no reservation of the homestead in the mortgage, and no judgment docketed against the mortgagor, nor was there any question of fraud involved. The suit was to foreclose the mortgage. The court below held that the land should be sold subject to the homestead, or only the "reversionary interest," as it was termed inaptly, but perhaps for the sake of convenient description, in the absence of a better word. This court, in an opinion by Justice Avery (with a dissenting opinion by Justice Merrimon, as already stated), reversed that decision and held that the deed passed the entire interest in the land to the mortgagee, incumbered only by the dower right of the first Mrs. Hodges, which expired at her death, and ordered a sale to be made accordingly.

In Joyner v. Sugg, 132 N. C. 580, 44 S. E.

122, it appeared that there was no judgment or other debt than those secured by the deed of trust, and no question of fraud, but the homestead right of Blaney Joyner was reserved in the deed. We held that J. A. E. Joyner, who bought at the sale under the deed of trust, acquired a good title in the land, subject to the homestead right of Blaney Joyner, as that was expressly retained in the deed, and that, as he had died, and the exemption right had ceased, a full and unincumbered title passed to her. It was further said, in arguendo, that the right to the homestead always exists and is guaranteed by the Constitution, but the homestead itself cannot come into existence until it has been "selected by the owner" of the land and actually allotted, and thereby identified, as decided in Mayho v. Cotton, 69 N. C. 294, and Hager v. Nixon, 69 N. C. 108, and as strongly intimated in Hughes v. Hodges, supra; but this expression, of course, must be viewed with due reference to the facts then under consideration, there being no judgment or other debt, no fraud, and no prior conveyance in which the homestead right had been reserved. In such a case the homestead could only be allotted upon application of the party entitled thereto. What is said in that case, therefore, is not at all in conflict with the decision in Hughes v. Hodges, supra. It was approved by this court recently, in Davenport v. Fleming, 154 N. C. 291, 70 S. E. 472, in which we held (in a concise and clear-cut opinion by Justice Hoke) that the constitutional provision against conveying the homestead without the joinder or assent of the wife, evidenced as therein presented, applied only and exclusively to the "homestead right," and, quoting from Joyner v. Sugg, it was further said: "A deed in trust by the husband, in which the wife does not join, reserving the homestead of the grantor therein, conveys the entire land contained in the deed of trust, subject only to the determinable exemption in $1,000 thereof from the payment of the debts of the grantor during his life," to which the learned justice added, "That case throughout is an apt authority in support of the present ruling."

[1] We have thus reviewed two of the recent cases upon this subject, not for the purpose of testing the relative strength or value of the different, and in some respects apparently conflicting, views to be found in some of the decisions upon the subject, but rather for the purpose of clearly defining the proposition, upon which Mr. Spence relied, in his able argument before us, to sustain the demurrer. He urged that the allegations of the complaint, with the finding of the judge as to the date of the judgment and the admission as to the marriage of the plaintiff at the time of the contract, showed that sufficient facts existed to invalidate the contract, under the decision in Hughes v. Hodges, supra, and Fleming v. Graham, 110 N. C. 374, 14 S. E. 922. But the weakness of this position appears when we consider that the office of a demurrer is to point out defects in the pleading, which is the object of attack, and it must stand or fall by the facts therein alleged, and extraneous matters cannot be called in aid to supply deficiencies, which is necessary to be done in order to show that the cause of action is bad. The doctrine of aider does not apply to such a case. "It is a fundamental rule of pleading that a demurrer will only lie for defects which appear upon the face of the pleading to which it is opposed, and must be decided without evidence aliunde, unless by consent of the parties. A speaking demurrer—that is, a demurrer which is founded on matter collateral to the pleading against which it is directed—is bad, and as such will be overruled. It is also a well-settled principle that, when a pleading is demurred to, resort cannot be had to other pleadings for the purpose of supporting or resisting the demurrer; but the demurrer must prevail or fall by the face of the pleading to which it is directed." 6 Enc. of Pl. & Pr. 297, 298. If the new or additional facts, which are required to point the objection, are contained in the demurrer, it is called a "speaking demurrer," and is not good pleading. Nor can the judge find facts to aid the defective pleading. It must be considered by itself and upon its own merits. The recent cases of Miller v. Railroad, 154 N. C. 441, 70 S. E. 838, and Brewer v. Wynne, 154 N. C. 467, 70 S. E. 947, furnish illustrations of the rule.

[2] There was no consent given by the plaintiff to the finding as to the date of the judgment; but he distinctly excepted to the judge's ruling, which is sufficient to include the said finding of fact. It does not appear, therefore, by the complaint, whether there was a judgment which was a lien upon the property at the date of the contract, nor that there was a prior mortgage or deed of trust reserving the homestead, nor that the contract was void as to creditors, and no homestead had been allotted in other land, so as to bring the case within one of the categories stated in Hughes v. Hodges; the presumption being in favor of the validity of the contract, and the burden being upon the defendant to show the contrary. It may also be remarked that the complaint does not allege that a homestead had not already been allotted to the defendant, nor is the value of the land stated. These allegations, which are omitted, may become material in certain phases of the question.

We must not be understood as passing upon the soundness of the objection to the complaint, even if any one or all of said facts had been alleged therein. We merely decide that, in the present state of the pleadings, the demurrer should have been overruled, and the defendant allowed to answer.

The facts may then be fully disclosed, no injustice will be done the plaintiff by assuming the existence of facts which do not clearly appear, and we may the better and the more safely consider and solve the interesting questions, as to the homestead right, which were argued before us. There was error in the respect indicated.

Error.

(156 N. C. 360)

LA ROQUE et ux. v. KENNEDY.

(Supreme Court of North Carolina. Oct. 25, 1911.)

1. EVIDENCE (§ 474*)—OPINION EVIDENCE—HANDWRITING.

A clerk of court, who had seen many instances of the handwriting of a register of deeds certifying to copies of deeds registered by him, could testify that a certificate, verifying copies of a deed, was in the register's handwriting.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Evidence, Cent. Dig. §§ 2196-2219; Dec. Dig. § 474.*]

2. APPEAL AND ERROR (§ 274*)—GROUNDS OF REVIEW—RESERVATION BELOW—ADMISSION OF EVIDENCE.

An objection that no evidence was introduced to locate the land covered by a deed cannot be considered on appeal, under an exception to the admissibility of a certified copy of the deed, on the ground that the authenticity of the certificate was not established.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Appeal and Error, Cent. Dig. §§ 1631-1645; Dec. Dig. § 274.*]

3. BOUNDARIES (§ 37*)—DEEDS—LOCATION OF LANDS.

Evidence of the location of land covered by a deed, offered to establish the ownership of land, need not come from living witnesses, but its location may be shown by the description of the deeds, or by evidence aliunde.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Boundaries, Dec. Dig. § 37.*]

4. WATERS AND WATER COURSES (§ 179*)—FLOWING LANDS—ACTIONS—EVIDENCE.

In an action for damages caused by flowing plaintiff's land by raising a milldam, in which plaintiff claimed title to the land, and a prescriptive right to flow the lands was involved, a witness testified that he cut some timber up the millpond some 15 years ago, and floated it down to the millpond. Held, that the evidence was admissible to show the height of the water where the timber was floated.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Waters and Water Courses, Dec. Dig. § 179.*]

5. APPEAL AND ERROR (§ 216*)—PRESENTATION BELOW—INSTRUCTIONS—NECESSITY OF REQUEST.

If the trial court did not correctly state the admissions of the parties in his instructions, his attention should have been called to his mistake at the time, and it cannot be first raised on appeal.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Appeal and Error, Dec. Dig. § 216; Trial, Cent. Dig. §§ 627-641.]

6. WATERS AND WATER COURSES (§ 179*)—MILLDAM—PREScriptive RIGHTS—EVIDENCE.

In an action for damages for overflowing plaintiff's land by increasing the height of a milldam, in which defendant claimed a prescriptive right to flow the land, held, that there was some evidence as to the location of the high-water.

*For other cases see same topic and section NUMBER in Dec. Dig. & Am. Dig. Key No. Series & Rep'r Indexes ter mark in 1844, so as to authorize the submission of that question in instructions.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Waters and Water Courses, Dec. Dig. § 179.*]

7. WATERS AND WATER COURSES (§ 179*)—JURY QUESTION—MILLDAM—FLOWAGE—PRESCRIPTION.

In an action for damages for overflowing land by increasing the height of a milldam, in which defendant claimed a prescriptive right to flow the lands, held, that there was evidence of a user by defendant long enough to give him an easement in the land overflowed, so as to authorize the submission of that question.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Waters and Water Courses, Dec. Dig. § 179.*]

8. TRIAL (§ 139*)—JURY QUESTION—CONSIDERATION OF EVIDENCE.

In determining whether there was any evidence of a contention by defendant authorizing its submission to the jury, defendant's evidence must be taken as true.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Trial, Cent. Dig. §§ 332-341; Dec. Dig. § 139.*]

9. ADVERSE POSSESSION (§ 16*)—OVERFLOWING LAND.

An overflowing by water of land claimed under a deed by the person causing the overflow may be an act of adverse possession.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Adverse Possession, Dec. Dig. § 16.*]

10. BOUNDARIES (§ 54*)—SURVEYS—COSTS—DISCRETION OF COURT.

While under Revisal 1905, § 1504, permitting the court to order a survey when boundaries are brought into question, and to make an allowance therefor, to be taxed as costs of the suit, the amount of the allowance is within the court's discretion, after considering evidence as to the survey, but the court cannot decline to make an allowance because it thinks that the surveyor's charges are exorbitant.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Boundaries, Cent. Dig. §§ 268-277; Dec. Dig. § 54.*]

11. BOUNDARIES (§ 54*)—SURVEYS—COSTS.

In view of Revisal 1905, § 1504, permitting the court to order a survey where boundaries are disputed, and to make a proper allowance therefor, to be taxed as costs, payments made by the parties to the surveyor, without an order of court, are at their peril, and cannot control the allowance made by the court.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Boundaries, Cent. Dig. §§ 268-277; Dec. Dig. § 54.*]

12. HUSBAND AND WIFE (§ 244*)—ACTIONS—COSTS—SEPARATE ESTATE OF WIFE.

Upon judgment for defendant, in an action brought by a husband and wife for injury to her land, a judgment for costs should not be charged against the wife's separate estate, though the ordinary judgment for costs against her was proper.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Husband and Wife, Dec. Dig. § 244.*]

Appeal from Superior Court, Lenoir County; Justice, Judge.

Action by O. K. La Roque and wife against W. L. Kennedy. From a judgment for defendant, plaintiffs appealed, and defendant also appealed from rulings of the court as to costs. Affirmed on plaintiffs' appeal, and reversed and remanded on defendant's appeal, with instructions.

The plaintiff brings this action to recover damages for ponding water on her land, located on Southwest creek. She alleges in her complaint, among other things: "That the defendant is the owner of a mill site known as 'Kennedy's Mill' in said Southwest township, which said mill is built across Southwest creek below plaintiff's lands, and the defendant makes use of the waters of said Southwest creek to supply power for the operation of said mill. That on or about ——— day of March, 1906, the defendant wrongfully, unlawfully, and without any rightful authority raised the dam of said mill about three feet or more over and above the height which he and the former owners of the said mill had maintained it before, and thereby raised the water in said creek, and caused same to overflow upon the feme plaintiff's lands hereinbefore mentioned, to her great damage and injury."

The plaintiff admitted on the trial that the defendant was entitled to maintain his dam at 10 feet 6 inches, and the controversy between them was as to the land between the watermark with the dam at 10 feet 6 inches, and the watermark with the dam at 12 feet 2 inches. The defendant contended that he was the owner of the land beyond the watermark with the dam at 12 feet 2 inches high, and, if not the owner, that he had acquired the right to pond the water by prescription.

The plaintiff offered evidence tending to prove that, prior to 1906, the dam was 10 feet 6 inches high, and that in that year it was raised to 12 feet 6 inches, and that water was thereby ponded on the land claimed by the plaintiff. The plaintiff also offered a chain of title, extending to 1869, and evidence that this title covered the land in controversy, and of adverse possession for a length of time sufficient to ripen color of title. It was admitted that the records of Lenoir county, except two old index books, were destroyed by fire in 1880.

The defendant offered in evidence deeds and other evidences of title, which, if admissible, traced his title to 1769. Among other evidences of title, the defendant introduced a paper, purporting to be a deed from Major Croom to Richard Caswell, of date 1772. The following certificate was on this paper: "I certify the above deed, probate and enrollment to be true copies from the records of Lenoir county, this 12th March, 1851. Stephen White, Register."

Plato Collins was examined in reference to this paper, and testified as follows: "Q. How long have you been clerk of the court? A. 11 years. Q. It is in evidence that Stephen White was register of deeds; have you ever seen any of his handwriting in his official capacity as register of deeds? A. I haven't seen the original records; they were destroyed. I have seen papers with Caswell's and White's signatures in a good many instances, certifying to the records when he was register of deeds. Q. Have you seen that handwriting in his official capacity, purported and accepted as his handwriting? A. Yes, sir. Q. You mean you accepted it as clerk? A. It has been presented to me as his handwriting, and we accepted it as such; I have seen a good many of them. Q. From what you have seen, can you form an opinion satisfactory to yourself whether these papers are in Stephen White's handwriting? A. Yes, sir; I have seen it frequently; it is the same handwriting. Q. Will you look at that paper and say whether the certificate is in the handwriting of Stephen White? A. I think it is."

Cross-examined: "Q. Have you seen any of his writing that has been questioned before? A. No, sir. Q. That was seen by people and accepted as his handwriting? A. Yes; they were presented to me by parties who held them, and accepted by me as his handwriting. Q. In fact, you never saw any public records admitted to be in his handwriting? A. That matter was never brought in question by anybody. Q. The papers were accepted by you and put on the public records? A. Yes, sir."

Redirect examination: "Q. Look at that paper and see what you think about it? [Hands witness paper.] Is that the same as that? A. Yes, sir; that purports to be Major Croom to Richard Caswell, certified March 12, 1851. Q. Will you look at that deed from Richard Caswell to Jesse Cobb, certified April, 1855? Look at his signature? A. That doesn't look as much like it as the other; the characteristics of it are the same. Q. In your opinion, are the handwriting on those two papers in his handwriting? A. They have the same characteristics; I say it is the same handwriting that was purported to me to be in his handwriting. Q. Also Jesse Cobb to John Cobb, certified 16 April, 1855; is that the same handwriting? A. Yes, sir. Q. You have said you had seen the writing of White when he was register of deeds in 1851; have you seen other writings of his? A. When I was a boy, I saw receipts my father got when he used to trade with White, and we had been getting receipts; they got burned up when my father's house burned up; they were in the same handwriting as these. Q. From your recollection of the handwriting of Stephen White, are you able to form an opinion satisfactory to yourself that the signatures submitted to you are the handwriting of Stephen White? A. Yes."

Two other papers were admitted on the same evidence. The plaintiff excepted.

In the chain of title introduced, there was a deed from Jesse Cobb to John Cobb, of date March 10, 1800, and the division of the John Cobb lands, of date December 16, 1844. In this division, under which the defendant claims, the land covered by the mill "to the high-water mark of the mill pond" is allotted. The deed to Richard Caswell and others called for land on Southwest creek.

E. P. Loftin, for the defendant, testified, among other things, that he had known the Cobb mill about 65 years; had lived about a mile or a mile and a half from the mill house. That when he first knew the mill old man Cobb was in charge, and after his death his son, Jesse Cobb. It was known as Cobb's mill. Johnny Jackson had charge next; then Kennedy and Wooten; then Mr. Kelly. That he had known the boundaries of this land, known as the Cobb mill land for fully 65 years. That he knows the present boundary of the high-water mark of the mill property, and that it is lower now than when the Cobbs had it. That he saw trees there above the island when he was a boy, and the water is about the same thing now. That there is a holly, and the water does not come up as close as when he used to fish there; also a gum there that has high-water marks on it, made with an axe, that are 12 or 14 inches above the present high-water mark. That the holly has marks or bruises on it, and that he had chained his boat to the holly, when fishing, at the time Kelly had the mill. That the water now does not quite cover the island in the pond, and that he had seen it covered by water in times past. That the dam was old and worn down in 1851 and 1852, and that he does not think the water is as high now as it was then.

The defendant testified, among other things, as follows: That he bought the mill from J. J. Jackson, and rented it to J. C. Kennedy from year to year for five years. At the expiration of the time, he sold it to J. P. Kelly, and delivered it to him in January, 1885. Kelly kept the mill for 18 years; then he bought it from Jackson, commissioner. J. C. Kennedy bought the half interest from J. C. Wooten, and the property was sold under that mortgage to pay that debt. Bought it from Jackson. Both J. C. Kennedy and J. C. Wooten are dead; J. C. Kennedy died about 16 or 18 years ago; Wooten died about the same time. That he has the deed to him from Mr. Jackson. That he was put in possession of what is known as the Cobb mills—the same property he owns now. That at that time the water of the pond was higher than it is now, and not as high as he has seen it. At the time, the west end of the dam and the road, in his judgment, was about as it was then—the Kinston end. Some of the papers refer to it as the north side; it is a little northwest. On that end the road is about like it was then; the dam doesn't extend quite as far as the pond. This road on the Kinston side of the dam stops before it gets to the rim of the pond and the public road, and the natural level of the land for his part of the water of the pond. At that time the pond was about level with the road, but it was not running over. Then further down, where Cheney shows on the maps the little island, there are several projections—hummocks or tussocks. That is the point he has designated as a little island; the top of that shows, but the smaller ones do not show. They all show now. That he commenced to repair in the summer of 1905, and completed about the 1st of March, 1906. The water is lower than when he took charge. The Strawberry Branch run is in the center of Strawberry swamp. At this point it turns towards the island at right angles. When it reaches the upland, there is a natural embankment there, fourteen inches or two feet. All along the run of Strawberry swamp down to where you can see it on the swamp side of the embankment is cypress, gum, and such growth that grows in water on La Roque's side of the run. On the embankment there is a growth that usually grows on uplands. That he saw only one dead pine; that looked to be dead 10 or 12 years to him; it is rotten. There is one small pine standing in water, about 15 or 20 steps from the rim of high-water mark. The high-water mark seems to be along the bank of the stream. There is a slight line that runs along there, which would indicate water has been there; and from the observation he made, and the growth, the high-water mark used to be at least 12 inches higher. The holly and dogwood are right on the edge of the embankment; they are about 10 or 12 feet from the rim of the water. It slopes there gradually, and a boat could not go within 20 or 30 feet of them now. That he noticed the bark of the trees; they looked like old bruises on them. Observed a gum; it is in the same locality, but 25 feet from them. The gum is farther to the water. The water would have to raise a foot and a half to reach that. On the island they speak about, he only saw one small pine that lies almost to the water; it didn't seem to be thrifty.

Jesse Evans, for the defendant, testified as follows: "Q. Where do you live? A. Dover. Q. Are you acquainted with the Cobb mill? A. Yes, sir; I have known it all my life; when I first knew it, it was Cobb's mill. I am 55 years old. Q. Will you state whether you have had any business relations there, and if so, what? A. I cut some timber (cypress) up the pond under Mr. Kelly's instructions; that was 15 years ago. I made arrangements with Kelly on what they call Strawberry branch, and floated it down to the pond and put it at the pond—this end of the pond. (Objected to; objection overruled; exception.) The Court: I am admitting it to show the condition of the water up there. Q. You say you floated it down on this end of the pond? What is that end of the pond? A. I claim it is right along the road, where the waters come; what you might say is an open place."

There was other evidence on the part of the defendant as to marks on the land and trees, tending to show an old water line beyond the present one, and that the water had been ponded on the land continuously since 1850 or 1860, by the defendant and those under whom he claims, as far or further than at this time, and there was evidence to the contrary by the plaintiff.

His honor charged the jury fully, to which there was no exception except as follows: (a) "The plaintiff admits that the defendant is entitled to pond water on the land covered by water by a dam of 10 feet 6 inches, but that he is not entitled to pond water on the land covered by water between that height and the height of the water when maintained at 12 feet 2 inches." The plaintiffs excepted to the foregoing portion of the court's charge.

(b) "The defendant introduces a deed in partition dated 1844, which calls in the high-water mark of the mill pond, but the deed does not state the height of water in the mill pond in 1844. The defendant claims title by possession, but does not show a grant from the state, but claims the same character of title that the plaintiff does. The defendant claims that the high-water mark mentioned in those proceedings of the Cobb mill, in partition proceedings, fixes the boundaries under which the defendant and those under whom he claims claim their title. Now, if you find the plaintiff has ripened her title, then you inquire where the defendant has a right and title, or where he has been in possession. The defendant claims he has been in possession of the land up to the boundary known as the high-water mark. Now, the burden upon that question would be upon the defendant to show you by the greater weight of the evidence, or at least to your satisfaction, where that high-water mark is, either by the deed of partition or by some other deed, that the boundary is fixed and determined in some way." The plaintiffs excepted to the foregoing portion of the charge.

(c) "So, then, it is a question for you to ascertain whether the defendant has shown where the high-water mark is, either by showing you the height of the dam at the time the deed was made or where the high-water mark actually was." The plaintiffs excepted to the foregoing part of the court's charge.

(d) "The defendant claims that you should answer the issue, 'No'; that the plaintiff is not the owner of any part of the land covered by water at the height of 12 feet 2 inches at the dam, nor any part of it; that he has proven to your satisfaction that he is entitled to the land covered by water at the height of 14 feet." The plaintiffs excepted to the foregoing portion of the court's charge.

(e) "Now, the right of the defendant to pond the water back on this land might arise from two grounds: First, if the defendant owns the land covered by water by a dam up to 12 feet 2 inches, he has the right to pond the water back, and if you find that he owns it, then the question for you is, Has the defendant exercised the right continuously for 20 years to keep the water at 12 feet 2 inches? The defendant claims that he has the right to keep it back to where it is, and even higher, by reason of so keeping it for 20 years continuously, and that if he has that right he has what is known as a prescriptive right, and is entitled to the easement of 12 feet 2 inches. The defendant claims he has the right to maintain a dam at 14 feet, and that the dam has been maintained at 14 feet for more than 20 years, or at least it has been ponded as high as it is now for 20 years continuously." The plaintiffs excepted to the foregoing portion of the court's charge.

(f) "The court charges you that, if you find by the greater weight of the evidence that the defendant owned the land, then he would have the right to pond the water back as often as he pleased; also the court charges you if he had the right to pond the water upon the land, and that right was acquired by prescription, then, if he did it for 20 years continuously, and ponded it back at a point at or above what it is now, and acquired that easement by 20 years continuous use, he would still be entitled to maintain it." The plaintiffs excepted to the foregoing portion of the court's charge.

The jury returned the following verdict:

"(1) Is feme plaintiff the owner and in possession of any part of the tract of land described in the complaint not covered by water ponded back by a dam at the height of 12 feet and 2 inches? If so, what part thereof? Answer: Yes; all above water at 12—2.

"(2) Is feme plaintiff the owner and entitled to possession of any part of the land described in the complaint covered by water ponded back by a dam at the height of 12 feet and 2 inches? If so, what part thereof? Answer: No.

"(3) Has defendant wrongfully injured plaintiff's land by unlawfully ponding water on plaintiff's land? Answer: No.

"(4) What damages, if any, is plaintiff entitled to recover of defendant? Answer: None."

A judgment was rendered upon the verdict, and the plaintiffs appealed.

Loftin & Dawson, G. V. Cowper, and McLean, Varner & McLean, for plaintiffs. George Rountree, W. D. Pollock, and Rouse & Land, for defendant.

ALLEN, J. (after stating the facts as above). The plaintiff objects to the admissibility of the deed to Richard Caswell on two grounds:

[1] (1) That the evidence of the clerk, Plato Collins, as to the handwriting of Stephen White, who was register of deeds of Lenoir county in 1855, is incompetent. This objection is fully met by the interesting and valuable opinion of Justice Hoke, at this term, in Nicholson v. Lumber Co., 72 S. E. 86. In that case, a certificate of survey of a land warrant, dated in 1841, and signed by Ruel Windley, surveyor, was admitted in evidence on the testimony of John B. Respass, Jr., which was as follows: "Q. Do you know Ruel Windley's handwriting? A. I know it in this way: He raised my father, and was very devoted to him, and often in looking over his papers, which I have now, my father would show me, and say, 'This is grandfather's signature.' Q. Have you seen a great deal of that writing? A. Yes, sir. Since I have been surveying, I have seen quite a lot of it. By family reputation, my great-grandfather was a surveyor, and my father was a surveyor." A small map, marked "A," was handed to witness, and he was asked: "Q. Whose handwriting is this, if you know? A. That is Ruel Windley's from the source of information I have. By the Court: Q. Do you mean to say that somebody told you that that identical paper was in Ruel Windley's own handwriting? A. Not this one. By counsel for defendant: Q. From the writing you have seen, purporting to have been written by Ruel Windley, is that, or is it not, his handwriting? A. Yes, sir; that is his handwriting." And the court, in speaking of this evidence, says: "On these facts and accompanying testimony, we are of opinion that the plat with the certificate was properly received in evidence, being admissible as an ancient document, and also by reason of competent testimony tending to show that the certificate just below the plat, and giving the corners of same, was signed or subscribed in the handwriting of Ruel Windley, deceased. * * * The means of requiring the requisite knowledge, to enable one to form and express an opinion as to handwriting, has, in case of ancient documents, and of necessity, been extended to include a witness who, in the course of his duty, has had full opportunity and frequent occasion to observe and note the handwriting in other ancient documents, entirely free from suspicion, and states that he has thus been enabled to form a satisfactory opinion as to the handwriting of the ancient document in question. 3 Taylor's Evidence, Ames' Notes, 1229, 21; Chamberlayne, Best on Evidence, p. 231; Starkie on Evidence, § 521."

[2] (2) That no evidence was introduced to locate this and other deeds. This objection cannot be considered under an exception to the admissibility of the deed. If the defendant offered a certified copy of the deed, and identified the handwriting of the officer who made the certificate, it was competent evidence, and if afterwards he failed to locate the land the defendant should have called the matter to the attention of the court by a motion to withdraw the deeds, or by a request for a special instruction.

[3] It is not, however, essential that evidence of location should come from witnesses for the defendant, or from living witnesses. The deeds may contain descriptions, which, without the aid of extrinsic proof, may indicate where the property is situate. In this case, the witnesses described the locality minutely, and according to all the evidence there was an ancient mill on the land claimed by the defendant, and on Southwest creek. In the deed to Caswell, and in the other deeds, the land is particularly described, and is said to be on Southwest creek, and to include the gristmill on said creek. We think the deeds were properly admitted.

[4] We also think the evidence of Jesse Evans was competent, restricted as it was by his honor.

[5] The first exception to the charge cannot be sustained. We must assume that the judge correctly stated the admission of the parties, and if by inadvertence he did not it ought to have been called to his attention at the time, and cannot be made the subject of exception for the first time in the case on appeal.

[6, 7] The other exceptions to the charge are upon the ground: (1) That there is no evidence where high-water mark was in 1844. (2) That there is no evidence of an adverse possession by the defendant. (3) That there is no evidence of a user by the defendant that will confer an easement. In our opinion, there was some evidence as to the location of the high-water mark in 1844, and of a user by the defendant for a sufficient length of time to confer an easement. A fair interpretation of the evidence of the witness Loftin is that in 1851 the water was maintained higher than now, and that at that time the dam was old and worn down; and there is other evidence of marks on the trees and land, and of the changes in the land, which were properly left to the jury.

[8] If the evidence of the defendant is accepted as true, and we must do so in considering the question whether there is evidence, there can be no doubt of a user under a claim of right for more than 20 years, which would be necessary to confer an easement.

[9] The objection that there is no evidence of an adverse possession is based on the following statement of Chief Justice Ruffin, in Green v. Harmon, 15 N. C. 161: "The overflowing of land by an act not done on it, but by stopping a water course below, on one's own land, is not an ouster of the owner from the land overflowed. There is no entry, which is necessary to make a disseisin. The remedy for the injury is not trespass, but an action on the case for the consequential damages. Howard v. Bankes, 2 Bur. 1113. Hence, however long it may continue, it affords, of itself, only a presumption of a grant of the easement, and not of the conveyance of the land." The principle declared is not applicable to the facts in this case, as, according to all the evidence here, the dam was on the land of the defendant, and the water does not extend beyond the claim of the defendant. It is, however, manifest from an examination of the whole case that it was not the purpose of the court to declare that overflowing land, claimed under a deed, is not an act of adverse possession, as is shown by the concluding language of the opinion: "Although cutting of timber and overflowing the land do not amount, of themselves, to an ouster, yet, being done without the leave of the owner, they give character to the entry into another part, and also furnish evidence of it to the owner. The jury might fairly infer from it, not only that the defendant did claim the land, but that the lessor of the plaintiff knew he claimed it and was not a mere wrongdoer without color of title."

The case involves, almost entirely, questions of fact, and having been fairly tried we cannot disturb the judgment.

No error.

Defendant's Appeal.

The defendant's appeal presents two questions. Upon the coming in of the verdict, the defendant moved the court for judgment for the entire cost of the action, including the cost of the survey. The court declined to tax the cost of the survey against the plaintiffs, on the ground that one-half had been paid by each party as the survey proceeded, and the court stated that in his opinion the bill was exorbitant, and declined to allow it to be taxed in the bill of costs. Defendant excepted. The defendant then moved the court to adjudge the cost of the action to be charged upon the separate real and personal estate of the feme plaintiff, Nora A. La Roque. The court declined to grant the motion, and the defendant excepted.

The record discloses that the cost and expense of the survey were advanced equally by the plaintiffs and defendant upon the demand of the surveyor, as the survey progressed, and at the time of the trial one-half of the cost of the survey had been paid by the plaintiffs and one-half by the defendant. The entire cost of the survey was about $750.

[10] It is provided in section 1504 of the Revisal that the court may order a survey when the boundaries of land shall be drawn in question in any pending action, "and for such surveys the court shall make a proper allowance, to be taxed as among the costs of the suit." The amount of the allowance is within the discretion of the court, after considering the evidence as to the work done, but the judge cannot decline to act because he thinks the charges made by the surveyor are exorbitant. The statute requires him to fix the allowance, and directs that it shall be taxed as costs.

[11] The payments to the surveyor, without an order, were made by the parties at their own peril, and cannot control the action of the judge.

[12] The defendant was not entitled to have the judgment for costs made a charge against the separate estate of the feme plaintiff. The ordinary judgment for costs was rendered against her, which was proper.

The cause is remanded to the end that the allowance to the surveyor be fixed, and that it be taxed as costs, to the use of the defendant, provided that in no event shall such amount, to the use of the defendant, exceed the amount he has paid.

Reversed.

(156 N. C. 402)

TOWN OF MURPHY v. C. A. WEBB & CO.
(Supreme Court of North Carolina. Oct. 25, 1911.)

1. MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS (§ 918*)—PUBLIC IMPROVEMENTS—CONSTITUTIONAL PROVISIONS—"NECESSARY EXPENSES."

In the absence of legislative restriction, there is no objection to the issuance of bonds for the expenses of a town, without a popular vote, and bonds issued by a town to extend its water and sewerage system and make street improvements fall within the class of "necessary expenses."

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Municipal Corporations, Dec. Dig. § 918.*]

For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, vol. 5, pp. 4715, 4716.]

2. MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS (§ 72*)—LEGISLATIVE CONTROL—MUNICIPAL DEBTS AND BONDS.

Under Const. art. 8, § 4, which makes it the duty of the Legislature to provide for the organization of municipal corporations, and to restrict their power of taxation and borrowing money, the Legislature may require a popular vote as a condition to the issue of municipal bonds, even for necessary purposes, and may otherwise limit the power of cities and incorporated villages to tax or to contract debts.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Municipal Corporations, Cent. Dig. § 176; Dec. Dig. § 72.*]

3. MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS (§ 64*)—LEGISLATIVE CONTROL IN GENERAL.

Cities and towns are but instrumentalities of the state for the administration of local government, and their authority as such may be enlarged, abridged, or withdrawn by the Legislature.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Municipal Corporations, Dec. Dig. § 64.*]

4. CONSTITUTIONAL LAW (§ 70*)—JUDICIAL FUNCTIONS—WISDOM OF LEGISLATION.

The policy and wisdom of statute law is a matter for the Legislature, and courts must apply the law as they find it.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Constitutional Law, Cent. Dig. §§ 129-132; Dec. Dig. § 70.*]

5. STATUTES (§ 154*)—REPEAL—REFERENCE TO AND IDENTITY OF ACT REPEALED.

The charter of the town of Murphy (Priv. Laws 1889, c. 239) § 17, prohibited the town from borrowing money or issuing bonds, unless authorized by the qualified voters of the town. Priv. Laws 1911, c. 387, entitled "An act to extend the corporate limits of the town of Murphy," by section 1, amended section 1 of the charter, and, by section 2, in terms repealed section 17 of chapter 239 of the "Public" Laws of 1889; that chapter of the Public Laws being a railroad incorporation act, in no way referring to the town of Murphy. Held that, as the chapter and section repealed corresponded with the only chapter and section of the Laws of 1889, public or private, that related to the same subject-matter, the word "public" in the reference might be treated as a clerical error, which would not defeat the intention to repeal section 17 of the charter.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Statutes, Cent. Dig. § 221; Dec. Dig. § 154.*]

6. STATUTES (§§ 47, 214*)—CONSTRUCTION—MISNOMER OR MISDESCRIPTION.

A misdescription in a statute will not vitiate the enactment, provided the means of identifying the thing intended, are clear, and in aid of construction the court may call in anything in the act itself, or even the erroneous description, though the reference to the extraneous matter may not in itself be full and accurate.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Statutes, Cent. Dig. §§ 47, 290; Dec. Dig. §§ 47, 214.*]

7. MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS (§ 918*)—PUBLIC IMPROVEMENTS—STATUTORY PROVISIONS.

Section 17 of the charter of the town of Murphy (Priv. Laws 1889, c. 239), was repealed by Priv. Laws 1911, c. 387, § 2, Revision 1905, § 2918, concerning the incorporation and powers of towns, which provided that "this chapter shall apply to all incorporated cities and towns where the same shall not be inconsistent with special acts of incorporation or special laws in reference thereto," and section 2916, specifying the powers of towns, was amended by Pub. Laws 1911, c. 86, ratified two days before the amendment to the charter by Priv. Laws 1911, c. 387, § 2. Held, that Pub. Laws 1911, c. 86, was not intended to affect the power to issue bonds without a vote given the town of Murphy.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Municipal Corporations, Cent. Dig. §§ 1919-1923; Dec. Dig. § 918.*]

Appeal from Superior Court, Cherokee County; Webb, Judge.

Action by the Town of Murphy against C. A. Webb & Co. On a case agreed there was judgment for the plaintiff, and the defendants appeal. Affirmed.

This case was brought to test the validity of certain bonds, issued by the plaintiff, for the purpose of extending or enlarging its water and sewerage system and of making street improvements, and was heard in the court below upon the following case agreed:

(1) The plaintiff is a municipal corporation, chartered by the name aforesaid, and organized under and by virtue of chapter 239 of the Private Laws of 1889, and the acts amendatory thereof, and especially chapter 387 of the Private Laws of North Carolina of 1911.

(2) On the 31st day of August, A. D. 1911, the plaintiff contracted with the defendants to pay, of the par value of $25,000, which are to draw interest at the rate of 6 per cent., and to run for a period of 30 years, and the proceeds of which are to be used for extending the water and sewerage system of the town of Murphy, and for making certain necessary street improvements.

(3) The plaintiff claims that it has the right to issue the bonds under and by virtue of its charter, to wit, chapter 239 of the Private Laws of 1889, as amended by chapter 387 of the Private Laws of 1911, and of a resolution which was adopted by the board of commissioners of said town, on the 6th day of September, 1911, and that no vote of the people is required.

(4) The defendants have refused to carry out said contract, by receiving and paying for the said bonds, for the reason that section 17 of said chapter 239 of the Private Laws of 1889 does not permit the said town to borrow money or issue bonds, unless authorized by the qualified voters of said town.

(5) The plaintiff claims that section 2 of said chapter 387 of the Private Laws of North Carolina of 1911 repeals said section 17, and permits and authorizes the town to issue the bonds without submitting the question of their issue to a vote of the qualified voters of the town. The defendants contend that said chapter 387, Private Laws 1911, does not repeal said section 17.

(6) It is also agreed that chapter 239 of the Private Laws of 1889 is the charter of the town of Murphy, and that chapter 239 of the Public Laws of 1889 is "an act to incorporate the Fayetteville & Albemarle Railroad Company."

(7) It is agreed between the plaintiff and the defendants that the superior and the Supreme Courts be requested to pass upon the question herein raised, and that judgment be entered according to the final decision which may be given, and, if the court is of the opinion that the bonds are valid, that the defendants be required to receive and pay for the bonds; but, if the court is of the opinion that the bonds are invalid, then the defendants shall not be required to pay for said bonds.

The court, after hearing argument and upon consideration of the facts, rendered judgment for the plaintiff, and the defendants appealed.

Chas. A. Webb, for appellant. E. B. Norvell, for appellee.

WALKER, J. (after stating the facts as above). [1, 2] It is thoroughly well settled by our own decisions that for the necessary expenses of a county or town bonds may be issued without a vote of the people authorizing the same, and the purposes for which the bonds in question were issued fall within the class of necessary expenses. Fawcett v. Mount Airy, 134 N. C. 125, 45 S. E. 1029, 63 L. R. A. 870, 101 Am. St. Rep. 825; Wadsworth v. Concord, 133 N. C. 587, 45 S. E. 948; Robinson v. Goldsboro, 135 N. C. 382, 47 S. E. 462; Commissioners v. Webb, 148 N. C. 122, 61 S. E. 670; Bradshaw v. High Point, 151 N. C. 517, 66 S. E. 601; Ellison v. Williamston, 152 N. C. 147, 67 S. E. 255. But while this power which resides in the municipal body is not restricted by the Constitution, it was provided by that instrument, with reference thereto, as follows: "It shall be the duty of the Legislature to provide for the organization of cities and incorporated villages, and to restrict their power of taxation, assessment, borrowing money, contracting debts and loaning their credit, so as to prevent abuses in assessments and in contracting debts by such municipal corporations." Const. art. 8, § 4. It has therefore been held by this court that the Legislature may require a favorable popular vote, as preliminary to the valid issue of municipal bonds, even for necessary expenses, and may otherwise restrict or limit the power of cities and incorporated villages (or towns) to tax or contract debts, either directly or indirectly, and when the Legislature has exercised the power thus conferred upon it the local authorities must heed its mandate and proceed accordingly. Evans v. Commissioners, 89 N. C. 154; Wadsworth v. Concord, supra; Robinson v. Goldsboro, supra; Perry v. Commissioners, 148 N. C. 521, 62 S. E. 608; Burgin v. Smith, 151 N. C. 566, 66 S. E. 607; Jones v. Newbern, 152 N. C. 64, 67 S. E. 173; Ellison v. Williamston, supra. For this reason, we held, in Wharton v. Greensboro, 146 N. C. 356, 59 S. E. 1043, that the act of 1889, c. 486 (Revisal, § 2977), was a constitutional enactment and that under it, where other provision had not been made by subsequent legislation, no city or town could contract a debt, pledge its faith, or loan its credit for the maintenance of internal improvements, or for any special purpose whatsoever, to an extent exceeding in the aggregate 10 per cent. of the assessed value of the real and personal property situated therein, and that any levy of taxes above that limit would be null and void.

[3] While in respect to cities and towns, it is said that the power of the Legislature to control them, in the exercise of their municipal powers, is somewhat more restricted than in the case of counties, yet both are but instrumentalities of the state for the administration of local government, and their authority as such may be enlarged, abridged, or withdrawn entirely at the will or pleasure of the Legislature. Lilly v. Taylor, 88 N. C. 490; Jones v. Commissioners, 137 N. C. 592, 50 S. E. 291; Wharton v. Commissioners, 146 N. C. 356, 59 S. E. 1043; Burgin v. Smith, 151 N. C. 562, 66 S. E. 607.

[4] Whether these provisions of law to be found in the Constitution and statutes, and as construed by this court, are in accordance with a sound and wise public policy, and whether some additional curb should not be placed upon the power vested in municipalities to tax, so as to prevent the present tendency towards extravagance and the other evils in the administration of their affairs, is a matter which is assigned, under our form of government, to the good sense and wisdom of the Legislature. We must apply the law as we find it to be, not as we think it should be.

[5] Having stated these general principles, it must be admitted, in consideration thereof, that the plaintiff in this case, the town of Murphy, had the power to issue the bonds for the purpose of making the improvements described in the resolution of its board of commissioners, without any vote of the people therein, unless restrained by some act of the Legislature from so doing. It is conceded that by Private Laws of 1889, c. 239, § 17, such a restraint was imposed, and that if that section is still in force the bonds cannot be lawfully issued without the sanction of the people, to be signified at the polls by a majority vote of the qualified registered voters of the town. But it is contended that section 17 of that act was repealed by Private Laws of 1911, c. 387, § 2. The latter section provides for the repeal of section 17 of chapter 239 of the Public Laws of 1889; whereas that chapter incorporates the Fayetteville & Albemarle Railroad Company, and makes no reference whatsoever to the town of Murphy, or to its corporate affairs. The original charter of the town of Murphy is chapter 239 of the Private Laws of 1889, and section 17 thereof is the one which relates to the power of the town to create a public debt, and places a restriction upon that power by requiring the approval of the people at the polls, before any such debt is contracted. Section 1, c. 387, of the Private Laws of 1911, amends section 1, c. 239, of the Public Laws of 1889, the two sections referring to the same subject-matter, viz., the territorial limits of the town; the later act extending the same. A bare statement of the facts is sufficient to convince any reasonable mind that a clerical mistake was committed in referring to section 17, c. 239, of the Laws of 1889 as being a part of the Public Laws of that year; it being manifest that the Private Laws were intended, as the two acts relate to the town of Murphy, and chapter 239 of the Public Laws of 1889 to the incorporation of a railroad company in another part of the state.

[6] The very question presented here was discussed and decided in Fortune v. Commissioners, 140 N. C. 322, 52 S. E. 950, wherein we said: "One difficulty in construing the act, and an insuperable obstacle, as the plaintiff's counsel contend, in the way of enforcing the provision which we have quoted, is that there is no reference therein to any particular chapter of the Laws of 1905. It is argued that this is a patent ambiguity which defeats the operation of that clause. 'A misdescription or misnomer in a statute will not vitiate the enactment or render it inoperative, provided the means of identifying the person or thing intended, apart from the erroneous description, are clear, certain, and convincing.' Black, Int. of Laws, § 58. Under this rule, we may call to our aid anything in the act itself, or even in the alleged erroneous description, which sufficiently points to something else as furnishing certain evidence of what was meant, though the reference to the extraneous matter may not in itself be full and accurate. The rule, even when literally or strictly construed, does not require that the erroneous description shall be altogether rejected in making the search for the true meaning; but it may be used in connection with anything outside of the statute to which it refers, and which itself, when examined, makes the meaning clear. The erroneous description may in this way be helped out by extraneous evidence. Black, supra, § 38. But ours is not so much an erroneous, as an inaccurate, description, and the question is whether its words are adequate to express with sufficient certainty the intention of the Legislature. It has been held that if a later act expressly refers to a designated section of an earlier one, to which it can have no application, but there is another section of the prior act to which, and to which alone, in view of the subject-matter, the later act can properly refer, it will be read according to the manifest purpose of the Legislature, and the misdescription will not prevent the reasonable construction that the Legislature intended to refer to the latter section. School Directors v. School Directors, 73 Ill. 249; Plank Road Co. v. Reynolds, 3 Wis. 287; Black, supra, § 28." That decision clearly covers this case in principle, and it has been approved in the following cases: Commissioners v. Stedman, 141 N. C. 448, 54 S. E. 269; McLeod v. Commissioners, 148 N. C. 77, 61 S. E. 605; Pullen v. Corporation Commission, 152 N. C. 548, 68 S. E. 155. As said in the Fortune Case: "We have no doubt as to the intention, and conclude that the mere designation of the section was sufficient, under the circumstances, for us to identify with certainty the chapter and section to which the reference was made."

We may add thereto, so as to emphasize the striking similarity between the two cases, that the reference in this case by chapter and section, corresponding as it does with the only chapter and section of the Laws of 1889, public or private, that relate to the subject-matter, is fully sufficient to show the purpose of the Legislature, and the word "public" in the reference may be treated as a misprision of the draftsman or copyist, and the error should not be allowed to defeat the otherwise plainly and accurately expressed will of that body. The case of Improvement Co. v. Commissioners, 146 N. C. 353, 59 S. E. 1014, is also directly in point. There "Washington county" was inserted in the House Journal for "Robeson county," in recording the passage of the bill in that body, but the number of the bill corresponded with the number of a bill to authorize the issue of bonds by Robeson county. This and other "pointers" and "earmarks" were held sufficient to show that Robeson county was intended, instead of Washington county, in the House record; the reference in the latter to Washington county being manifestly a mere clerical error, which was held insufficient to defeat the plain legislative purpose.

Since this opinion was prepared, our attention has been called to an act of the Legislature entitled, "An act to amend ch. 73, section 2916, of the Revisal, concerning towns, so as to confer upon cities, towns and municipalities power to construct and maintain waterworks, sewerage systems and other public utilities," being chapter 86 of the Public Laws of 1911. This act is not mentioned in the case agreed, nor is there any reference to it in the brief of counsel, and it seems to have been overlooked, but we are now asked to consider it, and determine whether it has any application to the facts of this case. This is a most reasonable request of counsel, as it is important that the validity of the bonds in question should be free from all doubt or uncertainty.

[7] We do not think after a careful reading of the statute that it was intended to affect bonds issued by the town of Murphy, under its charter and the amendments thereto. If the general act of 1911 applies to any municipality which has special provisions upon the same subject, and this we are not now required to decide, it does not apply to this case, as we have virtually held at this term in Red Springs Hotel Co. v. Town of Red Springs, 72 S. E. 887, since the statute was called to our notice. If it did not apply to that case, it certainly does not to this one. There the amendment to the charter of the town was passed at the session of 1911, a few days before the general law was enacted, while in this case the charter was amended, so as to authorize the issue of bonds without a vote of the people, two days after the general act was ratified, showing very clearly that the said act was not intended to apply to the town of Murphy. Besides, the act of 1911 is an amendment of chapter 73 of the Revisal and section 2916 thereof. It is provided by section 2918 as follows: "This chapter shall apply to all incorporated cities and towns where the same shall not be inconsistent with special acts of incorporation, or special laws in reference thereto." This section shows that this case is not affected by the act of 1911, for the issuing of the bonds without an election is specially provided for in the amended charter of the town.

We find no error in the case or record, and therefore affirm the judgment.

Affirmed.

(39 S. C. 547)

GRIFFIN v. ATLANTIC COAST LINE R. CO.

(Supreme Court of South Carolina. Nov. 1, 1911.)

1. CARRIERS (§ 113*)—INJURY TO GOODS—LIABILITY—ACCEPTANCE FOR SHIPMENT.

Where goods are accepted for shipment, the placing of the goods upon its platform renders a carrier responsible for any damages from fire originating within its right of way, unless released from liability by the shipper.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Carriers, Dec. Dig. § 113.*]

2. CARRIERS (§ 113*)—LOSS OF GOODS—LIABILITY—WAIVER—"CONSENT."

Where a carrier accepts cotton intended for shipment at some future time, the cotton will be upon its platform with the carrier's "consent," under Civ. Code 1902, § 2135, making a carrier responsible for loss by fire originating on its right of way, except for property which has been placed upon its right of way illegally or without its consent.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Carriers, Dec. Dig. § 113.*]

For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, vol. 2, pp. 1437-1441; vol. 8, p. 7612.]

3. CARRIERS (§ 136*)—ACTION FOR LOSS—QUESTION FOR JURY.

In an action for the loss of cotton destroyed by fire while on defendant's platform, the question whether it had been placed there by defendant's consent as cotton tendered for immediate shipment, notwithstanding a rule that the carrier assumed no risk for cotton put upon its platform, unless tendered for immediate shipment, held for the jury.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Carriers, Dec. Dig. § 136.*]

Appeal from Common Pleas Circuit Court of Sumter County; George E. Prince, Judge.

"To be officially reported."

Action by T. N. Griffin against the Atlantic Coast Line Railroad Company. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendant appeals. Affirmed.

Mark Reynolds and Lucian W. McLemore, for appellant. Thos. G. McLeod, for respondent.

JONES, C. J. This action was for the recovery of damages for the destruction by fire of certain cotton belonging to plaintiff, while upon the platform of the defendant company within the limits of its right of way. There was evidence to the effect that notice had been given to the plaintiff that the defendant assumed no risk for cotton so placed, unless same was tendered for immediate shipment, but that such cotton would be entirely at the owner's risk. The evidence also showed that the cotton in question was placed upon such platform, subsequent to the giving of such notice and without any tender thereof for immediate shipment, and was subsequently destroyed by fire originating within the limits of defendant's right of way. There was also testimony which is claimed by plaintiff as tending to show that, notwithstanding such notice, the cotton in question was placed upon said platform "with the consent" of the defendant, within the meaning of section 2135 of the Civil Code.

At the conclusion of the entire testimony in the case, the defendant moved for a direction of a verdict in its favor, upon the ground that the evidence admitted of no other inference but that the cotton was placed upon the defendant's platform, either without its consent, or if with its consent, then upon the understanding between the parties that it was so placed at the entire risk of the plaintiff himself. This motion was refused by the presiding judge, it being held by him that, while the evidence showed that the cotton was so placed upon the platform after such notice given by the defendant, there was still testimony to go to the jury upon the question of waiver by the defendant of the terms and requirements of such notice. The appeal questions the correctness of this refusal to direct a verdict in favor of the defendant. Substantially the question presented for determination is whether there was evidence to go to the jury upon the issue as to the defendant's consent to placing of the cotton upon the platform as cotton intended for shipment.

[1, 2] If the cotton was accepted for shipment, whether such shipment was intended to be immediate or remote, the placing of the same upon the platform would render the defendant responsible for any damage thereto from any fire originating within the right of way, unless the plaintiff had released the defendant from such liability. The defendant could waive its own rule that it would not accept cotton upon its platform or right of way unless intended for immediate shipment, and could, notwithstanding its rule, accept the same intended for shipment, not immediately, but at some future time, in which case the cotton would clearly be upon the right of way with the consent of the defendant, within the meaning of the word "consent" as used in the statute. Yarborough v. Railway, 78 S. C. 103, 58 S. E. 936. It is not questioned that the fire originated within the right of way of the defendant company, and that defendant would be responsible for the damage to the cotton, if the same had been placed on the platform for immediate shipment; and the case just cited shows that the defendant would be liable for such damage, if the cotton was accepted for shipment, though such shipment was not intended to be immediate, notwithstanding its stipulation by notice that it would not accept cotton, unless for immediate shipment. The notice given in this case was substantially the same as that which was shown in the case of Yarborough v. Railway, 78 S. C. 103, 58 S. E. 936. In that case the notice was in substance to the effect that the railroad company would not be responsible for cotton placed on the platform until the same was "tendered to and accepted by the company for shipment." In the case at bar the notice was to the effect that the defendant would not be responsible for cotton placed on its platform until the cotton "is placed for immediate shipment."

[3] There was testimony tending to show that, subsequent to the service of the notice already mentioned, plaintiff's agent was informed by the same agent of the defendant through whom such notice had been given that the same was not intended to apply to plaintiff; and there was also testimony to the effect that, after plaintiff had been procuring, in compliance with such notice, the issuance by defendant of bills of lading for small lots of cotton at brief intervals, he or his agent was informed by defendant's agent that bills of lading need not be procured for contemplated shipments until the entire shipment was ready; such testimony tending to show the resumption of a previously existing course of dealing between the parties by which cotton was placed for shipment upon defendant's platform in small lots from day to day, and bills of lading therefor were issued from time to time when any lot was completed for shipment. The evidence of the plaintiff's agent was that the defendant's agent instructed him to "go ahead and complete the lots in a reasonable time," and that this instruction was given with reference to the matter of the lot of cotton intended for shipment, and had relation to the time when bills of lading should be procured for the same; and there was testimony tending to show that this instruction was given to save the necessity for issuing daily bills of lading for small lots of cotton. There was also testimony from which the inference might be drawn that the cotton here in question, and which was destroyed by fire while upon the defendant's platform, was so intended for ultimate shipment, and was so placed in pursuance of the instructions of defendant's agent.

The judgment of the circuit court is therefore affirmed.

GARY, A. J., and HYDRICK, J., concur.
WOODS, J., did not sit.

(89 S. C. 535)

ROBERT R. SIZER & CO. v. DOPSON et al.
(Supreme Court of South Carolina. Oct. 25, 1911.)

1. REPLEVIN (§ 83*)—CLAIM AND DELIVERY—TRIAL—QUESTION FOR JURY.

On evidence in an action of claim and delivery, in which plaintiff took possession of lumber consigned by defendant to third parties, held, that the issue whether defendant's act in shipping the lumber was a conversion of plaintiff's property was for the jury.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Replevin, Dec. Dig. § 88.*]

2. REPLEVIN (§ 11*)—CONDITIONS PRECEDENT—DEMAND.

Where property of plaintiff has been converted, a demand for its possession is not necessary before an action of claim and delivery.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Replevin, Cent. Dig. §§ 85-97; Dec. Dig. § 11.*]

3. REPLEVIN (§ 63*)—CLAIM AND DELIVERY—ANSWER—DAMAGES.

An answer, in an action of claim and delivery in which plaintiff has taken possession of lumber consigned by defendant to third parties, which denies plaintiff's allegations of ownership, alleges the value of the lumber to be $300, and sets up a claim of $1,000 damages by reason of plaintiff's having seized and withheld the property "carelessly, willfully, recklessly, and maliciously," is a sufficient basis for proof of both actual and punitive damages.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Replevin, Dec. Dig. § 63.*]

4. TROVER AND CONVERSION (§ 44*)—VALUE OF PROPERTY—MEASURE OF DAMAGES IN GENERAL.

In actions for conversion or for the taking and detention of personal property, the general rule is that the measure of damages is the value of the property with interest thereon, and the jury may give the highest value up to the time of the trial, and may take into account any benefits therefrom received by the party wrongfully in possession.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Trover and Conversion, Cent. Dig. §§ 260, 261; Dec. Dig. § 44.*]

5. TRIAL (§ 337*)—VERDICT—DISREGARD OF INSTRUCTIONS.

A verdict of $500 damages for the defendant in an action of claim and delivery, where lumber shipped by him to third parties had been seized by plaintiff, cannot be sustained as a finding of punitive damages, expressly recoverable in such actions under Act Feb. 13, 1907 (25 St. at Large, p. 483), where it is contrary to an instruction that the evidence did not warrant punitive damages.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Trial, Cent. Dig. § 790; Dec. Dig. § 337.*]

6. REPLEVIN (§ 63*)—SPECIAL DAMAGES—NECESSITY OF PLEADING.

In an action of claim and delivery, in which the plaintiff has seized lumber shipped by defendant to third parties, damages to the defendant because the seizure of the lumber prevented him from getting money to pay his men, made it necessary for him to mortgage his house to get money for that purpose, and so crippled him financially that he was obliged to suspend his business of sawing lumber and turn over his property to the plaintiff, who had a mortgage on it, are "special damages," not recoverable unless specially alleged.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Replevin, Dec. Dig. § 63.*]

7. REPLEVIN (§ 62*)—CLAIM AND DELIVERY—"GENERAL DAMAGES."

"General damages" in actions for conversion or for the taking and detention of personal property, provable under a general allegation, are those inferred by the law itself because the immediate, direct, and proximate result of the act complained of, as an injury to the property itself, or to its value by detention.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Replevin, Cent. Dig. § 224; Dec. Dig. § 62.*]

For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, vol. 4, pp. 3059, 3060; vol. 8, p. 7669.]

8. REPLEVIN (§ 62*)—CLAIM AND DELIVERY—"SPECIAL DAMAGES."

"Special damages" in actions for conversion, or for the taking and detention of personal property, not provable without special allegation thereof, are those which, although the natural, are not the necessary, consequences of the act; being outside of the costs and disbursements allowed by law, and consequential in their nature.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Replevin, Cent. Dig. § 224; Dec. Dig. § 62.*]

For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, vol. 7, pp. 6572, 6573; vol. 8, p. 7802.]

Appeal from Common Pleas Circuit Court of Hampton County; R. W. Memminger, Judge.

"To be officially reported."

Action by Robert R. Sizer & Company against B. H. Dopson and another. Judgment for defendants, and plaintiff appeals. Reversed and remanded.

E. F. Warren (B. A. Hagood and A. R. Young, of counsel), for appellant. B. R. Hiers and W. S. Tillinghast, for respondents.

WOODS, J. Robert R. Sizer & Co., a corporation, brought this action of claim and delivery against B. H. Dopson and the Charleston & Western Carolina Railroad Company, and thereunder took from the railroad company a lot of lumber loaded on cars consigned by Dopson to A. R. Sykes and Jackson Lumber Company, Savannah, Ga. The railroad company, being a mere carrier in possession, has no interest in the cause. Dopson answered, denying the plaintiff's allegation of ownership, alleging the value of the lumber to be $300, and setting up a claim of $1,000 damages by reason of the plaintiff's having seized and withheld the property "carelessly, willfully, recklessly, and maliciously." On the trial the circuit court instructed the jury that there was no evidence warranting a verdict for punitive damages. The verdict was in favor of the defendant for the return of the property, or its value, $300, and $500 damages. The court refused a motion for a new trial made on the ground, as appears from the order of the court, that the verdict was "excessive and unsupported by the evidence."

Error is assigned in the instruction given to the jury that the verdict must be in favor of the defendant Dopson if they found that the plaintiff had not demanded possession of the lumber before bringing the action. There was no demurrer to the complaint, and the correctness of the instruction depends upon the issue made by the evidence.

The defendant was the owner of a saw-mill and was largely indebted to the plaintiff for advances for the purchase of timber and for other purposes. The evidence on the part of the plaintiff tended to prove that the defendant had agreed that all the lumber manufactured by him except boards should be the property of the plaintiff corporation and consigned to it to be sold, and that the plaintiff was to sell the lumber and apply the proceeds to the defendant's debt. The evidence on the part of the defendant was to the effect that there was no such agreement, and that the plaintiff had no right to the possession of the lumber in dispute. The defendant repudiated the claim of the plaintiff by loading the lumber on cars and consigning and shipping it to other persons.

[1] If the plaintiff was the owner of the property at defendant's mill, the defendant's act in shipping it to other persons was a distinct conversion of it. The issue whether there had been a conversion of plaintiff's property by the defendant was thus clearly made by the evidence; and this issue could be decided only by the jury.

[2] It was error to disregard the conflict thus made by the testimony, and instruct the jury as a proposition of law that the plaintiff could not recover unless the jury found that it had demanded the possession from the defendant before bringing the action; for, if defendant had converted the property of the plaintiff, demand for possession before action was not necessary. Jones v. Dugan, 1 McCord, 428; Harris v. Saunders, 2 Strob. Eq. 370, note; McPherson v. Neuffer, 11 Rich. 287; Ladson v. Mostowitz, 45 S. C. 388, 23 S. E. 49; Girardeau v. Sou. Express Co., 48 S. C. 421, 26 S. E. 711; Holliday v. Poston, 60 S. C. 103, 38 S. E. 449.

[3] The answer was a sufficient basis for proof of both actual and punitive damages. On the subject of damages the jury were instructed: "I have not been able to discover any evidence here which would warrant you in finding punitive damages. So I am going to charge you in this case that you can only find actual damages, in case you find that he (the defendant) is entitled to damages. Such actual damages as he suffered from the taking and detention. That means such actual damages as he suffered, as was reasonably consequent upon the taking and withholding of the property from the defendant's possession by Sizer & Co. You cannot go into remote and speculative elements of damages, such as what he might have lost by way of profits on the mill, but get down to exactly what he lost, as a reasonable consequence, as a proximate result, of the taking and withholding of the property." The plaintiff's contention is that under this charge there was no support in the evidence for a recovery of $500 damages, and that the refusal to grant a new trial on this ground was error of law.

*For other cases see same topic and section NUMBER in Dec. Dig. & Am. Dig. Key No. Series & Rep'r Indexes

[4] In actions for conversion or for the taking and detention of personal property, the general rule is that the measure of damages is the value of the property with interest thereon, and the jury may give the highest value up to the time of the trial. Rogers v. Randall, 2 Speers, 38; Gregg v. Bank of Columbia, 72 S. C. 458, 52 S. E. 195, 110 Am. St. Rep. 633. And if the party wrongfully in possession has received any benefit therefrom the jury may take that into account. Buford v. Fannen, 1 Bay, 273, 1 Am. Dec. 615.

[5] Punitive damages may now be recovered under the act of 1907 (25 Stat. 483); but the verdict of $500 could not be sustained as a finding of punitive damages because the presiding judge instructed the jury that the evidence did not warrant punitive damages. The instruction was also given that remote or speculative damages must be excluded, and that a verdict for defendant should embrace only such damages as were a proximate result of the taking and withholding of the property.

[6] The defendant estimated his losses due to the taking and detention of the lumber at $1,500 to $2,000. This estimate was based upon the statement that the seizure of the lumber prevented him from getting the money to pay his men, made it necessary for him to mortgage his house to get the money for that purpose, and finally so crippled him financially that he was obliged to suspend his business of sawing lumber and turn over his property to the plaintiff corporation, which had a mortgage on it. These damages were all special and remote—such as would not ordinarily result from the taking of $300 worth of lumber. It was not alleged in the answer, nor was there any evidence offered tending to prove, that the plaintiff had notice that such far-reaching consequences would result from taking by process of law under a claim of right three car loads of lumber. This being so, it seems clear that such damages were not recoverable.

[7, 8] In Loeb v. Mann, 39 S. C. 465, 18 S. E. 1, the court thus states the rule: "The complaint does not make any claim for special damage, and the circuit judge charged that the case was not one for vindictive damages, so that it must be considered as a plain and ordinary case for the recovery of personal property, and damages for its detention. 'To recover damages for the detention of personal property (the property having been delivered), special damage cannot be recovered unless expressly alleged.' Lipscomb v. Tanner, 31 S. C. 49 [9 S. E. 733]. What is this special damage which cannot be proved without being specifically alleged? There is certainly a lack of clearness in the authorities on the subject; but it seems to us that what are called 'general damages,' as contradistinguished from 'special damages,' are admitted in evidence under a general allegation—indeed, are inferred by the law itself—for the reason that they are the immediate, direct, and proximate result of the act complained of, as, for instance, an injury to the property itself, or its value, by detention, etc.; while damages which, although the natural, are not the necessary, consequence of the act, being outside of the 'costs and disbursements' allowed by law, and consequential in their nature, are not admissible in evidence without special notice of the claim in the allegations of the complaint, and are therefore called 'special damages.' It is elementary that damages, in the ordinary sense, must be the immediate result of the act complained of." The same rule was laid down by the Supreme Court of the United States in Vance v. Vandercook, 170 U. S. 468, 18 Sup. Ct. 645, 42 L. Ed. 1111, where it was held that the damages contemplated in such actions are those which result directly from the taking and detention, and cannot include the destruction of business.

The verdict of $500 was not supported by the evidence and was contrary to the charge of the presiding judge, and for this reason the motion for a new trial should have been granted.

It is the judgment of this court that the judgment of the circuit court be reversed, and the cause be remanded to that court for a new trial.

JONES, C. J., and GARY, A. J., and HYDRICK, J., concur.

(39 S. C. 551)

MULDROW v. MIXSON.

(Supreme Court of South Carolina. Nov. 1, 1911.)

1. EXECUTORS AND ADMINISTRATORS (§ 303*)—DISTRIBUTION OF PERSONALTY—VALIDITY.

A beneficiary under a will, having taken a piano at a valuation agreed upon with the other beneficiary, and having kept it for two years, is properly chargeable in the administrator's accounts with that amount.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Executors and Administrators, Cent. Dig. §§ 1229-1242; Dec. Dig. § 303.*]

2. PARTITION (§ 5*)—PAROL PARTITION OF PERSONALTY—APPROVAL.

A court of equity may approve a parol partition of personal property followed by possession among minors who have reached years of discretion, if the circumstances were such as would have warranted the court to make such division on application.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Partition, Cent. Dig. §§ 13-17; Dec. Dig. § 5.*]

3. EXECUTORS AND ADMINISTRATORS (§ 495*)—COMMISSIONS—RIGHT TO.

An administrator was properly allowed commissions on rents collected by him from land belonging to beneficiaries, and not acquired under the will involved, in carrying out testator's desire to provide for the education of the beneficiaries.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Executors and Administrators, Cent. Dig. §§ 2088-2116; Dec. Dig. § 495.*]

Appeal from Common Pleas Circuit Court of Barnwell County; Robt. Aldrich, Judge.

Action by Essie L. Muldrow against R. M. Mixson, administrator. Decree for defendant, and plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

Willcox & Willcox, for appellant. Bates & Simms, for respondent.

JONES, C. J. This is an appeal from a decree of the circuit court affirming the judgment of the probate court of Barnwell county, adjusting the accounts of R. M. Mixson, as administrator with the will annexed of the estate of Willa I. Loud. The exceptions present two questions: (1) Whether the administrator was justified in charging appellant with a piano at a valuation of $400; (2) whether the administrator had a right to take charge of the real estate of plaintiff, not acquired under the will of her mother, and to charge commissions on the rents collected therefrom.

[1] Willa I. Loud died testate in the summer of 1905, and upon the death of the executrix named in the will the defendant, Mixson, at the solicitation of the beneficiaries, was appointed administrator with the will annexed. In the fourth clause of the will the testatrix devised and bequeathed to her children, Cary Smith Loud and Essie Ashton Loud, all of her property, of every nature and kind whatsoever, and in the sixth clause she declared it her will and desire that her said daughters shall be educated, and empowered the executor to use the rents and profits of the real estate for the purpose of the education, maintenance and support of the said children until they are 21 years of age or shall marry, and upon said children attaining the age of 21 years or upon their marriage they are to "take the property" freed from all limitations or trusts whatsoever. The property of which Mrs. Loud died seised and possessed consisted of a dwelling house and one or more vacant lots in the town of Williston, S. C., and some personal property, consisting of household furniture, which was sold by the administrator, except a hat rack and a set of furniture, which the children divided among themselves, and about which there is no dispute, and except the piano in dispute. The beneficiaries agreed that the piano was worth $400, and objected to a sale of it for less than that sum, and, fearing that it would be sold at a sacrifice if exposed to public sale, they objected to such sale. The piano was then taken to the house of the administrator, and there remained until March, 1907, when the plaintiff, who had married E. A. Muldrow in January, 1907, wanted the piano and decided to take it at the valuation, and requested that it be shipped to her at Florence, S. C., which was done with the consent of other beneficiary, Cary. At that time Essie, Mrs. Muldrow, was about 18 years old, and Cary, who afterwards married Guy Vaughn, was about 20 years old. The plaintiff kept and used the piano for more than two years without objection. According to the testimony $400 was a reasonable valuation of the piano. The administrator in his accounts has charged plaintiff with $400, the value of the piano, and credited her with $200, one-half thereof. Both the probate and circuit courts concur in sustaining this as proper under the circumstances, and we affirm their conclusion.

[2] A court of equity may approve a parol partition of personal property followed by possession among minors who have reached years of discretion, if the circumstances were such as would have warranted the court to make such division on application. There is nothing in the circumstances of this case to show any unfairness. The plaintiff, who had been taking instruction in music, wanted the instrument in her own home, and agreed to take it at the valuation of $400, which the testimony shows was reasonable, and did take and use the same for more than two years before any attempt was made to turn it back to the administrator. A just consideration of the rights of the other beneficiary, who might sustain loss by a forced sale of the piano after such lapse of time, ought to induce the court to sanction the parol partition, fairly made between the parties. Both the probate court and circuit court construed the will as authorizing the beneficiaries to take their shares of the estate on their marriage, not only as to real estate, but as to personal property, and that this involved authority to exercise some choice and agreement as to division after marriage, although before reaching full age. There is force in this view, and no doubt the administrator felt warranted in delivering the piano to the plaintiff after her marriage, upon the agreement between the parties interested. We, however, do not rest our conclusion upon this construction of the will.

[3] With reference to the second question, we think it was not unjust or improper to allow the administrator to charge commission on rents collected by him from real estate belonging to plaintiff and her sister, and not acquired under the will. It is true it was not strictly the duty of defendant as administrator to collect these rents, but he was concerned to carry out the wishes of the testatrix to provide for the education of these young ladies. They had no other person to look after their land, secure tenants, and collect the rents, and they wished him to do so. His services appear to have been beneficial, and the circuit court has commended the fidelity of the administrator to his trust. The charge is but a reasonable compensation for the services rendered, and should be sanctioned.

The judgment of the circuit court is affirmed.

(89 S. C. 561)

ROWE v. MOORE et al.

(Supreme Court of South Carolina. Nov. 1, 1911.)

1. WILLS (§ 608*)—CONSTRUCTION—ESTATES DEVISED—APPLICATION OF RULE IN SHELLEY'S CASE—INTENTION OF TESTATOR—"HEIRS OF HER BODY."

A testator, in item 10 of his will, devised land unto his daughter during her natural life, and then absolutely to the heirs of her body forever, and in item 3 he devised land to his son for his natural life, and then to the heirs of his body forever; the child or children of one of his children dead to take the share of his or their parent. The other items of the will, wherein an absolute estate was not devised, were similar to item 10, save that some omitted the word "absolutely" before "heirs of her body"; while item 13 stated that it was the testator's will and intention that none of his children taking a life estate under any of the foregoing items should have power of alienation. Held that, in view of the provision last mentioned, the words "heirs of her body," used in item 10, and those same words used in the other items, must be taken as meaning children; and, such being the testator's intent, the rule in Shelley's Case does not apply, and the daughter took a mere life estate.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Wills, Cent. Dig. §§ 1372-1378; Dec. Dig. § 608.*]

For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, vol. 4, pp. 3267-3271.]

2. WILLS (§ 440*)—CONSTRUCTION—INTENTION OF TESTATOR.

In construing a will, the intention of the testator is to be gathered from the entire instrument, and must be given effect, if lawful.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Wills, Cent. Dig. § 956; Dec. Dig. § 440.*]

3. WILLS (§ 608*)—CONSTRUCTION—ESTATES DEVISED—APPLICATION OF RULE IN SHELLEY'S CASE.

Though still in force, the rule in Shelley's Case does not apply to a devise for life, remainder to the devisee's heirs or heirs of body, where those words are so qualified by additional words as to show an intention that they are used to indicate a new stock of inheritance, and are not mere words of limitation.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Wills, Cent. Dig. §§ 1372-1378; Dec. Dig. § 608.*]

Appeal from Common Pleas Circuit Court of Marlboro County; S. W. G. Shipp, Judge.

"To be officially reported."

Action by Martha Moore Rowe against Marvin W. Moore and another. From a judgment for defendants, plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

The following is the opinion of Shipp, J., of the court below:

"This is an action for specific performance heard by me at chambers, while presiding in the Fourth circuit, at Dillon, S. C., at the March term of court, 1911. The hearing at chambers was consented to by all parties interested in the action. The plaintiff was represented by her counsel, Knox Livingston, Esq., and the defendant Marvin W. Moore by his counsel, J. W. Le Grand, Esq., and the infant defendant was represented by his guardian ad litem, Walter S. Rowe.

"Oral arguments on the questions presented by the pleadings, and printed briefs containing points and authorities, were submitted to me by counsel on both sides. On account of the importance of the questions presented, I have reserved my opinion until this Saturday, the 13th day of May, 1911. This is an agreed case, and has resolved itself into a legal question, and involves only the construction of the will of Milton A. J. Moore, who, according to the proceedings, departed this life in the county of Marlboro, state of South Carolina, on the 8th day of February, 1903, leaving of full force and effect his last will and testament, of which his widow, Alice G. Moore, and his brothers, J. D. and J. A. W. Moore, were nominated executors, all of whom thereafter qualified and entered upon the discharge of their duties as such executors.

"The plaintiff and the defendant Marvin W. Moore are children of the testator, and the infant defendant, Walter S. Rowe, Jr., is the only child of the plaintiff. By item 10 of his last will, Milton A. J. Moore devised certain real estate therein described to his daughter, Martha Moore (now Rowe).

"On the 12th day of January, 1911, a written agreement was entered into between Martha Moore Rowe and the defendant Marvin W. Moore, by the terms of which Martha Moore Rowe agreed to convey 'or secure to be conveyed unto the said Marvin W. Moore, his heirs and assigns forever, by a good and indefeasible title in fee simple, free from all incumbrance, all that certain piece, parcel or tract of land, lying and being situate in the county of Marlboro, in the state aforesaid, containing one hundred and twenty-six acres, more or less, bounded by the public highway leading from Bennettsville to Cheraw, and by lands of said Marvin W. Moore; this being the same tract of land devised in and by the last will and testament of her father, the late Milton A. J. Moore, to the said Martha Moore Rowe, and is designated on a general plat of the land of said testator made by J. R. Parker, surveyor, as tract No. 3 of the McCollum lands."

"The consideration of such purchase was $15,000, to be paid as set forth in the agreement, but, the details of such agreement being immaterial for the decision of the question to be determined by this court, I will refrain from quoting the same.

"After the agreement was executed by both parties, and on the day of January, 1911, the plaintiff executed in due form under her hand and seal, a title to the premises agreed to be conveyed, and tendered same to the defendant Marvin W. Moore, who refused to accept the deed, claiming as his reason for such refusal that the plaintiff, Martha Moore Rowe, did not receive any greater than a life estate under item 10 of her father's will, and therefore could not convey to him a good and indefeasible title, in fee simple, free from all incumbrance, to the property agreed to be conveyed.

"It appears that the defendant Marvin W. Moore is willing to carry out his agreement, provided a good and indefeasible fee-simple title to the premises can be made to him by the plaintiff. Upon the refusal of Marvin W. Moore to accept the title offered, this consent action for specific performance was commenced.

"By agreement, 'the question and only question submitted to the determination and judgment of the court is, "Can the plaintiff, Martha Moore Rowe, convey said tract or parcel of land, by good and valid deed in fee simple, she having issue of her body still living?" If yea, then the court will decree the specific performance of said contract on the part of the defendant the said Marvin W. Moore, upon the delivery to him of the warranty deed of said Martha Moore Rowe, for said tract or parcel of land.' * * *

[1] "The property which is the subject of this action was devised to plaintiff by item 10 of Milton A. J. Moore's will, and the plaintiff contends that this item is complete in itself, and does not necessitate the construction of any other part of the will of Milton A. J. Moore, in order to ascertain its meaning, and that by this item she received a fee-conditional estate under the rule in Shelley's Case, and upon the birth of issue, to wit, Walter S. Rowe, Jr., such estate was raised to a fee simple, and that she now has full right and power in herself to convey the premises devised to her in item 10 by an indefeasible fee-simple title.

"Item 10 of the will is as follows: 'I will and devise unto my daughter, Martha Moore, for and during her natural life, and then absolutely to the heirs of her body forever, one hundred and twenty-six acres of the McCollum lands, known on Plat of Parker, as No. 3.' The defendant Marvin W. Moore contends that the words 'heirs of her body' in item 10 mean children, and that this can be easily understood by construing the entire will, and that to hold that item 10 is complete in itself will defeat the manifest intention of the testator, and will thereby place a strict construction on the words 'heirs of her body'; whereas, it will appear from a construction of the entire will and codicils attached thereto that it was clearly the intention of the testator that the words 'heirs of her body' should mean children; that it is manifest that the words 'heirs of her body' were used to represent children in item 3 of the will.

"Such part of item 3 as is material to the construction of item 10 is as follows: 'After the death of my wife, I will and devise the said one hundred and fourteen acres of land unto my son, John Milton Moore. Also on his reaching the age of twenty-one years, I also will and devise to him, fifty acres of the Webster lands, and fifteen acres of the land purchased from A. W. Moore, and the thirty-two acres of land bought from Mrs. E. C. Moore, to have and to hold to my said son, for and during his natural life, and then to the heirs of his body forever, the child or children of one of his children dead, to take the share of his or their parent.'

"It is clear to my mind that the testator used the words 'heirs of the body' in the sense of children in item 3, and it would be against reason to hold that the testator used the words 'heirs of his body' in the sense of children in item 3, and in other items of the same will, in making devises to others of his children, uses the words 'heirs of her body' in any other sense than that of children. Items 4, 5, and 6 gave to each party named therein absolute estates; of this fact there can be no doubt. Items 7, 8, 9, 11, and 12 are identical with item 10, with the exception that in some of said items the word 'absolutely' precedes the words 'heirs of the body,' while in others this word is left out. The word 'absolutely' is used in item 10. While this word taken alone does not aid in evincing the intention of the testator to use the words 'heirs of the body' in the sense of children, still, when construed in connection with all other parts of the will, this word does tend to strengthen the contention that it was the purpose of the testator to create, under item 10, a life estate only, and not a fee conditional.

"In item 13 it will be observed that the testator said: 'It is my will and intention, that none of my children taking only a life estate under any of the foregoing items, shall have any power to incumber or dispose of same, and that any incumbrance or conveyance on their part, shall be absolutely null and void.' The words 'none, under any of the foregoing items,' and 'their,' used in item 13 just quoted, all refer to more than one child, and to more than one life estate.

"It can be easily understood from reading the entire will that the testator used the words 'heirs of her body,' in items 3, 7, 8, 9, 10, 11, and 12, as meaning children; otherwise item 13 is absolutely without force or effect.

[2] "This court said, in the case of Weathersbee v. Weathersbee, 82 S. C. 10 [62 S. E. 840]: 'Here, as in every case, the business of the court is to ascertain from the whole instrument the intention of the maker. That ascertained, it must be executed, if lawful.' In Vaughan v. Bridges, 61 S. C. 164 [39 S. E. 351]: 'For, after all, the cardinal rule for the construction of a will is to seek for the intention of the testator, as disclosed by the language which he used.' I might quote a number of other authorities for the position just taken, but I deem it unnecessary.

[3] "It is true that the rule in Shelley's Case is still binding authority in South Carolina, but when it appears that the words 'heirs,' 'heirs of the body,' or 'issue' are so qualified by additional words in the will as to evince an intention that they are not to be taken as descriptive of an indefinite line of descent, but are used to indicate a new stock of inheritance, the rule in Shelley's Case does not apply.

"Upon consideration of the entire will and codicils of Milton A. J. Moore, and after giving due weight to the contentions of the plaintiff and the defendant, Marvin W. Moore, as set forth in the pleadings in this action, and for the reason herein given, I hold that the testator, Milton A. J. Moore, used the words 'heirs of her body,' in item 10 of his will, in the sense of children, and that Martha Moore Rowe received a life estate, and nothing more, in the property devised to her in said item 10, with the remainder to her children, and that she cannot convey to the defendant, Marvin W. Moore, a good and indefeasible title, in fee simple, to the said property, and that said Martha Moore Rowe cannot comply with her part of the agreement, and I therefore refuse to compel specific performance, on the part of the defendant, Marvin W. Moore."

Knox Livingston, for appellant. J. W. Le Grand, for respondents.

GARY, A. J. For the reasons therein stated, the judgment of the circuit court is affirmed.

JONES, C. J., and WOODS and HYDRICK, JJ., concur.

(69 W. Va. 539.)

JOHNSON v. WHEELER LUMBER CO.
(Supreme Court of Appeals of West Virginia.
Sept. 9, 1911.)

(Syllabus by the Court.)

1. COURTS (§ 252*)—JURISDICTION—AMOUNT IN CONTROVERSY.

As to a defendant, the jurisdiction of this court is tested by the amount of the judgment or decree of the court below against him, and not by the amount sued for.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Courts, Dec. Dig. § 252.*]

2. JUDGMENT (§ 323*)—AMENDMENT.

When notice of a motion to correct the judgment of a prior term given by one party to the other, returnable to a day certain, is not proven or docketed, or otherwise noticed on the record on the return day, such motion should be treated as having been abandoned; and it is error, reversible here, for the court below, at a subsequent day, unless the error or omission be waived by appearance thereto, to take up such motion and pronounce judgment thereon.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Judgment, Dec. Dig. § 323.*]

3. APPEAL AND ERROR (§ 238*)—REVIEW—VOID JUDGMENT.

Such erroneous and void judgment is not a judgment by default, and it may be reviewed here without a motion in the court below to correct the same, pursuant to sections 5 and 6, chapter 134, Code 1906.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Appeal and Error, Cent. Dig. § 1399; Dec. Dig. § 238.*]

Error to Circuit Court, Randolph County.

Action by Ed Johnson against the Wheeler Lumber Company. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendant brings error. Reversed.

W. B. Maxwell, for plaintiff in error.
James Coberly, for defendant in error.

MILLER, J. The plaintiff, defendant in error, presents a preliminary question of jurisdiction.

The amount of the judgment against defendants, a co-partnership, on the verdict of the jury on appeal, in the circuit court, is one hundred and eleven dollars and nine cents, with damages at the rate of ten per centum per annum until paid, and costs. It is claimed by plaintiff, however, that as the amount demanded by him in his action, begun before a justice, was but eighty-six dollars and forty-nine cents, exclusive of interest and costs, the amount in controversy is not sufficient to give this court jurisdiction of a writ of error to the judgment below against defendants. This is not the law. As to the defendant the amount of the decree or judgment is the test in all cases, of the amount in controversy. Marion Machine Works v. Craig, 18 W. Va. 559; Faulconer v. Stinson, 44 W. Va. 546, 29 S. E. 1011; State v. Boner, 57 W. Va. 81, 49 S. E. 944. So the point is overruled.

[1] The first point relied on by defendants is that the court below was without jurisdiction to pronounce the judgment complained of. On the trial, at the preceding term, defendants at the close of plaintiff's evidence, demurred thereto, and the jury returned a conditional verdict, that if the law should be for plaintiff on defendants' demurrer to the evidence then they found for plaintiff the sum of one hundred and eleven dollars and nine cents; but if for defendants, then they found for them. At a subsequent day of that term, according to the order then entered, on consideration of said demurrer, the court was of opinion, that the law arising thereon was for the defendant, and its judgment then pronounced was that plaintiff take nothing by his action, and that defendants recover their costs. This judgment was pronounced at the November term, 1909, of said court.

[2] The judgment here complained of was entered on February 19, 1910, on notice by plaintiff to defendants, that on February 18, 1910, he would move the court to change the judgment of the preceding term, "so that it will overrule the said demurrer of the said

*For other cases see same topic and section NUMBER in Dec. Dig. & Am. Dig. Key No. Series & Rep'r Indexes

defendant to the said evidence, in said action, and give judgment in favor of the said plaintiff against the said defendant for the amount of his claim in said action"; and that the ground of said motion was, "that the said order was entered through a misprision or misapprehension of the clerk, and is contrary to the finding of the court."

The first point made against this judgment is, that the notice, made returnable to February 18, was not docketed, or noticed on the record, until February 19, the day of the judgment thereon, and that consequently plaintiff must be regarded as having abandoned his notice, and that the court without a new notice duly served on defendants was without jurisdiction on this ground to pronounce the judgment complained of, or disturb its judgment for defendant at the preceding term.

We have no statute controlling motions of this character, and we think the general rule is, when a notice like the one we have here is made returnable to a day certain, and is not docketed on the return day, or is not noticed on the record, the person giving such notice should be treated as having abandoned the notice and that it is error for the court at a subsequent day, unless the error or omission be waived by appearance thereto, to take up the motion and pronounce judgment thereon. Central Land Co. v. Calhoun, 16 W. Va. 361, 366, 367, involved a notice for award of execution on a forfeited forthcoming bond, not proved or docketed, or noticed on the record on the return day. The court in that case, by Judge Green, says: "This omission of the plaintiff in error to have his notice proved and his motion docketed at the proper time could have been taken advantage of by the defendants in error in the county court; but by entering a general appearance, three days afterwards, and moving to have the proceedings on their merits continued, and failing to ask before such appearance and motion to have them dismissed because of this irregularity, the defendants admitted themselves to be properly before the court and effectually waived all right to object to this irregularity, even in the court below, much less in this court." Citing Venable v. Coffman, 2 W. Va. 319, and Bank of the Valley v. Bank of Berkeley, 3 W. Va. 391. See, also, 28 Cyc. 7; 15 Amer. & Eng. Ency. Law (1st Ed.) 913. The rule applicable to cases of notice or process, controlled by section 2, chapter 124, Code, not requiring docketing, is inapplicable. Gas Co. v. Wheeling, 7 W. Va. 22; O'Brien v. Camden, 3 W. Va. 20.

Plaintiff's reply to this point is that defendant appeared, as shown by the record, and not objecting at the hearing of the motion, waived the error, if any, bringing the case within the exception noted in Land Co. v. Calhoun, supra. In support of this position the judgment entry is relied on. It recites that "this day" came the plaintiff

"* * *, and moved the court to amend and correct the order entered in this cause on the 25th day of Nov., 1909, * * *. And it appearing to the court that notice of the intention of said plaintiff to make such motion has been duly served upon the defendants, and after hearing the evidence adduced, and the argument of counsel the court is of opinion, and doth consider, that the said order, entered, * * * was so entered through a misprision or misapprehension of the clerk, and that the same is contrary to the finding of the court." The order further shows the motion sustained, and the former order amended and corrected and the order then entered nunc pro tunc, should stand instead of and take the place of said former order, as follows: "This day came the parties by their attorneys, and the court having maturely considered of its judgment, upon the defendants' demurrer to the evidence, is of opinion that the law arising upon said demurrer is for plaintiff. It is therefore, &c." There is nothing in this order, thus far, to indicate the presence, or appearance of defendants to said notice. True the order nunc pro tunc recites the appearance of "the parties by their attorneys," but this clearly has reference to the time of the original judgment in favor of defendants, on the demurrer to the evidence, not to the notice of the motion to correct and amend that judgment. We do not think the recital that the court heard "the evidence adduced" even implies the presence of the defendant participating in the trial of the motion, or offering evidence thereon. But the last sentence of the judgment appealed from is: "To which action of the court the defendants excepted." It is urgently insisted that this part of the order clearly shows the presence of defendants, not at the date of the original judgment, corrected, but on February 19, 1910, when the judgment appealed from correcting the former judgment was pronounced. If this be the correct interpretation of that order we think the position of plaintiff's counsel well founded; but should the order be so interpreted? Should the language of the last sentence quoted, be construed as applying to the action of the court on the motion of plaintiff to correct the original judgment, or as a part of and relating to the nunc pro tunc judgment? We think the latter the proper and reasonable construction. This seems clear from the language of the first part of the order reciting the appearance, the service of the notice on, but not the appearance thereto of defendants, and the plain purpose of the last sentence of the order to save an exception to the judgment, as according to the claims of plaintiff and the finding of the court it was intended the original judgment should be. Our conclusion is, therefore, that the error was not waived by appearance and failure to object.

[3] But it is claimed that the court heard evidence on the motion, and that this evidence not being certified or brought up, the appellate court cannot reverse the judgment on the notice. There might be merit in this proposition if the court had acquired jurisdiction to enter into the merits of the motion, but if the notice was allowed to lapse, as we think it was, the court could not consider the merits of the motion without appearance thereto by defendant, and waiver of the error to docket the motion on the return day of the notice. Such void or erroneous judgment we do not think should be treated as a judgment by default, requiring as a condition precedent to review here, a motion in the court below to correct the same, pursuant to sections 5 and 6, chapter 134, Code 1906. A judgment by default contemplates process of a court, duly served, and default of appearance, not one entered on notice, abandoned as in the case at bar. Bank v. Manufacturing Co., 48 W. Va. 406, 409, 37 S. E. 541.

These views call for a reversal, and preclude any consideration of the merits of the motion, or of the judgment sought to be corrected thereby.

Our opinion is to reverse and set aside the judgment of February 19, 1910, leaving the judgment of the November term, 1909, which it undertook to correct, in full force.

(69 W. Va. 533)

ALLISON et al. v. CITY OF CHESTER et al.
(Supreme Court of Appeals of West Virginia.
Sept. 9, 1911.)

(Syllabus by the Court.)

MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS (§ 865*)—LIMITATION OF INDEBTEDNESS—CONTRACTS WITH WATER COMPANY.

A contract of a municipal corporation, with a water works company, for a supply of water for public use, for a stipulated number of years, at a stipulated price per year, payable in quarter annual payments, is not void, by section 8, article 10, of the Constitution (Code 1906, p. lxxix), limiting municipal indebtedness, because the aggregate of such payments, for the full term of the contract, with existing indebtedness, exceeds the amount for which such municipality, is by said section, allowed to become indebted. The validity of such contract is tested by the aggregate of the quarterly payments for the first year.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Municipal Corporations, Cent. Dig. §§ 1836-1838; Dec. Dig. § 865.*]

Appeal from Circuit Court, Hancock County.

Bill by Charles F. Allison and others against the City of Chester and others. Decree for defendants, and plaintiffs appeal. Affirmed.

J. B. Sommerville, for appellants. Hubbard & Hubbard, Billingsley & Clark, and W. B. Moore, for appellee South Side Water Works Co.

MILLER, J. The decree appealed from, dissolving the preliminary injunction and dismissing plaintiffs' bill, presents for decision a single question, a question of constitutional limitation.

Amendatory of a prior ordinance of November 20, 1903, the Council of the City of Chester, on November 4, 1909, adopted an ordinance reciting the passage of the former ordinance by which it had contracted with the South Side Water Works Company for a supply of water for extinguishing fires, and for other purposes, and since which time the growth of the city had been such as to require the laying of a more extensive system of water mains than originally contemplated and provided for, and that further extensions would be required from time to time, and that the making of such extensions and additions as was and would be required, and was proposed, to meet the new and continually increasing demands, the Water Works Company would be required to expend a large amount of money; and furthermore reciting that in order to justify said company in making such expenditures, and to enable it to secure the funds necessary to extend and enlarge its plant as desired, and proposed, it was then ordained as follows:

"Section 1. That said contract entered into by said ordinance of November 20, 1903, and the acceptance thereof by the South Side Water Works Company, be altered so that said Company shall, for a period of 30 years, supply fire hydrants and water to said city for extinguishing fires and for other purposes, and the said city shall during the said period pay for the same at the rate and upon the conditions following, to-wit:

"(1) Said Water Works Company shall maintain the fire hydrants already in place in said city and connected with said Company's mains, and said Company shall also furnish, install and maintain at such points on said Company's mains as may be designated by Council such additional fire hydrants as Council may from time to time require. Hydrants which may be installed shall be of the same pattern or equal efficiency with those already in use, and no hydrant once installed or maintained under this contract shall be discontinued during the term thereof.

"(2) Said Water Works Company shall at all times during the term of this contract, except in case of accident to machinery or mains, or when making connections, furnish water at all of said fire hydrants at such pressure and in volume as may be reasonably required for fire protection.

"(3) Said Water Works Company shall furnish, erect on its mains and supply with necessary water, free from all charges to the city, such iron drinking troughs for horses as Council may approve, not to exceed four in number, which troughs shall be maintained and kept in good repair by Council during the term of this contract.

"(4) The city shall have the right to use water from said fire hydrants for extinguishing fires, and to a reasonable extent for sprinkling and cleaning streets or fire department practice.

"(5) The City of Chester, in consideration of the foregoing stipulations on the part of the Water Works Company, agrees to pay said Company at the rate of Forty-Five Dollars ($45.00) during the term of this contract for each fire hydrant now maintained or hereafter installed under order of the Council up to and including fifty in number. Water for flushing sewers shall be paid for at the rate of ten cents per thousand gallons. Payments hereunder shall be made quarterly by the city in full for all service rendered by the Water Works Company during the preceding quarter."

Section 8, article 10, of the Constitution (Code 1906, p. lxxix) provides: "No county, city, school district, or municipal corporation, except in cases where such corporations have already authorized their bonds to be issued, shall hereafter be allowed to become indebted, in any manner, or for any purpose, to an amount, including existing indebtedness, in the aggregate, exceeding five per centum on the value of the taxable property therein to be ascertained by the last assessment for State and county taxes, previous to the incurring of such indebtedness; nor without, at the same time, providing for the collection of a direct annual tax, sufficient to pay, annually, the interest on such debt, and the principal thereof, within, and not exceeding thirty-four years; Provided, That no debt shall be contracted under this section, unless all questions connected with the same, shall have been first submitted to a vote of the people, and have received three-fifths of all the votes cast for and against the same."

It is conceded that the annual payments provided for in the contract can be paid each year out of the current revenues of the city, but that the aggregate of such payments cannot be so met, and that if such aggregate constitutes an indebtedness within the meaning of the Constitution the contract is void; for it is also conceded that the questions connected with the making of the contract had not prior to entering into the same been first submitted to the vote of the people, as required by the provisions of the organic law.

The sole question, presented for decision then, is, should the aggregate of all the quarter annual payments provided for in the contract be treated as an indebtedness of the City of Chester, within the meaning of the constitutional inhibition, or only that portion thereof which were thereby to become due the first year?

It is well settled in this, and in other states having like or similar constitutional provisions, that municipalities may not become indebted absolutely or contingently beyond the constitutional limitation, for present delivery of property, or for services performed, or to be performed, as in the building of water works, or any other kind of municipal improvements, even though the time of payment be postponed to future dates, no matter what may be the form of the contract. Our own cases of Lst v. Wheeling, 7 W. Va. 501; Spilman v. Parkersburg, 35 W. Va. 605, 14 S. E. 279; Honaker v. Board of Education, 42 W. Va. 170, 24 S. E. 544, 32 L. R. A. 413, 57 Am. St. Rep. 847; Shinn v. Board of Education, 39 W. Va. 497, 20 S. E. 604; Dempsey v. Board of Education, 40 W. Va. 99, 20 S. E. 811; Camden Clay Co. v. New Martinsville, 67 W. Va. 525, 68 S. E. 118, and Davis v. Wayne County Court, 38 W. Va. 104, 18 S. E. 373, all, with the cases cited, sustain and illustrate the application of this well settled rule.

But it is contended for appellant, with respect to Davis v. County Court, not that it was a case on all fours with the case at bar, but that the principles announced therein, and, as it is claimed, substantially approved in Spilman v. Parkersburg, Camden Clay Co. v. New Martinsville, and other cases, goes farther, and, using the language of the decision, holds that, where such municipal authorities "attempt to or do bind, without a proper vote of the people, the levies of future years in any manner or for any purpose whatsoever, either by contract, express or implied, their action in so doing is a usurpation of power and an infringement of the Constitution, and such contract is null and void." The language of Judge Holt, in Spilman v. Parkersburg, much relied on, is: "By the term 'indebtedness' as here used, is meant the state of being by voluntary obligation, express or implied, under legal liability to pay in the present or at some future time for something already received, or for something yet to be furnished or rendered. This includes every kind of indebtedness, no matter in what manner created, or voluntarily brought about; or for what purpose, whether it be for municipal self-preservation or not; whether for pure air, pure water, good light, clean and convenient and safe streets and sidewalks; whether it be payable now or hereafter, payable quarterly or annually, or at any date running on for thirty-four years; whether for current expenses, or fixed and definite debts or charges; whether for personal property or real property, leasehold or freehold; it is none the less indebtedness, created in some manner and for some purpose, and is within the purview and the bar of the Constitution." This very broad and comprehensive definition of the term indebtedness, clearly comprehended the case which the court there had in hand. It is substantially the definition of the term given in 22 Cyc. 75, but this authority says: "It is a word of large meaning, and must be construed in every case in accord with its context." So that when our Constitution makes use of the term "indebted," we must look to the whole context to interpret its meaning. As throwing light on this question the words of the same article of the Constitution: "Nor without, at the same time, providing for the collection of a direct annual tax, sufficient to pay, annually, the interest on such debt, and the principal thereof, within, and not exceeding thirty-four years." Clearly the liability of the contract we have here is not such an indebtedness as is comprehended by this clause, which apparently is applicable to all indebtedness inhibited by the Constitution.

Moreover, the language of a court should always be interpreted with reference to the particular case in hand. In the Davis Case the controversy related to certificates of indebtedness, or so called road orders, issued by the county court, apparently, in payment of a county bridge. In Spilman v. Parkersburg, the subject of controversy was a contract in the form of a lease, by the terms of which, the City of Parkersburg, at the termination of the lease, if all annual payments provided for had been paid, was to become the owner of an electric lighting plant, constructed by the lessor, as provided by the contract. Unquestionably the contracts involved in each of those cases constituted debts, from their inception, and although in the latter case the contract for lighting the streets was in form a lease, it was in fact a conditional purchase of the property, binding the levies of the city for future years, an indebtedness of the city, and void as an infraction of the constitutional inhibition against the creation of such indebtedness, without submitting the question pertaining thereto to a vote of the people.

The record before us presents no such case as was presented in Davis v. County Court or Spilman v. Parkersburg. The contract here involved relates to an annual supply of water; the water may never be furnished, or furnished for only a portion of the term provided for; it amounts in our opinion to a mere provision for the necessary current annual expenses of the city, the aggregate of the payments not comprehending an indebtedness inhibited by the Constitution.

It is conceded, however, that there are decisions in other states, notably in Illinois, holding that contracts, such as is here involved, do constitute indebtedness within the meaning of the Constitution of those states. Culbertson v. City of Fulton, 127 Ill. 30, 18 N. E. 781, and Chicago v. McDonald, 176 Ill. 404, 52 N. E. 982, among other cases, are cited and relied on.

We deem it wholly unnecessary to enter into any extended review or analysis of these cases, or those to the contrary on which we base our conclusions, or to discuss the underlying principles involved. That has been sufficiently accomplished, we think, in prior decisions of this court, and the numerous cases cited and relied on in the text-books and decisions cited.

In disposing of this case it seems only necessary to say that we are disposed to follow the great weight of judicial authority, including the decisions of the Supreme Court of the United States, and many other state and federal cases, and, as we think, the better supported by reason, in holding that where the contract or ordinance, as in the case at bar, is one intended to provide for the furnishing of a municipality with water to be used for public purposes, the payment therefor to be made from year to year, such contract should not be construed or treated as the creation of an indebtedness within the inhibition of our Constitution, except as to the amount actually fallen due, but as a mode or means of providing for the necessary current expenses of the municipal government. True the revenues of succeeding years, to a certain extent, become bound for the future performance of the contract, and beyond the discretion of the municipality to alter or abrogate; but a supply of water is an absolute necessity, indispensable to the very existence of the people, and without such authority to so contract, a municipality would be entirely helpless. Judge Brannon, arguendo, citing many cases, expresses approval of this doctrine, in Welch Water, Light & Power Co. v. Town of Welch, 64 W. Va. 373, 62 S. E. 497, 498, and we think it sound, and that it is not in conflict with any prior decision of this court. Some of the many cases so holding are Walla Walla v. Walla Walla Water Co., 172 U. S. 1, 19 Sup. Ct. 77, 43 L. Ed. 341; Beard v. Hopkinsville, 95 Ky. 239, 24 S. W. 872, 34 L. R. A. 402, 44 Am. St. Rep. 232, and note; Higgins v. San Diego, 118 Cal. 524, 45 Pac. 824; McBean v. Fresno, 112 Cal. 159, 44 Pac. 358, 31 L. R. A. 794, 53 Am. St. Rep. 191; Voss v. Waterloo Water Co., 163 Ind. 69, 71 N. E. 208, 66 L. R. A. 95, 106 Am. St. Rep. 201; South Bend v. Reynolds, 155 Ind. 70, 57 N. E. 706, 49 L. R. A. 795; Cunningham v. City of Cleveland, 98 Fed. 657, 39 C. C. A. 211; Grant v. City of Davenport, 36 Iowa, 396; Stedman v. City of Berlin, 97 Wis. 505, 73 N. W. 57; Wade v. Burrough of Oakmont, 165 Pa. 479, 30 Atl. 959; Gas Light Co. v. New Orleans, 42 La. Ann. 188, 7 South. 559; Raton Water Works Co. v. Town of Raton, 9 N. M. 70, 49 Pac. 898; Luddington Water Supply Co. v. City of Luddington, 119 Mich. 580, 78 N. W. 558. In 28 Cyc. 1544, citing in notes the above and many other cases, the law is stated thus: "A contract by a municipality to pay for water, lights, sewage, and the like, at stated times in the future, does not create an indebtedness for the aggregate amount of such payments, within the meaning of a provision limiting the indebtedness of municipalities, and the validity of such a contract is tested by the amount of the first payment thereunder."

We hold that the decree appealed from is right, and our opinion is to affirm it.

(69 W. Va. 473)

STATE v. LEWIS.

(Supreme Court of Appeals of West Virginia.
June 16, 1911. Rehearing Denied
Oct. 24, 1911.)

(Syllabus by the Court.)

1. INDICTMENT AND INFORMATION (§ 121*)—BILLS OF PARTICULARS.

The law of bills of particulars applies to criminal and civil cases.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Indictment and Information, Cent. Dig. §§ 316-320; Dec. Dig. § 121.*]

2. INDICTMENT AND INFORMATION (§ 121*)—BILL OF PARTICULARS—LARCENY.

Under an indictment for simple larceny, a bill of particulars, specifying the character of larceny to be proven, may be demanded by the defendant.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Indictment and Information, Cent. Dig. §§ 316-320; Dec. Dig. § 121.*]

3. CRIMINAL LAW (§ 858*)—TRIAL—TAKING OF PAPERS TO JURY ROOM.

A letter given in evidence to a jury may be taken by the jury to its room, on its retirement to consider the case, if the jury so requests.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Criminal Law, Cent. Dig. §§ 2056-2059; Dec. Dig. § 858.*]

4. CRIMINAL LAW (§ 784*)—INSTRUCTIONS—CIRCUMSTANTIAL EVIDENCE.

When the inculpatory evidence against an accused is circumstantial, it is error to refuse him an instruction which correctly states the force of such evidence required for conviction, and the principles by which it is to be weighed and considered.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Criminal Law, Cent. Dig. §§ 1883-1888, 1922, 1960; Dec. Dig. § 784.*]

Williams, P. dissenting.

Error to Circuit Court, Harrison County.

Charles A. Lewis was convicted of larceny, and brings error. Reversed and remanded.

H. C. Batten, Thomas Ramage, and Geo. M. Hoffheimer, for plaintiff in error. Wm. G. Conley, Atty. Gen., and J. O. Henson, Asst. Atty. Gen., for the State.

BRANNON, J. [1] Charles Lewis was sentenced to the penitentiary upon an indictment charging simple larceny of 3,500 pounds of wool. The evidence tended to show, not simple larceny by him, but the taking and carrying away of the wool by another, and receiving and concealing it by Lewis, with knowledge that it had been stolen. At request of Lewis, the court made an order requiring the state to furnish the accused a bill of particulars, more specifically setting forth the real accusation, "in order that the defendant might be apprised of that which he is expected to defend." The state refused to do this, claiming that such particulars could not be more definite than the indictment, and, as the bill of exceptions states, "the defendant was forced to go into trial without said bill of particulars, after it had ordered the said bill of particulars to be filed with the accused." We hold this to be error of substantial character. In Clark v. Railroad, 39 W. Va. 732, 20 S. E. 696, we held that our Code (chapter 130, § 46) required such bill in civil actions for tort or on contract, if the declaration is of so general a nature as not to apprise the party of the cause of action, where justice and fair trial, free of surprise, call for it. We said that refusal of it was not arbitrary discretion, but a basis of error. In the case we said that the principle had often been applied in criminal cases. Not in every case can it be demanded. We said that only in cases where the law allows general statements in a declaration can specification be demanded. The right cannot in every case be used. It can only be exercised where the law allows a general statement in the pleading, but justice demands further information of the demand or accusation. It is a matter of sound, but not arbitrary, discretion. This court applies these principles in the late case of State v. Railroad, 68 W. Va. 193, 69 S. E. 703, to criminal cases, upon an indictment against a railroad company for obstructing a road by a train; the court holding it reversible error to refuse such bill of particulars to specify which of many trains caused the obstruction. [2] If told that Code, c. 130, § 46, in words applies only to an "action or motion," I would answer that if that section (a remedial one) does not apply it is a power inherent in a court to regulate trial, and that the Constitution demands that "the accused be fully and plainly informed of the character and cause of the accusation," and thus authorizes such discretion in the court. Anyhow, there is much law applying this procedure to criminal cases. 22 Cyc. 371; Kirby v. U. S., 174 U. S. 47, 19 Sup. Ct. 574, 43 L. Ed. 800. Such being the right of an accused, I can at the moment think of no case calling more plainly for its application. Why? Because by our well-settled law, on a trial of an indictment alleging simple larceny, conviction may be had, not only for simple larceny, but for receiving or concealing stolen goods, obtaining under false pretense, or embezzlement. State v. Halida, 28 W. Va. 499; State v. Edwards, 51 W. Va. 220, 41 S. E. 429, 59 L. R. A. 465; Pitt-nogle's Case, 91 Va. 811, 22 S. E. 351, 50 Am. St. Rep. 867. This is because statute law declares these offenses larceny. I always doubted the soundness of this rule, but it is fixed. The relief against it is the right to a specification. The indictment says that the defendant himself stole the things. On trial comes evidence that another man stole, and defendant received. Is not this legal surprise? The court made an order for a bill of particulars, thus deciding that one was called for. Why recant or ignore this order? What reason? None, except the mere statement of the bill of exceptions that "the attorneys for the state wholly neglected and refused to make up and give to defendant the said bill of particulars, claiming that they could not be more definite in said bill than in the indictment." Here the court assigns neglect. We do not say that it was practicable to be more definite as to the wool; but do say that the state could have easily specified whether it was intended to prove that the defendant had himself stolen the wool from its place of deposit, or that he had feloniously received and secreted it. We think the bill should have been required, and that it was error to ignore it.

But, though the refusal of the bill of particulars was error at the time of the refusal, yet we must determine whether we will reverse for that cause. Did Lewis suffer from it? Where it appears that a party is not aggrieved, error is harmless. Such a bill of particulars cannot be demanded, where unnecessary, or where the party already knows the facts. 3 Ency. Pl. & Prac. 527, 529. The record of the trial from the evidence from Lewis himself shows that he shipped boxes containing the wool to Baltimore, and then went there and saw the wool, and sold it. He thus had information as to receiving; that being the offense presented by the evidence of the state. We do not say that this would tell him that evidence on the trial would be confined to the act of receiving the wool, and no evidence of its theft by him would be given. But, again, he gave evidence by himself and others to repel the charge of receiving, and it is not made to appear that he would have given more evidence, had he been furnished with a bill of particulars. We think that, in order to effect reversal for this cause, it ought somehow to appear that Lewis could have furnished other additional evidence to repel that charge. He should have asked the court for continuance, or have filed an affidavit that he could have furnished further evidence, had he been warned of the particular charge to be proven against him. Before another trial, such bill of particulars should be furnished Lewis. For future use on the subject of bills of particulars in negligence cases, and generally, I cite 1 Wharton, Cr. Law, § 1048, and full and valuable note in 3 Am. & Eng. Ann. Cas. 161.

[3] A letter was given in evidence. The jury after retirement called for it and it was sent to its room. This is no error. The Code, in chapter 131, § 12, says the court may allow "papers" to be carried from the bar. We discuss this matter in State v. Stover, 64 W. Va. 670, 63 S. E. 315. Why give a paper in evidence at bar, and then withhold it from the jury? 10 Ency. Pl. & Prac. 592.

It is suggested, with some hesitation, by counsel that, though a conviction for receiving stolen goods may be under an indictment for larceny, yet the verdict must state that the defendant was guilty of receiving. It is admitted by counsel that a search has revealed but one case to sustain this position. We cannot so hold. As our law allows conviction on an indictment for simple larceny, the verdict may be guilty as charged in the indictment, without specifying the particular kind of larceny.

Two railroad shipping orders were given in evidence to show that Lewis had shipped the wool. It is claimed they were not properly proven. This point is not sustained, as Lewis' own evidence proves that he signed them.

[4] The following instruction was refused defendants: "(10) The court instructs the jury that, in order to warrant a conviction for a crime on evidence in whole or in part circumstantial, it is absolutely essential that all the circumstances from which a conclusion is to be drawn, and without which it could not be drawn, shall be established by full proof, and every circumstance essential to the conclusion must be proven in the same manner, and to the same extent, as if the whole issue (that is, the guilt or innocence of the defendant) had rested upon the proof of each individual and essential circumstance, and should to a moral certainty exclude every reasonable hypothesis consistent with the innocence of the accused." We think that this instruction should have been given. It was pertinent to the case as one involving circumstantial evidence of guilt. It states a principle or rule guiding in the consideration of such evidence. It tells how its main facts must be proved, and how they must relate to each other and harmonize to produce conviction. It may be said to be theoretical, or to deal with the abstract philosophy of circumstantial evidence, and not readily understandable to an average jury; still these abstract rules are found in the books on evidence, when they tell us what principles apply to circumstantial evidence. They are of common and general use in courts. They are lights guiding the feet in the use of such evidence, as we stated in State v. Musgrave, 43 W. Va., on pages 693, 694, 695, 696, 28 S. E. 813. We do not see that it is inconsistent with the majority opinion in that case. We think the instruction is sound, under legal principles as to circumstantial evidence. Of what use is the exposition of rules as to treatment of such evidence found in so many books of evidence and court opinions through centuries, if they may not, or must not, be stated to juries? Are they only for judges and lawyers. And to be withheld from juries, the sole triers of the facts under the evidence? State v.

Flanagan, 26 W. Va. 116; 12 Cyc. 487, 488. It has been suggested that, though this instruction is sound, as all members of the court think, yet another instruction cures its refusal—No. 6, given. It says that to convict, the state must prove beyond reasonable doubt that the wool had been stolen by a person other than the defendant; that the defendant received it, knowing it to have been stolen; that he received it, or aided in concealing it, with dishonest intent; that it was the same wool alleged to have been stolen from R. T. Lowndes. On first thought one might think that this instruction covered the ground and answered the purpose of No. 10; but on consideration we can hardly think so. This No. 6 only tells the jury what ultimate facts must be found in order to convict; it deals with quantity, weight, or effect of evidence; whereas No. 10 lays down the principles applying in the use of circumstantial evidence; it tells how it is to be handled or treated in its consideration. We say that No. 10 is sound, and the party has a right to his instruction in his own words, if sound, and that its refusal cannot be excused by another instruction, unless the latter clearly covers the same end. "When the inculpatory evidence is circumstantial, it is error to refuse a requested instruction which correctly expounds the cogency requisite in that character of proof." Dreyer v. State, 11 Tex. App. 631.

We reverse the judgment, without expression on the evidence, set aside the verdict, and award a new trial, and remand the case to the criminal court of Harrison county.

WILLIAMS, P. (dissenting). I think our former decision of this case was erroneous, and I am therefore in favor of granting a rehearing. I have at no time been of the opinion that the refusal to give defendant's instruction No. 10 constituted sufficient ground for reversal, and I am now convinced that this is not such a case as entitles defendant to demand a bill of particulars, for two reasons: (1) To say that he has such right is a contradiction of the well-settled rule that, when an indictment contains more than one count, the state cannot be compelled to elect on which count it will proceed to trial. Evidence under any one, or all, the counts may be given. Dowdy v. Commonwealth, 9 Grat. (Va.) 727, 60 Am. Dec. 314; State v. Halda, 28 W. Va. 499. (2) The indictment informs defendant as fully as he could have been informed by a bill of particulars, and a bill of particulars is therefore useless. At common law there was but one kind of larceny, but our Legislature has created, out of kindred offenses, three additional kinds of larceny, viz.: (a) Receiving stolen goods, knowing them to be stolen; (b) obtaining money or goods by false pretense, with intent to defraud; and (c) embezzlement. Any one of these may be proven under a single count for common-law larceny. State v. Williams, 68 W. Va. 86, 69 S. E. 474, 32 L. R. A. (N. S.) 420, and cases cited in the opinion. Defendant knew this, because every one is presumed to know the law. Was he not, therefore, as much advised by the indictment itself, although it contained but a single count for common-law larceny, as he could have been by an indictment drawn with four separate counts, each setting forth distinctly a separate kind of larceny? Of course he was, because the one count, in effect, includes all the crimes above enumerated. It is therefore clear that defendant was as fully advised of the particular offense with which he was charged by the indictment with one count, as he would have been by an indictment with four counts. It was conceded by all the judges during the discussion of this case that, if the indictment had contained a separate count for each kind of larceny, defendant would have had no right to demand a bill of particulars, and I have shown that the legal effect of the indictment is the same as if it had contained separate counts for all the kinds of larceny. Now, if the state should be compelled to furnish a bill of particulars, it would unquestionably have the right to set forth all the matters provable under the indictment, the practical effect of which would be, so far as it relates to informing defendant, an indictment for larceny with four counts. To say that the state could not furnish such a bill of particulars is to say it may be compelled to elect. The question is then resolved to this: That a bill of particulars in a larceny case is equivalent to an indictment for larceny containing all the counts. But an indictment containing one count—the count for common-law larceny—is equivalent to an indictment with all the counts for larceny. Then, pray, is not an indictment with the common-law count for larceny equal to a bill of particulars? Things that are equal to the same thing must be equal to each other. This principle is as applicable here as in mathematics.

Suppose the court had required the state to furnish a bill of particulars, it could have complied by stating that it expected to prove (1) that defendant stole the wool; (2) that he received it from another, knowing it to be stolen, and (3) that he obtained it by false pretenses, with intent to defraud. Such a bill of particulars would give defendant no more specific information of the particular offense of which the state expected to prove him guilty, than he received from the indictment itself. I am therefore unable to see any good reason for the view entertained by the majority of my associates. I think their holding, if adhered to, will place an unnecessary burden upon criminal procedure. The indictment informed defendant of the kind, quantity, and value of the thing stolen, and who was its owner, and the place where the offense was committed. He had no right to demand of the state any further information in advance of his trial. He had no right to be told how, in what manner, the crime would be proven. He must come to trial prepared to meet any, and all, lawful evidence as to the manner in which the larceny charged was committed. He cannot demand of the state a revelation of its evidence before going to trial. This case is widely different from any criminal case in which the courts have held that a defendant has a right to a bill of particulars. It is wholly unlike the case of State v. B. & O. R. R. Co., 68 W. Va. 193, 69 S. E. 703.

I would not reverse for the refusal to give defendant's instruction No. 10, because the jury were fully instructed in regard to the matter of circumstantial evidence by defendant's No. 6 and the state's No. 4, which were given, and which are as follows, viz.: State's No. 4: "The jury is instructed that circumstantial evidence is that class of evidence which tends to prove a disputed fact by proof of other facts which have a legitimate tendency, from the laws of nature, the usual connection of things, and the ordinary transactions of business to lead the mind to a conclusion that the fact exists which is sought to be established." Defendant's No. 6: "The court instructs the jury that before you can find the defendant, Charles A. Lewis, guilty in this case it is incumbent upon the state to prove, beyond all reasonable doubt and to your entire satisfaction: First. That the offense charged in the indictment occurred in Harrison county, W. Va. Second. That the wool mentioned in the evidence in this case had been previously stolen by some person other than the defendant. Third. That the accused, Charles A. Lewis, received the said wool from another person. Fourth. That at the time he received the wool he knew it had been stolen. Fifth. That he so received the said wool, or aided in the concealment thereof, with a dishonest intent. Sixth. That the wool he so received was the identical wool or some part thereof, which is alleged in the indictment to have been stolen from R. T. Lowndes, and this being an essential question involved in this case must be proven beyond all reasonable doubt." This instruction calls the jury's attention to the six particular circumstances necessary to be established, and tells them that they must believe all of them to have been proven beyond a reasonable doubt, before they can convict. All necessarily includes every one, and the instruction means nothing less than that the jury must believe beyond reasonable doubt that each one of the six circumstances is established. It is more helpful to defendant's case than his No. 10, and covers the same ground. In view of the instructions which the court gave, I can clearly see that defendant could not have been prejudiced by the refusal to give his No. 10.

I am opposed to reversing the judgment of trial courts upon purely technical matters, when it plainly appears from the record that the party complaining was not prejudiced. I do not think it is wise to trammel our judicial procedure with technicalities which furnish no aid in arriving at just results. The tendency of modern times, as appears both by legislative enactment and by judicial decision, is to get away from the useless technicalities which so often incumbered the common law. It is our duty to look to the whole case, and, so viewing it, I am clearly of the opinion that defendant has no just cause of complaint on account of any ruling made by the trial court. Respecting the weight to be given to the testimony of the witnesses, the jury are the judges. It is not my province to say whether their verdict was righteous or unrighteous, when there is lawful evidence on which they can found it. I would affirm the judgment.

(9 Ga. App. 890)

ADEPE v. CITY OF THOMASVILLE
(No. 3,375.)

(Court of Appeals of Georgia. Oct. 23, 1911.)

(Syllabus by the Court.)

1. EXCEPTIONS, BILL OF (§ 58*)—WRIT OF ERROR—DISMISSAL—ACKNOWLEDGMENT OF SERVICE.

The motion to dismiss is controlled by Strickland v. Thornton, 2 Ga. App. 377, 58 S. E. 540.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Exceptions, Bill of, Cent. Dig. §§ 100-105; Dec. Dig. § 58.*]

2. MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS (§ 733*)—OPERATION OF ELECTRIC LIGHT PLANT—NEGLECT OF EMPLOYE—LIABILITY.

In operating an electric light plant, furnishing electric lights for pay, a city is engaged in a private, nongovernmental business, and is liable to one injured through the negligence of its employé engaged in repairing wires.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Municipal Corporations, Cent. Dig. §§ 1547-1549; Dec. Dig. § 733.*]

Error from City Court of Thomasville; W. H. Hammond, Judge.

Action by Abraham Adepe against the City of Thomasville. Judgment for defendant, and plaintiff brings error. Reversed.

Theodore Titus, for plaintiff in error. T. N. Hopkins, Anderson, Felder, Rountree & Wilson, Roscoe Luke, and Geo. P. Whitman, for defendant in error.

RUSSELL, J. [1] 1. It appears from the bill of exceptions, and also from the transcript of the record, that a general demurrer was sustained to the petition on March 27, 1911. The certificate of the judge is dated April 3, 1911. The acknowledgment of service by counsel for the defendant in error is dated March 5, 1911. The bill of exceptions was filed in the clerk's office of the court below on April 5, 1911, and in the office of the clerk of this court on April 15, 1911. A motion is made to dismiss the bill of exceptions, because it does not appear that there has been legal service thereof on the defendant in error. It conclusively appears that the word "March," in the acknowledgment of service, was intended for "April." In such a case the bill of exceptions will not be dismissed. Strickland v. Thornton, 2 Ga. App. 377, 58 S. E. 540.

[2] 2. The petition alleged substantially the following facts: While standing on the sidewalk in front of his store on the principal street of the city of Thomasville, the plaintiff was hit on the head by a metal instrument weighing four or five pounds, and as a result his skull was fractured, and he sustained other enumerated injuries. It is alleged that the metal instrument was thrown by an employé of the electric light plant operated by the city, which was engaged in the business of furnishing for pay electric lights to the citizens of the city. At the time of the injury the employé was engaged in repairing the electric wires, and had the metal instrument hereinbefore referred to fastened to the end of a rope, and was attempting to throw it across the wires, located about 15 or 20 feet above the sidewalk; but the instrument missed the wires and fell with great violence on plaintiff's head. The plaintiff was standing on the sidewalk in front of his store, where he had a right to be. The street where the accident occurred is the principal business thoroughfare of the city, is occupied on each side by numerous business houses, and the sidewalks are in constant use by the people of the community. The claim had been presented to the city as provided by law. The negligence alleged is the act of the employé of the city in attempting to cast the heavy metal instrument over the wires, at the time and place and in the manner stated. The court sustained a general demurrer to the petition, and this is the error assigned in the bill of exceptions.

We are of the opinion that the petition sets forth a cause of action. In operating an electric light plant, the city is acting in a private corporate capacity, instead of exercising a governmental function. Dillon, Municipal Corporations (5th Ed.) §§ 1647, 1670. In furnishing electric lights for pay, the occupation is similar to furnishing water for pay. Huey v. Atlanta, 8 Ga. App. 597, 70 S. E. 71. It does not appear from the allegations of the petition that the plaintiff was guilty of contributory negligence. A fuller investigation into all the facts may authorize such an inference, but as against a general demurrer the petition sets forth a cause of action.

Judgment reversed.

(137 Ga. 65)

LOFTIS v. ALEXANDER et al.

(Supreme Court of Georgia. Oct. 28, 1911.)

(Syllabus by the Court.)

PARTIES (§ 40*)—INTERVENTION—RIGHT TO INTERVENE.

Suit was filed by the payee of notes secured by a deed from the maker of the notes to certain real estate against the executor of the maker to obtain a general judgment on the notes for the principal, interest, and attorney's fees due thereon, and a special lien on the property to the extent of the amount claimed and costs of suit. It was alleged that notice of an intention to sue was given the defendant 10 days before the last return day of the term of court to which suit was brought. A purchaser from the executor of the equity of the estate of the deceased maker of the notes and deed filed a petition admitting the allegations of the petition, and making, among others, substantially the following averments: The suit was filed without any notice to him. In the contract between him and the executor he agreed to pay off the notes at maturity, and was prevented from paying the notes before suit was brought thereon by reason of the statements and conduct of one representing the payee of the notes. After the suit was filed, Alexander (the payee) on November 5, 1910, "for a valuable consideration agreed to accept from defendant on the following Monday, to wit, November 7, 1910, the sum of $4,888 in settlement of said indebtedness, and agreed upon the payment of said amount to cancel said note and said loan deed, and authorized the settlement of said suit upon the payment by defendant of the court costs. About 10 o'clock on Monday, November 7, 1910, defendant tendered to said Alexander $4,888, in lawful currency of the United States, in payment of said debt, and demanded the cancellation of said note and the satisfaction of said loan deed, and authority to have said case entered settled upon the payment by defendant of the court costs that had accrued. Said Alexander refused to accept said tender, to cancel said note, satisfy said loan deed, and authorize settlement of said suit upon the payment by defendant of the court costs." He prayed that he be allowed to intervene and become a party, and that the plaintiff be restricted to a recovery of only the principal and interest due on the notes to a specified date. Held, there was no error in dismissing the application of the purchaser from the executor and refusing to allow him to become a party to the suit.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Parties, Dec. Dig. § 40.*]

Error from Superior Court, Fulton County; J. T. Pendleton, Judge.

Action between W. S. Loftis and John W. Alexander and others. From the judgment, Loftis brings error. Affirmed.

J. B. Stewart, for plaintiff in error. R. B. Blackburn, Lowndes Calhoun, and L. Z. Rosser, for defendants in error.

HOLDEN, J. Judgment affirmed. All the Justices concur, except BECK, J., absent.

(127 Ga. 63)

METHODIST EPISCOPAL CHURCH
SOUTH v. DUDLEY SASH, DOOR & LUMBER CO.

(Supreme Court of Georgia. Oct. 28, 1911.)

(Syllabus by the Court.)

1. EXCEPTIONS, BILL OF (§ 33*)—TIME FOR PRESENTATION—EVIDENCE.

The defendant in error (hereinafter called the plaintiff) brought an action to foreclose a materialman's lien on the property of the plaintiff in error (hereinafter called the defendant) to the October term, 1909, of the court. At the April term, 1910, the defendant filed a plea, which the court struck at the October term, 1910, at which term a verdict was directed by the court in favor of the plaintiff. The defendant made a motion for a new trial, which the court overruled on November 18, 1910, on which date defendant tendered and had certified a bill of exceptions, in which complaint was made that the court erred in striking the plea and overruling the motion for a new trial. Held, the certificate of the clerk showing that the October term, 1910, of the court adjourned on October 13, 1910, the bill of exceptions presented on November 18, 1910, will be treated as having been presented after the adjournment of the court, though the bill of exceptions recites that it was presented during the October term, 1910, of the court and within the time required by law.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Exceptions, Bill of, Dec. Dig. § 38.*]

2. APPEAL AND ERROR (§ 682*)—RECORD—QUESTIONS PRESENTED FOR REVIEW.

No exception pendente lite having been filed to the order striking the plea, and the bill of exceptions complaining that the court erred in refusing a new trial and in striking the plea having been presented more than 30 days after the adjournment of the court, the assignment of error that the court erred in striking the plea cannot be considered.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Appeal and Error, Dec. Dig. § 682.*]

3. NEW TRIAL (§ 18*)—GROUNDS—RULING ON PLEA.

A ruling of the court in striking a plea cannot be made the ground of a motion for a new trial. Hawkins v. Studdard, 132 Ga. 265, 63 S. E. 852, 131 Am. St. Rep. 190.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see New Trial, Cent. Dig. §§ 24-29; Dec. Dig. § 18.*]

4. MECHANICS' LIENS (§ 291*)—DEFAULT JUDGMENT—TAKING DEFAULT.

Where a suit is brought, with allegations regularly stated in paragraphs, as required by Civil Code 1910, §§ 5538, 5539, in an action other than one for unliquidated damages or based on an unconditional contract in writing, and the writ or process has been served as the law directs on the defendant, and there is no defense made by the party sued either in person or by attorney at the time the case is submitted for trial, it will be considered in default, and the plaintiff shall be permitted to take a verdict as if each and every item and paragraph were proved by testimony. Civil Code 1910, § 5662.

(a) The provision of the Code stated in the preceding headnote applies to a suit by a materialman to enforce his claim of lien upon real estate for materials furnished to a contractor for the improvement thereof.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Mechanics' Liens, Dec. Dig. § 291.*]

5. MECHANICS' LIENS (§ 276*)—ENFORCEMENT
—PLEA.

In such a suit, it should have been alleged that the contract price was equal to or greater than the amount of the lien sought to be foreclosed; but the absence of such an allegation was an amendable defect.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Mechanics' Liens, Cent. Dig. §§ 539-545; Dec. Dig. § 276.*]

6. APPEAL AND ERROR (§ 204*)—PRESENTA-TION OF QUESTIONS IN LOWER COURT—AD-MISSION OF EVIDENCE.

Where, in such an action, the plea of the defendant was stricken and the case proceeded to trial without any defense, the admission by the court of evidence to prove that the contract price was greater than the amount of the lien claimed will not require the grant of a new trial, although the petition did not allege such fact; it not appearing that any objection was made to the introduction of such evidence. Royal v. McPhail, 97 Ga. 457 (3), 25 S. E. 512; Cotton States Life Ins. Co. v. Edwards, 74 Ga. 220.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Appeal and Error, Cent. Dig. §§ 1258-1280; Dec. Dig. § 204.*]

7. TRIAL (§ 31*)—PRESENTATION OF QUESTIONS IN LOWER COURT—ADMISSION OF EVIDENCE.

Where, on motion of counsel for the plaintiff, the answer of the defendant was stricken, and thereafter the counsel for the plaintiff asked the counsel for the defendant if they would admit the extent of the indebtedness of the property owner to the contractor, and counsel for the defendant declined to make any admission, and thereupon the court stated to counsel for the plaintiff that he could not ask defendant for admissions as to any other matter, as such defendant was out of court and had nothing to say as to the further proceedings in the case, this was a ruling against the plaintiff, precluding him from calling on the defendant, or defendant's counsel, for admissions; and although the reason assigned by the court for such ruling may have been broadly stated, it did not constitute a ruling against the defendant as to any particular question. If the defendant desired to invoke a ruling of the court as to any point, it was incumbent upon it, or its counsel, to raise such point and invoke such ruling as a basis for a motion for a new trial or a bill of exceptions. If no point or question was raised in its behalf, and no ruling made against it by the court, the admission of evidence without objection could not, after verdict, be made the basis of a motion for a new trial, because of such general statement by the court in restraining the plaintiff's counsel from seeking to obtain admissions.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Trial, Cent. Dig. §§ 55, 84; Dec. Dig. § 31.*]

8. PETITION—SUFFICIENCY OF EVIDENCE—DI-RECTION OF VERDICT.

When the case proceeded as in default, the allegations in the petition and the evidence introduced without objection were sufficient to authorize the direction of a verdict in favor of the plaintiff.

Error from Superior Court, Burk County;
H. C. Hammond, Judge.

Action by the Dudley Sash, Door & Lumber Company against the Methodist Episcopal Church South. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendant brings error. Affirmed.

A. P. Bell, C. B. Garlick, and E. H. Callaway, for plaintiff in error. H. J. Fullbright, for defendant in error.

HOLDEN, J. Judgment affirmed. All the Justices concur, except BECK, J., absent.

(156 N. C. 641)

STATE v. ROCHELLE.

(Supreme Court of North Carolina. Nov. 1, 1911.)

1. INTOXICATING LIQUORS (§ 233*)—CRIMINAL PROSECUTIONS—EVIDENCE.

While the possession of a federal liquor license raises under Revisal 1905, § 2060, the presumption that the holder is engaged in that business, the fact that one accused of unlawfully engaging in selling intoxicating liquors has no such license does not raise the presumption that he is not engaged in the business; and hence evidence of that fact is inadmissible.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Intoxicating Liquors, Cent. Dig. § 298½; Dec. Dig. § 233.*]

2. CRIMINAL LAW (§ 775*)—TRIAL—INSTRUCTIONS—ALIBI.

The court charged that if defendant attempts to prove an alibi, and fails, it is a circumstance for the jury to consider, and, as the Supreme Court has said, they should carefully scrutinize the evidence because of its liability to abuse, and that by scrutinizing he meant them to study carefully, examine, and cautiously receive the evidence. Held, that this charge was not error, it not indicating that failure to prove an alibi was any evidence of guilt, and, considered as a whole, it could not have been misleading.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Criminal Law, Cent. Dig. §§ 1833-1837; Dec. Dig. § 775.*]

Appeal from Superior Court, Durham County; Allen, Judge.

L. S. Rochelle was convicted of the illegal sale of intoxicating liquor, and appeals. Affirmed.

V. S. Bryant and B. S. Royster, for appellant. T. W. Bickett, Atty. Gen., and Geo. L. Jones, Asst. Atty. Gen., for the State.

CLARK, C. J. [1] The defendant was convicted of the illegal sale of intoxicating liquor. The first exception is because the court declined to allow him to put in evidence a subpoena duces tecum issued by the state for Wheeler Martin, collector of internal revenue, to bring with him a list of all persons in said county who had obtained United States license to sell liquor. It is true, that when a man takes out United States license to sell liquor, under our statute a presumption arises that he is engaged in that business. Rev. § 2060; Vinegar Co. v. Hawn, 149 N. C. 355, 63 S. E. 78. But the fact that he has no such license from the United States government does not raise a presumption that the defendant is not engaged in the illegal sale of liquor. It may well be that the defendant did not consider such license necessary for his purpose, or profitable, or prudent. It costs money and makes evidence against him.

[2] The only other exceptions requiring notice are exceptions 3 and 4 to the charge of the court, as follows:

Exception 3. "If the defendant attempts to prove an alibi, and fail in it, it becomes a circumstance for the jury to consider. They can regard it entirely as unproven, and they can also consider the failure to establish an alibi, if the jury find he has failed in doing so, and give it such force as the jury may deem proper."

Exception 4. "You should carefully consider the evidence offered to establish an alibi because of its liability to abuse, as our Supreme Court says."

In State v. Jaynes, 78 N. C. 504, Bynum, J., said that evidence of an alibi "should be closely scrutinized because of its liability to abuse." His honor therefore was, as he said, simply quoting from a decision of this court. We do not understand him as intimating that failure to prove an alibi was any evidence of guilt. He simply said that evidence of that kind should be closely scrutinized. Indeed, his honor in that connection himself fully explained the meaning of the word "scrutinize" as follows: "It simply means that you should cautiously examine the evidence of the character I have alluded to; the evidence of the detective; the evidence of the defendant; the evidence tending or intending to establish an alibi. By scrutinizing, I have already said you should study it carefully, and examine it, and cautiously receive it. You should carefully examine and scrutinize the evidence of the detective, because of his bias, likely to exist by reason of his employment to find the evidence. You should carefully scrutinize the evidence of the defendant because of his interest. You should carefully scrutinize the evidence offered to establish an alibi because of its liability to abuse, as our Supreme Court says." Thus, read in connection with the context, the expression of the careful and cautious judge who tried this case could not have been misunderstood by the jury, and was but a statement of the law as laid down by this court. His honor further told the jury that if the defendant established an alibi it is a complete defense; and as to the defendant's testimony he told them that, while the jury should scrutinize it and receive it cautiously, yet if, after scrutinizing it, they were satisfied of the truth of it they should give it the same force and effect as that of any other witness.

No error.

(156 N. C. 591)

WARREN v. ATLANTIC &amp; Y. RY. CO.

(Supreme Court of North Carolina. Nov. 1, 1911.)

APPEAL AND ERROR (§ 679*)—REVIEW.

The allowance of an amended complaint superseded the original complaint, requiring defendant to either demur to or answer the amended complaint, so that the Supreme Court cannot pass upon the sufficiency of the original complaint upon appeal taken after the amendment was filed.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Appeal and Error, Dec. Dig. § 679.*]

Appeal from Superior Court, Guilford County; Daniels, Judge.

Action by J. H. Warren against the Atlantic & Yadkin Railway Company. Order overruling a demurrer to the complaint, and defendant appeals. Appeal dismissed.

Wilson & Ferguson, for appellant. J. I. Scales and Justice & Broadhurst, for appellee.

PER CURIAM. This is an action for personal injury heard upon demurrer at April term, 1911. The demurrer was overruled, and defendant excepted and appealed.

It was admitted upon the argument in this court that when the demurrer was overruled the plaintiff asked and obtained permission to file an amended complaint. The demurrer was interposed to the original complaint. We cannot pass upon the demurrer to the original complaint, as it is superseded by the new complaint. When the plaintiff by permission filed an amended complaint at the time when the demurrer was overruled, the defendant should have either demurred, or answered to the new complaint. As this amended complaint is not in the record, we cannot tell whether it states a cause of action or not. It may allege very different facts from the first complaint. The defendant will be allowed to demur or answer the amended complaint.

Appeal dismissed.

(156 N. C. 590)

RICHARDSON v. EDWARDS et al.

(Supreme Court of North Carolina. Nov. 1, 1911.)

APPEAL AND ERROR (§ 1062*)—FORM OF SPECIAL ISSUE—HARMLESS ERROR.

After an issue in a personal injury case as to whether the plaintiff was injured by the defendant's negligence, the court submitted the issue. "If so, did the plaintiff contribute to his injury?" Held, that the second issue was defective in form, but the error was cured by an instruction to consider the issue as, "Did the plaintiff contribute by his own negligence to his injury?"

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Appeal and Error, Cent. Dig. §§ 4212-4218; Dec. Dig. § 1062.*]

Appeal from Superior Court, Union County; O. H. Allen, Judge.

Action by J. E. Richardson against T. M. Edwards and others. Judgment for defendants, and plaintiff appeals. No error.

These issues were submitted:

"(1) Was the plaintiff injured by the negligence of the defendant? Answer: Yes.

"(2) If so, did the plaintiff contribute to his injury? Answer: Yes.

"(3) What damage, if any, did plaintiff sustain?"

From the judgment rendered, the plaintiff appealed.

Stack & Parker, for appellant. Redwine & Sikes and Adams, Armfield & Adams, for appellees.

PER CURIAM. The form of the second issue is defective. The record shows that his honor instructed the jury to consider the issue as if it read, "Did the plaintiff contribute by his own negligence to his injury?" which is the usual and approved form. We think the error was fully cured.

We have examined the other assignments of error, all of which relate to the charge of the court, and find them to be without substantial merit. The case was fairly put to the jury in accord with the well-settled decisions of this court.

No error.

(156 N. C. 428)

WILKES v. MILLER et al.

(Supreme Court of North Carolina. Nov. 1, 1911.)

1. JUDGMENT (§ 769*)—LIEN—CROSS-INDEXING—NECESSITY.

A judgment which was not cross-indexed when docketed did not become a lien upon the judgment debtor's land.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Judgment, Cent. Dig. § 1827; Dec. Dig. § 769.*]

2. MORTGAGES (§ 307*)—DISCHARGE OF LIEN—SUBSTITUTION—CANCELLATION OF ORIGINAL MORTGAGE.

The substitution of one note and mortgage for another will not discharge the lien of the original mortgage, unless it be surrendered to the mortgagor or canceled of record, being otherwise only a renewal or acknowledgment of the same debt.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Mortgages, Cent. Dig. §§ 804, 897; Dec. Dig. § 307.*]

Appeal from Superior Court, Union County; W. R. Allen, Judge.

Action by Jane R. Wilkes against R. M. Miller, administrator of J. W. Miller, and others. From a judgment for defendants, plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

This case was with an action instituted prior to the bringing of this action, for the purpose of foreclosing a mortgage made by W. F. Rhea and wife to J. W. Miller; the mortgagor and mortgagee both being dead at the time of the institution of these actions. By consent of the parties, the trial judge found the facts and conclusions of law, and rendered judgment in favor of the defendant R. M. Miller, administrator of J. W. Miller.

The following are the findings:

"(1) That prior to 1886, W. F. Rhea was the owner of the tract of land referred to in the complaint; that he is now dead, and J. C. Sikes is his administrator; that the said Rhea left surviving him a widow, who is still living, and no children.

"(2) That J. W. Miller is dead, and R. M. Miller, Jr., is his administrator.

"(3) That on the 1st day of March, 1886, the said W. F. Rhea and wife conveyed said tract of land to Joseph McLaughlin by mortgage deed to secure the payment of a balance due on a note for $550, executed by the said Rhea March 15, 1881, which mortgage deed was registered in Union county, in Book W, page 480, on the 1st day of March, 1886.

"(4) That on the 2d day of February, 1887, the said Rhea and wife conveyed said land to Joseph McLaughlin by mortgage deed to secure a note of even date for $313.20, which mortgage deed was registered in Union county on the 5th day of February, 1887.

"(5) That on the 1st day of January, 1889, the said Rhea and wife conveyed said land to J. B. Ross by mortgage deed to secure a note of even date for the sum of $250, which mortgage deed was registered in Union county on the 1st day of February, 1889.

"(6) That the notes and mortgages referred to in findings 3 and 4 were duly assigned to J. W. Miller on the 11th day of January, 1893, and the note and mortgage referred to in finding 5 were duly assigned to said Miller on the 27th day of February, 1889.

"(7) That on the 11th day of January, 1893, there was due on the notes referred to in findings 3, 4 and 5 the sum of $830, and on said day the said Rhea and wife executed to the said Miller a note for said sum, and conveyed said land to said Miller to secure the payment of the same by mortgage deed, which was registered in Union county on the 4th day of May, 1896.

"(8) That at the time of the execution of the note and mortgage referred to in the preceding paragraph the said Miller retained the notes and mortgages referred to in the third, fourth, and fifth findings, and the same have never been surrendered nor canceled of record.

"(9) That thereafter an action was instituted in the superior court of Union county against the administrator and heirs at law and widow of W. F. Rhea to foreclose the mortgage referred to in the seventh finding, and at February term, 1905, a judgment was rendered therein in favor of the plaintiff, administrator of Miller, for the sum of $1,230.48, with interest on $830, and condemning said land to be sold to pay the same; that said land was sold thereunder for the sum of $350, and said sale was duly confirmed. There was no reference in the complaint in said action to the notes and mortgages referred to in findings 3, 4, and 5.

"(10) That on December 2, 1884, said Liddell & Co. obtained two judgments in Mecklenburg county against the said W. F. Rhea; one for $201.33, with 8 per cent. interest from date of judgment, and the other for $217.33, with 8 per cent. interest from date of judgment, and $3.20 costs. Transcripts of said judgment were sent to Union county, and the same appear on the judgment docket of said county as of December 4, 1884, but said judgments were never cross-indexed.

"(11) That on November 5, 1895, Jane R. Wilkes, trading as the Mecklenburg Iron Works, obtained a judgment against the said W. F. Rhea before a justice of the peace of Mecklenburg county for the sum of $239.60, with interest on $181.50 from November 5, 1895, at 8 per cent., and $3.80 costs, which judgment was duly docketed in Union county November 15, 1895.

"(12) That the findings and conclusions of the referee as to the attempted allotment of a homestead to the said W. F. Rhea are adopted.

"(13) That this present action was instituted on the 20th day of December, 1905, for the purpose of subjecting the proceeds of the sale of land referred to in the ninth finding to the payment of the judgment referred to in the eleventh finding.

"(14) That Liddell & Co. has been made a party to this action, and claims proceeds.

"And it is thereupon considered and adjudged that neither Jane R. Wilkes, trading as the Mecklenburg Iron Works, nor the Liddell Company, is entitled to any part of the proceeds of sale.

"It is further considered and adjudged that the said Jane R. Wilkes pay the costs accrued since this action was commenced, except so much as is incident to the determination of the claim of Liddell & Co., which said company shall pay."

R. B. Redwine, for appellant. Adams. Armfield & Adams, for appellees.

BROWN, J. [1] 1. The judgments of Liddell & Co. referred to in finding 10 were docketed prior to the registration of the mortgages referred to in the findings, but the judgments were never cross-indexed. Therefore they never constituted a lien upon the land. Dewey v. Sugg, 109 N. C. 329, 13 S. E. 923, 14 L. R. A. 393.

2. The Wilkes judgment was docketed November 5, 1895, after the registration of the original mortgages referred to in findings 3, 4, and 5. On January 11, 1893, there was due on the mortgages (all on same land) $830. On that date Miller, the owner of the debt, took from the debtor another note and mortgage, securing the same debt. The original notes and mortgages were never canceled or surrendered, but were retained by Miller. Upon these facts, the original notes and mortgages were not discharged, and their lien continued.

[2] The substitution of one note and mortgage for another will not discharge the lien of the original note and mortgage unless the latter is surrendered to the mortgagor or canceled of record. It is only a renewal or acknowledgment of the same debt. Collins v. Davis, 132 N. C. 106, 43 S. E. 579; Hyman v. Devereux, 63 N. C. 626.

The conclusion of his honor that the Wilkes and Liddell judgments are not entitled to any portion of the proceeds of the salle of the land, and that the same should be applied to the judgment in favor of Miller in the foreclosure suit, is correct.

Affirmed.

ALLEN and WALKER, JJ., not sitting.

(156 N. C. 435)

STARR v. SOUTHERN BELL TELEPHONE & TELEGRAPH CO.

(Supreme Court of North Carolina. Nov. 1, 1911.)

1. ELECTRICITY (§ 19*)—ACTIONS—EVIDENCE—JURY QUESTION.

In an action against a telephone company for an injury by lightning which resulted from its negligence in leaving unconnected wires in premises from which it had removed a telephone, the question of whether lightning was transmitted by these wires held for the jury.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Electricity, Dec. Dig. § 19.*]

2. ELECTRICITY (§ 16*)—OPERATION—REMOVAL OF WIRES FROM BUILDING—NEGLIGENCE.

Where a telephone company after removing an instrument from a house took off the lightning arrester, and severed the ground connections, but left the unattached wires in the building, it is guilty of negligence, and is liable for any injury caused by the transmission of lightning over such wires.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Electricity, Dec. Dig. § 16.*]

3. EVIDENCE (§ 9*)—TRIAL (§ 192*)—JUDICIAL NOTICE—LIGHTNING.

That lightning is frequently discharged and passes to the earth, and that lightning is likely to pass along metal wires, and that a human body is also a good conductor, and, if in contact with a wire charged with electricity, the circuit may ground through the body, are matters of common knowledge, and a proper matter of judicial notice, and in an action against a telephone company for injuries by lightning, conducted by its wires into a building from which the telephone had been removed, the court properly charged the jury as to those facts.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Evidence, Cent. Dig. § 8; Dec. Dig. § 9.* Trial, Cent. Dig. §§ 432-434; Dec. Dig. § 192.*]

Appeal from Superior Court, Guilford County; Allen, Judge.

Action by Henry F. Starr against the Southern Bell Telephone & Telegraph Company. From a judgment for plaintiff, defendant appeals. Affirmed.

H. E. W. Palmer, Brutus J. Clay, and Wilson & Ferguson, for appellant. R. C. Strudwick and W. P. Bynum, for appellee.

CLARK, C. J. [1] The defendant removed a telephone from the plaintiff's house, but for its own convenience left the wires leading into plaintiff's porch still connected with its general system of wires, and with the loose ends twisted together and hanging down six or eight inches from the plate of the porch. At the same time the defendant removed the lightning arrester, and severed the ground connection of the said wires. There was evidence that the wires left in this condition were dangerous on account of the means thus afforded of their conducting lightning which might strike any part of the defendant's general system of wires into the house, and that the plaintiff was unaware of this danger, but relied upon the defendant to leave the wires in a safe condition. One afternoon in June, 1909, the plaintiff was sitting on his porch under said wires, when a storm accompanied by thunder and lightning came up. The plaintiff arose to go into his house, and, as he stood up, the ends of said wires being about 18 inches from and to the left of his head, there came a violent clap of thunder, and a ball or bolt of lightning struck him on the left and back of his head, which the plaintiff claims came from the ends of said wires, rendering him unconscious and seriously injuring him. The jury found that said injuries were caused in this mode and by the negligence of the defendant.

The defendant's chief contention is that the court erred in not granting its motion to nonsuit the plaintiff; but we think not. The matter was one peculiarly one of fact, and was for the jury to determine. It is true no one saw the discharge of the lightning leap from the wires and strike the plaintiff on the left and back of his head. But the evidence justified the jury in finding such to be the fact. When one fires a pistol at another, no one sees the ball strike the body, but the pointing the pistol within proper distance, its discharge, and the wound are evidence from which the jury can infer the cause of the wound.

[2] In dealing with this dangerous agency of electricity, if the defendant left its wires for its own convenience hanging in the plaintiff's porch, it was negligence for which it was liable if the injury of the plaintiff was caused as the jury finds by lightning striking on its wires and being discharged against the plaintiff thereby. Especially is this so when the defendant was guilty of the further negligence of taking off the lightning arrester and severing the ground connections.

In a case almost identical in the facts with the present—Telephone Co. v. McTyer, 137 Ala. 601, 34 South. 1020, 97 Am. St. Rep. 62—the court said: The only justification for the wires being carried into a building and maintained there is the telephone service thus supplied by means of them. If they are put there not for that purpose, but for the mere convenience of the telephone company, and allowed to be in such condition as that persons and property in the building are liable to be injured by lightning gathered and brought into the building by them and there discharged, their mere presence is a wrong. So, when they were originally carried into the building, and equipped and maintained to supply the service to the owner, but at his instance the service has been discontinued and the instruments removed, and the company, instead of then removing the wires, merely cuts them loose from the instrument, twists their ends together, and leaves them thus dangling in the building, so that atmospheric electricity striking them anywhere along their course on the outside will be inducted into the building, and there discharged to the peril of persons and property, this is an unpalliated wrong on the part of the company. It is the creation and maintenance of a dangerous situation without that warranting occasion for it which may exist when the wires are in use, without any occasion whatever, in fact; and the company is liable in damages for whatever injuries may result to persons and property on the premises." And, further, the court said: "In view of the known capacity of these wires to collect and carry dangerous currents of atmospheric electricity into the store and there discharge them, to the deadly peril of persons in there at the time, and in view of the total absence of any occasion for the wires to be left there at all, there can in our opinion be no doubt that the company owed a plain duty, not only to Thomas, but also to his customers, to remove the wires, and thereby to obviate this peril to him and to them. Nor was there any excuse for its failure to perform this duty. Its remission of it was a positive wrong, committed by defendant's servant who removed the telephone and twisted up and left the wires. No man of ordinary care and prudence would have so acted. There is not room for two reasonable conclusions as to the character of the act in respect of negligence per se, and to be so declared as matter of law."

[3] The defendant also excepts because the judge charged the jury: "Then, as I said, there are some well-known facts that may be considered in the same way as if they had been testified to. It is a well-known fact, for instance, that lightning in times of storms is frequently discharged from the clouds and passes to the earth, and that metal wires in the air are good conductors of electricity, much better than the air, and that electricity discharging from the clouds near such wires is liable and apt to pass on them and along them to the earth, and that if a human body, which is also a good conductor, is in contact with a wire charged with electricity, it will pass through it to the ground; or if near it, if the charge is strong enough, it is likely to seek it and pass to the ground, the human body being a better conductor than air. Therefore it is the duty of one engaged in a business which requires the dealing with metal wires to use every reasonable precaution to protect any one likely to come in contact with or near to the same; and so when the defendant was ordered to remove this telephone, and when it did remove it from the house of the plaintiff, it was its duty to remove the same and leave it in a reasonably safe condition, if it left any part of the wire attached to the house. So an important inquiry is whether the wire was left in a reasonably safe condition, or did the defendant leave it in a dangerous condition."

This was not an expression of opinion, but the statement of facts generally known. What is a matter of common knowledge to every one else should certainly be matter within the knowledge of a court, and of which it can take judicial notice.

No error.

(156 N. C. 451)

KIME v. SOUTHERN RY. CO.

(Supreme Court of North Carolina. Nov. 1, 1911.)

1. CARRIERS (§ 218*)—CARRIAGE OF LIVE STOCK—INJURIES—NOTICE OF CLAIM.

A provision in a bill of lading covering a shipment of live stock, making notice of injury within five days from the time of the removal of the live stock a condition precedent to recovery, is valid.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Carriers, Cent. Dig. § 938; Dec. Dig. § 218.*]

2. CARRIERS (§ 218*)—LIVE STOCK—NOTICE OF INJURY—FAILURE TO GIVE—EFFECT.

Where the agent of a carrier of live stock had, at the time they were unloaded, notice of injuries received by them in transit, the shipper's failure to give the notice required by the bill of lading will not prevent recovery.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Carriers, Dec. Dig. § 218.*]

3. CARRIERS (§ 230*)—CARRIAGE OF LIVE STOCK—INSTRUCTIONS—EVIDENCE IN SUPPORT.

In an action against a carrier for injury to live stock, the shipper testified that when the stock was unloaded the agent of the company was near the gangway, and that the stock, which consisted of horses and mules, had to be supported and steadied, so as to keep them from falling down the gangway. Held, that an instruction that if the evidence of plaintiff was believed, the jury should find that no notice was given to the carrier of the injuries was erroneous, being contrary to the testimony in question.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Carriers, Dec. Dig. § 230.*]

Appeal from Superior Court, Alamance County; Daniels, Judge.

Action by H. G. Kime against the Southern Railway Company. From a judgment for defendant, plaintiff appeals. Reversed and remanded.

This is an action to recover damages for injury to stock transported by the defendant railroad.

The plaintiff offered evidence tending to prove that 21 horses and 3 mules were received by the defendant from a connecting common carrier, and that they were carried in an old stock car, which had been worked over; that the ventilating windows and doors were closed up tightly with slats, and the car rendered almost air tight, being without ventilation, and unsuitable and unfit for the transportation of live stock; and that they were injured thereby while in possession of the defendant.

The bill of lading covering the shipment was introduced in evidence, and, among other things, it contained the following stipulations:

"(1) No claim for damages, which may accrue to the said shipper under this contract, shall be allowed or paid by the said carrier or sued for in any court by the said shipper, unless a claim for such loss or damage shall be made in writing, verified by the affidavit of the said shipper or his agent, and delivered to an authorized officer or agent of the said carrier within five days from the time said stock is removed from said car or cars, and that if any loss or damage occurs upon the line of a connecting carrier, then such carrier shall not be liable unless a claim is made in like manner and delivered in like time, to some proper officer or agent of the carrier on whose line the loss or injury occurs.

"(2) The said shipper or the consignee is to pay the freight charges thereon to the said carrier at the rate of $45.00 per C—L, which the lower published tariff rate, based upon the express condition that the carrier assumes liability on the said live stock to the extent only of the following agreed valuation, upon which valuation is based the rate charged for the transportation of the said animals, and beyond which valuation neither the said carrier, nor any connecting carrier, shall be liable in any event, whether the loss or damage occur through the negligence of the said carrier or connecting carriers, or their employes or otherwise: If horses or mules—not exceeding $100.00 each."

It was admitted that the plaintiff did not give to the defendant written notice of his claim for damages, but he contended that this was unnecessary, as the agent of the defendant was present when the horses and mules were unloaded, and saw them, and knew of the injury to them.

The following verdict was returned by the jury:

"(1) Was plaintiff's stock injured by the negligence of the defendant company, as alleged in the complaint? Answer: Yes.

"(2) If so, what amount of damage has the plaintiff sustained on account of said negligence and injury? Answer: Yes; $475.

"(3) Did the plaintiff comply with the contract of shipment as to the giving of notice to defendant as to his claim for damages? Answer: No."

Judgment was entered upon the verdict in favor of the defendant, and the plaintiff excepted and appealed.

W. H. Carroll, for appellant. Parker & Parker, for appellee.

ALLEN, J. The ruling of the learned judge before whom this case was tried, granting the motion of the defendant for judgment upon the verdict, is based upon the answer to the third issue; he being of opinion that the failure of the plaintiff to give notice to defendant of the injury to the stock is fatal to his right of action.

[1, 2] He correctly held, in accordance with our authorities, that the provision in the bill of lading, requiring notice, was valid, and that the failure to give written notice would not prevent a recovery by the plaintiff, if the agent of the defendant knew of the injury to the horses and mules at the time they were being unloaded. Selby v. Railroad, 113 N. C. 588, 18 S. E. 88, 37 Am. St. Rep. 635; Jones v. Railroad, 148 N. C. 586, 62 S. E. 701; Austin v. Railroad, 151 N. C. 137, 65 S. E. 757; Kime v. Railroad, 153 N. C. 400, 69 S. E. 264.

[3] He was, however, further of opinion, and so charged the jury, that there was no evidence "that the agent of the defendant saw or knew that it [the stock] was injured," and directed the jury to answer the third issue, "No," if the evidence of the witness for the plaintiff was believed, and in this we think there was error. The plaintiff was a witness in his own behalf, and testified that he was present when the stock was unloaded at Burlington, and that Mr. Ray, the depot agent, was also present; that the horses and mules were in a suffocated condition, and that the perspiration was on them, like they had come out of a river; that they were out of breath and very weak, and that the boys, who were helping to unload, had to take them by the tails and hips and steady them; that they did not lead them as was usually done, but had to steady them and lead them down the gangway to keep them from falling; that Mr. Ray, the agent, was standing on the platform when they were moved away. He was then asked the following questions: "Q. Was he in a condition to see the horses? A. Yes, sir; good as I could. Q. How close were the horses to Mr. Ray? A. They had to come right by the side of him. Q. How many feet? A. Something like six or eight feet. Q. That was when they came out? A. Yes, sir." If this evidence is believed, the condition of the stock was such that it would necessarily attract attention, and the agent was so situated that he could scarcely fail to observe them. In our opinion, this is some evidence that he saw the horses and mules, and knew they were injured.

The question is also raised on the record as to the effect of the valuation clause in the bill of lading, but as this is considered in another case at this term, and the facts bearing on this controversy may be more fully developed on another trial, we refrain from discussing it.

For the error pointed out, a new trial is ordered.

New trial.

(156 N. C. 453)

SINCLAIR v. TEAL et al.

(Supreme Court of North Carolina. Nov. 1, 1911.)

ADVERSE POSSESSION (§ 65*)—BOUNDARIES—DIVISION LINE—ACQUIESCENCE.

Decedent by will probated July 2, 1889, devised 100 acres of land to J., to be laid off, commencing at a specified corner. Plaintiff, who was executor and to whom the adjoining land was devised, was not present, and did not participate in a survey of J.'s land, which was made by the county surveyor. J. took possession of the land laid off to her, which, in fact, by mistake in the survey contained 108 acres, and she and those under whom she claimed and plaintiff thereafter continued in possession, occupying and cultivating the land up to the division line as then ascertained until another survey was made in 1907, when the mistake was discovered. Held, that it was plaintiff's duty to ascertain whether the original survey was correct within a reasonable time after it was made, and, having failed to do so, J.'s successors in title were entitled to the excess under the 7, 10, and 20 year statutes of limitations, though plaintiff sued to cut off the excess within three years after actually discovering the mistake.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Adverse Possession, Cent. Dig. §§ 365-370; Dec. Dig. § 65.*]

Appeal from Superior Court, Anson County; Justice, Judge.

Action by A. D. Sinclair against E. P. Teal and others. Judgment for defendants, and plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

Fred J. Cox, for appellant. Robinson & Caudle, for appellees.

CLARK, C. J. Llewellyn Sinclair by his will probated July 2, 1889, devised to his daughter, Mary Jarman, 100 acres of land, "commencing in the old line at a corner of a 25 acres, my corner and Lewis Rickett's land, where it joins my old land and runs near North, so as to make 100 acres West of said line." The 100 acres were surveyed off for her soon after the probate of the will, said survey being made by the county surveyor at the instance of Mary Jarman, without the plaintiff, the executor of the will, A. D. Sinclair, being present. The said executor, who was devisee of the land adjoining, found out soon thereafter that said survey had been made, and he and the said Mary Jarman each treated said survey as containing only 100 acres as devised in the will, and from said date said Mary Jarman and those claiming under her and the said A. D. Sinclair were each in possession of their respective land on each side of said line under said survey, under known and visible lines and boundaries, each cultivating up to said line. On March 2, 1893, Mary Jarman and husband mortgaged the land to one Covington, describing the same by metes and bounds as had been fully set out in the survey made by the county surveyor. The land was sold under the mortgage, and the purchaser received the deed containing said description bearing date October 11, 1894. The purchaser went into possession under said deed under known and visible lines and boundaries, and remained in possession of the same till November 18, 1905, when he for value conveyed the same to the defendant E. P. Teal, describing the said metes and bounds, who has remained in possession under known and visible lines and boundaries up to this date. Another survey was made in the latter part of the year 1907, when it was discovered that the tract contained 108 acres, and this action was commenced October 27, 1909, being less than three years prior to the beginning of this action, to cut off and recover eight acres.

The defendant pleads the 20-year statute, the 10-year statute, the 7-year statute, and the 3-year statute. It would seem that he was protected by each one of them, but the plaintiff claims that under Rev. 1905, § 395 (6), he could maintain his action on the ground of mistake, it having been brought within three years after the actual discovery of the mistake in the acreage. If this had been true as between the plaintiff and Mary Jarman, it would not have deprived the defendant of the protection of the other statutes of limitations that are pleaded. But even between the original parties the three-year statute runs from the time the fraud or mistake was discovered, "or should have been discovered in the exercise of ordinary care." Peacock v. Barnes, 142 N. C. 219, 55 S. E. 99, and cases there cited. It was the duty of the plaintiff as executor to lay off said land to Mary Jarman, the devisee. He did not do so, but permitted her to have it surveyed and enter into possession. It was therefore his duty to ascertain if the quantity was correct. Indeed, he could have ascertained that fact by the simple process of taking the metes and bounds as reported by the county surveyor, and making a calculation therefrom. He says those metes and bounds were repeated in the description of the property, in the mortgage, and in the successive conveyances down to the defendant. He recognized the line between himself and his sister and her successors in title and in possession by cultivating up to that line, and permitting them to do so for more than 20 years. In Peacock v. Barnes, supra, the court quotes with approval Pomeroy, Eq. Jur. (3d Ed.) § 917, note 2: "This can only mean that the plaintiff's ignorance is not negligent; that he remains ignorant without any fault of his own; that he had not discovered the fraud or mistake, and could not by any reasonable diligence have discovered it."

Upon the agreed statement of facts as above, the court properly held that the plaintiff was not entitled to recover.

Affirmed.

(156 N. C. 419)

CURRIE & McQUEEN v. SEABOARD AIR LINE RY.

(Supreme Court of North Carolina. Nov. 1, 1911.)

1. RAILROADS (§ 480*)—FIRES—PRESUMPTIONS AND BURDEN OF PROOF.

Where property is destroyed by fire started by a railroad engine, after plaintiff has introduced evidence from which presumption of negligence arises, the burden of satisfying the jury that the engine was properly equipped, that competent men were in charge of it, and that it was prudently operated, is upon the defendant.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Railroads, Cent. Dig. §§ 1709-1716; Dec. Dig. § 480.*]

2. RAILROADS (§ 484*)—FIRES—QUESTION FOR JURY—PRESUMPTION OF NEGLIGENCE—REBUTTAL.

Where the presumption of negligence arising from the fact that a fire was started by a railroad is one of fact, and defendant gives evidence in rebuttal which if believed would establish the fact that the engine was properly equipped, and was in charge of competent employees, and was prudently operated, this evidence is not contradicted, and it is for the jury to pass upon its weight.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Railroads, Cent. Dig. §§ 1740-1746; Dec. Dig. § 484.*]

3. RAILROADS (§ 484*)—FIRES—ACTIONS—SUFFICIENCY OF EVIDENCE—DEFECTS IN AND MANAGEMENT OF ENGINES.

In an action for damages for property destroyed by fire, where there is evidence to support a finding for plaintiff as to the origin of the fire, a nonsuit is properly refused.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Railroads, Cent. Dig. §§ 1740-1746; Dec. Dig. § 484.*]

4. RAILROADS (§ 482*)—FIRES—ACTION—SUFFICIENCY OF EVIDENCE.

Evidence, in an action against a railroad for damages to property from a fire alleged to have been caused by defendant's engines, held sufficient to sustain a verdict for plaintiff.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Railroads, Cent. Dig. §§ 1730-1736; Dec. Dig. § 482.*]

Appeal from Superior Court, Moore County; O. H. Allen, Judge.

Action by Currie & McQueen against the Seaboard Air Line Railway. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendant appeals. No error.

This is an action to recover damages for the destruction by fire of the lumber plant of the plaintiff, on Sunday, the 29th day of May, 1910. At the conclusion of the evidence, the defendant moved for judgment of nonsuit, which was denied, and the defendant excepted.

The defendant requested the court to give the following instructions, which were refused, and the defendant excepted:

"That, although from the evidence introduced by the plaintiff, which raises the presumption of negligence, that the defendant did set fire to the property of the plaintiffs, yet the court charges you that, upon all the evidence introduced, you would not be warranted in charging the defendant with actionable negligence; and this is so, because the plaintiffs have done nothing more than to introduce evidence tending to show presumptive negligence, which is rebuttable, and, the defendant having introduced uncontradicted evidence to rebut that presumption, the plaintiffs cannot recover, because they have failed to go further and show, by additional evidence, that there was actual negligence, as alleged in the complaint.

"If the jury believed the uncontradicted evidence of the defendant's witnesses, the engine from which the damage is alleged to have come was in good condition and had a proper spark arrester and other appliances to prevent the escape of fire, and was skillfully operated and managed by a competent engineer, and the jury should answer the second issue, 'Yes.'"

The defendant also excepted for that his honor charged the jury on the second issue as follows: "Upon this issue, the burden of proof is upon defendant to show by the greater weight of the evidence that, at the time of the escape of sparks, it had a proper spark arrester and other appliances to prevent the escape of sparks, such as are approved and in general use at the time, and that the engine and appliances were in good condition and operated in a careful way by a skillful and competent engineer."

The following verdict was returned by the jury:

(1) Was the property of the plaintiffs, referred to in the complaint, set on fire and burned by sparks from the defendant's engine at the time alleged in the complaint? Answer: Yes.

(2) If so, did said engines of the defendant, at the time of the escape of said sparks, have a proper spark arrester and other appliances to prevent the escape of sparks, approved and in general use at said time, and were said engines and appliances in good condition and operated in a careful way by skillful and competent engineers? Answer: No.

(3) Were the plaintiffs guilty of contributory negligence, as alleged in the answer? Answer: No.

(4) What damage, if any, are the plaintiffs entitled to recover of the defendant? Answer: $10,000.

There was judgment in favor of the plaintiff, and the defendant excepted and appealed.

W. H. Neal, for appellant. D. E. McIver and G. W. McNeill, for appellee.

ALLEN, J. Three questions are presented by this appeal:

(1) That there was error in imposing the burden of proof on the defendant on the second issue.

(2) That, if the burden of proof was on the defendant, it was by reason of the presumption, arising from proof that the defendant destroyed the property of the plaintiffs by fire, and that this was a presumption of law and not of fact, and, when evidence was offered rebutting the presumption, it was error to leave the question to the jury, in the absence of other evidence of negligence, and it ought to have been decided as matter of law by the court.

(3) That it was error to refuse to nonsuit the plaintiff on all the evidence.

1. The learned counsel for the defendant urges with much force on the consideration of the court several cases in our own reports, holding that the burden of proof is on the plaintiff as to negligence, and that, while the duty of proceeding with the evidence may shift from one party to the other, the burden of the issue does not shift, and he insists, on the authority of these cases, that there was error in holding that the burden on the second issue was on the defendant.

An examination of these decisions will show that in all of them one issue was submitted to the jury to determine the liability of the defendant, and that this issue embraced two facts: The origin of the fire, and the negligence of the defendant.

In the case before us these facts were to be settled by separate issues, and in this is to be found the distinction between the cases relied on and the one under consideration.

[1] The first issue establishes the fact that the defendant destroyed the property of the plaintiff by fire, and from this fact alone the presumption arises that the defendant was negligent. Ellis v. R. R., 24 N. C. 138; Lawton v. Giles, 90 N. C. 380; Manf. Co. v. R. R., 122 N. C. 881, 29 S. E. 575; Hosiery Mills v. R. R., 131 N. C. 238, 42 S. E. 602; Lumber Co. v. R. R., 143 N. C. 324, 55 S. E. 781; Deppe v. R. R., 152 N. C. 82, 67 S. E. 262; Kornegay v. Atlantic Coast Line R. Co., 154 N. C. 392, 70 S. E. 731. These authorities place the burden on the defendant to rebut the presumption of negligence, arising from proof connecting the defendant with the origin of the fire, by evidence which will satisfy the jury that the engine was properly equipped, that competent men were in charge of it, and that it was prudently operated; and necessarily the burden of the issue embracing these facts alone is on the defendant.

2. The prayers for instruction tendered by the defendant require a consideration of the nature of the presumption in cases like this, because, if this presumption is evidence in behalf of the plaintiff, the evidence of the defendant is not uncontradicted, as the instruction required the judge to charge.

It may be well to analyze the instructions before discussing them. They require the judge to decide that the evidence of the defendant is uncontradicted, and that, if believed by the jury, it is sufficient to establish the fact that the engine was properly equipped and was prudently operated by competent employees.

In many jurisdictions it is held that the presumption of negligence arising from proof that the defendant set out the fire is one of law, and generally, where this conclusion is reached, the courts approve the view contended for by the defendant that it is the duty of the court to pass on the sufficiency of the rebutting evidence, as matter of law.

This position is also supported by the case of Williams v. R. R., 130 N. C. 116, 40 S. E. 979, in which it was held to be error to refuse to give an instruction substantially like those requested by the defendant.

[2] On the other hand, when the presumption is treated as one of fact, the rule usually obtains that the evidence must be submitted to the jury, who must pass on its sufficiency, and with the exception of Williams v. R. R., supra, our court has held the presumption to be one of fact.

In Cox v. R. R., 149 N. C. 118, 62 S. E. 885, Justice Walker, speaking for the court, says: "The presumption is one of fact and not law. Evidence that the sparks were emitted from the engine and that they set fire to the timber made a prima facie case for the plaintiff, but only to the extent of being evidence sufficient to carry the case to the jury and to warrant a verdict in favor of the plaintiff, if the jury should find the ultimate or crucial fact that the fire was caused by the defendant's negligence."

In Deppe v. R. R., 152 N. C. 82, 67 S. E. 264, Justice Manning, after stating the duty imposed on the defendant, says: "If the defendant can show at the trial that it had used all those precautions for confining sparks or cinders, which are approved and in general use, and the jury shall so find the fact, the trial judge will instruct them to answer the issue of negligence, 'No,' provided the precautions were used by a competent and skilled engineer, in a careful way. Rule 1 in Williams v. R. R., 140 N. C. 623 [53 S. E. 448]; Knott v. R. R., 142 N. C. 238 [55 S. E. 150]."

Note that, after the rebutting evidence is introduced by the defendant, it is for the jury to find the fact.

These cases and others to the same effect are cited with approval in Kornegay v. R. R., 154 N. C. 392, 70 S. E. 732, where the principle is stated as follows: "When it is shown that the fire originated from sparks which came from the defendant's engine, the plaintiff made out a prima facie case, entitling him to have the issue as to negligence submitted to the jury, and they were justified in finding negligence unless they were satisfied, upon all the evidence in the case, that, in fact, there was no negligence, but that the defendant's engine was equipped with a proper spark arrester and had been operated in a careful or prudent manner. Williams v. R. R., 140 N. C. 623 [53 S. E. 448]; Cox v. R. R., 149 N. C. 117 [62 S. E. 884]."

The reasons for the rule, and its justice, are nowhere better stated than by Chief Justice Smith, in Aycock v. R. R., 89 N. C. 329: "A numerous array of cases are cited in the note in support of each side of the question as to the party upon whom rests the burden of proof of the presence or absence of negligence, where only the injury is shown, in case of fire from emitted sparks. While the author favors the class of cases which impose the burden upon the plaintiff, we prefer to abide by the rule so long understood and acted on in this state, not alone because of its intrinsic merit, but because it is so much easier for those who do the damage to show the exculpating circumstances, if such exist, than it is for the plaintiff to produce proof of positive negligence. The servants of the company must know and be able to explain the transaction, while the complaining party may not; and it is but just that he should be allowed to say to the company, 'You have burned my property, and, if you are not in default, show it and escape responsibility.'" The note referred to is one to R. R. v. Schultz, 2 Am. & Eng. R. R. Cases, 271.

The presumption is one of fact and is itself evidence of negligence, and the evidence of the defendant in rebuttal of the presumption is as to facts upon which the decision of the issue depends, and there would seem to be no reason for excepting evidence of this character from the statute which forbids the judge from expressing an opinion on the facts, or as to the weight of the evidence. If it should be held that the defendant was entitled to the instructions prayed for, the duty would be imposed on the judge to decide that there were no contradictions in the evidence of the defendant, that the witnesses were worthy of belief, and that the evidence was sufficient and satisfactory, which are matters committed by the law to the jury and not to the judge.

We conclude, therefore, that, assuming there were no contradictions in the evidence of the defendant, and that, if believed, it established the facts that the engine was properly equipped and was in charge of competent employees, and was prudently operated, this evidence cannot be said to be uncontradicted, and it was for the jury to pass on its weight. The evidence was contradicted by the presumption, which was some evidence of negligence.

We do not think Williams v. R. R., supra, is in line with the other decisions of this court, and we must decline to follow it.

[3] There are, however, other valid reasons for sustaining the ruling of his honor. There was some evidence of defects in the spark arrester, coming from the witnesses for the defendant. J. R. Bissett, master mechanic of the defendant, testified that there were patches on the wire netting, and that the covering of the manhole had long openings in it instead of square ones. He also said: "The covering of the manhole was in general use before they had adopted this wire netting, and we discarded that—the master mechanics' convention did—because the sparks would get hung in there and make a solid mass of it, and the engine would get choked and the flame would come out the furnace door when it was opened, and they would have to go in there and knock it, so they stopped this same netting to cover the manhole with. The reason those manholes with the long openings, instead of the square, were used, was that the S. A. L. had in stock a quantity of them, and we used them on the manholes to fill the bill, because there is enough opening, with what is in there, to give the engine draught enough to steam with." It was permissible to argue from this evidence that the spark arrester in use was old and dilapidated, and that it had been condemned by the convention of the master mechanics. It is also doubtful if any evidence was introduced that the engine was properly operated. Two engines of the defendant passed the place of the fire within a short time of each other; one being No. 746, and the other 752.

J. M. Stoker, engineer, was the only witness examined as to the operation of No. 746, and he says nothing as to how the engine was being managed, except that he was running about 30 miles an hour when he passed the place of the fire, and the only evidence on this point as to engine No. 752 was that of N. R. Vaughan, engineer, who said he was sitting on the right-hand side of the engine, and was running at from 30 to 35 miles an hour. No inquiry was made of either as to what he or his fireman was doing, or whether or no sparks escaped from the engine he was in charge of, as it passed the property of the plaintiff. In the absence of such evidence from witnesses who knew the facts, the jury might well infer that they were silent because a disclosure would be hurtful.

3. If we are correct in our conclusion that the burden was on the defendant on the second issue, it follows that there was no error in denying the motion to nonsuit, if there was evidence to support a finding, in favor of the plaintiff, on the first issue as to the origin of the fire.

[4] In our opinion, there was sufficient evidence to support the verdict. The lumber plant, which was burned, was situated near the right of way of the defendant. Engine No. 746 passed the lumber plant about 3:10 p. m., and engine No. 752 about 3:30 p. m. The fire occurred on Sunday, and several witnesses, who had the opportunity to see, testified that they saw no smoke or other evidence of fire before the engines passed, and that the plant was burning within 15 or 20 minutes after the passing of the last engine. The engineer on engine No. 752 testified that he did not notice any smoke as he passed the plant, and one of the plaintiffs testified that he was at the plant about 1 o'clock p. m. on Sunday, and saw no evidence of fire, and that he was in the boiler room the night before at 11 o'clock, and there were then only a few sparks in the back end of the boiler well.

Another witness for the plaintiffs, Mrs. Vick, testified that she noticed sparks, cinders, and heavy smoke coming from the train. If this evidence is true, there was no fire about the premises before the engines passed; sparks escaped from the engine, and within 15 minutes thereafter the property of the plaintiffs was on fire, and it was not unreasonable to conclude from these facts that the property of the plaintiffs was set on fire and burned by sparks from the defendant's engine.

We have examined all of the exceptions appearing in the record, and find no error.

No error.

(156 N. C. 439)

DORSETT v. ATLANTIC COAST LINE R. CO.

(Supreme Court of North Carolina. Nov. 1, 1911.)

1. CARRIERS (§ 381*)—PASSENGERS—EJECTION—EVIDENCE.

Where plaintiff was ejected because he had failed to exchange his mileage coupons for a ticket and refused to pay his fare except with the mileage coupons on the train, he was entitled to testify whether he consented to the agent's giving him a ticket to a junction point instead of his destination, in order to show that plaintiff had not voluntarily withdrawn his application for a ticket to destination.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Carriers, Dec. Dig. § 381.*]

2. APPEAL AND ERROR (§ 1047*)—DISCRETION OF TRIAL COURT ON RECEPTION OF EVIDENCE.

Allowing plaintiff to be examined in rebuttal on evidence already gone over in his original examination, while irregular, is not reversible error.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Appeal and Error, Cent. Dig. § 4132; Dec. Dig. § 1047.*]

3. CARRIERS (§ 356*)—PASSENGERS—TICKETS—MILEAGE COUPONS.

Where a mileage book contract required the holder to exchange mileage coupons for a ticket before boarding the train, and plaintiff so presented his book and demanded a ticket within a reasonable time, but the carrier's agent refused to issue a ticket to destination, alleging lack of time, and gave him a ticket to a junction point only, plaintiff on arriving at the junction point and being unable, for want of time, there to exchange his mileage coupons for a ticket to continue his journey, was entitled to ride on the mileage book, so that the conductor's refusal to accept the mileage coupons for transportation, and ejection of plaintiff for his refusal to pay fare except with such coupons, was actionable injury.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Carriers, Cent. Dig. §§ 1409-1432; Dec. Dig. § 356.*]

4. CARRIERS (§ 382*)—EJECTION OF PASSENGER—PUNITIVE DAMAGES.

Where defendant erroneously ejected plaintiff from its train because he refused to pay fare except by a tender of mileage coupons, and such ejection was accompanied by mistreatment on the part of defendant's employes, plaintiff was entitled to recover punitive damages.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Carriers, Cent. Dig. § 1489; Dec. Dig. § 382.*]

Appeal from Superior Court, Lee County; O. H. Allen, Judge.

Action by V. M. Dorsett against the Atlantic Coast Line Railroad Company. Verdict for plaintiff for $1,250, reduced by the court to $1,000, and defendant appeals. Affirmed.

Rose & Rose, for appellant. A. A. F. Seawell and D. E. McIver, for appellee.

BROWN, J. The evidence of the plaintiff tends to prove that on October 30, 1909, he presented his mileage book issued by defendant to its agent at Red Springs in due time before arrival of its train for Fayetteville and demanded a ticket for Siler City, N. C. This being refused, he demanded ticket to Sanford, N. C., which was likewise refused. The agent stated he had no time and gave plaintiff a ticket to Fayetteville. It is necessary to change cars at Fayetteville for Sanford and Siler City.

While plaintiff was alighting from the train at Fayetteville, he saw Conductor McCulloch, of the train from Fayetteville to Sanford, and asked him if he (plaintiff) had time to get a ticket. He was told by the conductor that he did not have time, and the train left immediately. Train was in motion by the time plaintiff could get to his seat. Conductor McCulloch demanded a ticket of plaintiff. Plaintiff tendered his mileage coupons, explaining the circumstances stated above, which conductor refused. The conductor, aided by his porter and baggagemaster, by force, in a very rough manner, and with anger and violence, ejected plaintiff from defendant's train.

There was evidence offered by defendant contradicting, qualifying, and explaining the plaintiff's evidence which it is unnecessary to set out.

[1] The three assignments of error relating to the evidence cannot be sustained. It was permissible to ask plaintiff whether he consented to the agent giving him a ticket to Fayetteville in order to show that plaintiff had not voluntarily withdrawn his application for a ticket to Sanford.

[2] Allowing the plaintiff to be examined in rebuttal upon evidence already gone over in his original examination, while irregular, does not constitute reversible error.

The remaining assignments of error relate to the charge and to refusal to give certain instructions, which it is unnecessary to set out here.

The propositions of law chiefly urged by the learned counsel for defendant are settled in Harvey v. A. C. L. R. R., 153 N. C. 568, 69 S. E. 627. It is decided in that case that a mileage book is a contract for carriage, subject to certain restrictive regulations, that the owner is compelled under the terms of the contract to present it at the ticket office in reasonable time, and, when he does so, that he is entitled to receive a ticket in exchange for his mileage strip.

[3] If the traveler fails to do this, he has no right to have the book accepted for transportation on the train. When he complies with the contract on his part, and the carrier fails to give him the requisite ticket in exchange, the carrier is at fault and may not lawfully refuse to honor the mileage contract on the train and cannot rightfully eject him. The plaintiff, according to all the evidence, complied with the contract on his part. He waived his right to a ticket to Siler City, but not to Sanford. It was defendant's duty to furnish plaintiff a ticket to Sanford in exchange for his mileage which he had bought and paid for. The plaintiff, according to the evidence, had no time to present his book at Fayetteville even if that was necessary, which we do not admit, as plaintiff had already presented it at Red Springs.

If the railway companies insist upon the traveler presenting his book at the ticket window, they must be prepared to honor it there. If they fail to do so, they should instruct their conductors to honor it on the train. This will prevent much friction and will doubtless save the railway companies from much litigation and expense.

In the Harvey Case it was admitted that there was no foundation for punitive damages, and two members of this court thought the verdict rendered grossly excessive and that it should have been set aside for that reason.

[4] But in this case the plaintiff offers evidence which fully justified the court in instructing the jury that in their discretion they might, if they saw fit, award punitive as well as compensatory damages.

We think the charge of the court is a full presentation of the contentions of both parties and is free from error.

No error.

CLARK, C. J. (concurring). In Harvey v. R. R., 153 N. C. 567, 577, 69 S. E. 627, the court did not find it necessary to pass upon the validity of the requirement that the holder of a mileage book shall present it and obtain a ticket thereon, but, passing by that question, as in this case, held that the plaintiff was entitled to recover.

I am of opinion that in any aspect the plaintiff is entitled to recover for that such requirement is an unreasonable regulation and therefore void, for at least four reasons:

1. Down to the enactment of the statute by which the General Assembly of 1908 (Laws Ex. Sess. 1908, c. 144) prescribed  $2\frac{1}{2}$  cents per mile as a maximum legal rate for transportation over the railroads of this state, such requirement had never been heard of in North Carolina. It is therefore not necessary, and hence unreasonable.

2. Throughout the Union, except practically in this and two or three other adjoining states, such requirement is still unheard of, and mileage is still pulled on the trains, as was the case here prior to 1908. See table, 153 N. C. at page 580, 69 S. E. 633. Therefore it cannot be necessary in this state, where the volume of travel is much smaller than in many others, and hence it is unreasonable to vex the public by an unnecessary requirement.

3. By chapter 216, Laws 1907, the General Assembly prescribed  $2\frac{1}{4}$  cents per mile as a maximum legal rate for transportation over the railroads in this state. The railroad companies proposed to the executive of this state that, "if the rate was changed to  $2\frac{1}{2}$  cents per mile, they would issue mileage books good on their lines within and without the state and good on all railroads within the state at the rate of 2 cents per mile." Thereupon the Special Session of 1908 was called which enacted the  $2\frac{1}{2}$  cent per mile rate. This session was held at considerable expense to the taxpayers of the state. No one in this state had ever heard of a requirement that mileage books be exchanged for a ticket. Every one understood, of course, that the mileage books issued would be such as the public had always been accustomed to. That mileage had saved the public the annoyance which it now daily suffers of being compelled to purchase tickets. The requirement to buy tickets with mileage was adopted after the General Assembly had adjourned. It was a breach of faith, and hence unnecessary and void. It is vexatious and annoying to the traveling public.

4. This hitherto unheard of requirement that mileage should be used, not as mileage, but to buy tickets with, was doubtless adopted to deter the public from the purchase of mileage books by making their use less of a convenience. For that reason, also, it should be held void, for travel should be made as convenient as possible for the traveling public. The great "Pennsylvania System," as well as some other roads, find it an economy and a convenience to themselves as well as to the public to allow mileage books to be used on the train, not only by the holder, but for any one else who may be with him. It is certainly less expensive to the railroad company to have an agent, other than the conductor, to take up mileage on the train, than to have extra agents at the stations to exchange tickets for mileage. In this state the Raleigh and Southport, and possibly some other roads, still accept mileage on their trains. This is another evidence that the innovation of requiring the public to buy tickets with mileage is unnecessary and a vexatious imposition upon the public.

(156 N. C. 461)

AUSTIN v. LEWIS et al.

(Supreme Court of North Carolina. Nov. 1, 1911.)

JUSTICES OF THE PEACE (§ 40*)—JURISDICTION—RESIDENCE OF DEFENDANT.

Revisal 1905, § 1447, authorizes a justice of the peace to issue process beyond his own county, where one of the defendants is a bona fide resident thereof. Held that, where plaintiff's complaint stated no cause of action against the resident defendant, the justice had no jurisdiction over the defendant residing in another county.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Justices of the Peace, Cent. Dig. §§ 143-145; Dec. Dig. § 40.*]

Allen, J., dissenting.

Appeal from Superior Court, Union County; Ferguson, Judge.

Action by W. D. Austin against J. W. Lewis and others. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendant Lewis appeals. Dismissed.

Stack & Parker, for appellant. Williams, Lemmond & Love, for appellee.

CLARK, C. J. This action was begun before a justice of the peace in Union county to recover $80. The defendants as recited in the warrant are J. W. Thomas and J. W. Hasty, both of Union county, and J. W. Lewis, of Mecklenburg county. The plaintiff filed a complaint before the justice, reciting that he had sold to the defendant Lewis two car loads of lumber at the sum of $12.50 per M, and delivered the same to said Hasty and Thomas for the said Lewis, to whom it was duly shipped; that the said Lewis had received the same, and had paid the plaintiff, through said Hasty and Thomas, $224.01, leaving a balance due of $82.39. The defendant Lewis entered a special appearance and filed a motion to dismiss, because it appeared upon the summons that he was a resident of Mecklenburg, that the sum demanded under alleged contract was under $200, and that it appeared upon the face of the complaint that no cause of action was stated against Hasty or Thomas, nor any allegation connecting them with Lewis, or alleging any liability on their part, and that joining them in the action was a fraud upon the jurisdiction of the court. The motion to dismiss the action was overruled, and was renewed upon appeal in the superior court, and was again denied.

The motion to dismiss should have been granted. Lewis, being a nonresident of Union, could not be sued in that county, unless there were other bona fide defendants residing in said county. Revisal 1905, § 1447. The complaint states no cause of action against either Hasty or Thomas. Originally a justice of the peace had no authority to issue any process to any other county but his own. He was authorized to do so in certain instances by chapter 60, Acts 1871-72, now Revisal, §§ 1449, 1450. Fertilizer Co. v. Marshburn, 122 N. C. 414, 29 S. E. 411. This authority became much abused. Claims and notes were assigned to a resident of a distant county, and thereupon action would be brought before a justice of the peace against nonresident defendants, who would submit to judgment by default rather than attend. Indeed, it was not necessary that the plaintiff should reside in such county. Sossamer v. Hinson, 72 N. C. 578. Thereupon Acts 1876-77, c. 287, now Revisal, § 1447, was passed, which requires that one or more bona fide defendants shall reside in the county. Lilly v. Purcell, 78 N. C. 83. Neither Hasty nor Thomas are bona fide defendants, and the justice did not have jurisdiction. Action dismissed.

ALLEN, J., dissents.

(156 N. C. 432)

CURRIE v. SEABOARD AIR LINE RY.

(Supreme Court of North Carolina. Nov. 1, 1911.)

1. CARRIERS (§ 20*)—CARRIAGE OF GOODS—FAILURE TO DELIVER—ADJUSTMENT OF CLAIM—FILING CLAIM.

Under Revisal 1905, § 2634, which provides a penalty for the failure to adjust claims for loss or damage to property while in possession of a carrier within a specified time after presentation of a demand in writing, a written statement setting forth the purchase of the article claimed to have been lost, with the price, quantity, name of vendor and shipping point, is, when handed to the company's agent within the time specified by the statute, with a statement that it was for the goods lost, sufficiently definite to enable the company to investigate the claim, and will satisfy the requirements of the statute.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Carriers, Dec. Dig. § 20.*]

2. CARRIERS (§§ 120, 121, 136*)—CARRIAGE OF GOODS—LOSS OF OR INJURY TO GOODS—INHERENT DEFECTS.

While carriers, in the absence of stipulations to the contrary, are insurers of goods intrusted to them for shipment, they will not be so held where loss or damage results from the negligence of the shipper, or from vices or defects inherent in the goods, so that where, in an action for the value of a puncheon of molasses which burst while in the custody of the carrier, there is evidence that the cause was the fermentation of the molasses, defendant is entitled to have it considered by the jury under a proper charge.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Carriers, Cent. Dig. §§ 486, 531-536, 596-598; Dec. Dig. §§ 120, 121, 136.*]

Appeal from Superior Court, Bladen County; O. H. Allen, Judge.

Action by N. A. Currie against the Seaboard Air Line Railway. From a judgment for plaintiff, defendant appeals. Reversed, and new trial ordered.

The jury rendered the following verdict:

"(1) In what sum, if any, is defendant indebted to the plaintiff by reason of the loss of a puncheon of molasses? A. $47.20.

"(2) In what sum, if any, is defendant indebted to plaintiff by way of penalty? A. $50."

W. H. Neal, for appellant.

HOKE, J. [1] The court has held that section 2634, Revisal 1905, imposing a penalty on common carriers for failure to settle claims for loss or damage to property while in their possession as such within 60 days after filing same, in case of shipments wholly within the state and 90 days when the shipments were without the state by correct interpretation, requires that, in order to a recovery of the penalty, the claim should be filed with the company within the time specified. Thompson v. Express Company, 147 N. C. 343, 61 S. E. 182. The testimony tended to show that the molasses was lost by reason of the bursting of the puncheon, and defendant objected to the recovery, first, that there had been no proper filing of the claim. The written statement of plaintiff's demand within the time was left with the proper officials of defendant company, in terms as follows: "Clarkton, N. C. Sept. 3, 1909. Sea Board Air Line. Bought of N. A. Currie, Merchant and Cotton buyer, 1 Puncheon of molasses 118 Gals. at 40 cents a Gal. $47.20. Shipped from Wilmington." And plaintiff was allowed to testify, over defendant's objection, that he told the agent on presenting the claim that it was for the puncheon of molasses that burst. While the form of the demand is not one to be approved or generally followed, we think it sufficiently definite to notify defendant of the amount and nature of the claim, affording, as it did, sufficient information to enable the company to make investigation and secure the evidence relevant to the inquiry, and we concur with his honor in holding the notice to be a sufficient filing within the meaning of the statute. Stonestreet v. Frost, 123 N. C. 640, 31 S. E. 836. Defendant further objected that the court declined to submit or entertain the view arising on the testimony that the puncheon burst by reason of fermentation of the molasses, and for which defendant was in no way responsible.

[2] While common carriers in the absence of valid stipulation to the contrary are held in this state to be insurers of goods intrusted to them for shipment, it is generally understood that the principle does not extend or apply to loss or damage arising from the negligence of the shipper or from vices or defects inherent in the nature of the goods. This limitation on the liability of common carriers of goods was referred to as accepted law by Allen, Judge, in his concurring opinion in Peanut Co. v. Railroad, 155 N. C. 148, 71 S. E. 71, and the statement is in full accord with the authorities. Moore on Carriers, §§ 4, 5; Hutchinson on Carriers (3d Ed.) §§ 333, 334. In this last citation the author says: "So obviously the carrier, not himself at fault, cannot be held liable for losses which have been caused by the inherent nature, vice, defect, or infirmity of the goods themselves, as in the case of decay, waste, or deterioration of perishable fruits, the evaporation of liquids, the bursting of vessels, owing to the fermentation of their contents," etc. There was evidence on the part of the defendant tending to establish the conditions referred to, and we are of opinion that defendant was entitled to have the same considered by the jury under a proper charge. For the error indicated, defendant is entitled to a new trial, and it is so ordered.

New trial.

(89 S. C. 555)

NORTHWESTERN R. CO. OF SOUTH CAROLINA v. COLCLOUGH.

(Supreme Court of South Carolina. Nov. 1, 1911.)

1. APPEAL AND ERROR (§ 1010*)—REVIEW—FINDINGS.

The Supreme Court cannot reverse findings by a trial court, unless they are not sustained by legal evidence.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Appeal and Error, Cent. Dig. §§ 3979-3982; Dec. Dig. § 1010.*]

2. EMINENT DOMAIN (§ 152*)—GRANTS BY LIFE TENANT—RAILWAY RIGHTS OF WAY.

A life tenant having granted a railway right of way, the only right left in the remaindermen or their grantees as to any part of the land subject to condemnation is the right to compensation for so much of their interest as is taken on death of the life tenant.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Eminent Domain, Cent. Dig. § 406; Dec. Dig. § 152.*]

3. LIFE ESTATES (§ 23*)—GRANTS BY LIFE TENANT—RAILWAY RIGHTS OF WAY.

Grant by life tenant of a railway right of way wider than the company is empowered to condemn under its charter does not give any easement as against remaindermen or their grantees beyond the authorized width.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Life Estates, Cent. Dig. §§ 21, 42; Dec. Dig. § 23.*]

4. EMINENT DOMAIN (§ 152*)—RIGHTS OF PURCHASER—COMPENSATION FOR EASEMENT PREVIOUSLY GRANTED.

Unless right of remaindermen to compensation for land granted by a life tenant as a railway right of way is assigned to their grantee, he cannot recover compensation from the company for use of the land before he acquired title.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Eminent Domain, Cent. Dig. §§ 403-406; Dec. Dig. § 152.*]

5. LIFE ESTATES (§ 23*)—INTERFERENCE WITH RAILWAY RIGHT OF WAY.

That a purchaser of land from remaindermen may have a right to condemnation of his interest in a strip deeded to the company by a life tenant does not affect the company's right to enjoin interference with the company's use until his right to compensation is established.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Life Estates, Dec. Dig. § 23.*]

Appeal from Common Pleas Circuit Court of Clarendon County; George E. Prince, Judge.

"To be officially reported."

Action by the Northwestern Railroad Company of South Carolina against Samuel M. Colclough. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendant appeals. Modified and remanded.

J. J. Cantey and Charlton Du Rant, for appellant. Purdy & O'Bryan, for respondent.

JONES, C. J. This is an appeal from a judgment upon the merits in the same action in which preliminary injunctions were granted as reported in 84 S. C. 37, 65 S. E. 950. A trial by jury of the legal issues being waived and the cause having been heard upon the merits, a decree was rendered adjudging that the strip of land in controversy had been appropriated to railroad uses for a right of way for the plaintiff's railroad under a grant of the said land from the owner of the life estate therein, and perpetually enjoining and restraining the defendant from further interference with the use by the plaintiff of the said right of way, 100 feet wide on each side from the center of plaintiff's track, over and upon the land described in the complaint. By this decree, however, the defendant was granted leave to move his fences and buildings from the said strip of land within 20 days after notice of the filing thereof. The defendant has appealed upon numerous exceptions, involving questions both of law and fact.

[1] In so far, however, as the appeal seeks a review of the findings of fact by the trial judge upon the legal issues in the case, it must be held that this court has no power to reverse such findings, unless there be no legal evidence to sustain the same. Wallace v. Orangeburg, 87 S. C. 359, 69 S. E. 664. As such evidence appears in support of all of the said findings, it follows that the only questions raised by the appeal now for determination are the questions of law made by the exceptions.

Briefly, it may be stated that the evidence established a grant, about the year 1888, made upon valuable consideration by the life tenant of the strip of land here in question to the grantor of the plaintiff for railroad purposes, and an occupation thereof by the plaintiff railroad company for its use as a right of way for some period of time, the length of which is not clearly stated, prior to the taking possession of a part thereof by the defendant in the year 1904. Notwithstanding the grant by the life tenant was duly recorded in the year 1889, the life tenant and her husband, the latter being then trustee for the remaindermen and being invested with a power of sale under the trust deed, undertook to convey to the defendant in the year 1904 certain lands adjoining the track and right of way of the plaintiff, the description thereof calling for a measurement in feet which would include the right of way in part, although the deed calls for the right of way as a boundary. At some date subsequent to the deed of 1904, the life tenant being dead, the defendant erected certain buildings and fences, either wholly or partly within the limits of the grant to the plaintiff of the right of way aforesaid.

[2] The finding of the circuit court as matter of fact is that a right of way was laid out and appropriated to railroad uses, 100 feet in width on each side of the track of the plaintiff railroad company, in pursuance of the grant of the life tenant, and subsequently it is further found that the plaintiff was in the possession and use of such right of way, actually as to part and constructively as to the remainder, at the time of the entry and possession taken by the defendant. The land in question having thus been granted by the life tenant and appropriated and used by the railroad company for a right of way, during the lifetime of the life tenant, the only right which was left in the remaindermen or in their trustee, in so far as concerns any part of said lands which could legally be condemned for a right of way, was a right to compensation, upon the death of the life tenant, for any land belonging to them which had been so appropriated to railroad uses in accordance with the rights conferred by the charter under which the same was taken. The defendant, as grantee of the remaindermen or of their trustee, could not recover any part of the land so dedicated to railroad uses, so far as the same was authorized by the charter to be taken for a right of way, and the defendant had no right to take possession of any part thereof so dedicated in accordance with such charter, so as to interfere with the right of easement held by the plaintiff therein, even if the same could be shown to be embraced within the limits of the defendant's deed. Bridges v. Railroad, 86 S. C. 267, 68 S. E. 551; Tompkins v. Railroad, 21 S. C. 421; Railway v. Reynolds, 69 S. C. 481, 48 S. E. 476; Cureton v. Railroad, 59 S. C. 371, 37 S. E. 914.

[3] It appears, however, that by the terms of its charter the railroad company was only authorized to condemn for the purpose of its right of way a strip of land extending on each side of the center of its roadbed a distance of 75 feet. While, therefore, it had the right, no doubt, to accept a grant for a greater width, its power of condemnation under its charter only extended to a distance of 75 feet from its roadbed. Hence it follows that after the death of the life tenant as against the defendant who is the grantee of the remaindermen it could only claim an appropriation of the strip of land here in question to the extent of 75 feet in width thereof on each side of the center of such roadbed, since that is the limit of its right to condemnation; and it has no easement, therefore, as against the defendant in any part of the said strip of land beyond the limits just mentioned. It must be concluded, therefore, that any estate acquired by the defendant in the premises by the deed of 1904 was subject to the easement previously granted to and then being used by the plaintiff company, so far as concerns that portion of the land in question which is embraced within the strip extending 75 feet on each side of the center of the roadbed of the plaintiff, and which it had the right to hold as a right of way, notwithstanding the death of the life tenant, subject to the right of the remaindermen to demand compensation for their interest in the same.

[4] As, however, it was not shown that there had been any assignment or transfer to the defendant of any right to compensation to which the remaindermen or their trustee may have been entitled, it follows that the defendant would not have the right to recover any such compensation from the plaintiff for any appropriation of the land in question to railroad uses prior to the acquisition of title by the defendant. See Bridges v. Railroad, 86 S. C. 267, 68 S. E. 551.

For the reason stated, there was no error in enjoining and restraining the defendant, his agents and servants, from in any manner interfering with the plaintiff, its agents or servants, in exercising its right to the use of said strip of land for railroad purposes, in so far as concerns that portion of the land which is embraced within the limits of 75 feet on each side of the center of the roadbed of the plaintiff's railroad. But there was error in granting such injunction in so far as regards that part of the lands beyond the limits just mentioned, for the reason that the plaintiff has a grant only of the life estate therein which has terminated by the death of the life tenant, and has no power of condemnation under its charter beyond the limits of the 75 feet on each side from the center of the roadbed.

There are no considerations presented by any of the exceptions or urged in argument which would warrant a different conclusion from that just announced.

[5] The fact, if it be a fact, that the defendant may have a right to compensation for the use of such right of way by the plaintiff, upon a proper showing to that end, does not in any degree deprive the plaintiff of the right to such injunction, at least until the defendant's right to compensation, if it exists, shall have been made to appear. It may be added, with reference to the third exception, that there was no adjudication by this court at the former hearing upon any question as to the merits at issue in this case, but there was merely a determination as to the right to a temporary injunction to preserve the status and as to the right of possession pendente lite. Without further reference to the points made by the several grounds of appeal, all of which have been duly considered and must be overruled, either for the reasons already stated or because they do not affect the result, the conclusion has been reached that the judgment of the circuit court should be modified in the particular above mentioned, and in all other respects that the same must be affirmed.

It is therefore ordered that the circuit judgment be modified in accordance with the terms of this opinion, and that the cause be remanded to the circuit court for such action as may be necessary to conform the circuit judgment to the conclusions herein announced.

GARY, A. J., and WOODS and HYDRICK, JJ., concur.

(90 S. C. 5)

RUSSELL et al. v. LYON et al.

(Supreme Court of South Carolina. Nov. 8, 1911.)

1. OFFICERS (§ 15*)—APPOINTMENT—STATUTORY PROVISIONS.

Under Act Feb. 18, 1911 (27 St. at Large, p. 194), providing for the appointment of rural policemen by the Governor on the recommendation of the legislative delegation from each county, persons who have received the legislative recommendation, but who have not been appointed by the Governor, are not qualified to act as policemen, nor to receive a salary as such.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Officers, Dec. Dig. § 15.*]

2. OFFICERS (§ 95*)—APPOINTMENT—DE FACTO OFFICERS.

Persons who have been recommended by a legislative delegation to act as rural policemen under Act Feb. 18, 1911 (27 St. at Large, p. 194) providing for the appointment of such policemen by the Governor upon such recommendation, but whom the Governor has refused to appoint, have no color of title to the office which will entitle them to recover salaries as de facto officers for time served.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Officers, Cent. Dig. §§ 134, 139; Dec. Dig. § 95.*]

"To be officially reported."

Original petition by L. H. Russell and others for injunction against R. L. Lyon and others. Injunction granted.

D. H. Magill, for petitioners. E. S. F. Giles, for respondents.

JONES, C. J. This is a petition in the original jurisdiction of the court under which certain citizens and taxpayers of Greenwood county seek to enjoin the respondents Lyon and Hughes from holding and exercising the office of rural policemen of said county, and receiving the salary thereof, and to enjoin respondent Payne as treasurer of said county from paying Lyon and Hughes the said salary. Upon return to the rule to show cause the respondents demurred to the jurisdiction of the court, but subsequently the demurrer was withdrawn, and the cause was submitted to the court on its merits upon the following facts: "Under the act of the Legislature of 1911 (page 194), the Governor commissioned J. B. Riley, L. C. Elledge, and R. L. Golden, immediately upon the approval of the said act, rural policemen for Greenwood county upon the recommendation of D. H. Magill, Esq., one of the four members of the legislative delegation for Greenwood county, the other three members of the delegation not being notified, nor given an opportunity to make recommendations. J. B. Riley resigned 30 days after his appointment. The other two, L. C. Elledge and R. L. Golden, demanded the salary of the office, and, after refusal of payment, brought mandamus against the county officials to compel payment. See Elledge v. Wharton, 89 S. C. 113, 71 S. E. 657. Immediately after the decision of the Supreme Court in this case, the legislative delegation of Greenwood county was called together for the purpose of recommending to the Governor for appointment three suitable men for the position of rural policemen for Greenwood county under the terms of the said act. At said meeting the full delegation was present, and they selected by ballot of three votes each the following men as rural policemen: L. C. Elledge, R. T. Hughes, and R. L. Lyon, all electors and citizens of Greenwood county. Mr. D. H. Magill, one of the Greenwood county delegation, being present, but refused to vote. The names of the three men were submitted to the Governor for appointment, and he was requested to appoint them, but he refused to make any other appointments other than he had already made, and stated that he would not commission R. T. Hughes and R. L. Lyon, without giving any reason for such refusal. L. C. Elledge holds his office under his first commission. The three men, L. C. Elledge, R. T. Hughes, and R. L. Lyon, thus elected and recommended by three of the four members of the legislative delegation duly qualified as such rural policemen for Greenwood county, having done everything required by law to perfect their title to the said office except to receive their appointment and commission, and have discharged the duties of the said office for one month. The Governor has continued to neglect and refuse to commission them."

The act to provide for the establishment and maintenance of a rural police system in Greenwood county approved February 18, 1911, enacts in section 1 as follows: "That upon the approval of this act it shall be the duty of the Governor, upon the recommendation of the legislative delegation of Greenwood county, to appoint three able-bodied men of the county of Greenwood, who are of good habits and of courage, coolness and discretion, known as men who are not addicted to the use of alcoholic liquors, or of drugs, and shall commission them as county policemen for a term of four years, subject to removal by the Governor for cause, provided however, that no person shall be eligible to appointment as such policemen who make application for such appointment."

In the case of Elledge v. Wharton, 89 S. C. 113, 71 S. E. 657, it was held that an appointment by the Governor to the office of rural policeman under this statute, without the recommendation of the legislative delegation, was invalid because the statute expressly provides that the appointment should be made upon such recommendation.

[1] By the same rule of construction, we must now hold that the mere recommendation of the legislative delegation without an appointment by the Governor can confer no right to the office. It was entirely within the power of the Legislature to prescribe how these appointments must be made, and the statute plainly requires the concurrence of the legislative delegation and the Governor in ascertaining and determining the existence of the prescribed qualifications for the office and the selection of the person to be commissioned. It appears from the facts stated that the Governor has not assented to the appointment of respondents Lyon and Hughes, and it must follow that they have no authority to act as rural policemen of Greenwood county, and are not entitled to the salary claimed by them as such officers.

[2] Nor are they entitled to the salary as de facto officers. Unlike the petitioners in Elledge v. Wharton, supra, they do not show even color of title to the office, for the mere recommendation of the legislative delegation not concurred in by the Governor, and not followed by commission or some prima facie evidence of appointment, does not constitute such color of title to office as might under certain circumstances justify a court in awarding them the salary attached to the office.

We will not in this proceeding undertake to oust respondents from an office they are alleged to have usurped, but have considered the matter of their right to the office only with the view to determine the duty of the respondent treasurer with reference to the payment of the salary claimed.

The judgment of the court is that the respondent Payne, treasurer of Greenwood county, be, and he is hereby, enjoined from paying salaries claimed by respondents Lyon and Hughes as rural policemen of Greenwood county.

GARY, A. J., and WOODS and HYDRICK, JJ., concur.

(90 S. C. 1)

TERRY v. STATE MUT. LIFE INS. CO. OF ROME, GA.

(Supreme Court of South Carolina. Nov. 7, 1911.)

INSURANCE (§ 360*)—PREMIUMS—PAYMENT—DIVIDENDS.

A life policy issued to insured and payable to plaintiff provided for annual premiums of $16.32, the first of which carried the contract to November 28, 1906. Insured was notified that the second annual payment would be due on that date, and that he had a credit dividend of $2.45 applicable either to the payment of the premium for the succeeding year or convertible into paid-up insurance. The policy provided for 30 days' grace in the payment of premiums, and also that every policy holder at the time any premium fell due might pay a semiannual or quarterly premium according to the association's schedule, which would continue the policy for the time paid for. Insured paid no further premium, and died on January 10, 1907. The quarterly premium, if paid on November 28, 1906, would have amounted to $4.33, and the dividend, if applicable to the payment of the premium for a less period than three months, would have been sufficient to carry the policy beyond the date of insured's death. Held that three months was the shortest period for which a premium was payable under the contract, and, the dividend being insufficient to pay the premium for that period, the policy lapsed.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Insurance, Cent. Dig. §§ 913-924; Dec. Dig. § 360.*]

Appeal from Common Pleas Circuit Court of Hampton County; Geo. E. Prince, Judge. "To be officially reported."

Action by Mrs. C. S. Terry against the State Mutual Life Insurance Company of Rome, Ga. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendant appeals. Reversed and dismissed.

James W. Moore, for appellant. W. S. Smith, W. D. Connor, and J. W. Vincent, for respondent.

JONES, C. J. On November 28, 1905, the defendant company issued to Wm. Bartlett Terry a policy of insurance for $1,000 payable on his death to his mother, the plaintiff, if then living. The first annual premium of $16.32 was paid, which carried the contract up to November 28, 1906. The insured was notified that the second annual premium would be due on November 28, 1906, and that he had to his credit in the hands of the defendant a dividend amounting to $2.45, which was applicable to the payment of the premium for the succeeding year, or convertible into participating paid up insurance, if he should so wish. The insured made no further payment on account of premium, and died on the night of January 10, 1907. The policy allowed 30 days' grace in payment of premiums after the first, during which the policy would remain in full force.

It was further provided that the policy should share annually in the distribution of surplus, and that "dividends will be applied to the payment of the succeeding year's premium, or may be drawn in cash if all premiums under this policy have been paid." The policy further provided that "every policy holder has the right at the time any premium falls due to pay a semiannually or quarterly premium according to the association schedule for the kind of policy held by him, and the same will continue the policy in force the time paid for." A quarterly premium would have been $4.33 if election had been made to pay premium quarterly. If the dividend of $2.45 to the credit of the insured on November 28, 1906, was applicable to payment of premium for a less period than three months, it would have been sufficient to continue the policy in force beyond the date of the death of the insured. Upon the death of the insured his mother, the plaintiff beneficiary, demanded payment of the policy, which was refused, and thereafter she brought this action.

The special referee, W. H. Townsend, to whom the issues had been referred, found the facts as above stated, which are undisputed, and concluded as matter of law that the defendant was not bound under the terms of the contract to apply the $2.45 dividend in its hands for the credit of the insured to the payment of premium for any period, in the absence of a tender of additional funds sufficient to pay $4.33, the premium for three months from November 28, 1906, the lowest renewal premium provided for in the contract, and that by reason of the default the policy was not in force at the death of the insured. On exception to the report of the referee, Judge Prince overruled the referee in his conclusion of law, and gave judgment for the plaintiff for $1,266.38, including interest from May 10, 1907, the date on which defendant denied liability.

The main contest now before this court on exceptions is whether the circuit court was in error in not sustaining the report of the special referee, and in holding that the dividend of $2.45, belonging to the insured in the hands of the defendant, should have been applied by defendant to continue the policy in force for a period less than three months. We are clearly of the opinion that the circuit court was in error, and that upon the facts stated the policy was not in force at the death of the insured. There is nothing in the contract of insurance to authorize payment of premium for a less period than three months; on the contrary, the express stipulation extends only to a payment of premiums annually, semiannually, or quarterly, and for a continuance of the policy for the time paid for; the dividend being insufficient to pay premium for the shortest period provided for, and there being no tender of additional money sufficient to make up payment for even the shortest period allowed, and nothing to show consent of the defendant to apply the dividend to pro rata payment of quarterly premium, or waiver of its right to stand upon the terms of the contract. There is nothing the court can do but declare the policy lapsed for noncompliance with the condition of its continuance according to the contract.

The case of Aetna Life Ins. Co. v. Hartley (Ky.) 67 S. W. 21, cited for appellant, is not to the contrary, as in that case the insurance company elected to apply the dividend to the payment of the premium, and therefore could not declare a forfeiture for nonpayment of premium during the time pro rata the dividend was sufficient to cover; the court conceding that the company could not have been compelled to accept less than the full premium in order to continue the policy in force, and could not have been compelled to apply to the premium a dividend less than the premium.

This conclusion renders it unnecessary to consider the question as to interest on the policy which becomes immaterial in the view we take as to the main question.

The judgment of the circuit court is reversed, and the complaint is dismissed.

GARY, A. J., and WOODS and HYDRICK, JJ., concur.

C. 567)

BUSBEE et al. v. WESTERN UNION TELEGRAPH CO.

(Supreme Court of South Carolina. Nov. 7, 1911.)

1. TELEGRAPHS AND TELEPHONES (§ 31*)—TRANSMISSION OF MESSAGES—OFFICE HOURS.

Where the office hours of defendant telegraph company at the destination of a message on Sunday were from 8 to 10 a. m., and from 4 to 6 p. m., and the message was not filed for transmission until after 10 o'clock a. m., the telegraph company was not negligent in failing to have agents at the destination office to receive the message before 4 o'clock p. m.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Telegraphs and Telephones, Cent. Dig. § 20; Dec. Dig. § 31.*]

2. TELEGRAPHS AND TELEPHONES (§ 73*)—DEATH MESSAGE—NEGLIGENT TRANSMISSION—WILLFUL AND RECKLESS DISREGARD OF DUTY.

In action against a telegraph company for delay in transmission of telegram on Sunday, held, that defendant owed plaintiff the duty to have the agent at hand to receive the message during office hours between 4 and 6 p. m. on Sunday, and that such failure, together with the relay agent's failure to attempt to send the message another way as requested, sufficiently raised the question of willful or reckless disregard of duty.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Telegraphs and Telephones, Dec. Dig. § 73.*]

3. TELEGRAPHS AND TELEPHONES (§ 73*)—DEATH MESSAGE—DAMAGES—EVIDENCE.

Where plaintiff would not have been able to have reached the bedside of her aunt before her death, had defendant telegraph company promptly delivered a message notifying plaintiff of the aunt's illness, but she could have attended the funeral, and plaintiff testified that she was attached to her aunt by strong ties of affection, whether plaintiff suffered mental anguish from her inability to attend the funeral for which she was entitled to recover was for the jury.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Telegraphs and Telephones, Dec. Dig. § 73.*]

4. NEW TRIAL (§ 39*)—GROUNDS—IRRELEVANT INSTRUCTIONS.

A new trial should not be granted for the giving of an irrelevant instruction, unless the record showed good reason to suppose the verdict was affected by it.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see New Trial, Cent. Dig. §§ 57-61; Dec. Dig. § 39.*]

5. APPEAL AND ERROR (§ 216*)—INSTRUCTIONS—WAIVER OF ERROR.

In an action for delay in delivering a death message, defendant requested the court to charge that where a party is deprived of being with her aunt at her death by delay in the delivery of a telegram, in order to enable such party to recover damages for mental anguish, it must affirmatively appear that special relations of tenderness existed between plaintiff and deceased, and that when the message was accepted for delivery notice was given to the company of such relations. In response to the request, the judge said: "I charge you that if a niece or nephew should go and send a telegram, and the fact of that relationship was not known to the operator, then you see the law that I have given you would not apply, but that relationship must be known in order to bind the company, in order to be able to recover exemplary or punitive damages." Held, that the judge's interpretation of the request was so obviously erroneous that it must have been manifest to defendant's counsel at the time that it was due to an inadvertence, so that defendant waived the error by failing to call attention thereto.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Appeal and Error, Cent. Dig. § 629; Dec. Dig. § 216.*]

Gary, A. J., dissenting.

Appeal from Common Pleas Circuit Court of Abbeville County; John S. Wilson, Judge.

Action by Georgia H. Busbee and another against the Western Union Telegraph Company. Judgment for plaintiffs, and defendant appeals. Affirmed.

Gary & Hill, for appellant. Moore & Mars, for respondents.

WOODS, J. This appeal is from a judgment of $400 recovered by the plaintiff as damages for mental anguish caused by the failure of the defendant company to transmit and deliver promptly a telegram announcing the illness of plaintiff's aunt. In passing on defendant's first position that the circuit judge should have held that there was an entire failure of evidence of willfulness or wantonness, and also an entire failure of evidence of any actual damages suffered by the plaintiff, it becomes necessary to state the evidence with some detail.

Elbert F. White presented for transmission to the defendant's agent at Abbeville, about 10 o'clock a. m. on Sunday, February 28, 1909, this message: "Time filed 10:20 a. m. Check 10 Paid 25. Mrs. W. H. Busbee, Clearwater, S. C. Aunt Aggie and Aunt Sallie are in dying condition. Come. Elbert." The agent examined the list of the company's offices, but not with sufficient care to discover that Clearwater was on the list, and informed White that there was no such office. Thereupon White directed that the message should be sent "via Bath," and paid 50 cents for the extra charge of sending a message from Bath to Clearwater. When the message reached Augusta, Ga., the relay office, the agent there asked the Abbeville agent why the message was not to be sent direct to the Clearwater office. The Abbeville agent, having thus discovered his error in telling White that there was no office at Clearwater, authorized the Augusta agent to send the message direct to Clearwater. The Abbeville agent testified that he made some effort to find White and return the extra charge of 50 cents, but was not successful, and the money was never returned.

[1,2] The message was received by the Augusta office a few minutes after 10 o'clock. The Sunday office hours at Abbeville, Bath, and Clearwater were from 8 to 10 a. m. and from 4 to 6 p. m. As the telegram was not received by the defendant's Augusta agent until after the Sunday morning hours at Bath and Clearwater, no negligence can be imputed to it for not having agents in those offices to receive the message before 4 o'clock in the afternoon. Bonner v. Telegraph Co., 71 S. C. 303, 51 S. E. 117; Harrison v. Telegraph Co., 71 S. C. 388, 51 S. E. 119; Bowen v. Telegraph Co., 77 S. C. 127, 57 S. E. 674. All day Sunday, both before and after 4 o'clock in the afternoon, frequent calls were made by the Augusta office on the Clearwater office, but the agent was either absent or neglected to answer. The Augusta agent made no effort to deliver the message through the Bath office. The message was taken by the Clearwater agent at 8:47 on Monday morning, and delivered to Mrs. Busbee about 9:40. The defendant owed to the plaintiff the duty to have an agent at the Clearwater office to receive the message for her during its office hours from 4 to 6 p. m. Evidence of the entire and unexplained failure of the Clearwater agent to perform this obvious duty was evidence from which an inference of a conscious failure to perform a known duty could be reasonably inferred. In addition to this, we think the inference of total disregard of an obvious duty might well be drawn from the failure of the Augusta agents of defendant to make any effort to send the message through the Bath office when no response came from the Clearwater office. The message showed on its face great urgency; the mark on it for special delivery through the Bath office indicated that the special charge had been paid; and it might with reason be inferred that any regard for the obligation assumed would have resulted in an effort to deliver the message through the Bath office. No doubt the defendant's Augusta agent was right in trying to save for the sender the extra charge and expedite the delivery of the message by sending it direct to Clearwater, as the sender intended it should be sent until misled by the Abbeville agent; but it was none the less his duty to try the Bath office, when the Clearwater office failed to respond. The circuit judge was, for these reasons, right in submitting to the jury the question of willful or reckless disregard of duty on the part of the defendant.

[3] It is equally clear that there was evidence to go to the jury on the question of damages. The evidence does show, as defendant's counsel contends, that even if the telegram had been promptly delivered to the plaintiff at 4 o'clock Sunday afternoon she could not have reached the bedside of her aunt before her death; but it also tends strongly to show that the plaintiff could have reached Abbeville in time to attend the funeral. She alleged and testified that she was attached to her aunt by strong ties of affection from very intimate association, and it was for the jury to decide whether, in view of such association and affection, mental anguish would result from being unable to attend the funeral.

[4] Defendant's counsel submitted the following request to charge: "Telegraph messages are accepted for transmission, subject to the reasonable rules and regulations of the telegraph company, and if the evidence shows that the defendant company had reasonable office hours during which to deliver telegraph messages in the towns of Clearwater and Bath, it was not by law compelled to deliver messages outside of said hours." After reading the request to the jury, the circuit judge said: "I charge you that so far, and I add this to it: Unless through its authorized agent, acting within the scope of his authority, he assumes for valuable consideration to do otherwise." The addition to the request, it is true, was irrelevant, for there was no evidence, whatever that the defendant had undertaken to deliver the message out of office hours. But a new trial should not be granted merely because of an irrelevant instruction, unless the record furnishes good reason to suppose that the verdict was affected by it. We find no such reason in the record in this instance, and the exception must be overruled.

[5] The comment of the circuit judge in charging the fourth request of defendant's counsel gives rise to a point of some difficulty. The request was as follows: "That, where a party is deprived of being with a relation during that relation's dying moments by reason of delay in the delivery of a telegram, and the relationship between the party and said relation is that of niece, proof of such relationship is not of itself sufficient to raise a presumption of mental anguish, and, in order to enable such party to recover damages for mental anguish on account of such deprivation, it must affirmatively appear from the evidence that special relations of tenderness and affection existed between the plaintiff and the deceased, and that at the time the message was accepted by the telegraph company for transmission and delivery adequate notice was given the company of such special relations." The presiding judge, after reading the request, said: "I charge you that. In other words, Mr. Foreman and gentlemen of the jury, if a niece or a nephew should go and send a telegram, and the fact of that relationship was not known to the operator, then you see the law that I have given you would not apply, but that relationship must be known in order to bind the company; in order to be able to recover exemplary or punitive damages that relationship must be known to the company." The error of the circuit judge in his interpretation of the request is so obvious that it must have been manifest to the counsel for defendant at the time it was due to inadvertence. We think it must be imputed to the counsel as a waiver of the obvious mistake of the presiding judge that he failed to call attention to it. This conclusion is strengthened by the fact that at the close of the charge the presiding judge asked the question, "Is there anything else, gentlemen?" and counsel for defendant submitted an additional request to charge, without referring to this inadvertence. Worthy v. Jonesville Oil Mill, 77 S. C. 69, 57 S. E. 634, 11 L. R. A. (N. S.) 690; Anderson v. S. C. & G. R. R. Co., 81 S. C. 1, 61 S. E. 1096.

It is the judgment of this court that the judgment of the circuit court be affirmed.

JONES, C. J., and HYDRICK, J., concur.

GARY, A. J. (dissenting). There are two reasons why I cannot concur in the opinion of Mr. Justice WOODS: First. Conceding that there was testimony, in the first instance, tending to show a reckless disregard of the plaintiffs' rights by the defendant; there was also testimony satisfactorily explaining the circumstances from which such fact might have been inferred by the jury. The question of punitive damages was therefore erroneously submitted to the jury. Second. The eighth exception should be sustained. I concur in the opinion of Mr. Justice WOODS that the language used by his honor, the presiding judge, was erroneous.

It is only necessary to cite the cases of Butler v. Telegraph Co., 77 S. C. 148, 57 S. E. 757, and Johnson v. Telegraph Co., 81 S. C. 235, 62 S. E. 244, 17 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1002, 128 Am. St. Rep. 905, to show that there was prejudicial error. But I cannot accept the view expressed by him that the presiding judge intended to charge the proposition embodied in the request. The language used by him clearly shows he intended to charge that the plaintiff could recover, if the defendant knew that she was the niece of her deceased relative, "Aunt Aggie" (Mrs. J. S. Fisher)—a very different principle from that contained in the request. The appellant's attorneys had the right to presume that the presiding judge was familiar with the doctrine announced in the cases hereinbefore mentioned; and, unless they had actual notice of a mistake on the part of the presiding judge, or it was so glaring that it could not reasonably be supposed that the jury was misled, their client should not be deprived of the right to review the erroneous charge. No such facts, however, exist in this case.

It seems to me that the doctrine announced in the leading opinion will lead to much confusion, and bring about great injustice, and is at variance with the principle announced in the case of Herskovitz v. Baird, 59 S. C. 307, 37 S. E. 922, in which it was held that the failure on the part of counsel to call the presiding judge's attention to the fact that he had omitted to charge certain requests would not estop him from moving for a new trial for such omission, unless he knew the judge's reason for such failure to charge.

I therefore dissent.

(90 S. C. 8)

DIXON et al. v. PENDLETON.

(Supreme Court of South Carolina. Nov. 9, 1911.)

WILLS (§ 498*)—CONSTRUCTION—"ISSUE."

Devise of a remainder to a daughter and the "issue" of her body living at her death extends to the daughter of such devisee and the children of a deceased daughter of such devisee, the grandchildren of testator.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Wills, Cent. Dig. §§ 1087-1089; Dec. Dig. § 498.*

For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, vol. 4, pp. 3782-3792; vol. 8, p. 7693.]

Appeal from Common Pleas Circuit Court of Fairfield County; S. W. G. Shipp, Judge.

"To be officially reported."

Action by Minnie M. Dixon and others against Mannie M. Pendleton. From the judgment, plaintiffs appeal. Modified.

W. D. Douglas, for appellants. McDonald & McDonald, for respondent.

WOODS, J. The appeal in this action for partition involves the construction of the following clause of the will of Osmund Woodward, who died some time in the year 1862: "I will and direct that all the rest, residue and remainder of my estate, both real and personal, of every kind and description, including all the lands and all the negro slaves and their increase, which may be in possession of my children at the time of my decease, as a loan from me, be divided by my executors into five equal parts or portions, one of which I give, devise, and bequeath to each of my daughters, namely: Jemima Harrison, Sarah Owens, Amanda Heath, Rebekah Buchanan, and Regina Woodward for and during the term of her natural life, to and for her sole and separate use, benefit and behoof, and in no wise to be subject or liable to the debts, contracts, or incumbrances of any husband, and at her death to the issue of her body who may then be living. In case either of my said daughters shall die without leaving issue of her body then living, all the property above given and devised or bequeathed to her (except as hereinafter particularly specified) shall be equally divided among her surviving sisters, to and for their sole and separate use, benefit and behoof respectively, for and during the term of their natural lives, respectively, precisely in all respects as the original share or portion above devised and bequeathed to them respectively, and at their several and respective deaths, to the issue of their bodies who may be then living. In all contingencies which may arise under this will, the issue of a deceased daughter, if any such, shall represent the parent, and take the share which the parent would have been entitled to if living. In case either of my daughters shall die in my lifetime, without leaving issue living at the time of my decease, the share or portion above devised and bequeathed to her, shall fall into the general residue of my estate, and augment ratably the shares or portions of my surviving children, the number of shares or portions in that case being less."

Amanda Heath, one of the daughters mentioned in the devise, had been married to one Mobley before the execution of the will. After the death of Heath, her second husband, she married one Keller, and in the record is called Lucy A. Keller. She died in 1909, leaving surviving as claimants in remainder under the devise "to the issue of her body who may then be living" the following persons: Mannie M. Pendleton, a child of her marriage with Mobley; the plaintiff Minnie M. Dixon, a grandchild; the daughter of Minnie Heath, a child of the marriage with Heath, who died before her mother; and the other plaintiffs, the children of Minnie M. Dixon and the great-grandchildren of the life tenant, Lucy A. Keller.

The circuit court held that, having regard to the entire context of the will, the word "issue" was intended to mean children, and that, as Mannie M. Pendleton was the only person answering the description of children surviving Lucy A. Keller, she took the entire property. On the part of the appellants, it is contended that the children, grandchildren, and great-grandchildren of Lucy A. Keller were all issue of the body of Lucy A. Keller, and that the property should be divided equally among Mannie M. Pendleton, the daughter, Minnie M. Dixon, the granddaughter, and her children, the great-grandchildren of Lucy A. Keller, per capita. Failing in this, the appellant contends that the word "issue" should be held to be at least as comprehensive a term as heirs of the body, and that Mannie M. Pendleton, the daughter, and Minnie M. Dixon, the granddaughter, should each take one-half.

Logically and on authority there is strong reason for saying that the words "issue of the body," when not limited by the context, are more comprehensive than "heirs of the body." It has been often held in accordance with the commonly understood meaning of the words that heirs of the body embraces all lineal descendants who would take as heirs, while issue of the body embraces all lineal descendants, including those who would not take as heirs. Under this view, for example, if one dies leaving a son who himself has children, the son and all his children would be issue of the body, but the son only would be an heir of the body; for under the statute of distributions, the son's children would not inherit. This view was strongly presented and the authorities sustaining it cited in the circuit decree in Rembert v. Catoe, 89 S. C. 198, 71 S. E. 959, but it was rejected by this court in an opinion in which all the justices but one concurred; and we think that case is decisive of this. There the devise was: "All the rest and residue of my estate, of every kind and description, real and personal, not hereinbefore disposed of, I devise and bequeath to my beloved wife, Sarah H. Jones, for and during the term of her natural life, with the power to dispose of one-third thereof, while living, in any way she may choose to do; the remaining two-thirds thereof, after the decease of my said wife, I devise and bequeath to my daughter Martha Amanda, to her sole and separate use, during her life, and at her death to such of her issue as she may leave living at the time of her death, to be equally divided among such issue, but if my said daughter should die leaving no issue alive at the time of her death, it is my will that said two-thirds be equally divided among my next of kin at that time living, according to the statute of distributions of intestates' estates." The majority of the court held that only those took as issue who would have been entitled to take as heirs of the body under the statute of distributions.

The other question is: Did the testator in this case, when he devised to the issue of his daughter living at the time of her death, mean to limit the devise to her child or children then living, to the exclusion of other issue or heirs of her body? The word "issue" is often limited by the context to signify children to the exclusion of grandchildren and remoter issue; and in his forceful opinion the circuit judge has laid stress on the greater natural affection for children than for grandchildren, and on the use of the word "parent" in connection with the word "issue," as strong reasons for imputing to the testator an intention to so limit it in this instance. But the reasons for thinking that the testator did not mean children only when he said issue seem still stronger. The words

"child," "son," "daughter," are the common words in which men think and speak of their immediate offspring, and, when the word "issue" is used either in thought or expression, it almost invariably denotes an intention to include not only children, but other lineal descendants. Hence issue should not be held to mean children unless the context clearly indicates that restricted meaning. In this long will the testator seems to carefully avoid using the common words "child" or "children," and repeats the word "issue" many times in referring to the descendants of his children. It is important to observe, too, that the will was drawn by a capable lawyer who knew the generally recognized distinction so often made between children and issue. On a doubtful construction between children and other descendants, it is true that the presumption of greater affection for children should have weight; but still greater weight should be given to the almost universal inclination and custom of parents to give the children of a deceased child an equal share with a living child. For these reasons we are unable to agree with the circuit court that the testator intended that any child of his daughter who might survive her should take as her issue, to the exclusion of the children of a deceased child.

Comparison of this will with that construed by the court in Rembert v. Catoe, supra, decided since the circuit decree was rendered in this case, will show that the word "issue" can be construed to have been used in the two wills in a different sense only on extreme verbal refinement. Such refinement in the construction of wills has been productive of uncertainty in the administration of law, and delay and expensive litigation in the settlement of estates, and should not be indulged. Applying the rule laid down in Rembert v. Catoe, it results that issue of the body of Lucy A. Keller, living at the time of her death, means heirs of her body, living at the time of her death. The heirs of her body as determined by the statute of distributions were her daughter, Maudie M. Pendleton, and her granddaughter, Minnie M. Dixon, and each of these takes one-half of the property devised, to the exclusion of the children of Minnie M. Dixon.

The judgment of this court is that the judgment of the circuit court be modified accordingly.

JONES, C. J., GARY, A. J., and HYDRICK, J., concur.

(137 Ga. 60)

SOUTHERN RY. CO. v. JAY.

(Supreme Court of Georgia. Oct. 28, 1911.)

(Syllabus by the Court.)

1. NEW TRIAL (§ 132*)—PROCEEDINGS TO PROCURE—BRIEF OF EVIDENCE—DISMISSAL.

A motion for a new trial was made during the August term, 1910, of Monroe superior court, and an order passed providing that it be heard on the 17th day of October, 1910, and "that the movant have until said time in which to prepare and present for approval a brief of the evidence in said case, and to perfect, by amendment or otherwise, his motion for a new trial, the said brief and amended motion to be filed as ordered by the court." On October 17, 1910, the court passed the following order: "The hearing of the motion for a new trial in the above case having been set for to-day, and it appearing to the court that the court reporter has been unable to write out the evidence taken on the trial, the hearing is continued to the 29th of October, 1910." On October 29, 1910, the following order was passed by the court: "This motion came up for hearing on the 17th day of October, 1910, and an order was passed continuing the motion until this the 29th day of October, 1910, for the reason that the stenographer had been unable to translate the notes of the evidence. On call of the case to-day, counsel for defendant moved to dismiss the motion because there was no authority in the order of the 17th giving the movant until the hearing in which to present a brief of the evidence, whereupon counsel for movant moved to amend the order nunc pro tunc by inserting therein the following: 'And it is further ordered that the movant have until said 29th of October, 1910, in which to present for approval a brief of evidence in the case.' The court being satisfied that said words were intended to be inserted in said order and that said right was intended to be given the movant, it is ordered that said order be amended as prayed for." On October 29, 1910, the court approved the brief of evidence presented by the movant, and ordered it filed as a part of the record, and on the same day passed an order granting a new trial. In the bill of exceptions, after reciting that the court passed the order of October 29, 1910, amending the order of October 17, 1910, providing "that movant have until said 29th of October, 1910, in which to present for approval a brief of evidence in the case," and the fact that the plaintiff objected to such order, it is recited: "The court did this because, as he stated at the time, that he intended to put in the order when he signed it the right to movant to have until October 29, 1910, to present the brief for approval." Held, the court did not err in overruling the objection of the plaintiff in error hereinbefore referred to, nor in passing the order of October 29, 1910, nor in refusing to dismiss the motion for a new trial.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see New Trial, Cent. Dig. §§ 273-275; Dec. Dig. § 132.*]

2. RAILROADS (§§ 313, 325*)—OPERATION—INJURIES AT CROSSINGS.

Jay sued the Southern Railway Company for damages because of injuries sustained by being struck by one of its trains while backing over an alleged public crossing in an unincorporated town or village. A verdict was rendered in favor of the defendant, and to the order of the court granting the plaintiff a new trial the defendant excepted. Held:

(a) If the crossing at which the plaintiff was injured was one to which the sections of the Code requiring the blowing of the whistle and the checking of speed are applicable, under the ruling of the case of Morgan v. Central Railroad, 77 Ga. 788, such sections did not require the engineer in charge of the train which injured the plaintiff to observe their requirements; it appearing that the train was being backed on a side track to leave cars thereon and began such backing between the blow post and the crossing.

(b) The plaintiff testified that he was struck by a local freight train backing into a side track while he was attempting to cross a public road over the track, with his "eyes sorter down towards the mill when I was hit. I did not hear it. My hearing was and is defective, and I have to use an ear trumpet. I did not hear any one call to me to get out of the way until just as I was hit. I heard some one halloo, and tried to get off the track, and just then the car hit me. * * * The train was running seven or eight miles an hour. * * * I did not look or listen for the train when I went on the track. I thought it was gone. I could have seen the train by just turning my eyes. If I had, I could have got off, and wouldn't have got on. I wasn't thinking. I was in a brown study. I didn't look for the train, because I just forgot." The evidence of other witnesses was that the train was running from three to five miles an hour. The undisputed evidence showed that the brakeman on the back end of the rear car saw the plaintiff approaching the crossing, and motioned and called to him to stop, and, as soon as he discovered that the plaintiff did not see or hear him, gave both the "emergency" and "washout" signals to the engineer to stop the train. The conductor, who was standing on the ground near the crossing, when he discovered that the plaintiff "was going to go upon the track" immediately gave signals to stop the train. The engineer promptly obeyed the signals, and stopped the train as quickly as possible. The bell on the engine was being rung at the time of the accident. Held, the evidence demanded a verdict in favor of the defendant, and the court erred in granting a new trial.

*For other cases see same topic and section NUMBER in Dec. Dig. & Am. Dig. Key No. Series & Rep'r Indexes

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Railroads, Cent. Dig. §§ 1002-1005, 1029-1036; Dec. Dig. §§ 313, 325.*]

Error from Superior Court, Monroe County; E. J. Reagan, Judge.

Action by J. W. Jay, Sr., against the Southern Railway Company. Verdict for defendant, and to an order granting a new trial, defendant brings error. Reversed.

Harris & Harris, for plaintiff in error. Robt. L. Berner and Fletcher & Zellner, for defendant in error.

HOLDEN, J. Judgment reversed. All the Justices concur, except BECK, J., absent.

(137 Ga. 64)

CHATTAHOOCHEE LUMBER CO. et al. v. YEATES et al.

(Supreme Court of Georgia. Oct. 28, 1911.)

(Syllabus by the Court.)

1. JUDGMENT (§ 747*) — CONCLUSIVENESS — JUDGMENT IN PARTITION.

A judgment rendered in partition proceedings, had under Civil Code 1910, § 5358 et seq., until reversed or set aside, is binding upon all who were parties to the proceedings with due notice thereof, whatever may be its effect as to another co-owner, to whom no such notice was given. Civil Code 1910, § 5364.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Judgment, Dec. Dig. § 747.*]

2. JUDGMENT (§ 747*) — CONCLUSIVENESS — JUDGMENT IN PARTITION.

Where proceedings under Civil Code 1910, § 5358 et seq., to partition real estate owned by four tenants in common, are had at the instance of two of the co-owners, and the latter afterwards bring a suit against the other two for injunction and damages on account of alleged trespasses committed upon that portion of the property set apart to the plaintiffs, the judgment and the partition proceedings on which it was based are admissible in evidence to establish the plaintiffs' title to such portion as against the defendant who was a party to such proceedings and had due notice thereof, even if there was no legal notice of such proceedings to the other defendant, upon whom no service was had in the suit for injunction and damages.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Judgment, Dec. Dig. § 747.*]

Error from Superior Court, Decatur County; Frank Park, Judge.

Action by the Chattahoochee Lumber Company and others against J. E. Yeates and others. Judgment for defendants, and plaintiffs bring error. Reversed.

Donalson & Donalson and J. R. Pottle, for plaintiffs in error. Saml. S. Bennet and A. E. Thornton, for defendants in error.

HOLDEN, J. Judgment reversed. All the Justices concur, except BECK, J., absent.

(137 Ga. 66)

FULLER v. WOOD et al.

(Supreme Court of Georgia. Oct. 28, 1911.)

(Syllabus by the Court.)

1. PARTIES (§ 80*) — OBJECTIONS — MODE OF MAKING OBJECTIONS.

Suit was brought by the only child of her deceased father, who died intestate, and the temporary administrator of his estate, against the grantee in a certain deed made by the intestate, for the purpose, among others, of recovering specified personality and of canceling the deed on the grounds that the maker at the time of its execution was mentally incapacitated to make the same, that it was obtained from him by duress and fraud, that the only consideration to support it was one that was immoral and illegal, and that the description of the property which it purported to convey was so indefinite and uncertain as to render the deed void, and for the purpose of having a receiver appointed by the court to take charge of all of the assets of the estate of the deceased and of enjoining the defendant from "changing" such assets. The court appointed a receiver to take charge of such assets. Upon the trial of the case it was agreed that "the whole issue in the case is and shall be only as to whether the deed above set out shall be canceled." Held, that in view of the defendant's failure to plead or demur on the ground of a nonjoinder of the widow of the decedent, and in view of the above-quoted stipulation, even though the testimony be insufficient to show that there was such a settlement between the husband and the wife as barred the latter's right to any claim in his estate after his death, a verdict in favor of the plaintiff will not be set aside on the ground that the widow was not a party to the suit.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Parties, Cent. Dig. §§ 123-131; Dec. Dig. § 80.*]

2. PARTIES (§ 88*) — OBJECTIONS — MODE OF MAKING OBJECTIONS.

If it be conceded that a temporary administrator cannot maintain a suit to cancel a deed of his intestate and recover the rents, issues, and profits of the property attempted to be conveyed thereby (see Ward v. McDonald, 135 Ga. 515, 69 S. E. 817), in view of the stipulation above referred to, and in view of the fact that there was no demurrer or plea raising such question, or the question of misjoinder of parties, the defendant, who was the grantee in the deed, cannot have set aside a verdict in favor of the plaintiffs on the ground that the temporary administrator had no right to maintain the suit, nor on the ground of misjoinder of parties, nor because of the admission in evidence of the temporary letters of administration over objection of defendant because of such want of authority in the temporary administrator to maintain the action nor because the court failed to charge in accordance with such contention.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Parties, Cent. Dig. §§ 150-152; Dec. Dig. § 88.*]

3. DEEDS (§ 38*)—DESCRIPTION OF PROPERTY.

The description of the property in the deed was as follows: "All right, title, and interest that he now possesses in lots #181-179 Fraser street in the city of Atlanta, county of Fulton, state of Georgia, the same land and houses are located at the northwest corner of Fraser and Fulton Sts., the same being the property deeded or conveyed jointly to Nelson Wood and Lizzie Fuller, and more fully described on the deed books of Fulton county records." Held, that the deed could not be declared to be void on its face on the ground that the property was insufficiently described, and, in view of the evidence which applied, the description to the subject-matter, the court erred in submitting to the jury the question as to whether the deed was void for want of sufficient description of the property attempted to be conveyed, and in authorizing the jury to cancel the deed if they found it to be void for that reason. Under the evidence, the deed was not void for want of sufficient description of the property.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Deeds, Cent. Dig. §§ 65-79; Dec. Dig. § 38.*]

4. WITNESSES (§ 201*)—COMPETENCY—CONFIDENTIAL RELATIONS—ATTORNEY AND CLIENT.

Where a person who desired to make a deed gave instructions to an attorney to prepare it, in the presence of a third party who bore no confidential relation to the grantor or the attorney, and stated that he owed the person to whom he wished to make the deed "money, and that he wanted to make this deed to pay it back," and upon the deed being prepared such attorney and such third person became the witnesses thereto, the attorney was not incompetent to testify to the statement above recited, on the ground that it was a confidential or privileged communication between attorney and client. O'Brien v. Spalding, 102 Ga. 490, 31 S. E. 100, 66 Am. St. Rep. 202.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Witnesses, Cent. Dig. §§ 754, 755; Dec. Dig. § 201.*]

5. APPEAL AND ERROR (§ 1056*)—REVIEW—HARMLESS ERROR.

It is unnecessary to consider the assignment of error complaining that the attorney was not permitted to testify as to what property the grantor told him to draw the deed to cover, as it appears from this assignment that this testimony was offered for the purpose of showing that the deed should be reformed, and the record shows that this issue was by agreement eliminated from the trial of the case.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Appeal and Error, Cent. Dig. §§ 4187-4193; Dec. Dig. § 1056.*]

6. WITNESSES (§ 139*)—COMPETENCY—TESTIMONY AS TO TRANSACTIONS WITH DECEASED PERSONS—PARTIES—ADMINISTRATOR.

Where suit was originally brought by the temporary administrator and an heir of the decedent against the grantee in a deed made by the defendant to cancel the deed and to recover personal property, upon an issue which could be made by the temporary administrator the defendant would be an incompetent witness; but a temporary administrator is not authorized to sue for the recovery of land, or to cancel a deed, and where in the progress of such a composite action counsel enter into a stipulation eliminating any question which the temporary administrator could make, and leaving the case for determination substantially between the heir, as plaintiff, and the defendant, upon the question of cancellation, the defendant would not be an incompetent witness to testify to transactions and communications had with the deceased maker of the deed.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Witnesses, Cent. Dig. §§ 582-597; Dec. Dig. § 139.*]

Error from Superior Court, Fulton County; W. D. Ellis, Judge.

Action by Hattie Wood and another against Lizzie Fuller. Judgment for plaintiffs, and defendant brings error. Reversed.

J. F. Gollightly and J. B. Suttles, for plaintiff in error. McDaniel & Black and Robt. C. & Philip H. Alston, for defendants in error.

HOLDEN, J. Judgment reversed. All the Justices concur, except BECK, J., absent.

(137 Ga. 70)

HUBERT v. MERCHANTS' BANK et al.

(Supreme Court of Georgia. Oct. 28, 1911.)

(Syllabus by the Court.)

VENDOR AND PURCHASER (§ 237*)—BONA FIDE PURCHASERS—CONSIDERATION—PRE-EXISTING INDEBTEDNESS.

Olive, owning a piece of realty, made a deed to secure a debt to Mrs. Costa, under the provisions of Civil Code 1910, § 3306 et seq., and received back a bond for titles as provided for therein. This deed was duly recorded, and recited that the grantee had given the grantor a bond for title. Thereafter Olive, who was indebted to the Merchants' Bank and had pledged to it certain stock in two corporations to secure the indebtedness, transferred to the bank the bond for title to secure such indebtedness, in consideration of which transfer the bank surrendered to him the stock. The bond for title and the transfer thereof were never recorded. Subsequently, under the provisions of the Code above referred to, Olive executed a deed to the property to Mrs. Hubert, subject to the deed from Olive to Mrs. Costa, and without actual notice on the part of Mrs. Hubert of the transfer of the bond for title, which deed was duly recorded. This deed was to secure a pre-existing debt due to Mrs. Hubert by Olive, and "there was no additional consideration therefor." The property sold, and from the proceeds thereof a certain sum (insufficient to pay the debt due either the bank or Mrs. Hubert) was placed in the hands of a receiver to await the determination of the court as to whether the bank or Mrs. Hubert was entitled thereto. From a judgment of the court awarding the fund to the bank, Mrs. Hubert sued out a writ of error to this court. Held, Mrs. Hubert having taken from Olive a security deed to the latter's equity in the land for the purpose of securing a pre-existing indebtedness, and on no other consideration, she does not rank as a purchaser within the meaning of the rule of law which protects a bona fide purchaser without notice from the rights of the assignee of a bond for title covering the same property, who had previously acquired a transfer of the bond for titles from Olive upon a present consideration to secure a pre-existing debt. Harris v. Evans, 134 Ga. 161, 67 S. E. 880;

*For other cases see same topic and section NUMBER in Dec. Dig. & Am. Dig. Key No. Series & Rep'r Indexes

Dinkler v. Potts, 90 Ga. 103, 15 S. E. 690; Matthews v. Kennedy, 113 Ga. 378, 38 S. E. 854.

(a) The rights of the bank in the fund arising from the sale of the property are superior to those of Mrs. Hubert, though the assignment of the bond for titles to the bank was not recorded, and the deed to Mrs. Hubert was recorded. This is true, conceding that the law authorizes the record of an assignment of a bond for titles, and that the law with reference to the record of deeds and liens and the effect of a failure to make such record applies to such assignments. See Deen v. Williams, 128 Ga. 265, 57 S. E. 427.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Vendor and Purchaser, Cent. Dig. §§ 577-579; Dec. Dig. § 237.*] Error from Superior Court, Richmond County; H. C. Hammond, Judge.

Action between E. S. Hubert and the Merchants' Bank and others. From the judgment, Hubert brings error. Affirmed.

E. H. Callaway, for plaintiff in error. Wm. H. Barrett, G. R. Coffin, P. C. O'Gorman, and W. K. Miller, for defendants in error.

HOLDEN, J. Judgment affirmed. All the Justices concur, except BECK, J., absent.

(137 Ga. 63)

McMILLAN v. QUINCEY et al.

(Supreme Court of Georgia. Oct. 28, 1911.)

(Syllabus by the Court.)

1. BROKERS (§ 11*)—EMPLOYMENT—REVOCA-TION OF CONTRACT.

Where an owner of a large tract of land employed two agents to sell it, and it was agreed that the agents should pay all expenses of every kind of putting the property in shape for selling and incident to the sale thereof, that they should have the land surveyed and divided into town lots, and have the streets well graded and the property well advertised, and that they should use their best efforts to sell it, and should receive no pay or compensation for expenses so incurred, or for advertising and putting the property upon the market, or for their services in connection therewith, except a specified share of the proceeds arising from the sale of the lands, and where, in the performance of such agreement, the agents proceeded to comply with the contract on their part, and expended time and money in laying out the property and preparing it for sale, and did sell some of the lots, the owner did not have the right, without lawful cause, to revoke the contract at his mere option. Under such facts, if no time limit was fixed in the contract for its performance, the agents were entitled to a reasonable time therefor; and if, before the expiration of such reasonable time, the owner of the land, without lawful cause, revoked the contract and declined to allow the agents to proceed further with its performance, he was liable to them in damages for so doing.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Brokers, Cent. Dig. § 58; Dec. Dig. § 11.*]

2. BROKERS (§ 11*)—EMPLOYMENT—LIABILITY OF PRINCIPAL FOR BREACH OF CONTRACT—MEASURE OF DAMAGES.

In a case the measure of damages would be fixed in accordance with the terms of the contract. Where certain lots had been sold, and the owner refused to carry out the sales, the agents were entitled to recover the portion of the purchase price which was to be paid them under the contract. As to unsold lots, they were entitled to recover what they lost under the contract by reason of its breach on the part of the landowner; and, for the purpose of determining the amount of such damage, it could be shown what would have been the share of the agents, after deducting expenses incident to their further performance of the contract, had the lands been sold by them. Strong v. West, 110 Ga. 382, 35 S. E. 693; Durkee v. Gunn (1889) 41 Kan. 496, 21 Pac. 637, 13 Am. St. Rep. 300; Blumenthal & Co. v. Bridges, 91 Ark. 212, 120 S. W. 974, 24 L. R. A. (N. S.) 279.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Brokers, Cent. Dig. § 58; Dec. Dig. § 11.*]

3. SUFFICIENCY OF EVIDENCE—MOTION FOR NEW TRIAL—OVERRULING DEMURRER—NO ERROR.

The evidence authorized the verdict, and there was no such error in any of the rulings complained of in the motion for a new trial, or in the exception to the overruling of the demurrer, as to require a reversal.

Error from Superior Court, Irwin County; U. V. Whipple, Judge.

Action by H. J. Quincey and another against Jacob McMillan. Judgment for plaintiffs, and defendant brings error. Affirmed.

L. Kennedy and Graham & Graham, for plaintiff in error. Roscoe Luke, for defendants in error.

HOLDEN, J. Judgment affirmed. All the Justices concur, except BECK, J., absent.

(137 Ga. 56)

RUFF v. COPELAND et al.

(Supreme Court of Georgia. Oct. 12, 1911.)

(Syllabus by the Court.)

CANCELLATION OF INSTRUMENTS (§ 37*)—SUBJECTS OF RELIEF—SALE OF PURCHASE-MONEY NOTES.

There was no error in the ruling of the judge refusing to grant an injunction.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Cancellation of Instruments, Cent. Dig. §§ 66-81; Dec. Dig. § 37.*]

Error from Superior Court, Haralson County; Price Edwards, Judge.

Action by M. U. Ruff against J. T. Copeland and others. From a judgment for defendants, plaintiff brings error. Affirmed.

At an interlocutory hearing of a petition for injunction and other relief, general and special demurrers had been filed. The plaintiff offered to submit evidence, which his attorney stated to the court would sustain the allegations of the petition. The judge refused to allow the evidence introduced, and ordered that a former restraining order be dissolved and that the prayer for injunction be denied. The object of the suit was to set aside the sale of a certain corn mill and real estate appurtenant thereto, which defendants had made to plaintiff, and cancel purchase-money notes, which the plaintiff had executed, and in aid of the other relief to enjoin defendants from negotiating the sale of certain of the purchase-money notes which had not matured. It was alleged, among other things, in effect, that by way of inducement to plaintiff defendants, by letter, represented to plaintiff, on November 25, 1910, that "our territory extends from Cedartown to Griffin, Ga., on Central of Georgia, and from Austell to Anniston, Ala., on Southern Railway. And our local custom territory extends 8 miles east and 8 miles north, 10 miles west and 12 miles south, our exclusive territory. We have milling and [in?] transit rates over both railroads, and a reputation established that takes care of itself; in fact, if you will come and see for yourself, you will find an opportunity seldom ever offered for sale." Relying on such representations, the purchase was made December 10, 1910; plaintiff giving promissory notes, maturing at intervals, to cover the purchase price, and the defendant executing a bond for title and delivering the property to the purchaser. Plaintiff undertook to operate the mill, but soon found that all of the representations made by the defendants "were false and fraudulent and were made for the purpose of swindling him." The capacity of the mill was not as represented. The defendants did not have the exclusive territory they claimed, there being at least eight mills that ground corn in the territory which defendants made plaintiff believe was their exclusive territory. Defendants had no milling in transit rates on either of the railroads. Soon after plaintiff took charge of the mill property he was ousted from a large part of it by the Central of Georgia Railroad Company, and defendants cannot convey such part. On April 29, 1911, plaintiff wrote defendants a letter, which in effect complained that they had misrepresented, as hereinabove set out, and proposed to "return to you the property, with improvements, in consideration of the return to me of all the papers now held by you against me, with all money to you by me on said property, you to have a reasonable amount for the use of the property, less a reasonable amount as damage which I have incurred in loss of money and time and the expense of moving my family from Smyrna, Ga., to Bremen, Ga. To determine the amount for the use of your mill and my loss and expense, I am willing to submit to and abide the decision of three disinterested men of the town of Bremen, Ga. I am willing at any time to carry out this proposition and give you possession." To this letter defendants "declined" and "refused to reply," but instead have endeavored and are still endeavoring to sell and transfer the notes executed by plaintiff, in order to avoid any defense or claim of fraud which plaintiff has against them. All the representations and promises, so made by the defendants as aforesaid, were false and fraudulent, and were only made with a view to "dupe, deceive, and defraud" plaintiff and "rob him of his money, home and property."

Frank L. Neufville, Geo. F. Gober, I. N. Cheney, and J. S. Edwards, for plaintiff in error. C. E. Roop and Griffith & Matthews, for defendants in error.

ATKINSON, J. The object of the suit was to compel the defendant to rescind a contract of sale of real estate, to recover back so much of the purchase price as had been paid, and to recover as damages the expense he incurred in moving his family. The case must be decided as if all the allegations of the petition were admitted to be true, because the judge refused to permit the plaintiff to introduce evidence in support of his allegations, and upon the mere reading of the record entered a judgment against him. Where land is sold and delivered, but title is not to pass until payment in full of the purchase money, if the purchaser loses part of the land from defective title, he may claim either a rescission of the entire contract, or a reduction of the price according to the relative value of the land so lost. Code 1910, § 4124. According to the allegations of the petition, this was an entire contract, and the plaintiff was ousted from a part of the property, title to which was not vested in defendants and could not be conveyed by them. Under such circumstances the plaintiff had the right to rescind the entire contract, which would carry with it the right to recover so much of the purchase money as had been paid, and to have surrendered the unpaid notes and securities given for the balance of the purchase price if they were in the hands of the defendants. It would also carry with it the right to plead an abatement of the purchase price if the defendants were suing the notes. One feature of the plaintiff's petition presented the theory that he was entitled to rescind the contract, and recover so much of the purchase price as had been paid, and also have the unpaid notes and securities restored to him, and that based on these rights he was also entitled to an injunction to prevent an assignment of the notes and securities, so that they would not thereby be placed in the hands of third persons beyond the reach of plaintiff's equity. It was not alleged that the defendants were insolvent or nonresidents, but it was not absolutely essential that such grounds for equitable interference should exist. If the plaintiff were entitled to rescind and have his notes and securities surrendered, it ought to be done at once, without making him await the maturity of the notes and payment thereof to third persons, and then taking the risk of collecting back the amount from the defendants. Such relief would be open to him, but it would not be that adequate and complete relief which equity would afford him by staying the transfer of the notes and securities and allowing the plaintiff to set up his defense while in the hands of the original payee. But, to whatever relief the plaintiff might be entitled, the election which he has made by basing his right to recover on rescission has made it essential that he show a right to rescind. Where a contract is timely repudiated on sufficient grounds, and restoration properly offered, a suit will lie to recover back what was paid in pursuance of the contract; but such is not the case if the contract is not repudiated, or, being repudiated, there are not sufficient grounds to justify it.

Fraud is another ground for the rescission of a contract in equity. Considering the allegations of the petition, as admitted, to be true, it appears that for the purpose of defrauding the plaintiff the defendants made misrepresentations as to the exclusive territory of the mill and as to the milling in transit rates over the railroads. These were matters peculiarly within the knowledge of the defendants, and for them to willfully misrepresent the facts in regard thereto in such manner as to deceive the plaintiff and induce him to buy, when he would not have done so had the truth been revealed, it would amount to such a fraud upon the plaintiff, after he had acted thereon to his injury, as would authorize him to cancel the contract. But in order for the party defrauded to cancel the contract on account of fraud upon the part of the opposite party, inducing him to act to his injury, he should repudiate the contract promptly upon discovery of the fraud. Strodder v. Southern Granite Co., 94 Ga. 626, 19 S. E. 1022; Pearce & Williams Co. v. Borg Chewing Gum Co., 111 Ga. 847, 36 S. E. 457; Tuttle v. Stovall, 134 Ga. 325, 67 S. E. 806. He should also offer to restore the opposite party to his original status. Civil Code 1910, § 4305. Relatively to the respective grounds urged for rescission, it does not clearly appear what part of the property plaintiff was ousted from, or when the ouster occurred, or when plaintiff claims to have discovered the facts constituting the alleged fraud, so that it might be said with any degree of certainty that he acted with due diligence in repudiating the contract. Being the plaintiff, the burden rested upon him to make it so appear. Nor did the plaintiff, in his letter of repudiation and offer to rescind, propose unqualifiedly to restore the status. His offer was coupled with the condition, among others, that the defendants should submit to the arbitrament of three men in a particular place, and should bear the expense of moving plaintiff's family from Smyrna, Ga., to Bremen, Ga. There is nothing to indicate the amount of this expense, or to show that it was reasonably within the contemplation of the parties at the time the contract was made, so as to render it a proper element of damages for the plaintiff to recover against the defendants.

Assuming that, in order to rescind, the plaintiff might not be required to forego his claim for damages, yet if in his offer he restricts the manner of ascertaining his damages, and his demand includes the payment of damages for which the defendants are not liable, and it is not shown that the property is not in the same condition as when received, or, if it has been damaged, there is no offer to pay damages for its deterioration, such offer would not amount to an offer to restore the status. While, as against general objections, the admitted allegations were sufficient to show grounds for cancellation on each of the two theories that were relied upon for rescission, they were not sufficient to show affirmatively that the plaintiff had timely and in an appropriate manner offered to make such restoration as would put the defendants in the position which they occupied originally, and accordingly they were not sufficient to show that the plaintiff was in a position to ask rescission in a court of equity. Having founded his application for injunction upon the right of rescission, there was no error in refusing the injunction.

Judgment affirmed. All the Justices concur, except BECK, J., absent.

(127 Ga. 92)

CITY OF DAWSON v. DAWSON TELEPHONE CO.

(Supreme Court of Georgia. Oct. 28, 1911.)

(Syllabus by the Court.)

1. TELEGRAPHS AND TELEPHONES (§ 33*) — REGULATION — AUTHORITY OF RAILROAD COMMISSION.

The Dawson Telephone Company made application to the mayor and council of the city of Dawson to grant it "a franchise in and over the streets and alleys, sidewalks and property of the city of Dawson, on such terms as you may think wise, for the purpose of erecting, operating, owning and controlling a telephone system in the city of Dawson." Upon such application the mayor and council passed an ordinance on October 6, 1903, granting such franchise, section 3 of which ordinance is as follows: "Said company shall at all times be subject to the city ordinances now in existence, such as may be hereafter passed, and to such rules and regulations touching telephone company, their rates, and affairs as may be hereafter ordained, which are just and reasonable. The said company further agrees and binds itself by this ordinance that the rates charged shall be $1.50 per month for resident phones and $2.50 per month for business phones. The said company further agrees that in consideration of the privileges herein granted that it will furnish free phone service to the city of Dawson for its several departments." And section 5 is as follows: "This ordinance shall become operative from the date of its acceptance, in writing, by the company aforesaid." The company signed a writing, directed to the city council, wherein it was recited that the company accepted the franchise granted to it by the council "under date of October 6, 1903." The company began business under such franchise and charged the rates named in the ordinance. Upon application of the company to the Railroad Commission to allow it to increase its charges for telephone service, the Commission on January 5, 1911, after hearing had upon the application, passed an order permitting the company to charge for residence telephones $2 per month and for business telephones $3.50 per month, and the company thereafter increased its rates accordingly. The city filed an application to enjoin the company from charging the rates permitted by the order of the Commission, and to the order of the court refusing the injunction the city excepted. Held, the Railroad Commission of this state has the right to fix the rates to be charged by telephone companies for the use of their telephones in sending and receiving messages within the state. Civil Code 1910, §§ 2662, 2663.

(a) The granting of a franchise to a telephone company by an ordinance passed by the municipal authorities of a city, wherein it is provided that the company "agrees and binds itself by this ordinance that the rates charged shall be $1.50 per month for residence phones and $2.50 per month for business phones," and an acceptance of such franchise by the company, does not prevent the telephone company from increasing such charges, if permission to do so is subsequently granted it by the Railroad Commission, especially as it appears that the city was not specifically authorized by its charter, or other legislative enactment, to fix the charges to be made by telephone companies. Home Telephone & Telegraph Co. v. City of Los Angeles, 211 U. S. 265, 29 Sup. Ct. 50, 53 L. Ed. 176.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Telegraphs and Telephones, Cent. Dig. § 21; Dec. Dig. § 33.*]

2. CONSTITUTIONAL LAW (§ 154*)—IMPAIRING OBLIGATION OF CONTRACT—REGULATION OF RATES.

The order of the Railroad Commission does not violate the provisions of the state and federal Constitutions prohibiting the impairment of the obligations of contracts.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Constitutional Law, Dec. Dig. § 154.*]

Error from Superior Court, Terrell County; W. C. Worrill, Judge.

Action by the City of Dawson against the Dawson Telephone Company. Judgment for defendant, and plaintiff brings error. Affirmed.

T. T. Miller and L. C. Hoyle, for plaintiff in error. H. A. Wilkinson and M. C. Edwards, for defendant in error.

HOLDEN, J. Judgment affirmed. All the Justices concur, except BECK, J., absent.

(137 Ga. 65)

J. S. SCHOFIELD'S SONS CO. v. WOODWARD.

(Supreme Court of Georgia. Oct. 28, 1911.)

(Syllabus by the Court.)

1. SALES (§ 472*)—CONDITIONAL SALE.

Where one sells and delivers personalty to a contractor, and retains title thereto, but before the writing evidencing the contract retaining title in the seller is recorded or executed the contractor uses the personalty in the permanent improvement of the real estate of another, the seller cannot recover such personalty from the latter. This is true, though the contract between the owner of the real estate and the contractor for the improvement of the former's property had not been completed, and though the real estate owner had not paid the contractor the full contract price for the improvement of the property at the time the contract retaining title to the property in the seller was recorded.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Sales, Dec. Dig. § 472.*]

2. DIRECTING VERDICT.

The court committed no error in directing a verdict in favor of the defendant.

Error from Superior Court, Fulton County; Geo. L. Bell, Judge.

Action by J. S. Schofield's Sons Company against J. C. Woodward. Judgment for defendant, and plaintiff brings error. Affirmed.

Alex. W. Smith, Jr., and Frank L. Neufville, for plaintiff in error. J. D. Bradwell and Leonard Haas, for defendant in error.

HOLDEN, J. Judgment affirmed. All the Justices concur, except BECK, J., absent.

(10 Ga. App. 23)

TYUS v. STATE. (No. 3,364.)

(Court of Appeals of Georgia. Nov. 7, 1911.)

(Syllabus by the Court.)

CIRCUMSTANTIAL EVIDENCE.

The decision in this case is controlled by the ruling of this court in Twilley v. State, 9 Ga. App. 435, 71 S. E. 587.

Error from City Court of Sparta; R. W. Moore, Judge.

Earnest Tyus was convicted of gambling, and brings error. Reversed.

T. M. Hunt and R. H. Lewis, for plaintiff in error. R. L. Merritt, Sol., for the State.

RUSSELL, J. Judgment reversed.

(10 Ga. App. 26)

COWART v. WAYCROSS ELECTRIC LIGHT & POWER CO. (No. 3,373.)

(Court of Appeals of Georgia. Nov. 7, 1911.)

(Syllabus by the Court.)

NONSUIT.

The court erred in granting a nonsuit.

Error from City Court of Waycross; Jno. C. McDonald, Judge.

Action by Otis Cowart, by next friend, against the Waycross Electric Light & Power Company. Judgment for defendant, and plaintiff brings error. Reversed.

Jas. R. Thomas, Jas. W. Poppell, and A. B. Spence, for plaintiff in error. J. L. Sweat, for defendant in error.

POWELL, J. Judgment reversed.

(10 Ga. App. 36)

CHASTAIN v. STATE. (No. 3,454.)
(Court of Appeals of Georgia. Nov. 7, 1911.)

*(Syllabus by the Court.)REVIEW ON APPEAL.

The evidence amply authorized the verdict, the charge was free from prejudicial error, and no sufficient ground for reversal appears.

Error from Superior Court, Grady County; Frank Park, Judge.

A. Y. Chastain was convicted of crime, and brings error. Affirmed.

Theodore Titus and M. L. Ledford, for plaintiff in error. W. E. Wooten, Sol. Gen., and F. A. Hooper, for the State.

RUSSELL, J. Judgment affirmed.

(10 Ga. App. 60)

BUSH v. TOWN OF MINTER. (No. 3,633.)
(Court of Appeals of Georgia. Nov. 7, 1911.)

*(Syllabus by the Court.)CRIMINAL LAW (§ 1071*)—CERTIORARI—PETITION.

Where a petition for certiorari raised only the questions that the finding of the police court was without any evidence to support it and that the venue of the offense was not proved, and the evidence as set out in the petition clearly shows a violation of the municipal ordinance for which the accused was convicted and that the offense was committed "within the city limits" of the municipality, there was no error in refusing to sanction the application for the writ.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Criminal Law, Cent. Dig. § 2702; Dec. Dig. § 1071.*]

Error from Superior Court, Laurens County; J. H. Martin, Judge.

Jack Bush was convicted of violating an ordinance of the Town of Minter, and from an order refusing a writ of certiorari, he brings error. Affirmed.

Hal B. Wimberly, for plaintiff in error. W. C. Davis, for defendant in error.

HILL, C. J. Judgment affirmed.

(10 Ga. App. 82)

BRUNER v. STATE. (No. 3,721.)
(Court of Appeals of Georgia. Nov. 7, 1911.)

*(Syllabus by the Court.)SALE OF INTOXICATING LIQUORS.

This case is controlled by the principle stated in Cheatwood v. City of Buchanan, 72 S. E. 284, and in a number of similar cases.

Error from City Court of Sylvester; J. B. Williamson, Judge.

Will Bruner was convicted of violating the prohibitory law, and brings error. Affirmed.

J. J. Forehand & Son and Bell & Causey, for plaintiff in error. J. H. Tipton, Sol., for the State.

POWELL, J. Judgment affirmed.

(10 Ga. App. 12)

ARNOLD et al. v. VIRGINIA-CAROLINA CHEMICAL CO. (No. 3,258.)

(Court of Appeals of Georgia. Nov. 7, 1911.)

*(Syllabus by the Court.)SUFFICIENCY OF EVIDENCE.

The positive evidence proved that all the sacks of guano sold to the defendants were branded and tagged and came fully up to the requirements of the statute. The evidence to the contrary was negative in character and without probative value. No error of law appears, and the verdict as directed was demanded by the evidence. The case is controlled by the decision of the Supreme Court in Holt v. Navassa Guano Co., 114 Ga. 666, 40 S. E. 733.

Error from City Court of Waycross; Jno. C. McDonald, Judge.

Action by the Virginia-Carolina Chemical Company against Joe Arnold and others. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendants bring error. Affirmed.

Allen B. Spence and Jas. R. Thomas, for plaintiffs in error. Patterson & Copeland and Wilson, Bennett & Lambdin, for defendant in error.

HILL, C. J. Judgment affirmed.

(10 Ga. App. 23)

NERO v. STATE. (No. 3,361.)
(Court of Appeals of Georgia. Nov. 7, 1911.)

*(Syllabus by the Court.)CARRYING WEAPONS—CONSTITUTIONALITY OF LAW.

The only assignment of error in this case is based on the claim that the act of 1910 (Laws Ga. 1910, p. 134), regulating the carrying of arms, is unconstitutional. This question has been decided adversely to the plaintiff in error in the case of Strickland v. State, 137 Ga. 1, 72 S. E. 260.

Error from City Court of Macon; Robt. Hodges, Judge.

Albert Nero was convicted of carrying weapons, and brings error. Affirmed.

Napier & Maynard, for plaintiff in error. W. J. Grace, Sol. Gen., for the State.

RUSSELL, J. Judgment affirmed.

(10 Ga. App. 36)

BLOCKER v. IRVINE. (No. 3,376.)
(Court of Appeals of Georgia. Nov. 7, 1911.)

*(Syllabus by the Court.)ASSIGNMENT OF ERROR—SUFFICIENCY.

The only assignment of error is that the court erred in overruling a general demurrer to the petition. As originally drawn the petition was subject to demurrer. Before the demurrer was passed on, the court allowed an amendment fully curing the deficiency. The only question argued in this court is whether the court erred in allowing the amendment. The assignment of error is inadequate to raise this question.

Error from City Court of Macon; Robt. Hodges, Judge.

Action by W. S. Irvine against Leola Blocker. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendant brings error. Affirmed.

B. J. Fowler, for plaintiff in error. R. S. Wimberly, for defendant in error.

POWELL, J. Judgment affirmed.

(10 Ga. App. 26)

MACON, D. & S. R. CO. v. WARNOCK.
(No. 3,408.)

(Court of Appeals of Georgia. Nov. 7, 1911.)

(Syllabus by the Court.)

SUFFICIENCY OF EVIDENCE—NO ERROR.

The evidence, though strongly preponderating against the verdict, is not in such condition as to authorize this court to reverse the judgment; no error of law being shown.

Error from Superior Court, Montgomery County; J. H. Martin, Judge.

Action between J. T. Warnock and the Macon, Dublin & Savannah Railroad Company. From the judgment, the Railroad Company brings error. Affirmed.

Minter Wimberly, W. L. Wilson, and Akerman & Akerman, for plaintiff in error. Wm. B. Kent, for defendant in error.

POWELL, J. Judgment affirmed.

(10 Ga. App. 33)

GEORGIA, F. & A. RY. CO. v. FLORIDA & GEORGIA TOBACCO CO. (No. 3,473.)
(Court of Appeals of Georgia. Nov. 7, 1911.)

(Syllabus by the Court.)

1. APPEAL AND ERROR (§ 1051*)—ADMISSION OF EVIDENCE—HARMLESS ERROR.

In a suit against a carrier for failure to deliver a portion of a shipment of goods alleged to have been intrusted to it for transportation, error, if any, in admitting in evidence a bill of lading covering the shipment, over objection for lack of proof of execution, becomes immaterial, where the carrier admits that it received the goods sued for, and sets up delivery.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Appeal and Error, Cent. Dig. §§ 4161-4170; Dec. Dig. § 1051.*]

2. APPEAL AND ERROR (§ 719*)—ASSIGNMENTS OF ERROR—OBJECTIONS WAIVED.

There is no general assignment of error that the verdict is contrary to the evidence or without evidence to support it, nor any special assignment of error that the value of the goods was not proved. It follows that, though the verdict is without evidence to support it, because of lack of proof as to this element of the case, no new trial can be granted on that account.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Appeal and Error, Cent. Dig. §§ 2968-2982; Dec. Dig. § 719.*]

3. ASSIGNMENTS OF ERROR.

None of the assignments of error are well taken, so far as they are supported by the record.

4. JURISDICTION.

The trial court was not without jurisdiction of the case.

Error from Superior Court, Decatur County; Frank Park, Judge.

Action by the Florida & Georgia Tobacco Company against the Georgia, Florida & Alabama Railway Company. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendant brings error. Affirmed.

Hawes & Pottle and Rich & Nelson, for plaintiff in error. John R. Wilson, for defendant in error.

POWELL, J. Judgment affirmed.

(10 Ga. App. 27)

ODUM v. STATE. (No. 3,412.)

(Court of Appeals of Georgia. Nov. 7, 1911.)

(Syllabus by the Court.)

FALSE PRETENSES (§ 9*)—SUFFICIENCY OF EVIDENCE.

The evidence showing that the defects in the horse traded were patent, and failing to show that the prosecutor was deceived by any false representation knowingly made by the defendant, the conviction of cheating and swindling is contrary to law. Rainey v. State, 94 Ga. 599, 19 S. E. 892.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see False Pretenses, Cent. Dig. § 14; Dec. Dig. § 9.*]

Error from City Court of Lumpkin; E. T. Hickey, Judge.

G. W. Odum was convicted of cheating, and brings error. Reversed.

G. Y. Harrell, for plaintiff in error. T. T. James, Sol., for the State.

RUSSELL, J. Judgment reversed.

(10 Ga. App. 28)

WALKER v. CITY OF ATLANTA.
(No. 3,433.)

(Court of Appeals of Georgia. Nov. 7, 1911.)

(Syllabus by the Court.)

INTOXICATING LIQUORS (§ 236*)—CRIMINAL PROSECUTIONS—SUFFICIENCY OF EVIDENCE.

The evidence is extremely weak and unsatisfactory, but this court cannot say, as a matter of law, that the witness against the defendant committed perjury.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Intoxicating Liquors, Cent. Dig. §§ 300-322; Dec. Dig. § 236.*]

Error from Superior Court, Fulton County; Geo. L. Bell, Judge.

Will Walker was convicted of an unlawful sale of intoxicating liquors, and brings error. Affirmed.

John A. Boykin, for plaintiff in error. J. L. Mayson and W. D. Ellis, Jr., for defendant in error.

RUSSELL, J. Tom Adams, a negro, who had been to the stockade three times, was employed by the city detective department to turn up "blind tigers." He was paid $2 a day, and spent the money faster than he made it. He went to a meat market where

*For other cases see same topic and section NUMBER in Dec. Dig. & Am. Dig. Key No. Series & Rep'r Indexes

Briscoe Gaines was working, and offered to buy some liquor. Briscoe took the 50 cents offered, and went off and returned in about 15 minutes with a half pint of corn whisky, which he gave to Tom Adams. Adams, Briscoe, and several other negroes took a drink out of the bottle, and then Tom turned the bottle over to the detective, with the statement that he had bought the liquor from Briscoe Gaines. The detective then arrested Briscoe, and, after his arrest, he stated that he had purchased the whisky from the defendant, Will Walker, paying him 40 cents therefor. Thereupon he was released. Will Walker was arrested, and charged with keeping intoxicating liquor on hand for the purpose of illegal sale. On the trial, in addition to the above facts, it appeared that Briscoe Gaines had been sent to the stockade seven times, and that, immediately after he reported to the detectives that he had purchased the whisky from the defendant at his home, a search was made of the home, but no liquor found there. The defendant denied selling the liquor, and claimed that he knew nothing about the transaction. The recorder imposed on him a fine of $100, or 30 days in the stockade.

It thus appears that the only evidence against the defendant is the testimony of a negro confessedly guilty himself (inasmuch as he admits he made a profit of 10 cents in the transaction), who, after he implicated the defendant, was sent to the stockade, and who had previously been sent to the stockade seven times. If we were jurors, charged with the sworn duty of acquitting unless satisfied to a moral certainty and beyond a reasonable doubt of the guilt of the accused, we would unhesitatingly return a Scotch verdict of not so proven. But we cannot say the defendant has been illegally convicted. The recorder had the better opportunity of testing the credibility of the witness and of judging as to the truth of the transaction.

Judgment affirmed.

(10 Ga. App. 49)

HOLLOWAY v. STATE. (No. 3,537.)
(Court of Appeals of Georgia. Nov. 7, 1911.)

(Syllabus by the Court.)

WITNESSES (§ 362*)—IMPEACHMENT—CORROBORATION—EFFECT.

Even though a witness be successfully impeached by proof of general bad character, yet where his testimony as to the transaction in dispute is corroborated in material particulars, the jury have a right to believe that as to that particular transaction he is telling the truth.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Witnesses, Cent. Dig. § 1176; Dec. Dig. § 362.*]

Error from Superior Court, Pike County; Robt. T. Daniel, Judge.

Sarah Holloway was convicted of unlawfully selling intoxicating liquors, and brings error. Affirmed.

The entire brief of evidence in this case is as follows:

"Ben Meadows, sworn for the state, testified as follows: I know the defendant. In Pike county, on and during the Christmas holidays, about the 25th December 1910, I bought 10 cents worth of whisky from Sarah Hollow. It was at her house in Barnesville, Ga. Mr. Stocks, the chief of police, went with me. He gave me an empty bottle and 25 cents in money. I paid her 10 cents, and carried the whisky back to Mr. Stocks, and gave it to him and 15 cents in change. He stood out in front of the house when I went in. I did not have any whisky nor any money when I went in the house, except the money that Mr. Stocks gave me. That is the whisky I bought (exhibiting bottle). She delivered the whisky to me, and I gave her the money. There was no one in the house except myself and the defendant.

"Cross-examination: I am employed by the county commissioners. Mr. Howard employed me. I am to get nothing for swearing in this court; it was for making the cases in Barnesville. I am under subpoena for this court, and that is why I am here. I know my character. It is bad. Sometime I would, and sometime I would not, believe myself under oath. I believe myself in this case. She did not plead guilty before the mayor in Barnesville. There was no trial.

"J. O. Stocks, sworn for the state, testified as follows: I know the defendant, and I know Ben Meadows. In Barnesville, in Pike county, about the 25th December, 1910, about seven o'clock p. m., I gave Ben Meadows an empty bottle and 25 cents in money. I went with him up to the defendant's house. I stood on the outside near the fence. He went in, stayed a few minutes, and came back with this whisky (identifying). This is the bottle I gave him. He had nothing in it when he went in the house. He brought me back this whisky and 15 cents in change. I searched him in front of the police station, and he did not have any whisky or money on his person. We went from there directly to the defendant's house. He went in and brought this whisky out. Defendant plead guilty before the mayor and was fined $50. I know the defendant, and I know Ben Meadows. I know the character of Ben Meadows. It is bad. From my knowledge of his character, I would not believe him on oath. I believe him in this case, because I went with him to the place, and know he had no whisky when he went in, and no money except what I gave him, and brought it back in the bottle I gave him, and he brought me back the change.

"State closed.

"Statement of defendant: Ben Meadows came to my house a few days before this time, and had a basket and some whisky in it. He came in, got something out of the basket, and went out. I never sold him any whisky in my life. I was ironing when he come in, and he asked me for some whisky, and I told him I did not have any, and he went out."

The defendant was convicted and sentenced to 12 months' imprisonment without the alternative of paying a fine.

Henry O. Farr, for plaintiff in error. J. W. Wise, Sol. Gen., for the State.

RUSSELL, J. (after stating the facts as above). The motion for a new trial raises only the question as to whether under this evidence the conviction of the defendant was legal. We are inclined to agree with the witness himself, and also with the policeman, that the former's character is bad, and that, as a general proposition, his testimony would be unworthy of credit; but the circumstances of corroboration are such as might authorize the inference that the witness was telling the truth as to the transaction testified to in the instant case. Strozier v. Carroll, 31 Ga. 557; Powell v. State, 101 Ga. 20 (5) 29 S. E. 309, 65 Am. St. Rep. 277; Haynes v. State, 17 Ga. 465. The only question involved was one to be determined by the jury, and by the jury alone. There is no limitation on the power of a jury to credit a witness, unless the facts testified to by him be, according to the common knowledge of mankind, inherently impossible. Pyles v. State, 3 Ga. App. 29, 59 S. E. 193; Jolly v. State, 5 Ga. App. 454, 63 S. E. 520.

Judgment affirmed.

(10 Ga. App. 47)

HARDU v. STATE. (No. 3,522.)

(Court of Appeals of Georgia. Nov. 7, 1911.)

(Syllabus by the Court.)

1. INTOXICATING LIQUORS (§ 236*)—SALES TO MINOR.

The defendant's own statement amounted, in effect, to an admission that he had caused to be furnished to a minor malt beer, in violation of section 444 of the Penal Code of 1910.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Intoxicating Liquors, Dec. Dig. § 236.*]

2. INTOXICATING LIQUORS (§ 169*)—SALES TO MINOR—GUILT OF AGENT.

An agent who negotiates for his principal a sale of beer to a minor is equally guilty with the principal.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Intoxicating Liquors, Cent. Dig. §§ 187-188; Dec. Dig. § 169.*]

Error from City Court of Swainsboro; H. K. Daniel, Judge.

"Mr." Hardu was convicted of selling liquor to a minor, and brings error. Affirmed.

Saffold & Larsen & C. E. Dunbar, for plaintiff in error. A. S. Bradley, Sol., for the State.

RUSSELL, J. The defendant was convicted of furnishing malt liquors to a minor. According to the testimony and the statement of the defendant himself, the defendant, as agent for a brewery, sold to Roy Rountree, a young man about 17 years of age, five dozen bottles of beer, or "near beer." There was some conflict in the evidence as to the intoxicating quality of the fluid, though the preponderance of the testimony was to the effect that it was a nonintoxicating fluid. The minor was engaged in business as a partner in a mercantile firm, under the name and style of Medlock & Rountree. He purchased goods for the firm, and he solicited the shipment of the malt liquor in question in the course of similar business negotiations as to other articles. However, there was no dispute that Rountree was a minor, and no contention that the defendant had any reason to believe that Rountree had attained his majority.

[1] 1. Section 444 of the Penal Code of 1910 makes the furnishing to a minor of malt liquors of any kind (whether intoxicating or not) a criminal offense. Stoner v. State, 5 Ga. App. 720, 63 S. E. 602; Campbell v. Thomasville, 6 Ga. App. 212-236, 64 S. E. 815. The infraction of the law is apparently more technical than real. The case is one which in our judgment does not call for the imposition of a heavy penalty; but under the ruling in the Stoner Case, supra, it cannot be said that the defendant was not legally convicted of furnishing a minor with a malt liquor.

[2] 2. The issue as to the defendant's guilt is not affected by the fact that he was merely an agent in the sale negotiated. By reason of his agency he sustained an accessorial relation; and, there being no accessories (but all participants in the criminal act being principals) in misdemeanors, the defendant became a principal.

Judgment affirmed.

(10 Ga. App. 40)

CHATFIELD v. STATE. (No. 3,490.)

(Court of Appeals of Georgia. Nov. 7, 1911.)

(Syllabus by the Court.)

CRIMINAL LAW (§ 595*)—CONTINUANCE.

In overruling the motion for a continuance, the court did not commit such an abuse of discretion as, in the light of all the facts of the case, requires a reversal.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Criminal Law, Cent. Dig. § 1326; Dec. Dig. § 595.*]

Error from Superior Court, Crawford County; W. H. Felton, Judge.

Henry Chatfield was convicted of crime; and brings error. Affirmed.

Robt. W. Barnes, for plaintiff in error. Walter J. Grace, Sol. Gen., for the State.

*For other cases see same topic and section NUMBER in Dec. Dig. & Am. Dig. Key No. Series & Rep'r indexes

POWELL, J. The accused was convicted of selling liquor. The first indictment against him was quashed for a defect, and a new one immediately returned. As to each of these indictments he asked for a continuance, that he might obtain the testimony of certain witnesses as to his good character. It is inferable from the record that both indictments were returned at the same term of the court at which the accused was tried, and that subpoenas were not requested for the witnesses until after the court had convened. It does not appear when the accused was first arrested for the offense. It does not appear that he had not been previously committed by a magistrate. As to witnesses residing in the county, the accused must, in order to make his showing complete, either show that he has had them subpoenaed under the provisions of sections 943, 944, of the Penal Code of 1910, or else that there has been no commitment trial. As to the witnesses Cray and Morton, it does not appear that they resided out of the county; hence as to them the showing was incomplete. As to the other absent witnesses, there was no showing that they had ever been served with subpoenas. It does appear that subpoenas were issued for them and left with the clerk. As it is not the duty of the clerk to serve subpoenas, the showing as to them is legally incomplete, viewed from the standpoint of a formal showing for continuance on legal grounds. The showing as a whole made a case for the exercise of a sound discretion by the judge.

A case ought to be continued, in order that a party may get material witnesses, even if they have not been subpoenaed, if the party has not had a reasonable time in which to procure their testimony. However, it appears in this case that the only testimony the accused desired from these witnesses was as to his general good character. He had witnesses present who did testify as to his good character, though perhaps the testimony of the absent witnesses might have been more desirable in this respect, since they had known the accused for a longer time than did the witnesses who testified. But the state made no attack on his general character. So far as the record discloses, the state conceded that he bore a good reputation. The insistence of the state was that, despite his good general reputation, he had made a number of distinct sales of liquor to different persons; and this the state proved by a number of witnesses, whose credibility is in no wise attacked. This evidence is so strong that it is hardly reasonable to believe that the accused would have been acquitted if every man in the state had testified that he bore a good reputation. In the light of this, the alleged error as to the judge's abusing his discretion in refusing a continuance is not deemed sufficient to justify a reversal.

Judgment affirmed.

(10 Ga. App. 27)

CARSWELL v. STATE (No. 3,417.)

(Court of Appeals of Georgia. Nov. 7, 1911.)

(Syllabus by the Court.)

1. VOLUNTARY HOMICIDE.

The court did not err in charging the law of voluntary manslaughter.—Gann v. State, 30 Ga. 67.

2. CRIMINAL LAW (§ 1172*)—HARMLESS ERROR.

The defendant cannot complain that the court gave in charge to the jury section 71 of the Penal Code of 1910. This instruction was manifestly favorable to the accused.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Criminal Law, Cent. Dig. § 3160; Dec. Dig. § 1172.*]

Error from Superior Court, Laurens County; J. H. Martin, Judge.

Ben Carswell was convicted of homicide, and brings error. Affirmed.

Adams & Flynt and John R. Cooper, for plaintiff in error. E. D. Graham, Sol. Gen., for the State.

RUSSELL, J. Judgment affirmed.

(10 Ga. App. 9)

WESLEY v. BOYD. (No. 3,162.)

(Court of Appeals of Georgia. Nov. 7, 1911.)

(Syllabus by the Court.)

COURTS (§ 217*)—APPEAL—CASES OR QUESTIONS CERTIFIED.

The material question in the case is controlled by Brandon v. Fritchett, 126 Ga. 286, 55 S. E. 241. The plaintiff in error has requested that the question involved be certified to the Supreme Court, in order that a motion to review and overrule that case may be presented; but, since there appears no reasonable ground for a belief that the Supreme Court would recede from its former decision, the request is denied. See, also, the recent decision of the Supreme Court in Kaigler v. Brannon, 72 S. E. 400, decided October 12, 1911.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Courts, Dec. Dig. § 217.*]

Error from City Court of Griffin; W. M. Clark, Judge.

Action between G. B. Wesley and D. Boyd. From the judgment, Wesley brings error. Affirmed.

T. E. Patterson, for plaintiff in error. J. D. Boyd and Cleveland & Goodrich, for defendant in error.

POWELL, J. Judgment affirmed.

(10 Ga. App. 45)

ATLANTIC COAST LINE R. CO. v.

THOMAS. (No. 3,510.)

(Court of Appeals of Georgia. Nov. 7, 1911.)

(Syllabus by the Court.)

RAILROADS (§ 417*)—OPERATION—INJURIES TO ANIMALS—DUTY OF RAILROAD.

This case is on all fours with the case of Georgia Railroad Co. v. Wall, 80 Ga. 202, 7 S. E. 639, so far as controlling principles are concerned. The chief physical difference between the two cases is that in the case cited the engineer's vision was obscured by fog, while in the case at bar it was obscured by falling rain and the natural accumulation of mist on the front window of the cab. The law expects railroad companies to run their passenger trains on schedule, so far as they may be able to do so; and they are not ordinarily required, when it is foggy or raining, to reduce their trains to such a rate of speed as that the engineer may be in a position to discover live stock on the track in time to prevent injuring them.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Railroads, Cent. Dig. §§ 1484-1487; Dec. Dig. § 417.*]

Error from Superior Court, Brooks County; W. E. Thomas, Judge.

Action by J. R. Thomas against the Atlantic Coast Line Railroad Company. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendant brings error. Reversed.

Bennet & Long, for plaintiff in error. H. B. Austin and M. Baum, for defendant in error.

POWELL, J. Judgment reversed.

(19 Ga. App. 13)

HYLAND CHEMICAL CO. v. GODDARD.
(No. 3,318.)

(Court of Appeals of Georgia. Nov. 7, 1911.)

(Syllabus by the Court.)

APPEAL AND ERROR (§ 78*)—DECISIONS REVIEWABLE—OVERRULING DEMURRER.

This writ of error challenges the correctness of the judgment overruling a demurrer to a plea. There was no final judgment, and the case is still pending in the lower court. Under the repeated rulings of this court and the Supreme Court, the writ of error will be dismissed as premature. Civil Code 1910, § 6138; Case Threshing Machine Co. v. Hodges, 9 Ga. App. 722, 72 S. E. 189, and cases there cited.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Appeal and Error, Dec. Dig. § 78.*]

Error from City Court of Griffin; J. J. Flynt, Judge.

Action by the Hyland Chemical Company against L. W. Goddard. From a judgment overruling a demurrer to a plea, the plaintiff brings error. Writ of error dismissed.

Scott & Davis and C. G. Mills, Jr., for plaintiff in error. Cleveland & Goodrich, for defendant in error.

HILL, C. J. Writ of error dismissed.

(10 Ga. App. 24)

FULLER v. STATE. (No. 3,446.)

(Court of Appeals of Georgia. Nov. 7, 1911.)

(Syllabus by the Court.)

1. CRIMINAL LAW (§ 728*)—TRIAL—ARGUMENT OF COUNSEL—ACTION OF COURT.

While the argument of the solicitor as to the withdrawal from the case of some of the defendant's attorneys of record was highly improper, yet the refusal to declare a mistrial is not reversible error, in the light of the failure of the defendant to make objection until after the court had begun his charge, coupled with the curative effect of the instructions given to the jury to disregard the argument.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Criminal Law, Cent. Dig. §§ 1689-1691; Dec. Dig. § 728.*]

2. CRIMINAL LAW (§ 828*)—TRIAL—INSTRUCTIONS—REQUESTS.

There was no error in admitting the evidence over the objection urged. The charge was full and fair. If a charge on circumstantial evidence was desired, there being direct as well as circumstantial evidence, a written request to that effect should have been duly made. The evidence plainly indicated guilt.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Criminal Law, Cent. Dig. § 2007; Dec. Dig. § 828.*]

Error from City Court of La Grange; Frank Harwell, Judge.

Jim Fuller was convicted of crime, and brings error. Affirmed.

M. U. Mooty, E. A. Jones, and Arthur Greer, for plaintiff in error. Henry Reeves, Sol., for the State.

RUSSELL, J. Judgment affirmed.

(10 Ga. App. 12)

SOUTHERN RY. CO. v. BROWN.
(No. 3,219.)

(Court of Appeals of Georgia. Nov. 7, 1911.)

(Syllabus by the Court.)

APPEAL AND ERROR (§ 1001*)—REVIEW—SUFFICIENCY OF EVIDENCE.

The evidence seems to preponderate against the verdict; but as the charge of the court was free from error, and as there was some evidence to support the verdict, the judgment is affirmed.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Appeal and Error, Cent. Dig. §§ 3922, 3928-3934; Dec. Dig. § 1001.*]

Error from Superior Court, Franklin County; D. W. Meadow, Judge.

Action by F. L. Brown against the Southern Railway Company. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendant brings error. Affirmed.

A. G. & Julian McCurry, W. R. Little, and Geo. L. Goode, for plaintiff in error. S. B. Swilling and Dorrough & Adams, for defendant in error.

POWELL, J. Affirmed.

(10 Ga. App. 48)

RAYFIELD v. STATE. (No. 3,530.)

(Court of Appeals of Georgia. Nov. 7, 1911.)

(Syllabus by the Court.)

1. CRIMINAL LAW (§ 1172*)—POSSESSION OF STOLEN GOODS—INSTRUCTIONS.

Where the undisputed evidence shows that the defendant was in possession of the stolen goods on the very night of the burglary, it is not prejudicial error requiring a new trial that the judge, in charging the jury as to the presumption raised from such possession, left out the word "recent." The error in the charge was immaterial, and harmless as to the defendant.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Criminal Law, Cent. Dig. §§ 3154-3163; Dec. Dig. § 1172.*]

2. ACCOMPLICE EVIDENCE.

The testimony of the accomplice was fully corroborated, and the verdict of guilty authorized.

Error from Superior Court, Bibb County; W. H. Felton, Judge.

Marlon Rayfield was convicted of burglary, and brings error. Affirmed.

W. D. Nottingham and W. A. McClellan, for plaintiff in error. Walter J. Grace, Sol. Gen., for the State.

RUSSELL, J. Judgment affirmed.

(10 Ga. App. 21)

CARR v. STATE. (No. 3,349.)

(Court of Appeals of Georgia. Nov. 7, 1911.)

(Syllabus by the Court.)

INDICTMENT AND INFORMATION (§ 148*)—DEMURRER—SUFFICIENCY.

There was no error in overruling the general demurrer, and the special demurrer was not well taken.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Indictment and Information, Cent. Dig. § 495; Dec. Dig. § 148.*]

Error from Superior Court, Jeff Davis County; C. B. Conyers, Judge.

C. D. Carr was convicted of crime, and brings error. Affirmed.

W. W. Bennett and J. C. Bennett, for plaintiff in error. J. H. Thomas, Sol. Gen., for the State.

RUSSELL, J. Carr was indicted under section 186 of the Penal Code of 1910. The indictment is substantially in the language of the Code section, but the defendant's general demurrer raises the contention that the statute itself is illegal, void and unconstitutional. Nowhere does the demurrer refer to any provision of the Constitution of which the statute is violative, and this is the only way in which a decision of the question can properly be invoked. It does not appear clearly from the order whether the judge passed on the special demurrer, but it is without merit.

Judgment affirmed.

(10 Ga. App. 33)

TOLVER v. STATE. (No. 3,441.)

(Court of Appeals of Georgia. Nov. 7, 1911.)

(Syllabus by the Court.)

1. CIRCUMSTANTIAL EVIDENCE.

The circumstantial evidence was sufficient to corroborate the confession and authorize the verdict of guilty.

2. LARCENY (§ 59*)—CRIMINAL LAW (§ 1169*)—EVIDENCE OF VALUE.

In a prosecution for simple larceny, where it appears that the goods alleged to have been stolen were sold, and thus had some value, it is unnecessary to prove the price paid or the exact quantity. From legally admitted evidence it appears that the goods claimed to have been stolen had some value. The fact that other evidence as to value was illegally admitted will not, in the absence of other error, authorize a reversal of the judgment refusing a new trial.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Larceny, Cent. Dig. §§ 154, 155; Dec. Dig. § 59;* Criminal Law, Cent. Dig. §§ 3137-3143; Dec. Dig. § 1169.*]

Error from City Court of Sandersville; E. W. Jordan, Judge.

Sam Tolver was convicted of larceny, and brings error. Affirmed.

Goodwin & Wood, for plaintiff in error. J. E. Hyman, Sol., for the State.

RUSSELL, J. Judgment affirmed.

(10 Ga. App. 8)

WILENSKY v. CENTRAL OF GEORGIA

RY. CO. (No. 2,101.)

(Court of Appeals of Georgia. Nov. 7, 1911.)

(Syllabus by the Court.)

CARRIERS (§ 91*)—TRANSPORTATION OF GOODS—ACTION FOR BREACH OF CONTRACT.

The Supreme Court (72 S. E. 418), in answer to the question certified to it by this court, having held that a shipper, who is both consignor and consignee, cannot maintain an action ex contractu against a carrier for the value of goods consigned to it for shipment and not delivered, and which the carrier tendered at destination in a damaged condition, but refused to deliver without payment of the usual freight charges, notwithstanding the damage to the goods amounted to more than the freight charges, and the shipper demanded that the damages to the shipment be offset against the freight bill, it follows that the trial judge did not err in sustaining the certiorari.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Carriers, Dec. Dig. § 91.*]

Error from Superior Court, Fulton County; W. D. Ellis, Judge.

Action by H. Wilensky against the Central of Georgia Railway Company. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendant brings error. Affirmed.

Jesse M. Wood, for plaintiff in error. Payne, Little & Jones, and M. F. Goldstein, for defendant in error.

RUSSELL, J. Judgment affirmed.

(10 Ga. App. 70)

HARRIS v. STATE. (No. 3,675.)

(Court of Appeals of Georgia. Nov. 7, 1911.)

(Syllabus by the Court.)

1. CRIMINAL LAW (§ 923*)—NEW TRIAL—DISQUALIFICATION OF JUROR.

If one of the jurors who convicted the accused was the first cousin of the prosecutor, this would be a valid ground for a new trial, provided the fact of relationship was unknown to the accused and his counsel at the time of the trial (Brown v. State, 28 Ga. 439; Bullard v. Trice, 63 Ga. 165), and provided, further, that this ground of the motion is shown to be true, either by accompanying affidavits, or by recitals in the motion verified by the trial judge. In this case the fact of the relationship is not shown, and the trial judge expressly refuses to verify the recital of the fact of the relationship in the motion for a new trial.

*For other cases see same topic and section NUMBER in Dec. Dig. & Am. Dig. Key No. Series & Rep'r Indexes

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Criminal Law, Cent. Dig. §§ 2225-2237; Dec. Dig. § 923.*]

2. CRIMINAL LAW (§§ 719, 730*)—TRIAL—ARGUMENT OF COUNSEL—ACTION OF COURT—NEW TRIAL.

In a prosecution for the sale of intoxicating liquors, where only one sale was proved, and the character of the accused was not put in issue, it was improper for the solicitor general, in the concluding argument, to refer to the accused as "this notorious character, this notorious blind tiger," and, on objection made to such language, it was the duty of the judge to reprimand the solicitor general and instruct the jury to disregard the improper reference to the accused. Miller v. State, 8 Ga. App. 540, 69 S. E. 922. Where, however, the improper language is used and objected to, and the judge stops the solicitor general and reprimands him in the hearing of the jury, by saying, "Mr. Solicitor, that is an improper argument," and counsel for the accused makes no other request to the court, either to declare a mistrial or to instruct the jury to disregard the improper language, and rests content with the reprimand as made, a new trial will not be granted on this ground.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Criminal Law, Cent. Dig. §§ 1669; Dec. Dig. §§ 719, 730.*]

8. ADMISSIBILITY OF EVIDENCE—SUFFICIENCY OF EVIDENCE—NO ERROR.

The testimony admitted over objection was wholly irrelevant, immaterial, and harmless. The verdict is supported by the evidence, and no error of law appears.

Error from City Court of Greenville; H. H. Revill, Judge.

London Harris was convicted of the sale of intoxicating liquors, and brings error. Affirmed.

N. F. Culpepper, for plaintiff in error. J. E. Justiss, Sol., for the State.

HILL, C. J. Judgment affirmed.

(10 Ga. App. 27)

ALEXANDER v. STATE. (No. 3,413.)
(Court of Appeals of Georgia. Nov. 7, 1911.)

(Syllabus by the Court.)

1. SUFFICIENCY OF EVIDENCE.

The evidence authorized the verdict.

2. REFUSAL OF NEW TRIAL—NO ERROR.

There was no error, in view of the counter-showing made by the state, in refusing to grant a new trial because of the alleged newly discovered evidence.

Error from City Court of Tifton; R. Eve, Judge.

Sam Alexander was convicted of selling intoxicating liquors, and brings error. Affirmed.

R. D. Smith, for plaintiff in error. Jas. H. Price, Sol., for the State.

RUSSELL, J. Judgment affirmed.

(10 Ga. App. 45)

TENNESSEE OIL & GAS CO. v. AMERICAN ART WORKS. (No. 3,515.)

(Court of Appeals of Georgia. Nov. 7, 1911.)

(Syllabus by the Court.)

1. COURTS (§ 189*)—DEFAULT JUDGMENT—OPENING OR VACATING.

Under the act of December 13, 1902 (Loc. Acts 1902, p. 117), any default entered by a judge of the city court of Atlanta may be opened upon the terms and conditions stated in that act, provided the motion to open the default is made before final judgment is rendered.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Courts, Dec. Dig. § 189.*]

2. COURTS (§ 189*)—DEFAULT JUDGMENT—OPENING OR VACATING.

If both default and final judgment have been rendered, the defendant cannot have the default opened without first vacating the judgment. While the court has power over any judgment during the term at which it is rendered, still a judgment should not be set aside for insufficient reason, even though the application to set it aside is for the purpose of allowing the default on which the judgment is based to be opened.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Courts, Dec. Dig. § 189.*]

Error from City Court of Atlanta; H. M. Reid, Judge.

Action by the American Art Works against the Tennessee Oil & Gas Company. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendant brings error. Affirmed.

E. A. Stephens and Walter McElreath, for plaintiff in error. Walter C. Hendrix, and Mayson & Johnson, for defendant in error.

POWELL, J. [1] The suit was brought in the city court of Atlanta. Under the practice in that court, a case is in default unless the defense is filed on or before the first day of the term to which the case is returnable, and verdict and judgment in undefended cases may be rendered at the first term of the court. Formerly there was no provision for opening a default once suffered in this court, but under the act of December 13, 1902 (Loc. Acts 1902, p. 117), any default entered by the judge of the city court of Atlanta may be opened "during the term at which such default is entered, upon payment of all costs, or in the discretion of said judge"; and he may open it after the expiration of the term at which the default is entered, "upon the same terms and conditions as may judges of the superior courts of this state" open defaults. In this case default was suffered, and during the same term of the court verdict and final judgment were entered against the defendant; and later during the same term the defendant appeared and paid all the costs, and moved to open the default, and tendered an apparently meritorious defense, and gave as his excuse why the defense had not been filed sooner that an attorney had been employed to represent the defendant, and that he through inadvertence had failed to file the defense in time. If final judgment had not been entered in the case, the motion to open the default would have been sufficient; for, under the act of 1902, the defendant is entitled to open the default, as such, at any time during the first term of the court, by paying the costs.

[2] But this relates to the opening of the default as such. Here the case had passed beyond the stage of mere default. It was necessary for the defendant to get rid of the judgment which had been finally rendered in the case. During the term at which judgment was rendered, it still rested largely in what is called "the breast of the court"; that is to say, the court still had general control over it for the purpose of setting it aside or modifying it. But a judgment once regularly rendered should not be set aside captiously, or unless the party moving to set it aside shows some good reason why it was improvidently rendered. In this case no such reason was shown. In principle, this case and the case of O'Connell v. Friedman, 118 Ga. 831, 45 S. E. 668, are identical, though they differ somewhat as to the facts presented. In Mathews v. Bishop, 106 Ga. 564, 32 S. E. 631, the difference between opening a default and opening a final judgment rendered at the first term in the city court of Atlanta was pointed out, and it was there held that the judgment should not be vacated, unless the defendant showed a valid excuse for failing to appear and plead at the proper time. Since the judgment of default could not be set aside without the final judgment first being vacated, and since the motion set up no sufficient reason for vacating the judgment, the court properly denied the motion. Judgment affirmed.

(10 Ga. App. 59)

JONES v. STATE. (No. 3,580.)

(Court of Appeals of Georgia. Nov. 7, 1911.)

(Syllabus by the Court.)

1. CRIMINAL LAW (§ 304*)—JUDICIAL NOTICE—"GREENBACK."

"The courts judicially know that the term 'greenback' is the popular name used to designate a certain species of the currency of the United States."

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Criminal Law, Cent. Dig. §§ 700-717; Dec. Dig. § 304.*

For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, vol. 4, pp. 3164, 3165.]

2. ROBBERY (§ 24*)—SUFFICIENCY OF EVIDENCE.

The evidence amply authorized the verdict of guilty, and no error of law appears.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Robbery, Cent. Dig. §§ 32-36; Dec. Dig. § 24.*]

Error from Superior Court, Dougherty County; Frank Park, Judge.

Rebecca Jones was convicted of robbery, and brings error. Judgment affirmed.

Rebecca Jones was convicted of robbery. The evidence introduced by the state tended to show that she had conspired with certain other negroes to entice the prosecutor under a railway trestle, where he was robbed of $135. The defendant admitted the robbery, and admitted her presence, but denied that she took part therein. She stated that she and the defendant were passing under the trestle, when the defendant was robbed by others, and that as soon as they grabbed him she broke and ran. There was also evidence from which the jury could have found an alibi. The man who was robbed identified the defendant as the one who had enticed him under the trestle, and testified that before they got there she waited until one of the men, who she says did the robbing, could join them. He testified, also, that she participated in the actual robbery itself.

R. J. Bacon, for plaintiff in error. W. E. Wooten, Sol. Gen., and F. A. Hooper, for the State.

RUSSELL, J. [1] 1. The man robbed testified as follows: "I was robbed of $135 of lawful money. It was greenback money, and would pass. It was my individual money, and it was all paper money, greenbacks in fives and tens." It is claimed that there is a variance in this proof from the allegation in the indictment, which charged the robbery of $135 of lawful money. "The courts judicially know that the term 'greenback' is the popular name used to designate a certain species of the currency of the United States." McDonald v. State, 2 Ga. App. 633 (2), 58 S. E. 1067.

[2] 2. The evidence practically demanded the verdict of guilty. The charge was free from error. The assignments of error based on the failure of the judge to charge the principles of law therein contained show that no written requests were submitted, and in the absence thereof the defendant cannot complain.

Judgment affirmed.

(10 Ga. App. 68)

RHODES v. STATE. (No. 3,671.)

(Court of Appeals of Georgia. Nov. 7, 1911.)

(Syllabus by the Court.)

HOMICIDE (§ 98*)—ASSAULT WITH INTENT TO KILL—ELEMENTS OF DEFENSE.

If one whose premises are invaded by a riotous mob, who lay siege to his habitation and continue their rioting, shoots into the mob and wounds one of its members, he does not commit the offense of assault with intent to murder; and this law is applicable, irrespective of any racial difference between the parties. [Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Homicide, Cent. Dig. § 128½; Dec. Dig. § 98.*]

Error from Superior Court, Greene County; Jas. B. Park, Judge.

Will Rhodes was convicted of assault with intent to kill, and brings error. Reversed.

Jos. P. Brown and Brown & Shipp, for plaintiff in error. Jos. E. Pottle, Sol. Gen., for the State.

POWELL, J. For purposes of the ruling which we are going to make, the facts of this case may be stated as follows: A white boy had struck a negro boy with a rock. On a subsequent night a crowd of negro men—some six to ten of them—organized themselves into a party, and, without any warrant or authority, went out hunting for the white boy. They went to various houses of white persons in the community, where the boy who did the striking with the rock was supposed to be, but where, in fact, he was not, took white men out of their houses, and compelled them to go with them, fired pistols, made riotous noises, and finally came to the home of the defendant, a white man, at whose house he and a number of friends he had called in were sitting quietly reading. They demanded that he come out, and, when he refused to do so, surrounded the house. Some one within fired on the party outside, and several shots from the outside party were fired toward the house. After the besieging party had remained around the house for about 30 minutes or more, and after one branch of their party had brought the defendant's brother on some pretext to this place, and when, in his endeavor to escape, he had been shot at and mortally wounded, some one within the house, alleged to have been the defendant, fired a shotgun, hitting one of the negroes in the leg; and for this offense, under these circumstances, this defendant has been convicted of assault with intent to murder.

Now, let him who will cry out "Impossible!" "Monstrous!" "Unheard of!" or what he pleases. The only difference in the suppositions case which has just been stated and the case at bar is that it was a negro boy who struck the white boy with a rock, and that it was a white crowd who were spreading terror among the negroes, and that the defendant is a negro, and not a white man, and that the man who was shot is a white man, and not a negro. It would be folly to speak of the equality of all men before the law, if we should allow this conviction to stand. We would have to write a racial exception into that section of the Code (Penal Code 1910, § 72) which provides that it shall be justifiable to shoot, and even kill, to prevent a forcible attack and invasion upon the property or habitation. These white men, or boys, as the case may be (for the record does not disclose their ages), had no right in the world to enter upon this defendant's premises in the riotous and tumultuous manner in which they did. Their excuse that they were out hunting for a negro boy who had hit a white boy in no wise mitigates their offense, which under the law was nothing less than riot. They were not officers; they had no warrant; the person for whom they were looking was not even upon the premises of the defendant; and no reasonable cause whatever for suspecting he was there was shown. It was error even for the court to submit to the jury instructions on the subject of right to arrest without warrant, for no such issue was raised by the evidence. It is very probable that this instruction induced the jury into rendering the verdict which strikes us as so manifestly wrong.

Judgment reversed.

(10 Ga. App. 17)

BRIGHT v. STATE. (No. 3,323.)

(Court of Appeals of Georgia. Nov. 7, 1911.)

(Syllabus by the Court.)

LARCENY (§ 30*)—INDICTMENT—INDEFINITENESS.

An indictment for simple larceny, charging that the defendant, "on the 19th day of October, 1910, in the county aforesaid, of the personal goods of W. T. Lockett then and there being found, to wit, 100 pounds of seed cotton, of the value of $10," is insufficient, as against a special demurrer calling for a more definite description of the property claimed to have been stolen.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Larceny, Cent. Dig. §§ 64-75; Dec. Dig. § 30.*]

Error from City Court of Albany; D. F. Crosland, Judge.

General Bright was convicted of larceny, and brings error. Reversed.

R. J. Bacon and Ben T. Burson, for plaintiff in error. J. W. Walters, Jr., for the State.

RUSSELL, J. The only question raised by the bill of exceptions is the sufficiency of the indictment, under which the defendant was tried and convicted, as against the special demurrer filed thereto. The material portions of the indictment are as follows: "On the 19th day of October in the year of our Lord one thousand nine hundred and ten, in the county aforesaid, of the personal goods of W. T. Lockett then and there being found, to wit, 100 pounds of seed cotton, of the value of $10." The defendant demurred, on the ground that the property alleged to have been stolen was not described with sufficient definiteness and particularity.

We are of the opinion that the point is good. Where timely demand is made by special demurrer, the defendant is entitled to have such a definite and particular description of the property as will enable him to know the exact transaction in which the state claims he violated the law. In some way the particular property alleged to have been stolen must be described. It is not good merely to charge the defendant with having stolen a chair, a shovel, a table, a watermelon, or a pocketknife. The marks, quality, or kind of the property must be incorporated in the description, or the transaction in some way individualized. Merely to charge the defendant with having stolen "seed cotton," without even saying whether it is long or short staple, or without in any way informing him of the locality from which it is claimed he stole the cotton, is too vague, general, and indefinite to withstand a timely special demurrer. Roberts v. State, 83 Ga. 369, 9 S. E. 675; Melvin v. State, 120 Ga. 490, 48 S. E. 198; Ayers v. State, 3 Ga. App. 305, 59 S. E. 924.

Judgment reversed.

(10 Ga. App. 38)

RENFROE v. STATE. (No. 3,486.)

(Court of Appeals of Georgia. Nov. 7, 1911.)

(Syllabus by the Court.)

1. CRIMINAL LAW (§ 170*)—FORMER JEOPARDY—TRIAL ON VOID ACCUSATION.

A plea of former jeopardy cannot be predicated on the fact that the defendant had previously been put on trial under a void accusation. Such an accusation being an absolute nullity, the defendant could not waive the defects therein and consent that the trial proceed.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Criminal Law, Cent. Dig. §§ 312-321; Dec. Dig. § 170.*]

2. CRIMINAL LAW (§ 824*)—TRIAL—INSTRUCTIONS—REQUESTS.

The evidence amply authorized the verdict of guilty, and no error of law appears. The charge requested was substantially embodied in the general charge, and the omission to define an unlawful arrest, in the absence of any request upon that subject, is not reversible error.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Criminal Law, Cent. Dig. §§ 1996-2004; Dec. Dig. § 824.*]

Error from City Court of Sandersville; E. W. Jordan, Judge.

Leon Renfro was convicted of crime, and brings error. Affirmed.

J. J. Harris and W. E. Armistead, for plaintiff in error. J. E. Hyman, Sol., and M. L. Gross, for the State.

RUSSELL, J. Judgment affirmed.

(10 Ga. App. 24)

BRANTLEY v. STATE. (No. 3,367.)

(Court of Appeals of Georgia. Nov. 7, 1911.)

(Syllabus by the Court.)

1. ASSAULT AND BATTERY (§ 91*)—CRIMINAL PROSECUTION—SUFFICIENCY OF EVIDENCE.

The evidence amply authorized the verdict of guilty.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Assault and Battery, Cent. Dig. § 136; Dec. Dig. § 91.*]

2. CRIMINAL LAW (§ 634*)—TRIAL—CONDUCT IN GENERAL—ABSENCE OF JUDGE.

Under the rulings of the Supreme Court it was not reversible error for the trial judge to leave the bench during the argument of counsel and step into an adjoining room for a few moments without the consent of counsel; it appearing that he was all the time within hearing, and that no motion for mistrial was made, nor any other objection urged at the trial.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Criminal Law, Cent. Dig. §§ 1461-1464; Dec. Dig. § 634.*]

Error from Superior Court, Fulton County; Geo. L. Bell, Judge.

J. K. Brantley was convicted of assault, and battery, and brings error. Affirmed.

John Y. Smith, for plaintiff in error. Hugh M. Dorsey, Sol. Gen., and Lowry Arnold, Sol., for the State.

RUSSELL, J. [1] 1. The defendant was convicted of assault and battery. His brother, several days before the alleged assault, had been arrested for selling intoxicating liquor. The defendant and the brother met the policeman who had made the arrest, and the defendant caught him by the arm and said: "What in the hell did you mean by turning up my brother?" The defendant and the brother then caught the policeman by each arm, and the three began walking down the street until they came to a street corner, near which there is a dark underpass. While they were walking down the street, several other boys were in the rear, yelling, "Kill him! Hit him! Knock him in the head!" When the corner was reached the policeman refused to go any further, whereupon he was struck in the head with some hard substance like knucks. The blow came from the rear, and the policeman could not tell who hit him. At the trial in the recorder's court the defendant admitted that he did it. In his statement during the present trial he failed to deny any of the facts stated above, except the actual hitting, and explained that the reason he took all the blame in the recorder's court was because he thought the fine there imposed would be the end of the matter. Under the undisputed evidence the defendant was guilty. The jury were authorized to infer that seizing the policeman's arm in anger (as evidenced by the language used) was an assault and battery. Furthermore, even if the defendant did not strike the blow, he was so connected with it as to be an accomplice, and as such equally guilty with the principal offender for the misdemeanor there committed.

[2] 2. The only other error complained of in the certiorari, which was overruled by the judge of the superior court, is that during the argument to the jury the judge of the criminal court absented himself from the courtroom for a few moments without the consent of counsel and without suspending the trial. He was all the time within hearing of what was taking place in the courtroom. We do not approve the judge's conduct, but neither the defendant nor his attorney made any objection at the time. It is undoubtedly true that the trial should be had in the immediate presence of the judge, and when he wishes to leave the bench for any purpose, even for the briefest space of time, he should suspend the trial. As Judge Bleckley says: "His immediate presence tends to preserve the legal solemnity and security of trial, and upholds the majesty of law." Hayes v. State, 58 Ga. 35, 49. In the case of Horne v. Rogers, 110 Ga. 362, 370, 35 S. E. 715, 49 L. R. A. 176, Justice Cobb made a thorough review of all the cases on the subject and said: "The mere absence of the judge during the progress of the trial, when no objection is made, will not necessarily require the granting of a new trial, when the absence is only for a few moments and for a necessary purpose; and, in order for such absence to become reversible error, it must appear, not only that objection was made to the judge's failure to suspend the trial, but that the absence of the judge resulted in some harm to the losing party. * * * If it were an open question, we would hold that the presence of the judge at all stages of the trial is absolutely necessary to its validity, and that the absence of the judge from the trial without suspending the same for any length of time, no matter how short, or for any purpose, no matter how urgent, would vitiate the whole proceeding, whether objection was made by the parties interested or not, and whether injury resulted to any one or not. The judge is such a necessary part of the court that his absence destroys the existence of the tribunal, and public policy demands that the tribunal authorized to pass upon the life, liberty, and property of the citizen should be constituted during the entire trial in the manner prescribed by law. The great weight of authority is in harmony with this view. The very definition of trial carries with it the idea of the superintendence of a judge."

In view of the fact that the evidence in this case practically demands a verdict of guilty, and that no objection was made to the irregularity at the time, the conduct of the judge is not cause for a new trial.

Judgment affirmed.

(10 Ga. App. 20)

PATTEN v. STATE. (No. 3,340.)
(Court of Appeals of Georgia. Nov. 7, 1911.)

(Syllabus by the Court.)

CRIMINAL LAW (§ 586*)—CONTINUANCE—DISCRETION OF COURT.

Motions for continuance, made at the term at which the indictment is found, while addressed to the discretion of the court, stand upon a different footing from such motions made at a subsequent term. In such cases the discretion of the court should be liberally exercised in favor of a fair trial, no less than that the trial should be speedy, and every facility should be afforded a defendant for presenting his defense as fully as he might be able to do were the case tried at a subsequent term. Reasonable opportunity for the defendant to prepare his defense should not be sacrificed in the interest of speed.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Criminal Law, Cent. Dig. § 1311; Dec. Dig. § 586.*]

Error from Superior Court, Ware County;
T. A. Parker, Judge.

H. N. Patten was convicted of a violation of the prohibition law, and brings error. Reversed.

Jno. J. Moore, for plaintiff in error. M. D. Dickerson, Sol. Gen., for the State.

RUSSELL, J. On December 6th a presentment was returned, charging the defendant with a violation of the prohibition law. Fifteen days later, to wit, December 21st, he was put upon trial. The man to whom it was claimed he had sold the liquor was named Best. The defendant filed a motion for a continuance, in which it was shown that, on the day after the presentment was returned, his attorney had a subpoena issued for Best, and placed it in the hands of the sheriff for service. Two or three days later it was learned that Best had left the county, and was in Savannah. The defendant's attorney immediately had another subpoena issued, which was placed in the hands of the sheriff of Chatham county, who located Best, and requested that $5 be sent for his expenses, stating that Best would leave on the next train after its receipt. The money was sent, and Best failing to arrive within two or three days thereafter, the defendant's attorney, on December 15th, had an attachment issued for him, but he had not been located. Best was only temporarily absent from the county, and the defendant expected to have him present at the next term of the court. Best would swear that the defendant did not sell him any liquor; that several days before the arrest the defendant made a trip to Jacksonville, Fla., on business, and Best gave him some money with which to purchase a pint of whisky; that the defendant did not in any way get or retain any benefit or profit out of the transaction, and acted purely and simply as the agent of Best in purchasing the whisky at Jacksonville. It was further shown that Best was the only witness to these facts. These facts were substantially undisputed, except that the state proved that an attachment had been issued from a justice's court against Best, indicating that he was removing permanently from the county.

It will be seen that, if the jury should credit Best's testimony, the defendant was entirely innocent. The evidence relied on by the state was circumstantial, and the testimony sought to be elicited from Best presented a theory strongly indicating innocence. As between a speedy and a fair trial, speed should yield to fairness. The defendant was put upon trial just 15 days after he was accused, and we think has been denied his right to have presented to a jury of his peers testimony which was in all probability accessible, and which, if believed, would have shown his innocence. While we recognize that continuances are matters resting largely in the discretion of the trial court, still, at the first term, that discretion should be liberally exercised in favor of a fair trial, and every facility should be afforded the defendant for presenting his defense as fully as he might be able to do were the case tried at a subsequent term. Brooks v. State, 3 Ga. App. 458, 60 S. E. 211. The interests of justice would not have suffered by giving the defendant the right to have the jury hear the testimony of the only person who really knew whether he was guilty or innocent. The evidence against the defendant is weak, and if his full defense had been heard the result might have been different.

Judgment reversed.

(10 Ga. App. 78)

HENDON v. STATE. (No. 3,718.)

(Court of Appeals of Georgia. Nov. 7, 1911.)

(Syllabus by the Court.)

KIDNAPPING (§ 5*)—ELEMENTS OF OFFENSE—FORCE—MALICE—FRAUD.

In prosecutions under Penal Code 1910, § 110, for the inveigling of a child, it is necessary for the state to show that the accused either "forcibly, maliciously, or fraudulently" enticed or carried the child away. Where the child alleged to have been inveigled is above the age of discretion, though under the age of 18, these elements are not sufficiently made out by showing that the child went away in company with the defendant, especially where the state's own evidence shows that the child itself went of its own free will and accord, and not as the result of any inveigling on the defendant's part. [Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Kidnapping, Cent. Dig. § 11; Dec. Dig. § 5.*]

Error from Superior Court, Cobb County; N. A. Morris, Judge.

Essie Hendon was convicted of inveigling a child from its parents, and brings error. Reversed.

Clay & Morris, for plaintiff in error. J. P. Brooke, Sol. Gen., for the State.

POWELL, J. This case presents about the most horrible and disgusting record we have been called upon to review since our service upon this bench began. Its disgusting details are utterly contrary to all that we are accustomed to. We have considered the case carefully. The record contains many exceptions to rulings of the court and to instructions to the jury, but none of these are well taken. The case was fairly and ably tried.

We are always reluctant to set aside a verdict deliberately returned by a jury and approved by a court, on the ground that there is no evidence to support it, and are especially reluctant to do so where the record is otherwise so free from error as the one before us. But we have read this record over and over again, and the evidence is wholly insufficient to support the conviction.

The accused was charged with a violation of Penal Code 1910, § 110, which provides: "Any person who forcibly, maliciously, or fraudulently leads, takes, or carries away, or decoys or entices away, any child under the age of eighteen years from its parent or guardian, or against his will, or without his consent, is guilty of kidnapping." The child alleged to have been inveigled was a girl about 17 years old, the daughter of a poor white farmer who lived in the country between Marietta and Atlanta. He had, as a farm hand, a negro boy, who slept in a shed room in his house. This girl and the negro boy worked together in the field and in some way, not disclosed by the record, he managed to become criminally intimate with her. One night, after she was somewhat advanced in pregnancy, her father missed her from home. He tracked her to a spot at a branch near by, and found that she was there joined by another woman, and then both were tracked to a point on the street car line between Marietta and Atlanta. It was shown that the other track was that of the defendant in this case, who was a sister of the negro boy already mentioned. In fact, earlier during the same night this negro woman had come to the prosecutor's house, had called for her brother, and had told the prosecutor that she wanted him because one of her children was sick. It may be stated just here that this negro boy came back and went to work next morning, but a little later in the day fled, and has not been heard of since. The next morning after the night on which the girl was missed from her father's house, she and the defendant were seen to take a train together in Atlanta for Knoxville, Tenn. They went together into a coach assigned to colored people. The porter seemed to suspect that the girl was a white girl, and, apparently having some curiosity as to why she should be riding with a negro woman, asked them about it, and the girl told him that she was a negro girl. At Blue Ridge, on the way to Knoxville, the negro woman gave the porter money with which he bought lunches and brought them in to the girl and the defendant. When they arrived at Knoxville, the porter consented to secure lodging for the negro woman, but refused to have anything to do with the white girl, and she went into another portion of the city and secured lodgings. A little later the police arrested the two in different parts of the city.

Now, if this were all the testimony, there might be enough to justify a strong suspicion that this negro woman had decoyed this white girl away in order to shield her brother from the crime he had committed—a crime which, though punishable by only a small penalty, so far as the law is concerned, would probably have been dealt with much more severely by members of the community if once it became known. But the state did not stop there. It brought the girl herself to the witness stand. She confessed her miserable condition, and stated on the stand that she herself had appealed to this sister of the man who had been a partner with her in her unspeakable crime, and had persuaded this woman to take her to Knoxville, Tenn. The girl herself was ignorant and untraveled, and did not know how to get away from home. The negro boy had furnished the girl with $13. She gave this to the negro woman and told her to purchase the necessary tickets. The understanding between them was that when they got to Knoxville, and the girl secured a lodging place, this negro woman would wait on her there. According to the girl's testimony, however, she never saw anything more of the defendant from the time they last separated at the train until after they were arrested a few days later. If the state's circumstantial evidence made out even such a prima facie case of kidnapping or inveigling as to put upon the defendant the burden of explaining the circumstances, the state's own testimony as it fell from the mouth of this witness, the girl herself, furnished the explanation, and absolutely destroyed whatever approach to a case the state had previously made. The defendant's own statement of the affair was similar to the girl's.

It is insisted (though there is no direct proof of the fact in the record) that this girl is weak and unlettered, and that the defendant is a shrewd and designing woman, and that the girl, even when she was testifying, was so far from the influence of this woman that she lied as to the salient facts of the case. Be this as it may, the state is not in a position to assert it here. The state could not make out a case without putting the girl on the stand, under all the circumstances. If the actual truth is different from what it appears to be according to this record, this unfortunate state of affairs comes about through the inability of the state to show the truth—a state of affairs that often occurs in the ordinary administration of the criminal law. With this girl testifying as she does, we do not see how the state can make out a case, unless it obtains some further evidence than that now apparently at its command. So long as the state is under the necessity of supplementing its circumstantial evidence with the testimony of the girl, it is obliged to adopt the theory of the case shown by the girl's testimony. This proposition involves no contradiction of the doctrine that where the state has two witnesses, and one of them makes out a case and the other states facts to the contrary, the state may nevertheless ask for and sustain a conviction on the testimony of the first witness, if it is believed by the jury. The girl's testimony in this case does not contradict the circumstances by which the state makes its first approach toward a proof of the case. Her testimony is consistent with all these things—that she left her father's house when she heard the defendant call the negro boy; that she went to the branch, just as her father says she went; that she met the defendant, and that they walked to the car line; that they came on to Atlanta, and that they took the train for Knoxville; that she furnished the negro woman money which the negro boy had furnished her. All these things the girl herself directly testified to, and yet says that she herself was the movant in the entire matter. She testified only under the compulsion of the court at the instance of the state; but, when she did testify, she absolutely ruined the state's case.

If this woman is guilty, the state has not proved it; for it is material in a prosecution of this kind for the state to show that the defendant "forcibly, maliciously, or fraudulently," led, took, or decoyed away the child. Now, as to a child under the age of discretion, it might be sufficient merely to show that the child ran away from home and was materially assisted by the defendant in getting away. A child of tender years is not supposed to have sufficient will and judgment to direct an affair of that kind; but this girl was above the age of discretion, was about 17 years old, was about to become a mother, was in a condition that demanded action on her part, and, if she is telling the truth about it, she did what was most natural—appealed to this woman to go away with her and help her shield her disgrace. If this is all the defendant did (and it is all that the proof shows that she did), she is guilty of no crime. The shockingness of the situation, the natural feeling that somebody ought to be punished on account of this unnatural state of affairs that was existing, doubtless led the jury to convict, notwithstanding the evidence is as we have stated it. Detestation for crime too often causes men's minds to rush to conclusions of guilt as against any one charged with complicity in the transaction. But, horrible as this affair is, there can be no relaxation of that most essential rule by which the liberty of all of us is guarded, namely, that no person shall be convicted on suspicion alone, nor held accountable to the law for a crime which the state is unable to prove by either direct or circumstantial testimony. Solely for the lack of evidence to support the verdict, the judgment is reversed.

Judgment reversed.

(19 Ga. App. 41)

PHELPS v. STATE (No. 3,492.)

(Court of Appeals of Georgia. Nov. 7, 1911.)

*(Syllabus by the Court.)PARENT AND CHILD (§ 17*)—CRIMINAL LAW (§ 150*)—"ABANDONMENT OF CHILD"—CRIMINAL RESPONSIBILITY—LIMITATIONS.

Abandonment, as a criminal offense, contains two essential ingredients: Separation from the child, and failure to supply its needs. The offense is not complete until there is a conjunction of these two ingredients, as mere absence from one's child is not of itself a criminal offense. The crime of abandonment begins and continues as long as there is a failure on the part of the father to perform his parental duty, and consequent dependence of the child. Where it appears that an absent father has for the two years immediately preceding the finding of the accusation against him failed and refused to provide for his dependent child, the time when the original separation took place is entirely immaterial. The continuing dependency of the child vitalizes the offense, and the fact that the absence, and even the dependency, began more than two years prior to the accusation, affords no ground for the interposition of the statute of limitations.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Parent and Child, Dec. Dig. § 17; * Criminal Law, Cent. Dig. §§ 274, 275; Dec. Dig. § 150.*]

For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, vol. 1, pp. 4-13; vol. 8, p. 7539.]

Error from Superior Court, Butts County; Robt. T. Daniel, Judge.

John Phelps was convicted of abandonment, and brings error. Affirmed.

H. M. Fletcher, for plaintiff in error. J. W. Wise, Sol. Gen., for the State.

RUSSELL, J. The only question involved in this case is whether the offense is barred by the statute of limitations. The defendant in the court below was charged with the offense of abandonment, and claims an acquittal for the reason that the evidence shows that it has been four or five years since he left his wife and child, or since he furnished the child anything. The wife of the defendant, however, testified that she had repeatedly, within the last two years, asked the defendant to do something for his child, and that within the two years he each time refused her request. A majority of the court think the determination of the point at issue depends upon the nature of the ingredients necessary to constitute the offense of abandonment, and we are of the opinion that abandonment is a continuing offense, at least until the defendant has once been convicted thereof. We hold that the facts of this case distinguish it from the case of Gay v. State, 105 Ga. 599, 31 S. E. 569, 70 Am. St. Rep. 68, and that the ruling in that case is not binding as a precedent. The precise point, and the only point, presented for the decision of the Supreme Court in the Gay Case, supra, was whether one who had once been convicted of abandoning his child could thereafter be again convicted of abandoning the same child. Whatever else is said in the opinion in a general way, in reasoning as to the nature of the offense of abandonment, can, we respectfully insist, be treated as mere obiter in arguendo. It is not authority. The usual cogent reasoning of the distinguished Justice who wrote the opinion (being beside the question to be decided) does not appeal persuasively to the majority of this court. To say the least of it, it would seem to be bad policy to apply the statute only to the father who might return to his child and attempt to repair, in some degree, the wrong he had done it, and, on the other hand, to reward the heartless father, who callously abandoned his offspring to its fate forever.

Moreover, if precedents are to be consulted, we think it is clearly to be inferred from the rulings in Bennetfield v. State, 80 Ga. 107, 4 S. E. 869, Bull v. State, 80 Ga. 704, 6 S. E. 178, and Brown v. State, 122 Ga. 568, 50 S. E. 378, as well as the rulings of this court in Moore v. State, 1 Ga. App. 502, 57 S. E. 1016, Cleveland v. State, 7 Ga. App. 622, 67 S. E. 696, and Ware v. State, 7 Ga. App. 797, 68 S. E. 443, that abandonment is not only an offense which requires the conjunction of two essential elements, but that it is necessarily a continuing offense, so far at least as the element of dependency is concerned. From a review of the decisions in each of the above-stated cases, we are constrained to believe that it would never do to hold that a father who had left his child in a dependent condition should be allowed to take advantage of his own wrong by pleading the statute of limitations, and setting up that the neglect of his offspring, though flagrant, had continued for such a length of time that the offense was barred by the statute of limitations. A father who willfully and voluntarily abandons his children is not guilty of any offense merely because he leaves them. If he has them properly maintained and cared for, even if he be absent, he violates no statute law. Certainly, then, the statute of limitations does not begin to run from the time when the father separates himself from his children. Brown v. State, 122 Ga. 570, 50 S. E. 379.

"Abandonment does not mean merely going away from destitute and dependent children, though absence is a necessary element to constitute the crime." Intention is so essentially a part of every crime, and particularly that of abandonment, that the willfulness and voluntariness which is involved in this section of the Code is accentuated where there is, as in the case now before us, evidence of a demand upon the father for the support of his child, and a refusal to comply, and this within two years before the prosecution. As held in Moore v. State, 1 Ga. App. 502, 57 S. E. 1016, quoting from the language of Judge Bleckley in Bull v. State, 80 Ga. 704, 6 S. E. 178: "A father who within this state willfully and voluntarily abandons his child, * * * and persists in the abandonment afterwards, leaving it in a dependent condition, * * * is guilty." And in the Bull Case, supra, Judge Bleckley uses this language: "That a father begins to abandon his child some months before it is born will not excuse him for persisting in the abandonment and failing to furnish it with the necessities of life." From this language we think it is clearly to be inferred that the Supreme Court recognizes the act of abandonment as being a continuous act. There is in the Gay Case no reference to the Bull Case, and no overruling of the doctrine which clearly runs through it. In the Brown Case, supra, it appears that the trial court not only refused to charge that the defendant would not be guilty unless he left his children in a dependent and destitute condition at the time of the abandonment, but that, instead thereof, the court instructed the jury that "if the defendant willfully and voluntarily abandoned his children, and after said abandonment the children became in a dependent and destitute condition, and the defendant continued to willfully and voluntarily abandon said children, and refused to support them, he would be guilty," and this charge was approved by the Supreme Court. In reference to the exceptions to the charge above quoted. Justice Lamar held: "The charge of the court was correct."

*For other cases see same topic and section NUMBER in Dec. Dig. & Am. Dig. Key No. Series & Rep'r Indexes

To our minds it is perfectly clear that abandonment, as a criminal offense, includes two essentials: The voluntary separation of the father from his child (whether he leaves the child or sends it away), and failure to provide for it the support which the law obligates him to give. A father who leaves his children in a dependent condition, though it be for several years, but who, for the period of two years prior to an accusation being preferred against him, cares for their needs, may plead the bar of the statute of limitations; but an absent father, who for two whole years prior to the accusation for abandonment leaves his offspring dependent and in want, so that this condition exists at the very time that the accusation is being proffered, cannot, in our judgment, successfully interpose to the prosecution the bar of the statute, or otherwise defend himself.

Judgment affirmed.

POWELL, J. (specially concurring). There is a strong appearance of validity in the argument that the case of Gay v. State, 105 Ga. 599, 31 S. E. 569, 70 Am. St. Rep. 68, is controlling here; but I am not so sure that that case and this one are not distinguishable as to be willing to dissent. The opinion of Judge RUSSELL certainly leans toward giving the law a very salutary interpretation, and I think that, wherever a doubt exists as to the meaning of a law, the judge should strive to give it that construction which makes it most effective. The offense of abandonment created by our statute consists of two elements: The desertion, an act of the father; and dependence, a condition of the child. The two must concur before there is any crime. The Gay Case holds that as to the first element (desertion) the act is not a continuous one, and that when a person is once convicted he cannot be tried again until this element occurs again, and that it cannot occur again until the father goes back to his family and leaves anew. The other element, the condition on which the desertion must operate, the state of the child's dependency, is a thing continuous in its nature. If this alone constituted the offense, it would not be barred, so long as it continued to exist. Coker v. State, 115 Ga. 210, 41 S. E. 634. Since the offense now before us consists of these two diverse elements, the position taken in the opinion in chief—that while a conviction will bar future prosecutions till the element of desertion occurs anew, the statute of limitations does not bar the offense, because one of its elements, the condition of the child, remains continuous—strikes me with such force that I am not willing to dissent from it.

(10 Ga. App. 11)

AVERY & CO. v. T. I. THOMASON & SON.
(No. 3,242.)

(Court of Appeals of Georgia. Nov. 7, 1911.)

(Syllabus by the Court.)

APPEAL AND ERROR (§ 1151*)—AFFIRMANCE—CORRECTION OF ERROR.

The errors assigned as to rulings upon the trial and as to charges of the court are not well taken. There is sufficient evidence to support the verdict, subject only to a small error in calculation, which may be cured by direction given in connection with the judgment of this court.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Appeal and Error, Cent. Dig. §§ 4498-4506; Dec. Dig. § 1151.*]

Error from City Court of Bainbridge; J. G. Cranford, Judge.

Action by Avery & Co. against T. I. Thomason & Son. Judgment for plaintiffs for less than the amount claimed, and they bring error. Affirmed, with direction.

J. C. Hale, for plaintiffs in error. R. G. Hartsfield, for defendants in error.

POWELL, J. According to the allegations of the defendants' plea, they owed the plaintiffs only $4.66, and for that sum the jury rendered their verdict—the verdict being plainly intended as a finding upon this plea. There are a number of assignments of error in the record, relating to rulings of the court upon the evidence and to instructions to the jury; but no material error in this respect appears. It does appear, however, that the calculation by which the amount of $4.66 was arrived at is incorrect. The plea shows this on its face. The amount really left due upon the note was $10.68, and for this sum a verdict against the defendants was demanded. The whole question involved in the trial was where a certain credit of $300 should have been placed, and, after placing this credit as claimed by the defendants, there was still left due on the note $10.68. Ordinarily this court has no power by direction to increase the size of a verdict; but inasmuch as, under the pleadings, a verdict of $10.68 could have been directed (since, when the defendants' plea is properly construed, it admits a liability of that amount), and as the verdict has properly settled the only issue in the case, we do give direction that the trial judge modify the judgment in the lower court, so as to allow the plaintiffs a recovery of $7.36 principal, $2.35 interest to judgment, and 97 cents attorney's fees, with interest thereon from the date of the trial.

*For other cases see same topic and section NUMBER in Dec. Dig. & Am. Dig. Key No. Series & Rep'r Indexes

Judgment affirmed, with direction.

(10 Ga. App. 77)

MATHIS v. STATE. (No. 3,693.)

(Court of Appeals of Georgia. Nov. 7, 1911.)

(Syllabus by the Court.)

CRIMINAL LAW (§ 552*)—EVIDENCE—WEIGHT AND SUFFICIENCY.

The circumstances relied upon to support the verdict, weighed most strongly against the accused, are not incriminatory in character, and are only sufficient to raise a suspicion of guilt; and suspicion alone, however strong and apparently well founded, has no probative value as evidence, and a verdict based thereon, without more, is contrary to law.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Criminal Law, Cent. Dig. §§ 1267, 1259-1262; Dec. Dig. § 552.*]

Error from Superior Court, Floyd County; J. W. Maddox, Judge.

Eli, alias Kid, Mathis was convicted of crime, and brings error. Reversed.

Sharp & Sharp, for plaintiff in error. John W. Bale, Sol. Gen., for the State.

HILL, C. J. Judgment reversed.

(10 Ga. App. 78)

WOOTEN v. STATE. (No. 3,701.)

(Court of Appeals of Georgia. Nov. 7, 1911.)

(Syllabus by the Court.)

CRIMINAL LAW (§ 1159*)—APPEAL—REVIEW—QUESTIONS OF FACT.

The exceptions to the charge of the court are not well taken. Under the state's testimony, the homicide was strongly mitigated, but not entirely justifiable; under the defendant's statement, it was justifiable. The jury took the state's theory of the transaction, and convicted the accused of the offense of voluntary manslaughter. There being some evidence to support the verdict, this court has no power to set it aside.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Criminal Law, Cent. Dig. §§ 3074-3083; Dec. Dig. § 1159.*]

Error from Superior Court, Rabun County; J. B. Jones, Judge.

Martha Wooten was convicted of voluntary manslaughter, and brings error. Affirmed.

T. L. Bynum, R. E. A. Hamby, and W. S. Paris, for plaintiff in error. Robt. McMillan, Sol. Gen., for the State.

POWELL, J. Judgment affirmed.

(10 Ga. App. 12)

HUNNICUTT v. GRAVES. (No. 3,297.)

(Court of Appeals of Georgia. Nov. 7, 1911.)

(Syllabus by the Court.)

1. FORMER DECISION CONTROLLING.

The law applicable to the issues made by the evidence in this case was fully stated in the opinion of this court when the case was here before. Graves v. Hunnicutt, 8 Ga. App. 99, 68 S. E. 558.

2. APPEAL AND ERROR (§ 1099*)—REVIEW—SUCCESSIVE WRITS OF ERROR.

Where a case has been before this court on assignment of error to a judgment awarding a nonsuit, and the judgment has been reversed because in the opinion of the court there was some evidence which, under the law, would have authorized a verdict for the plaintiff, and on the second trial the evidence for the plaintiff is substantially the same as it was on the first trial, and the evidence in behalf of the defendant goes only to the extent of raising a conflict on issues of fact, and no error of law is complained of, no question is presented for decision in this court, and the verdict for the plaintiff will not be disturbed.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Appeal and Error, Cent. Dig. §§ 4370-4379; Dec. Dig. § 1099.*]

Error from City Court of Atlanta; H. M. Reld, Judge.

Action by A. Graves against C. W. Hunnicutt. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendant brings error. Affirmed.

C. L. Pettigrew, for plaintiff in error. Burton Cloud and Geo. Gordon, for defendant in error.

HILL, C. J. Judgment affirmed.

(10 Ga. App. 34)

COLLINS v. STATE. (No. 3,443.)

(Court of Appeals of Georgia. Nov. 7, 1911.)

(Syllabus by the Court.)

1. CRIMINAL LAW (§ 1035*)—SEQUESTRATION OF WITNESSES—WAIVER—OBJECTIONS.

At the beginning of the trial the defendant, through his attorney, invoked the rule as to the sequestration of the witnesses. The prosecutor remained in the courtroom while another witness for the state was being examined. The defendant complains this was error requiring a new trial; that the prosecutor should have been examined first, or should have been required to leave the room during the examination of the other witness. The trial judge certifies that he did not know the prosecutor was in the room during the examination of the witness; that neither the defendant nor his attorney made any objection thereto at the time. Held, a new trial will not be granted. The failure of the defendant and his attorney to call the attention of the court to the presence of the prosecutor, or to request that he be examined first, constitutes a waiver of his right to a strict sequestration.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Criminal Law, Dec. Dig. § 1035.*]

2. CRIMINAL LAW (§ 828*)—INSTRUCTIONS—WRITTEN REQUESTS.

The defendant claimed he acted in self-defense. The law relating thereto was properly given in charge to the jury. If the defendant desired more detailed instructions as to his contentions, he should have made written requests therefor.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Criminal Law, Cent. Dig. § 2007; Dec. Dig. § 828.*]

Error from City Court of Sandersville; E. W. Jordan, Judge.

Zeddie Collins was convicted of crime, and brings error. Affirmed.

Evans & Evans, for plaintiff in error. J. E. Hyman, Sol., for the State.

RUSSELL, J. Judgment affirmed.

(10 Ga. App. 36)

SMITH v. STATE. (No. 3,468.)

(Court of Appeals of Georgia. Nov. 7, 1911.)

(Syllabus by the Court.)

ARREST (§ 63*)—CRIMINAL LAW (§ 368*)—AUTHORITY TO ARREST WITHOUT WARRANT—ASSAULT—EVIDENCE.

The record discloses no reversible error.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Arrest, Dec. Dig. § 63.* Criminal Law, Cent. Dig. §§ 806, 812, 815, 821; Dec. Dig. § 368.*]

Error from Superior Court, Dougherty County; Frank Park, Judge.

Griggs Smith was convicted of assault and battery, and brings error. Affirmed.

The defendant was convicted of assault and battery. It appears from the evidence that he and his son were making a disturbance on the streets of Albany by cursing one another, that easily within hearing were some females, that one or two citizens had caught hold of the defendant's son, and that a crowd had assembled. A policeman arrived, and the defendant was pointed out to him as being the one who was "raising Cain"; and before the policeman had said a word the defendant hit him with a flint rock weighing 5 or 6 pounds. The rock was thrown a distance of about 4 feet, and struck the policeman in the forehead, making a gash about 2½ inches long all the way to the skull. The policeman did not have a warrant for the defendant.

R. J. Bacon and Ben T. Burson, for plaintiff in error. W. E. Wooten, Sol. Gen., and F. A. Hooper, for the State.

RUSSELL, J. (after stating the facts as above). 1. Complaint is made of the admission of the following evidence: One of the bystanders, as a witness for the state, was asked: "When Mr. Perry [the policeman] got there, what was going on? What was the defendant doing, and what trouble, if any, in which he was connected, was in progress?" The witness answered: "Him and his son was cursing one another." The defendant objected to this evidence because the policeman had previously testified that at the time of his arrival the defendant was standing by his wagon, and was doing nothing illegal, so far as he saw; and therefore it is contended, there being no disturbance so far as the policeman saw, it was immaterial what the defendant was doing. We are of the opinion that, if the defendant was creating a breach of the peace in the policeman's physical presence, he would have a right to make the arrest without a warrant, whether he heard the cursing or not. The crime was being committed in his presence, whether he knew the full extent of it or not. Ramsey v. State, 92 Ga. 53, 17 S. E. 613; Porter v. State, 124 Ga. 297, 52 S. E. 283, 2 L. R. A. (N. S.) 730; Jenkins v. State, 3 Ga. App. 146, 59 S. E. 435.

2. Exception is taken to the admission of evidence as to what was said by the defendant and a bystander just as the rock was being hurled. We think this evidence was admissible as a part of the res gestæ.

3. It appears that after the defendant threw the rock he ran, pursued by the policeman, who fired several shots, and finally succeeded in arresting the defendant. It is claimed that the defendant was justified in resisting the arrest, which it is claimed was illegal, and the evidence shows he used no more force than was necessary; subsequent events showing that the force he used was not even sufficient to prevent the arrest. What happened to the defendant after he had committed a second crime cannot be set up as justification for resisting an illegal arrest for the first one. The jury was authorized to infer both that the arrest was legal and that, even if illegal, the defendant used no more force than was his legal right under the circumstances.

Judgment affirmed.

(10 Ga. App. 1)

YATESVILLE BANKING CO. v. FOURTH NAT. BANK. (No. 3,147.)

(Court of Appeals of Georgia. Nov. 7, 1911.)

*(Syllabus by the Court.)1. BILLS AND NOTES (§ 434*)—PAYMENT—FORGED INDORSEMENT—RECOVERY OF MONEY PAID.

Where the drawee of a negotiable instrument pays it to a person holding it through and under a forged indorsement of the payee's name, he may (subject to certain limitations) recover back from the person receiving the money on the paper the sum so paid, either in an action in the nature of an action of money had and received, or in an action upon the warranty implied from the presentation of the instrument that the indorsements thereon are genuine, or in an action upon an express warranty that the indorsements are genuine, if such an express warranty has been made.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Bills and Notes, Cent. Dig. §§ 1268-1274; Dec. Dig. § 434.*]

2. BILLS AND NOTES (§ 434*)—RIGHTS OF PARTIES—RECOVERY OF MONEY PAID.

If the person presenting and receiving payment on a negotiable instrument bearing the forged indorsement of the payee is himself innocent of the forgery, it is incumbent on the person who has so paid to give to the person to whom the payment has been made notice of the forgery within a reasonable time after discovering it. If he fails in this duty, the person so paid may, when sued for reimbursement by the person who has done the paying, set up, as a defense to the action, any loss that has been occasioned to him by reason of the failure to give timely and reasonable notice. However, as lack of notice, followed by loss, is an affirmative defense, it is not necessary for the plaintiff to negative it in his petition.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Bills and Notes, Cent. Dig. §§ 1268-1274; Dec. Dig. § 434.*]

3. BILLS AND NOTES (§ 434*)—RIGHTS OF PARTIES—RECOVERY OF MONEY PAID.

The person paying a negotiable instrument upon the express warranty of the person presenting it that all prior indorsements are genuine (the warranty being written on the instrument itself) may recover from his warrantor, if it turns out that the indorsement of the payee is forged, without showing that he has returned or tendered the instrument to him, notwithstanding some of the signatures on it may be genuine, and the instrument may not be worthless from a commercial standpoint. The person who has thus paid out the money on the instrument bearing the forged indorsement and the warranty may hold it as evidence until reimbursement has been made or tendered.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Bills and Notes, Dec. Dig. § 434.*]

4. PLEADING (§ 35*)—SURPLUSAGE—REPRESENTATIVE CHARACTER OF PARTY.

"The mere fact that a plaintiff in his pleadings declares his intention of suing for the use of a third person does not raise any question as to the liability, either of the plaintiff or of the defendant, to such third person. The words declaring an intention to use the recovery for the benefit of another are, as to the defendant, harmless surplusage. He is not concerned in what disposition is to be made of the recovery."

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Pleading, Cent. Dig. §§ 76-80; Dec. Dig. § 35.*]

Error from City Court of Atlanta; H. M. Reid, Judge.

Action by the Yatesville Banking Company, for use, etc., against the Fourth National Bank. Judgment for defendant, and plaintiff brings error. Reversed.

The Yatesville Banking Company brought suit against the Fourth National Bank, and laid two counts in the petition. The substance of these counts may be stated thus: In the first count it is alleged that the plaintiff sues for the use of McNeice and certain other persons, whose names are set out, and that the defendant is liable to the plaintiff in the sum of $3,612, because, on July 7, 1907, the plaintiff issued a certain cashier's check for that sum of money, payable to North Penn Iron Company. That on or about July 10, 1907, the defendant notified the plaintiff that it (defendant) had paid this cashier's check upon the order of the payee, and it was held as a demand against the plaintiff. That upon receipt of this notification the plaintiff paid to the defendant the sum of money above named, and received from the defendant the cashier's check, when, as a matter of fact, the defendant had not paid, and never has paid, the amount of the check to the payee or his order, the indorsement of the name of the payee being a forgery; also that the useses named "have jointly paid unto the petitioner the sum of three thousand six hundred twelve dollars ($3,612) to indemnify petitioner for the sum aforesaid paid defendant." That plaintiff has demanded of defendant the sum sued for, and payment thereof has been thereupon refused. In the second count it is alleged that the plaintiff sues for the use of the same persons. That the check was issued, the indorsement of the payee forged, and payment of it with this forged indorsement was requested by the defendant. That the plaintiff paid to the defendant the amount of $3,612, receiving from the defendant therefor the original check, together with the defendant's guaranty in the following words: "Pay to the order of any bank or banker. Prior endorsement guaranteed. Fourth National Bank of Atlanta, July 13, 1907. Chas. I. Ryan, Cashier." That, being induced by this guaranty and relying upon the same, the plaintiff paid the amount of the cashier's check to the defendant. That the guaranty has failed, and that the plaintiff has lost the sum of $3,612 thereby. That "the useses have jointly paid unto petitioner the three thousand six hundred twelve dollars ($3,612), to indemnify petitioner for said loss." A copy of the check is set forth as an exhibit, and it appears that in addition to the indorsement, "North Penn Iron Co.," there are two other indorsements prior to the indorsement of the Fourth National Bank—those of John A. Stewart and Stewart & Davis. The defendant filed a general demurrer, which the court sustained; and to this judgment the plaintiff excepts.

Scott & Davis, for plaintiff in error. Roosen & Brandon, for defendant in error.

POWELL, J. (after stating the facts as above). The demurrer was general, but the defendant in error alleges the following grounds why it should have been sustained: (1) That it is not alleged that reasonable notice of the forgery was given to the plaintiff, and that reasonable demand for the return of the money was not made; (2) that the cashier's check turned over to the plaintiff was not returned or tendered to the defendant before the suit was brought; (3) that it appears that the money paid out by the Yatesville Banking Company was repaid by the uses named in the action, before this suit was brought, and that the voluntary payment by the uses furnishes no right of recovery for this use.

Certain propositions are undisputed: (1) That the cashier's check stands as if it were a negotiable promissory note of the bank by which it was issued; (2) that the issuing bank stands thereto in the dual relation of drawer and drawee.

[1] It is also conceded (3) that ordinarily the bank issuing the cashier's check, and having paid it upon forged indorsement, would not be held chargeable with any notice that the indorsement was a forgery, and that ordinarily it could recover, from one to whom it had paid the money on the faith of the forged indorsement, the amount which it had thus improperly paid out on the check. The case before us, therefore, narrows to a decision upon the special points already mentioned.

[2] 2. As to the first point really in issue: The law is that, where a person has paid a negotiable paper to another on a forged indorsement, and the latter is innocent of the forgery, it is incumbent upon the person so paying to give notice of the forgery to the other person within a reasonable time after discovery of the fact; and he may lose his right of action for failure to give the notice, provided that his laches in this respect has subjected the other to loss. What is reasonable notice in such a case is generally a question for the jury.

After stating a somewhat contrary doctrine, asserted by some of the courts, Daniel, in his work on Negotiable Instruments (5th Ed.) § 1372, says: "But there is high authority for the more liberal, and, we think, wiser and juster doctrine that the demand for restitution may be made within a reasonable time after the forgery is discovered, and that the mere space of time is not important, provided it be clearly shown that the holder will be put to no more liability, trouble, or expense by a restoration than than if it has been called for on the day of payment. Nor does the circumstance that there are genuine indorsers prior to the holder, but subsequent to the forged name, seem to us to alter the case. Their indorsement of the instrument being a warranty of its genuineness, they would not be entitled to notice, as it was not genuine in all respects; and, besides the right to sue them as indorsers, the holder, on being compelled to refund the money, could recover back the amount paid by him to his predecessor, and so on, until the instrument rested where the loss should fall."

We have no doubt that this states the correct doctrine. The defendant in such a case, having received from the plaintiff to his use and benefit money to which he is not entitled, would primarily be subject to an action at law (generally to an action in the nature of an action for money had and received), to be brought at any time within the statute of limitations, but commercial usage, as well as a principle of natural justice, would require the person who had thus paid out the money not to remain quiescent when, by so doing, he would deprive the other person who, too, had been an innocent victim of the forgery of any reasonable means by which he might recoup his loss; and a failure to exercise reasonable diligence in giving this notice ought to and will deprive him of the right to maintain his action, if because of his failure in this respect the loss does ensue. But two things (both failure to give the notice and loss on the part of the other person, occasioned thereby) should concur before this right of action, arising as it does ex æquo et bono, should be lost to the person who has been caused to pay the money improperly.

The duty to give the notice does not arise until the forgery has been discovered, and may be exercised then, or within a reasonable time thereafter. It does not appear from the petition in this case when the plaintiff discovered the forgery, nor when the demand for repayment was made upon the defendant, though it is alleged in general terms that it was demanded, or, as it is stated in one of the counts, was "formally" demanded. The petition would have been subject to special demurrer on the ground that this information was not given specifically, but the general demurrer raises no such question. Further, we are of the opinion that it is not necessary for the plaintiff in such a case to make it appear that his notice of the forgery and demand for repayment were given at such a time as that no loss to the defendant occurred from the failure, and that the petition would not be subject to general demurrer raising this question, unless the petition on its face affirmatively disclosed that loss had ensued. As Cowan, J., said, in Canal Bank v. Bank of Albany, 1 Hill (N. Y.) 291: "I am not willing to concede that delay in the abstract, as seems to be supposed, can deprive the party of his remedy to recover back money paid under the circumstances before us." It would be an affirmative defense, which the defendant might set up by way of avoidance of liability, to say that this notice came at such a time and with such lateness that he was subjected to a loss which would not have ensued if it had been given timely. Such a defense is in the nature of a plea of recoupment, in which the defendant sets off damages ensuing from the plaintiff's neglect against the damages which he caused to the plaintiff by reason of his false presenting of the paper.

[3] 3. As to the second reason asserted for the sustaining of the demurrer—that the plaintiff brought suit without first offering to return the cashier's check: The defendant in error cites two cases (Coolidge v. Brigham, 1 Metc. [Mass.] 547, and Bassett v. Brown, 105 Mass. 551). The last case cited is hardly in point, except in so far as it lays down the general doctrine that restoration is a condition precedent to rescission for fraud. The Coolidge Case is a leading case (frequently cited, but often distinguished) in support of the proposition that, where one party receives from another a paper which, though it is in some of its features a forgery, nevertheless has legal validity as against some of the parties thereto, there must be a return of the paper before there can be a rescission of the transaction in which it is involved. The point in that case is that such a paper is not one of those wholly valueless articles which need not be returned as a condition precedent to rescission. In that case the plaintiff, having taken, in payment for a bill of goods, a draft bearing a forged indorsement, but also bearing a genuine indorsement, attempted, upon discovery that his title to the instrument was infected with forgery, to bring assumpsit for the goods without returning the forged paper to the defendant from whom he obtained it. The court held that he could not maintain the action in this form; that he had no right to maintain assumpsit for the goods without rescinding the other transaction; and that that transaction could not be rescinded without the return of the paper, since the paper had some commercial value, irrespective of the fact that one of the indorsements thereon was a forgery. But the court before concluding the opinion pointed out that the defendant, by virtue of the indorsement which he had put upon the paper, had warranted that the previous indorsements were genuine, and upon this view of the case the court held that the plaintiff might sue the defendant upon this warranty without returning the paper, and allowed him to amend his declaration and to proceed accordingly. To quote the language of the court itself: "The plaintiff was at liberty to restore the note to the defendant, or to retain it and resort to his action on the warranty. * * * A new trial, therefore, will be granted, with liberty for the plaintiff to amend his declaration by counting on the warranty; he paying the defendant his costs of the former trial and of the present term."

In this case the suit was upon the warranty, not merely arising by implication, but expressly contracted for in the indorsement of the defendant upon which the plaintiff paid the money. This guaranty is essentially the cause of action set out in the second count, and, under the very authority of the chief case relied on by the defendant in error, the plaintiff had the right thus to sue without returning this paper. In the present case, there is a very plain reason why any other rule would be unjust, for upon this paper was the written evidence by which the plaintiff should support his cause of action; it was the written embodiment of the defendant's guaranty. If the defendant had offered to repay the money upon the surrender of this paper, it would have been the duty of the plaintiff to surrender it; but when the defendant refused to pay we know of no reason in law or in common sense why the plaintiff should be required to give up his evidence, even though by his retention of the paper he might deprive the defendant of that evidence which the defendant might need if he sought to hold the previous indorsers liable to him. It must be kept in mind that if the defendant had discharged its obligation, under the circumstances, of repaying the money to the plaintiff, it would have been at once the duty of the plaintiff to have put the defendant in possession of this evidence, which the defendant might need for his further protection.

[4] 4. As to the third objection—that it appears that the plaintiff has not suffered loss because the persons named as usees have repaid to it the money which it paid out to the defendant: Counsel for the defendant in error cites a number of cases which all recognize the well-established rule that a person making a voluntary payment cannot recover it; and these authorities would be more or less pertinent if these usees were suing the plaintiff and attempting to recover back the money, but just how it can affect the defendant's rights in this case we do not see. The allegation as to the acts of the usees and as to the facts that they had paid to the plaintiff an amount sufficient to indemnify it against loss is pure surplusage. The suit merely tests the right of the plaintiff to recover. The usees could not sue upon the guaranty, as they were not parties to it. "The mere fact that a plaintiff in his pleadings declares his intention of suing for the use of a third person does not raise any question as to the liability, either of the plaintiff or of the defendant, to such third person. The words declaring an intention to use the recovery for the benefit of another are, as to the defendant, harmless surplusage. He is not concerned in what disposition is to be made of the recovery." Norcross Mfg. Co. v. Summerour, 114 Ga. 156, 39 S. E. 870 (3). Just what would have effect on the plaintiff's cause of action if these usees had unconditionally paid it the loss which the defendants act had occasioned, it is unnecessary for us to say; for it is not so asserted in the petition. It is merely alleged that these usees have paid over the amount of money represented by the check to the plaintiff's bank to be held to indemnify it against loss. Why they paid it, or what connection they had with the transaction, is not disclosed. They may have been insurers; they may have been stockholders subjected to liability, or directors held for neglect in the matter, or what not; the record is silent, and we cannot say. All we are called upon to say is that the petition does not disclose enough to show that they have deprived the plaintiff of his cause of action, so as to subject the petition to general demurrer.

In this connection, it is perhaps proper to notice as a part of the general discussion of this question that, if the usees, from whatever motive, bought up the plaintiff's right of action and failed to secure such an assignment thereof as would be enforceable in a court of law, the proper method to bring the suit would be for the present plaintiff to sue for the use of the usees, naming them, since their right of action in such a case could not otherwise be asserted in a court of law in this state. Under the practice here, where a transaction is such as to confer upon a party merely an equitable title to a chose in action, he cannot sue thereon in his own name, but must sue in the name of the party in whom the right of action rests, and his own name may or may not be used as usee, accordingly as the plaintiff may elect.

After carefully considering the whole case, we have come to the conclusion that the general demurrer should not have been sustained. The defendant may have open to it one or more of the defenses which it has attempted to assert under the demurrer, but these should be set up by plea or answer, and demurrer is inadequate to raise them.

Judgment reversed.

(10 Ga. App. 85)

WALKER v. STATE. (No. 3,730.)

(Court of Appeals of Georgia. Nov. 7, 1911.)

(Syllabus by the Court.)

1. SUFFICIENCY OF EVIDENCE.

The evidence authorizes the conviction.

2. INSTRUCTIONS.

The charges complained of were not erroneous.

3. CRIMINAL LAW (§ 804*)—TRIAL—ORAL INSTRUCTIONS—"CHARGE."

Under Penal Code 1910, § 1056, where the judge is requested to put his "charge" in writing, he violates the statute, and a new trial must be granted, if he gives to the jury any instruction, not in writing, as to how they shall consider the case to be submitted to them, or how they shall make a verdict.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Criminal Law, Cent. Dig. §§ 1948-1957; Dec. Dig. § 804.]

For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, vol. 2, pp. 1064-1072; vol. 8, pp. 7599, 7600.]

Error from Superior Court, Jasper County; J. B. Park, Judge.

Tom Walker was convicted of crime, and brings error. Reversed.

Doyle Campbell, for plaintiff in error. Jos. E. Pottle, Sol. Gen., for the State.

POWELL, J. [3] Only the proposition stated in the third paragraph of the syllabus seems to require elaboration. Section 1056 of the Penal Code of 1910 is as follows: "The judges of the superior, city, and county courts shall, when the counsel for either party requests it before argument begins, write out their charges and read them to the jury, and it shall be error to give any other or additional charge than that so written and read." The judge in the present case was duly requested to put his charge in writing, and did so. Before beginning to read from his charge, he addressed the jury, telling them in substance that he was about to read them the charge, and that as he read it to them they should bear in mind that it was not intended as expressing or intimating any opinion of the facts of the case. This statement was omitted from the written charge.

"The words 'charges' and 'charge' in [the section quoted] of the Code embrace any and all final instructions addressed by the court to the jury for the purpose of governing their action in making or aiding to make a final disposition of the case in favor of one litigant or the other." Harris & Mitchell v. McArthur, 90 Ga. 216, 15 S. E. 758. In Black's Law Dictionary the word "charge," as related to the common-law practice, is defined as follows: "The final address made by a judge to a jury trying a case, before they make up their verdict, in which he sums up the case and instructs the jury as to the rules of law which apply to its various issues, and which they must observe in deciding upon their verdict, when they shall have determined the controverted matters of fact." The term "charge" is not generally considered as embracing such rulings or directions as the court may give prior to the beginning of his final address to the jury. See Millard v. Lyons, 25 Wis. 516. The Georgia statute has by the courts of this state been construed a little more strictly against the judge than similar statutes in other states have been construed by their courts. In the Harris Case, just cited, our court held that the statute prevented the judge from directing a verdict otherwise than by a written direction,' while Grant v. Connecticut Mutual Ins. Co., 29 Wis. 125, holds to the contrary. Cf. Burns v. State, 89 Ga. 527, 15 S. E. 748, holding that a mere oral direction to the jury as to the form in which they shall write their verdict was violative of the statute, with Bush v. State (Tex. Cr. App.) 70 S. W. 550, holding that the bare statement to the jury of the penalty authorized by the statute was not a charge within the meaning of a similar law prevailing in that state.

*For other cases see same topic and section NUMBER in Dec. Dig. & Am. Dig. Key No. Series & Rep'r Indexes

Still, with all this strictness with which this statute has been construed in Georgia, there are, of reason and necessity, certain directions which the court may give to a jury which do not fall within any fair definition of the word "charge." For example, suppose the evidence in a case to be over and the arguments of counsel concluded at a late hour in the day. The judge decides not to charge the jury until after supper. He turns to them and orally informs them of this purpose, and instructs them not to enter upon a consideration of the case until they shall have received his charge, and commends to them those other observances which are ordinarily commended to the jury by the judge when they are being detained not in the presence of the court. Certainly such a direction as this would not be considered as a part of the charge of the court, within the purview of our statute. Likewise, if the judge, having committed his charge to writing and being about to read it to the jury, should, prefatory to the reading of it, ask the jury to give him their careful attention. A number of similar directions can be conceived of which would in no fair sense be considered as a part of the charge, and which would not be violative of the letter or the spirit of the law, though orally given. On the other hand, it is equally easy to conceive of instructions or directions that the court might give to the jury, though not formally or explicitly given as a part of the final charge, which would be within at least the spirit, if not the letter, of the Code section. For instance, say that the judge in the supposed case taken above, where the judge is about to adjourn in the late afternoon for the purpose of delivering his charge after supper, should, before taking the recess, say to the jury, if the case were a prosecution for homicide, something like this: "This is an important case, one that is a little unusual, in that the testimony does not present the usual issues made in a murder case, but presents only one issue, murder or nothing, and in order that I may have time the more accurately to prepare instructions on this subject, we will now take a recess," etc. It will be seen that what is apparently a mere direction on the part of the court is in fact a substantial instruction upon the issue that will be later submitted to them, and in such a case we have no doubt that the judge violates the statute.

The direction complained of in the present instance was not strictly a part of the charge of the court, but was a direction given preliminary and prefatory to his reading the charge to them; but it was an instruction of final nature, an address by the court to the jury for the purpose of governing their action in making or aiding to make a final disposition of the case. It was equivalent to an instruction that the jurors were judges of the facts, that the court had no inclination or intention of encroaching upon their province in this respect, and that nothing in the language about to be said should be so construed. We cannot escape the conclusion that the law was violated. The statute itself, it will be noted, specifically and expressly states that "it shall be error to give any other or additional charge than that so written and read." If it were an open question, we would not hesitate to hold that this statute is not so mandatory in its terms as to prevent an application of the doctrine of harmless error; but an examination of the cases—cases absolutely controlling on this court—will disclose that we are not at liberty to take this view of the matter. Indeed, when we recall that the very object of the Legislature's passing the statute was to cut out the possibility of those unseemly controversies between court and counsel as to what the court in fact did say to the jury, there is good reason for saying that the legislative object cannot be accomplished, unless a new trial is granted for every nonobservance of the statute. There is no consistency in our requiring other men to obey the letter and the spirit of the law, irrespective of their personal views as to its wisdom, if we are not willing to follow our precepts by our example under like conditions. The law commands us to grant a new trial, and for this reason alone we obey.

Judgment reversed.

(10 Ga. App. 82)

LANGSTON v. STATE (No. 3,726.)
(Court of Appeals of Georgia. Nov. 7, 1911.)

(Syllabus by the Court.)

HOMICIDE (§ 255*)—VOLUNTARY MANSLAUGHTER—EVIDENCE.

No error of law appears, and the verdict is supported by some evidence.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Homicide, Cent. Dig. §§ 539-541; Dec. Dig. § 255.*]

Error from Superior Court, Cherokee County; N. A. Morris, Judge.

Will Langston was convicted of voluntary manslaughter, and brings error. Affirmed.

Howell Brooke and Gober & Griffin, for plaintiff in error. J. P. Brooke, Sol. Gen., for the State.

HILL, C. J. The facts of this case present another of the daily occurring instances showing the monstrous and measureless evil of intoxicating liquors. This hydra-headed and remorseless monster, with ceaseless and tireless energy, wastes the substance of the poor, manufactures burdensome taxes for the public, monopolizes the valuable time of the courts, fills jails, penitentiaries, and asylums, ruins homes, destroys manhood, terrorizes helpless women and innocent children, baffles the church, and mocks the law, and, answering its inexorable demands, "each new morn new widows mourn, new orphans cry, new wrongs strike Heaven in the face." These are the products of a curse imposed, not by the decree of God, but self-inflicted by the voluntary conduct of man, its weak and wicked victim. Judges of criminal courts, speaking from official experience, have grown weary in calling attention to the drink habit as the principal cause of crime, and nothing that the writer could say would add to this manifest truth. But I cannot refrain from saying that, after five years' observation of the cases that have been before this court, three-fourths of the crimes are due directly or indirectly to the excessive use of intoxicants, and that, if the church and the state and public sentiment could unitedly make Georgia sober, the prisons would be vacant, the chain gangs empty, and cities, towns, and country would be filled with prosperous people and happy homes. The grand English premier did not exaggerate when he declared that "greater calamities have been inflicted on mankind by intemperance than by the three great historic scourges, war, pestilence, and famine," and that this evil was "the measure of a nation's discredit and disgrace."

We have been led to say this much because of the sad tragedy disclosed by the horrible facts of this record. A husband, "beastly drunk," goes to his home at night, finds his sick wife in bed, and with brutal curses and violent threats to kill drives her into the night and from home. The accused, their 19 year old son, resents this cruel treatment of his mother, and reproaches his father for his brutal language and cruel conduct. The father, frenzied with liquor, immediately turns on his son, curses him, knocks him down with a chair, cuts him with a knife, and threatens to kill him. The son (as he contended, in self-defense, but, as found by the jury, under the excitement of passion aroused by these attacks) picks up a rock from the floor, where it was placed to prop open the door, hurls it at his father, hits him on the head, and from the wound thus inflicted death ensues on the following day.

A careful review of the evidence convinces us that it largely preponderates in favor of the plea of self-defense. Yet we cannot say that the verdict of voluntary manslaughter is not supported by some slight evidence, and to this standard of mental conviction we must come before we would be authorized to set aside the verdict on the general grounds. The evidence in support of the verdict is that the son, angered by his father's conduct, "cursed him back," did not decline the struggle and leave the house, and, according to one witness, threw the rock after he had been knocked down and cut, and when his father, although continuing to curse him and threatening to take his life, was not actually advancing upon him and manifesting a present intention to carry out his threats; in other words, that it was a case of mutual combat, and the accused threw the fatal stone with David-like precision and force, angered and provoked by the previous attacks, when there was no actual or apparent necessity for him to have done so in self-defense.

We do not hesitate to state that if it were our province, or we had the right to weigh the evidence and decide the issue of fact, we would grant another trial, because the evidence in favor of the plea of self-defense is so strong, and that in support of voluntary manslaughter, or any other offense, is so weak. Entertaining this opinion of the evidence, we have most carefully examined the assignments, to find, if we could, any material legal error. We have failed in our search. The assignments of error of law consist of objections to several excerpts from the charge. Separately considered, these excerpts contain no material error, and raise no novel, doubtful, or interesting question of law. When they are examined in connection with the entire charge, we are forced to the conviction that the law was fully, fairly, and correctly presented on every issue made by the evidence.

The attending physician testified that shortly before his death the decedent had several convulsions, and he "apprehended" that death would soon follow. This opinion, especially the apprehension of the physician, was admitted in evidence over the objection of the accused. We think the evidence was competent; but, even if not, its admission was harmless error. The decedent did shortly die, and, according to the opinion of the physician, his death was caused by the wound on the head inflicted by the accused.

The evidence showed that the decedent was a man of great violence when under the influence of liquor, and that he was much larger and stronger than the accused. It is contended by learned counsel that the trial judge, without request, should have instructed the jury "as to the law touching the violent character of the deceased and the great disparity in his size and that of the accused." We have no clear opinion or exact knowledge as to what would be the law on this subject that the judge was called upon to charge.

and we have received no assistance from learned counsel on this point. We are therefore inclined to think that the jury, especially where a mutual combat or struggle was shown, could be safely relied upon to deal with these questions without the aid of any rule of law. The violent character of one party, and the relative strength and size of two parties engaged in a mutual combat, or where an assault and struggle took place, so forcibly and necessarily illustrate the issue of guilt or innocence that he would be a profoundly stupid juror who would not give these questions full weight and significance, even without any suggestion from the court as to his right to do so.

We repeat that we affirm the judgment because we find no legal error in the trial, and there is some slight evidence to support the verdict. We doubt not that the learned trial judge, if he has not already imposed a merciful sentence, will do so, and will humanely temper justice with a large and generous clemency.

Judgment affirmed.

(10 Ga. App. 61)

MORSE v. STATE. (No. 3,640.)

(Court of Appeals of Georgia. Nov. 7, 1911.)

(Syllabus by the Court.)

1. CRIMINAL LAW (§ 805*)—INSTRUCTIONS—USE OF TECHNICAL TERMS.

It is not error for the judge to charge the jury that "evidence may be autoptic preference," when the meaning of the technical words is clearly made known to the jury in plain, understandable language.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Criminal Law, Dec. Dig. § 805.*]

2. CRIMINAL LAW (§ 762*)—INSTRUCTIONS—EXPRESSION OF OPINION.

Whether a judge, by language used in his charge to the jury, violates the provisions of the Code, by intimating or expressing an opinion as to what has been proved, will be determined in the light of the entire context; and, though it appears that the language, standing alone, might convey an intimation of the judge's opinion on one of the facts of the case, still if, from an examination of the entire context, it appears that the language was in fact hypothetical, no infraction of the statutory limitation upon the judge's power will be declared, unless, indeed, the very ambiguity of the language is such as naturally to leave upon the minds of the jury the impression that the judge was in fact intimating or expressing an opinion upon some issuable phase of the case.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Criminal Law, Cent. Dig. §§ 1731, 1750, 1754-1769; Dec. Dig. § 762.*]

3. INTOXICATING LIQUORS (§ 239*)—ILLEGAL SALE—INSTRUCTIONS—INSPECTION OF LIQUOR SOLD.

Where, in a case involving the question as to whether a certain liquid is an intoxicating liquor, the state introduces in evidence the liquor itself, it is proper for the court to instruct the jury that they may make personal inspection of the liquid, may apply their own senses to it, may look at it, smell of it, taste of it, and thereby determine whether it is or is not an intoxicating liquor, subject to the limitation that they must not drink such a quantity as that, if it were intoxicating liquor, it would make them drunk.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Intoxicating Liquors, Dec. Dig. § 239.*]

4. CRIMINAL LAW (§ 878*)—EVIDENCE—SEPARATE COUNTS.

A general verdict of guilty, upon an indictment containing two counts charging different offenses, which are in fact, as well as in theory, separate transactions, cannot be sustained, where there is no evidence to support a prosecution upon one of the counts.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Criminal Law, Cent. Dig. §§ 2098-2101; Dec. Dig. § 878.*]

(Additional Syllabus by Editorial Staff.)

5. WORDS AND PHRASES—"AUTOPTIC PREFERENCE."

The expression "autoptic preference" means "real evidence," or "demonstrative evidence"; the word "autoptic" being a good word, with pride of ancestry, though without hope of posterity, but the word "preference" is a glossological illegitimate, a neological love-child, of which a great law writer confesses himself to be the father.

Error from Superior Court, Bibb County; W. H. Felton, Judge.

John Morse was convicted of violation of a prohibitory law, and brings error. Reversed.

Jesse Harris, C. A. Glawson, and John P. Ross, for plaintiff in error. W. J. Grace, Sol. Gen., for the State.

POWELL, J. Morse was tried on an accusation containing two counts, the first of which charged the sale of intoxicating liquors, and the other of which charged the keeping of liquors on hand at his place of business.

[1] The first assignment of error is that the court erred in charging the jury as follows: "Evidence may be autoptic preference." Error is assigned as to this charge on two grounds: (1) That the statement is abstractly incorrect; and (2) that it is misleading. Considering these points in reverse order, we may say (to borrow a Hibernicism from the private vocabulary of an ex-justice of the Supreme Court of this state) that the language excepted to is neither leading nor misleading.

[5] As to the other objection—that the language is abstractly incorrect—if incorrectness from a legal standpoint is intended, the objection may be disposed of by citing Wigmore on Evidence, § 1150 et seq. If philological incorrectness is referred to, the objection is more tenable; for, while "autoptic" is a good word, with pride of ancestry, though perhaps without hope of posterity, the word "preference" is a glossological illegitimate, a neological love-child, of which a great law writer confesses himself to be the father (see Wigmore on Evidence, § 1150, note 1). Despite all this, we cannot brand the statement as reversible error. This court is rather liberal in allowing the judges on the trial benches the privilege of big words. Cf. G., F. & A. R. Co. v. Sasser, 4 Ga. App. 276, 61 S. E. 505, wherein we refused to reverse the judgment because a judge of a city court used the word "obvious" in his charge to the jury.

Now, lest our manner of treating this exception be regarded as a reflection upon the very able judge of the superior court whose language is under review, let us hasten to explain that the language is all right—that to quote the excerpt alone does him injustice. During the progress of the trial, certain bottles and their contents had been introduced in evidence and were given the jury for their consideration, and the necessity was upon the judge of explaining to the jurors what use they could make of this class of testimony. As to such evidence the older writers used the phrase "real evidence"; but Professor Wigmore in his wonderful treatise, has pointed out that this is not an accurate expression, and has coined a new phrase, "autoptic preference," to express it. Following Wigmore, Judge Felton used this expression, and then most clearly explained and illustrated to the jury, in plain, simple, homely language, just what the big words mean.

[2] 2. The next assignment of error is that the judge, in making this explanation and in applying it to the facts of the present case, intimated or expressed an opinion as to one of the essential elements of the case. Vast quantities of what purported to be intoxicating liquors were found in and about the defendant's place of business. Along with the other evidence, the state introduced two baskets containing half-pint bottles, some labeled "rye whiskey," some "gin," and some "peach brandy," and containing liquors resembling in color and odor the intoxicating liquor indicated by the labels on the respective bottles; also a barrel similarly filled. The defendant introduced no testimony, and made no statement in his own behalf to the jury; but he did contend, through his counsel, that the state had not proved that the contents of the bottles were in fact intoxicating liquors. The judge charged the jury that the state had introduced this physical evidence as "autoptic preference"; that the jury had the right to examine it, and, from an examination thus personally to be made by the jurors, determine whether the bottles in fact contained intoxicating liquor or not; and, in this connection, the court said to the jury: "In this case the state has presented in court that which the state claims is whiskey. You have a right to examine it, and look at it, and test it, and determine for yourselves whether or not it is whiskey. It has been offered for that purpose, and you have a right to so examine it. * * * It is brought into court in order that the jury may have an opportunity of determining, by the application of their own reason and judgment, that that which the state contends is a fact, to wit, that this evidence offered here is, in point of fact, whiskey. You have a right, and the state has given you the opportunity, to determine it. I don't mean by that that you have a right to go out there and get drunk on this. I have no reason to presume any such men would do any such act."

The specific contention is that the judge by the use of the words: "I don't mean by that that you have a right to go out there and get drunk on this. I have no reason to presume any such men would do any such act"—intimated the opinion that, if the jury drank enough of the liquor, they would get drunk, and, therefore, the opinion that the liquor was intoxicating. At first blush, the point appears to be well taken; but, when it is considered in the light of the whole context (that portion of it which has just been quoted, as well as other portions not quoted), we are not certain that the criticism is well taken. The judge was speaking from a hypothetical standpoint, and was endeavoring to convey to the minds of the jury, by a series of illustrations, what use they might make of the physical evidence before them. His statement, properly construed, was simply equivalent to his saying to the jury that wherever the state contends that a certain liquid introduced in evidence before the jury is whiskey, and the accused contends that it is not, the jury would have the right to look at it, smell of it, and taste of it, but not to put it to the test of drinking such a quantity of it as that, if it were an intoxicating liquor, it would make them drunk. Of course, one way of determining whether a liquid could intoxicate or not would be to drink a quantity of it and see whether it produced that effect, and the judge was merely explaining to the jury that this test, while perhaps a logical one, was so inconsistent with their duties as jurors that no reasonable man would probably conclude that he, while serving as a juror, would have the right to make it. If this is a correct construction to put upon the judge's language, there was no error in it. However, it will not be necessary for us to rule upon it directly and concretely, for the reason that a new trial is to be granted in the case upon another ground, and it is not at all likely that exactly the same words will be used again; and if there be any such ambiguity in the language as that it would as likely mislead the jury into thinking that the judge was expressing an opinion, it is not likely that the same words will be used again, since attention has been called to the matter.

[3] 3. One of the exceptions in the record challenges the correctness of the instruction, so far as it lays down the proposition that the jurors have the right to inspect, smell, and taste a liquid introduced in evidence before them for the purpose of determining whether or not it is intoxicating liquor. We realize that some courts of high standing have held that the jurors cannot make any such tests. Some courts say that the jurors may look at it and smell of it, but not taste of it. We believe the true rule to be that they may do all these things. We cannot see why the sense of taste or the sense of smell does not stand upon the same footing in this respect as the sense of sight. As to the determining of the nature and character of some physical things, the sense of sight may be the superior; but as to liquors it is not. With some men the sense of smell is as to liquors the most accurate; with others, the sense of taste. After more or less practical experience, a person with any fair sense of smell can determine, not only whether a liquid is or is not whisky, but also, with a very fair degree of accuracy, what kind of whisky it is, what grade of whisky it is, and what its constituent elements are; that is to say, the approximate ratio, if it be a blend, in which different kinds of liquids have entered into its preparation. It is certainly in the interest of truth—the supreme object of all legal investigation—to let the jurors, who are the final arbiters of the question, apply to its solution the most accurate sense they are capable of applying. In this connection, however, a limitation must be noticed as to liquids claimed to be intoxicating. The very nature of the juror's office and of the effects produced by intoxication make it inappropriate, and, indeed, illegal, that the jury should apply the supreme test of drinking such a quantity of the liquor as to make themselves liable to intoxication; if it, in fact, be of an intoxicating character.

In this connection, one of the present justices of the Supreme Court tells an amusing incident which occurred during his administration upon the trial bench. A case came before him for trial, involving the question as to whether certain almonds, which had been delivered upon a contract of sale, came up to sample. There were introduced in evidence two little sacks of almonds, one containing the sample and the other containing almonds taken from what had been delivered or tendered upon the contract. The judge learnedly instructed the jury as to how they should proceed with their consideration of the testimony, and instructed them upon the duty of "digesting" all the evidence and thus reaching a true verdict. They stayed out all night, and next morning came in with a verdict.

As the jury filed in and indicated their willingness to report, the judge directed the foreman to hand all the papers in the case, together with the exhibits, to the clerk. The foreman replied, "Your honor, here are all the papers, but the jurors got hungry last night and digested the exhibits." This illustrates that the jurors must not make too free a use of the real evidence before them for their consideration. It must be kept in mind, too, that there is a great difference between allowing the jurors to exercise their primary senses of sight, taste, smell, etc., upon real objects introduced before them, and allowing them to make experiments (and to drink the liquor, to see if it be intoxicating, is an experiment) with these objects during their deliberations out of the presence of the court.

There are a number of other assignments of error upon the charge of the court, but we need not discuss them in detail; for they present no new questions, and none of them are meritorious.

[4] 4. There is, however, a compelling reason why a new trial should be granted. As we have already said, the indictment contained two counts—the one charging an illegal sale of liquor, and the other charging the keeping on hand of intoxicating liquor at the defendant's place of business. The jury found the defendant guilty upon both counts; that is to say, they returned a general verdict of guilty, which means in such cases guilty upon both counts. The evidence is overwhelming, so far as the defendant's guilt on the second count is concerned, but there was no evidence whatever as to a sale. The proof would have fully justified a finding (if such an issue had been before the jury) that the accused had the liquors for the purpose of illegal sale; but proof of mere preparedness to commit a crime is not sufficient proof to show that the crime has in fact been committed. The conviction upon the first count cannot be sustained. This being so, the verdict is without evidence to support it. The error is not harmless, for under the indictment and the verdict the defendant could be sentenced to the maximum punishment for each offense, and the sentences might be made cumulative. The two counts stand just as if they were two indictments; and the right to impose sentence, where the verdict is general in such a case, is the right to sentence as for two separate and distinct offenses. The law in this respect is well established. Hall v. State, 8 Ga. App. 747, 70 S. E. 211; Tooke v. State, 4 Ga. App. 495, 61 S. E. 917; Driver v. State, 112 Ga. 229, 37 S. E. 400.

Judgment reversed.

(10 Ga. App. 50)

BROWN v. STATE. (No. 3,568.)

(Court of Appeals of Georgia. Nov. 7, 1911.)

*(Syllabus by the Court.)1. HOMICIDE (§ 255*) — VOLUNTARY MANSLAUGHTER—EVIDENCE.

On the trial of an indictment for murder, where the offense of voluntary manslaughter is reasonably deducible from the evidence or the defendant's statement to the jury, considered separately or together, a charge on the law of voluntary manslaughter, and a verdict for that offense, were authorized. Cain v. State, 7 Ga. App. 24, 65 S. E. 1069; Pyle v. State, 4 Ga. App. 811, 62 S. E. 540; Bell v. State, 130 Ga. 865, 61 S. E. 996; Strickland v. State, 133 Ga. 76, 65 S. E. 148.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Homicide, Dec. Dig. § 255.*]

2. CRIMINAL LAW (§ 742*) — EVIDENCE — IMPEACHMENT—EFFECT.

The credibility of a witness is exclusively for determination by the jury, and, although a witness may have been successfully impeached, it is left to the discretion of the jury to decide whether his testimony has been corroborated; and, while it would be their duty to disregard entirely the testimony of an impeached witness, unless corroborated, yet they have the right to believe the evidence of a witness, notwithstanding the impeachment, and in the absence of any corroboration. Section 5884, Civil Code 1910, is not intended as an abridgment of the absolute right of the jury to determine as to the credibility of witnesses.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Criminal Law, Cent. Dig. §§ 1138, 1719-1721; Dec. Dig. § 742.*]

3. HOMICIDE (§ 122*)—PROTECTION OF CHILD—RIGHTS OF FATHER.

The right of a parent to protect and defend his minor daughter from seduction or debauchery exists under the law of the state without other qualification than that stated in the statute, to wit, that the act of the parent must be one of protection or defense against intended or progressing wrong, and not in punishment or revenge for a past injury. A charge to this effect was applicable to the facts of this case.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Homicide, Cent. Dig. §§ 177-181; Dec. Dig. § 122.*]

4. INSTRUCTIONS.

The excerpts from the charge embraced in the sixth and seventh grounds of the motion for a new trial correctly state the law as repeatedly decided by the Supreme Court, and were pertinent and applicable to the evidence.

5. CRIMINAL LAW (§ 668*) — STATEMENT OF ACCUSED.

The right of the accused to make to the jury a statement in his defense is strictly a personal privilege, granted by the statute, and, whether written or oral, the statement must be read or spoken by the accused, and not by his attorney.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Criminal Law, Cent. Dig. §§ 1584-1590; Dec. Dig. § 668.*]

Error from Superior Court, Pulaski County; J. H. Martin, Judge.

Bill Brown was convicted of voluntary manslaughter, and brings error. Affirmed.

See, also, 135 Ga. 656, 70 S. E. 329.

Herbert L. Grice, H. E. Coates, and W. L. & Warren Grice, for plaintiff in error. E. D. Graham, Sol. Gen., for the State.

HILL, C. J. Brown was indicted for murder, and was convicted of voluntary manslaughter. His motion for a new trial having been overruled, the case is here for review.

In addition to the usual general grounds, the motion for a new trial contains the following assignments of error:

(1) Under the evidence the killing was either murder or justifiable homicide, and the verdict for manslaughter is contrary to law.

(2) The evidence of only one witness proved the guilt of the accused, and, this witness having been successfully impeached in several material particulars, and the evidence of this one witness not having been corroborated in any material particular, as required by section 5884 of the Civil Code of 1910, there was no credible evidence to support the verdict.

(3) The evidence did not authorize a charge on the law of voluntary manslaughter.

(4) Because the court charged without qualification or explanation that parents and children may mutually protect each other, and there was no evidence to support such charge.

(5) Because the court charged that "a parent may protect his minor daughter from debauchery to the same extent that a husband would be allowed to defend and protect the chastity and virtue of his wife." This was error, for the reason that the evidence did not show that the deceased was engaged in protecting either his wife or his daughter from debauchery.

(6) Because the court charged: "So, if the deceased, Nelson Spivey, assaulted the defendant on the ground that the defendant was committing a sexual act with the daughter of Nelson Spivey, if this was being done, it would be justifiable; but what was done in the past, and to avenge such conduct after its occurrence, the deceased, Nelson Spivey, would not have a right under the law to make the assault and attack upon the defendant, and the defendant would not be deprived of his right of self-defense to resist and repel the assault." There was no evidence of the hypothetical recital in this charge, and it was calculated to injure the defense.

(7) On this subject the court further charged: "That is to say, in the case now on trial, before Nelson Spivey would have been authorized to make an attack upon the defendant, it must appear from the evidence that the defendant and the daughter of Nelson Spivey were then in the act of having sexual intercourse, or that the situation was such at that particular time that, as a reasonable man, Nelson Spivey could not tell whether it was just over, or just about to begin. Under these conditions, a party would have a right to make an assault, even to taking life, and the party against whom the assault was made would not have the right to resist him, even by taking his life." Error because this statement, without qualification, is not the law of Georgia; and also because there was no evidence to justify the charge, and it was calculated to injure the defendant before the jury."

(8) Because the court charged the jury on the subject of the impeachment of witnesses by proof of contradictory statements, not made under oath, and by proof of bad character, and the weight to be given the testimony of such witnesses, when there had been no attempt by either side to impeach any witness by either of these methods. This was calculated to confuse the jury in weighing the evidence of Della Spivey; a witness for the state, who, as movant insists, had been impeached by proof of perjury, and there was no evidence to justify this charge.

(9) At the conclusion of the evidence, the accused stated that his statement to the jury, made on the previous trial, had been written out by the official stenographer, and he desired to make the same statement on the present trial, and his attorney would read it for him. The solicitor general admitted that the statement proposed to be read was the one which the accused had made at the previous trial, but objected to counsel's reading it. The court sustained the objection, and said to the accused that he could go on the stand and make to the jury just such statement as he saw fit, and the accused did so. It is insisted that this ruling was error, because it deprived the accused of the right, given him by law, "to make to the court and jury such statement in the case as he may deem proper in his defense."

The evidence, substantially stated, is as follows: On the night of the homicide, Nelson Spivey was at home with his wife and several children. About 7 o'clock, a little son came into the room, and told his father that "Della is over yonder in that house with Bill." Della was a daughter, about 17 years old, and Bill was the accused. The house alluded to was a vacant house in a field nearly a quarter of a mile from the home of the deceased. Immediately on getting this information, the decedent took his whip and went out. In 10 or 15 minutes, a shot was heard coming from the direction of the vacant house. Members of the family went towards this house in a few minutes, and found the body lying in a path going by the vacant house, and about 30 feet away from the door. He had been killed by a bullet through the breast.

The girl Della testified that she and Bill (the accused) were sitting on the floor in the vacant house alone, engaged in conversation, when her father suddenly appeared in the door; that she jumped up and ran out by her father, and had gone some little distance, when she heard the report of a gun in the direction of the house from which she had run; that she saw a pistol in the pocket of the accused while they were sitting on the floor talking; that neither her father nor the accused spoke while she was present. and she noticed nothing in her father's hand when he appeared. She did not know what occurred between the two after she ran away and just previous to the fatal shot. She testified that the accused and herself had not been guilty of any immoral conduct, and were not in the house for that purpose. On cross-examination, she testified that, while she did not remember the details of her testimony on the previous trial, the account she then gave of the occurrence just before the homicide was not the truth; that she was then "scared," as she had never before been in a courthouse, but that now "I am trying to tell this thing like it was." It may be here stated that the only material conflict in her evidence on this trial and the previous one was as to the place where the accused and herself were talking when they were interrupted by the sudden appearance of her father. She then testified that they were standing in the path near the vacant house, and that a third person was present. The remainder of her evidence on both trials is substantially the same. Whatever was said or done by either the accused or the decedent at the time of the homicide is not disclosed by the evidence.

The accused, in his statement to the jury, said that he and a companion met Della in the pathway going by the vacant house; that they stopped and spoke to her; that he was about to pass on, when she told him that she had something to tell him; and that while they were talking the decedent came up to them and asked what they were doing there, and he replied, "Nothing"; that Della ran away, and her father struck him on the head with a whip; that he "broke and ran," and the decedent pursued him, strikingly him repeatedly with the whip. "I fell, and he wore his whip out on me, so he could not use it; broke it up. He run his hand in his pocket and got out his knife, and opened it with his teeth, and, as he got it open, I shot him. That is just the way it was."

Two witnesses in behalf of the accused testified that the body of the decedent was found about 30 or 40 yards from the old vacant house in the path leading by the house through the field; that about 30 yards from the house and 40 yards from where the body was found the appearance of the ground indicated that a struggle had taken place; that a broken whip was on the ground by the body, and an open knife was in the left hand of the decedent. No powder stains were found on the clothing of the decedent.

Several of the grounds of the motion for a new trial relate to the same subject, and we will group them and decide the questions raised in the light of the evidence.

[1] 1. Could the jury reasonably deduce from the evidence and the statement of the accused the crime of voluntary manslaughter?

The evidence alone does not clearly show the grade of the offense; indeed, it does not conclusively prove any offense. The killing by the accused is reasonably inferable from all the circumstances, but what immediately preceded the killing, or what caused it, is more or less a matter of speculation, so far as the evidence discloses. The only witness for the state saw the pistol in the pocket of the accused. She saw her father enter the door, but did not see any weapon in his possession. She immediately fled, and, when some distance from the scene, heard the report of the pistol. The struggle between the two men took place outside the house. The condition of the ground, the broken whip, the open knife, the bullet in the breast of the deceased, proved a struggle. The particulars of this struggle must be left to conjecture, except as stated by the accused to the jury. This statement had such force only as the jury think it right to give it. Penal Code 1910, § 1036. They had the exclusive right to reject it altogether, or accept it altogether; to believe it in part, or disbelieve it in part.

In the exercise of this unlimited discretion, they chose to accept as the truth that part of the statement which authorized the verdict of voluntary manslaughter. They accepted the statement of the accused that the decedent was striking him with the whip. They rejected the statement that the accused did not shoot until the decedent drew his knife and opened it with his teeth, and was about to cut him. They probably rejected entirely the statement relating to the knife. There were circumstances that indicated that the knife defense was fabricated. It was not found by those who first reached the dead man. Its appearance was coincident with the appearance of the friends of the accused. It was found opened in the open left hand of the decedent, and no powder burn or stain was found upon the clothing of the decedent. The jury doubtless thought that the whipping was not an attempt to commit a felony, and therefore the killing was not justifiable, but was an assault sufficient to arouse the excitement of passion and to reduce the crime to manslaughter. If they had concluded that the whipping by the outraged parent, of the man who was apparently intending to debauch his young daughter, was fully warranted, and that the accused had no rights under the law, this court would have approved. If they had thought that the attempted seducer of the daughter should have submitted to the just chastisement inflicted by the angry father, and, without violent resistance, writhed in grace and groaned in melody, keeping time to the crack of the whip, and that the killing of the father by the wrongdoer was murder, the finding would have been in accord with law and justice. The verdict of voluntary manslaughter was not only fully warranted by the circumstances, and that portion of the statement of the accused which the jury believed, but was largely tempered by mercy.

[2] 2. (2, 8) The evidence of the girl, Della Spivey, was immaterial and irrelevant as relating to the verdict for manslaughter. As above suggested, what she testified on this trial, or the first trial, did not present any theory upon which the grade of the homicide could have been satisfactorily determined. But the credibility of the testimony was entirely for the jury. It was for them to decide whether she was telling the truth on this or on the former trial. Suppose the jury believed her statement that she was "scared" when she testified on the previous trial, but was now telling the truth, would they not have had the right to do so? While section 5884, Civil Code 1910, declares that, "if a witness swear willfully and knowingly falsely, his testimony ought to be disregarded entirely, unless corroborated by circumstances, or other unimpeached evidence," yet the jury may credit even an impeached witness without any corroboration. The whole question of the credibility of witnesses is wisely left to the jury under any and all circumstances, and, though Ananias and Sapphira spoke again, the law would not strike them dead, but would leave their testimony to be weighed and accepted or rejected by the jury. In this case, there were circumstances of corroboration.

[3] 3. (4, 5) It is said in the fourth and fifth grounds of the motion for a new trial that the court erred in charging, "without qualification or explanation, that parents and children may mutually protect each other and justify the defense of the person or reputation of the other;" and also "that there was no evidence to justify this charge." This excerpt is in the exact language of the statute. Penal Code 1910, § 74. We are not aware of any qualification of this mutual right, except that stated in the statute, that the act must be in "protection" or in "defense"; and certainly the statement of this right with the statutory qualification needs no other explanation. We think, also, that the facts fully justified the instruction. If the time ever comes when a father would be authorized to protect and defend his child of tender years, both in her person and reputation, from the machinations of the wicked, it would be when she was absent from home at night in a vacant house, alone with a man armed to prevent interference, and with evil and criminal intent. Under such circumstances, it would be the duty of the parent to protect his child against her own evil inclinations, and to defend her from the wicked designs of the man.

[4] 4. (6, 7) These grounds of the motion for new trial object to excerpts from the charge where the judge applies concretely to the facts of this case the general principle that a father would have the right to protect and defend his daughter from intended debauchery. These excerpts state the law as construed and declared by the Supreme Court in many decisions, notably in Hill v. State, 64 Ga. 453; Gossett v. State, 123 Ga. 431, 51 S. E. 394; Drysdale v. State, 83 Ga. 744, 10 S. E. 358, 6 L. R. A. 424, 20 Am. St. Rep. 340; Wilkerson v. State, 91 Ga. 734, 17 S. E. 990, 44 Am. St. Rep. 63; O'Shields v. State, 125 Ga. 310, 54 S. E. 120; Mize v. State, 135 Ga. 291, 69 S. E. 173. It is insisted, however, that the principle of law which entitles a parent to protect and defend his minor daughter from an intended or progressing wrong of debauchery, and, under such circumstances deprives the wrongdoer of his right of defense, was not applicable to the evidence; that if the accused was guilty of the criminal act of fornication with the minor daughter it was over before the father appeared on the scene, and that the assault which the father made on the accused was not in protection or defense, but in punishment of a past wrong, and therefore the accused had a right to defend himself from the assault and attack of the father. In Drysdale v. State, supra, it is held that "a husband may attack for intimacy with his wife in his presence, raising a well-founded belief that the criminal act 'is just over, or about to begin,' and the adulterer, though in danger, has no right to defend himself by using a deadly weapon." In O'Shields v. State, supra, the expression, "just over, or about to begin," was construed to refer to a state of facts and circumstances which left doubtful in the mind of the husband the stage of the proceedings which his arrival interrupted. The facts and circumstances of this case proved very clearly that a criminal act had been committed or was intended. Whether it was "just over, or about to begin," was not so clear; but they were surely sufficient to justify in the mind of the father a doubt as to the "stage of the proceedings his arrival interrupted." Where a father finds his 17 year old daughter in a vacant house alone at night, away from any nearby habitation, in company with a man fully armed for any emergency, and she immediately flees from the scene, we think the law would be very lenient with the father, and readily give him the benefit of any doubt that the incriminatory circumstances might raise in his troubled and outraged mind. We think the facts and circumstances authorized the trial judge to charge the principle laid down in the Drysdale Case, supra, as interpreted in the O'Shields Case, supra.

It is insisted that the trial judge, in this connection, committed the same error for which the Supreme Court granted another trial in Brown v. State, 135 Ga. 656, 70 S. E. 329. There are two reasons why this contention is not sound: First, the evidence in this record is substantially different from the former trial. Here the minor daughter was found under the circumstances narrated above with the accused in an old vacant house, some distance from any other habitation, and the circumstances left in doubt the question whether the act of debauchery was "just over, or about to begin." On the former trial, the girl was found in the road, talking to the accused, and a third person was nearby, and there could have been no doubt that if any immoral act had been committed it was completed before the decedent appeared on the scene, for the only inference deducible from the evidence on the first trial was that the immoral act, if it occurred, took place before the accused and the girl left the old house, and the homicide took place in the road near the old house. The second reply to this contention is that the jury in the first trial deprived the accused entirely of his right of self-defense, and found him guilty of murder. On this trial, while they concluded that he was not entirely justifiable in defending himself from the attack of the father, they yet reduced his offense to manslaughter because of such attack.

[5] 5. The right given by the statute to the accused "to make to the court and jury such statement in the case as he may deem proper in his defense" is strictly a personal right. He can write it out and read it to the jury, or he can make it orally; but he must read it or speak it. He cannot delegate this act to his attorney. There are several reasons why it might in some instances defeat the ends of justice, by misleading the jury as to the truth, if the statement of the accused could be read by his attorney. The arts of expression frequently give undue weight to words. It is said of the great preacher, Whitefield, that he could thrill an audience by a most insignificant word. Even his interjections, his "Ah!" of pity, and his "Oh!" of appeal to the sinner, were words of tremendous power, and formed a most effective weapon in his pulpit artillery. The actor, Garrick, himself a marvellous master of expression, said that he would "give a hundred guineas if he could utter the word 'Oh!' as Whitefield did." And so an eloquent attorney by potent elocution and the trick of emphasis, when speaking as the accused, might in some cases, by the mere utterance of the words, "Gentlemen of the jury, before God I protest my innocence," mislead them into thinking that he was really speaking the truth. And, on the other hand, the hesitating manner of one on trial, caused by consciousness of guilt, sometimes of itself would indicate to the jury the truth. The statute, however, is so explicit that it is hardly necessary to give any reason in support of the opinion here expressed. There was no error in refusing to allow the attorney for the accused to read his statement to the jury, although he avouched it as in truth his statement, and although it was admitted that, at the previous trial, he made the statement proposed to be read by his attorney, and that it was correctly taken down and written out by the official stenographer. The accused was not deprived of his right by this ruling. The judge informed him of his right, and he availed himself of it.

We have given to this case most careful consideration, and are satisfied that no error was committed, and that the verdict was as favorable to the accused as, under the law and the evidence, he had the right to expect.

Judgment affirmed.

(10 Ga. App. 70)

FITZGERALD v. STATE. (No. 3,687.)
(Court of Appeals of Georgia. Nov. 7, 1911.)

(Syllabus by the Court.)

1. DISORDERLY HOUSE (§ 4*)—ELEMENTS OF OFFENSE—"LEWD HOUSE."

A house may be a "lewd house," within the purview of section 382 of the Penal Code of 1910, which makes it criminal for any person to maintain a lewd house or place for the practice of fornication and adultery, though the house may be devoted chiefly to the carrying on of some other vocation (a boarding house or hotel, for example), if lewd women are accustomed to frequent there and to carry on their practices.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Disorderly House, Cent. Dig. §§ 4, 9-13; Dec. Dig. § 4.*]

For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, vol. 5, p. 4109.]

2. DISORDERLY HOUSE (§§ 4, 16*)—ELEMENTS OF OFFENSE—KNOWLEDGE—EVIDENCE.

In order to convict an innkeeper of maintaining a lewd house, on the theory that, along with other guests, he allows lewd women to stop at his inn and ply their vocation, it is necessary to show that the innkeeper had knowledge, actual or implied, of the unlawful practices that were going on. Such knowledge may be shown directly or circumstantially, and, where the accused himself was in personal charge of the inn, one of the methods by which he may be charged with this knowledge is to show that his house had acquired a general reputation in the community of being a place in which fornication and adultery were commonly practiced; the sufficiency of such testimony being for the jury.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Disorderly House, Cent. Dig. §§ 4, 9-13, 21-25; Dec. Dig. §§ 4, 16.*]

3. DISORDERLY HOUSE (§ 16*)—EVIDENCE—RELEVANCY—REPUTATION.

It is no ground for the exclusion of the testimony of one who swears that he knows the general reputation of a house, or of a person, as to lewdness, that he cannot tell the number of persons whom he has heard speak of the matter, or give the names of those from whose conversation he has gained his knowledge of the general reputation as to which he testifies. His examination and cross-examination go to the jury together, to be given such weight as it seems to them to be entitled to under all the circumstances disclosed by his testimony as a whole.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Disorderly House, Dec. Dig. § 16.*]

4. CRIMINAL LAW (§§ 419, 420*)—EVIDENCE—HEARSAY.

"The hearsay rule excludes extrajudicial utterances only when offered for a special purpose, namely, as assertions to evidence the truth of the matter asserted." Words may constitute conduct, and, when that conduct is otherwise relevant in the case, the fact that the person used these words may be proved, notwithstanding the ordinary rule against the admission of hearsay.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Criminal Law, Cent. Dig. §§ 973-983; Dec. Dig. §§ 419, 420.*]

5. DISORDERLY HOUSE (§ 17*)—CRIMINAL PROSECUTION—EVIDENCE.

It is not necessary, in order to make out the offense specified in Penal Code 1910, § 382, that the state should show any particular act of fornication or adultery to have been committed, if the evidence, either directly or circumstantially, is such as to satisfy the jury that the house was kept and maintained as a lewd house; that is, if, notwithstanding lack of proof as to any particular act, the circumstances are such as to satisfy the jury that the practice of fornication and adultery actually went on in the house.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Disorderly House, Cent. Dig. §§ 26-29; Dec. Dig. § 17.*]

(Additional Syllabus by Editorial Staff.)

6. WORDS AND PHRASES—"GENERAL REPUTATION."

"General reputation" is what people in a community commonly say about a thing.

[Ed. Note.—For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, vol. 4, p. 3077.]

Error from City Court of Valdosta; J. G. Cranford, Judge.

J. Z. Fitzgerald was convicted of maintaining a lewd house, and brings error. Affirmed.

Whitaker & Dukes and E. K. Wilcox, for plaintiff in error. Jas. M. Johnson, Sol., for the State.

POWELL, J. The defendant was indicted for violating section 382 of the Penal Code of 1910, which makes it a misdemeanor for any person "to maintain and keep a lewd house or place for the practice of fornication or adultery, either by himself or others." The state relied on what is the usual method of proof in such cases, namely, proof by witnesses that the house in question had a general reputation of being a lewd house, and that certain women who lodged there from time to time had a general reputation of being lewd women, supplemented by proof of certain specific acts of conduct which took place from time to time, and which were indicative of the fact that fornication was probably going on in the house. Only one act of sexual intercourse was directly proved, and it was not shown that the defendant personally knew of this act. The house in question was operated by the accused as a restaurant and lodging house, or a cheaper form of hotel. The proof showed that some good people lodged there from time to time, and that some lewd women stayed there at periods of greater or less duration. The defendant and his son personally conducted the house and looked after the comfort of the the guests.

[1] One of the points stressed in the argument raises the question as to whether a house devoted chiefly to other purposes may also be a lewd house, within the purview of the statute. It is insisted that merely for an innkeeper to furnish lodging to guests of a lewd character, who, with his knowledge or by his connivance practice fornication in the house during their stay there, more or less transient, does not render the proprietor indictable for maintaining a house for the practice of fornication. We think that a house may be a lewd house, within the purview of the statute, although it is devoted also to other purposes; and if an innkeeper furnishes lodging to lewd guests, and allows them, with his knowledge or acquiescence, to carry on their unlawful practices in his house, he is guilty of violating the statute, notwithstanding the greater portion of his guests may be decent people, and notwithstanding the greater portion of the business carried on in the house may be of a legitimate nature.

[2] 2. In order to convict the proprietor of a lodging house of maintaining it as a lewd house, it is necessary to show, directly or circumstantially, that he knew of the lewd practices which were going on therein, or, if he did not positively know it, that he was in possession of such facts as to charge him with what is commonly known as "constructive knowledge." He cannot shut his eyes to what was going on around him, for the purpose of avoiding knowledge, and then defend on the ground of his lack of knowledge. The plaintiff in error contends that the evidence was insufficient to charge him with knowledge in the present case; no actual knowledge being directly shown. After carefully reading the record, we cannot sustain this contention. In the first place, it is shown that the house had achieved a general reputation in the community of being a lewd house, and that the accused himself personally conducted the place. This alone would be sufficient to authorize the jury to believe that he had such knowledge of the situation as to charge him with culpability. The most common method of making out a prima facie case against a person for maintaining a house of this kind is to show that the house bears such a general reputation in the community, and that the accused, being the proprietor, was a member of the community. Proof of this kind alone has been held sufficient to convict, doubtless on the theory that a person living in a community would hardly be ignorant of a condition which relates to his own affairs and which has become so public and notorious as to become a matter of common information. It is possible, though hardly probable, that such a course of conduct could habitually take place in a house which a person was managing as to call the attention of the community to its lewd character, and as to make it a matter of general reputation in the community, without that person knowing something of this conduct. At any rate, it is almost always considered by the courts as sufficient proof to convict (so far as this element of the case is concerned) to show that the house bears the general reputation of being a lewd house. Besides that, in this case there were certain transactions between women and men which occurred in the presence of the accused, and which ought to have informed any reasonable man that his house was being used for purposes of prostitution. Indeed, in the light of all the evidence, it is hardly probable that the things could have taken place which the witnesses swear took place without a reasonably watchful innkeeper knowing that lewd women were making a resort of his house for the purpose of carrying on their practices.

[3] 3. A motion was made to exclude the testimony of a certain witness, who, on direct examination, had testified that the reputation of the house was bad, and that the general reputation of the women who stayed there was that they were lewd, and, on cross-examination, testified that he had heard people on the streets talking about it; that he could not tell how many, but that he was sure there were as many as half a dozen, and maybe more; that he could not be exact as to how many; and that he knew nothing of the place of his own knowledge. The objection to this testimony was that the witness disclosed that he did not have such a knowledge of the general reputation of the place as to make his testimony admissible on that subject. We think that his testimony was properly admitted. The witness qualified by stating that he knew the general reputation. This rendered his testimony prima facie admissible. It was allowable for the accused, on cross-examination, to show the extent of his knowledge as to the general reputation, and if the cross-examination had disclosed that he had no knowledge of the general reputation of the place, it would have been the duty of the court to exclude the testimony. We do not think that the cross-examination in this case was such as to disclose the witness' lack of knowledge on the subject of the reputation of the place.

[4] 4. General reputation is what people in a community commonly say as to a thing. A person may know it, without having talked to very many in the community. He may know it without being able to give the names of any great number of persons with whom he has conversed on the subject. For instance, there are many of us who know that this man or that bears a good or bad general reputation in the community, and yet, if we were called upon to give the names of those persons with whom we had discussed the character of the person in question, we would find it difficult to furnish the names. The common consensus of popular opinion on the subject may be firmly fixed in our minds, though we have forgotten or are unable to recall the separate transactions or conversations from which we gained our knowledge of the matter.

[4] 4. The court permitted a witness to testify that he was on a train one day coming into Valdosta (where the house in question was located); that he sat on a seat to himself; that a woman came up and engaged him in conversation, and asked him where he was going; that he told her that he was going to Valdosta; that she said she was going there, too; that he asked her if she was going to visit relatives; that she said, "No," that she was up "on a pleasure trip," and stopping at the defendant's house; that she then said "I charge $2 for my pleasure." He further testified that when the train reached Valdosta the woman got off and did in fact go to the house of the defendant. This testimony, so far as it related to the conversation on the train, was objected to on the ground that it was hearsay, and the court overruled the objection. One of the ways of proving that a house is a lewd house is to prove that it is frequented by lewd women. Of course, for a lewd woman to go to a house on a single occasion would not characterize it as a lewd house; and if this evidence, which was objected to, stood alone, there would be no doubt that it would be wholly inadequate to authorize a conviction. It would be necessary to show many other things, one of which would be knowledge, actual or constructive, on the part of the accused that this woman who went to his house was a lewd woman. This testimony, if admissible at all, was only a link in the chain of circumstantial evidence. It must be remembered, however, that the state would be permitted to show by a number of different witnesses that on a number of separate occasions individual lewd women went to the defendant's place, for the purpose of showing that they went there in such numbers as that he must have known that his house was being used as a lewd resort. Therefore the real point raised by the objection before us for decision is whether the woman's language, used on the train, could be proved for the purpose of showing that she was in fact a lewd woman.

The defendant contends that her conversation (in the absence of the defendant) could not be proved for the purpose of showing the lewdness of her character—that it was mere hearsay. As Professor Wigmore says in his work on Evidence (section 1768): "The prohibition of the hearsay rule, then, does not apply to all words of utterances merely as such. If this fundamental principle is clearly realized, its application is a comparatively simple matter. The hearsay rule excludes extrajudicial utterances only when offered for a special purpose, namely, as assertions to evidence the truth of the matter asserted." Words, like acts, may constitute conduct, and the expression, "verbal acts," is not uncommonly found, and it is used to express the notion of words having probative value as conduct. Now, if this woman in question had been guilty of lewd conduct on the train, had committed such acts as in the minds of all reasonable men would have characterized her as a whore, certainly the state could have proved those acts, though committed outside of the defendant's presence, for the purpose of showing that she was a lewd woman, and could have coupled this with other evidence showing that this woman, thus proved lewd, had subsequently stayed in the defendant's house. Indeed, in the present case, the state proved the lewdness of a number of boarders at the defendant's inn by showing that they had previously resided in known lewd houses, and counsel seem to have conceded that this form of proof was allowable. The language a woman uses may tend to characterize her as a whore with almost the same certainty as lascivious conduct short of the very criminal act itself. To the ordinary man's mind, for a woman to approach him and to solicit him to have sexual intercourse with her for money would prove her character as a public prostitute, just as much as it would for her to be seen in a lewd house, or to be seen making any of those lascivious displays of herself which are commonly understood as portraying the arts and artifices of a whore. The state in this case puts in evidence this woman's words, in which she says to a stranger, whom she approaches upon the train, that she sells what she called "her pleasure" for $2, not for the purpose of proving as the ultimate fact that the woman did sell "her pleasure" for $2, but for the purpose of proving the character of the woman who thus used language consistent only with the abandoned state of mind of the public prostitute. We think that in this view of the case the evidence was admissible as verbal conduct, as a link in the chain of circumstances by which the guilt of the accused was to be proved. Furthermore, even if there be any doubt about the soundness of this conclusion, the result would be the same; for the admission of this testimony, even if erroneous, is, in the light of the whole testimony in the record, merely such an immaterial incident upon the trial as not to require a new trial.

[5] 5. Exception is taken to the following charge of the court: "It is not necessary, in order to make out the offense charged, that the state shall prove that any particular act of fornication or adultery was committed, if you are satisfied that the house was kept as a lewd house." Counsel cite Coleman v. State, 5 Ga. App. 766, 64 S. E. 828. In that case the court charged the jury that "it is not necessary for the state to prove that there were acts of adultery or fornication committed at such house." The court further charged the jury that "it would be sufficient if the state proves to your reasonable satisfaction that she [the accused] bears the general reputation of being a lewd woman, and that the house or place kept by her bears the general reputation of being a lewd house or place of prostitution, and that the women there at that house bear the general reputation of being lewd women, and that men were seen to frequent the place by day and by night." This court held that the charge just quoted was erroneous, that it was necessary for the state to prove that acts of adultery and fornication were committed at the house, and that it was not sufficient for the state merely to convince the jury that the house or the women bore the reputation of being lewd. We pointed out that the ultimate thing which the jury were required to find, before they could lawfully convict the defendant, was that the house was devoted to the practice of adultery or fornication, and that while that fact may be proved by the reputation which the house and its inmates bore, together with corroborative circumstances, and without proof of specific acts of adultery or fornication, still that unless the jury, from this reputation and the other corroborative circumstances, believe that the practices referred to really went on, they would not be authorized to convict. It seems to us that the present charge very clearly conveyed to the minds of the jury the exact distinction which the court made in that case, namely, that they could convict, though the state did not prove any particular act of fornication or adultery, if the evidence satisfied them that the house was kept and maintained as a lewd house; that is to say, as a house in which fornication or adultery was actually practiced. The Coleman Case and the cases therein cited clearly show that a conviction may be had in such cases without proof of any particular act of fornication or adultery, and that to show that a house is maintained and kept as a lewd house is sufficient to authorize the jury to believe that, despite the state's failure or inability to show a particular act, the unlawful practice was nevertheless carried on. After carefully considering the alleged errors, we find no reason for the granting of a new trial.

Judgment affirmed.

(10 Ga. App. 25)

GORDON v. STATE. (No. 3,453.)
(Court of Appeals of Georgia. Nov. 7, 1911.)

(Syllabus by the Court.)

1. CRIMINAL LAW (§ 785*)—TRIAL—INSTRUCTIONS—IMPEACHMENT OF WITNESSES.

There was no error in charging the jury that, when a witness has been impeached by contradictory statements previously made, he may be sustained by proof of general good character.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Criminal Law, Dec. Dig. § 785.*]

2. CRIMINAL LAW (§ 553*) — EVIDENCE — WEIGHT AND SUFFICIENCY — IMPEACHED TESTIMONY.

The evidence authorized the verdict, and no error of law appears.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Criminal Law, Cent. Dig. § 1252; Dec. Dig. § 553.*]

(Additional Syllabus by Editorial Staff.)

3. WITNESSES (§ 361*) — IMPEACHMENT—CORROBORATION—COMPETENCY OF EVIDENCE.

Though witnesses state they do not know that they are acquainted with the general character of the prosecutor, yet if they state that they have been acquainted with him for a long time, or for a given number of years, and that they never heard any one speak ill of him, these facts show substantially that they do know his general character sufficiently to qualify them to swear that they would believe him on oath in a court of justice.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Witnesses, Cent. Dig. §§ 1167–1175; Dec. Dig. § 361.*]

Error from City Court of Dublin; K. J. Hawkins, Judge.

George Gordon was convicted of an unlawful sale of intoxicating liquor, and brings error. Affirmed.

Adams & Flynt, for plaintiff in error. Geo. B. Davis, Sol., for the State.

RUSSELL, J. [1, 3] 1. A witness for the state testified that the defendant had sold him a quart of liquor. The defendant sought to impeach this witness by proving certain contradictory statements previously made. The state sought to sustain him by proof of general good character, and introduced witnesses who swore that they had known the witness from his boyhood, and, so far as they knew, his reputation was good, and they would believe him on oath. One of the witnesses had lost track of him for two or three years previous to the trial. The judge charged the jury as follows: "I charge you that, when a witness has been impeached by contradictory statements previously made, he may be restored by proof of general good character." The criticism of the charge is that there is no testimony in the case to authorize it; the insistence being that the state wholly failed in its attempt to prove general good character. "Although witnesses may state they do not know that they are acquainted with the general character of the prosecutor, yet, if they state they have been acquainted with him for a long time, or for a given number of years, and that they have never heard any one speak ill of him, these facts show substantially that they did know his general character sufficiently to qualify them to swear that they would believe him on oath in a court of justice." Hodgkins v. State, 89 Ga. 761, 15 S. E. 695. See, also, Watkins v. State, 82 Ga. 231, 8 S. E. 875, 14 Am. St. Rep. 155.

[2] 2. Although the only witness for the state to the main fact was impeached by contradictory statements previously made, the jury nevertheless had a right to believe his testimony, which made a clean case of guilt.

Judgment affirmed.

(90 S. C. 30)

SHIRED v. NESBIT et al.

(Supreme Court of South Carolina. Nov. 11, 1911.)

1. WILLS (§ 821*)—CHARGE ON LAND DEVISED.

A will giving testator's land to his sons, but directing that they take care of the widow and permit her to live at the family home, and providing that at her death the sons should divide the property equally, charged the land with the widow's care.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Wills, Cent. Dig. §§ 2114-2119; Dec. Dig. § 821.*]

2. WILLS (§ 452*)—CONSTRUCTION.

Testator will be presumed to have intended to leave his widow without means of support only when that intention is clearly expressed.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Wills, Cent. Dig. §§ 968-970; Dec. Dig. § 452.*]

3. WILLS (§ 821*)—DEVISE—CHARGES.

Under a devise of all of testator's lands to his sons, who were charged to "take care" of the widow, her abandonment of the family home did not waive her claim for support; the requirement for support not being expressly made conditional on her living there.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Wills, Dec. Dig. § 821.*]

4. WILLS (§ 821*)—DEVISE—CHARGES—EX-TENT.

Under a devise of all of testator's property to his sons, who were charged with the care of his widow, such charge upon the devise was not limited to the rental value of the land.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Wills, Dec. Dig. § 821.*]

5. WILLS (§ 718*)—DEVISES—CHARGES—EF-FECT.

By accepting a devise coupled with an obligation, one binds himself to discharge such obligation.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Wills, Cent. Dig. §§ 1717-1721; Dec. Dig. § 718.*]

6. WILLS (§ 821*)—DEVISES—CHARGES—EX-TENT.

Under a devise of land worth from $125 to $150 to testator's sons, who were charged with the "care" of the widow, it will not be presumed that testator intended to impose upon the sons the entire burden of supporting the widow without regard to her own exertions; the testator, his widow, and the sons all being very poor, and earning their living by daily labor.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Wills, Cent. Dig. §§ 2114-2119; Dec. Dig. § 821.*]

7. WILLS (§ 821*)—DEVISES—CHARGES—EX-TENT.

Under a devise of land to testator's sons, who were charged with the care of testator's widow, such charge extends to the whole estate, including the income, as well as the land itself.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Wills, Cent. Dig. §§ 2114-2119; Dec. Dig. § 821.*]

8. WILLS (§ 821*)—DEVISES—INCOME—MEAS-URE.

In enforcing a charge upon a devise, the rental value of land will be taken as the measure of its income, in the absence of evidence of actual income.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Wills, Cent. Dig. §§ 2114-2119; Dec. Dig. § 821.*]

Appeal from Common Pleas Circuit Court of Greenville County; Ernest Gary, Judge. "To be officially reported."

Action by Caroline Shired against C. D. Nesbit and others. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendants appeal. Reversed and remanded.

Wm. G. Sirrine, for appellants. Adam C. Welborn, for respondent.

WOODS, J. Henry Shired died on January 12, 1902, leaving a will in which he disposed of his property in these words: "Item one. I will and bequeath to my sons William and Fletcher Shired all my property both real and personal. Item two. It is my will that my sons, William and Fletcher Shired, shall take care of my beloved wife Caroline Shired, and allow her to live at my home, and at her death the said William and Fletcher shall divide my property equally between themselves."

The property consisted of a half-acre lot near the town of Piedmont, on which the testator resided, and household furniture; the latter being of insignificant value. The widow retained her residence on the lot for a few months after her husband's death, and then moved to the home of a son by a former marriage, where she still resides. William and Fletcher Shired, sons of the testator by a former marriage, held the land under the will until December, 1908, when by separate deeds they conveyed it to the defendant C. D. Nesbit. Some time after Nesbit acquired title, the widow, Caroline Shired, brought this action against William and Fletcher Shired and the grantee, Nesbit, alleging in substance that by accepting the devise under the will William and Fletcher Shired had undertaken to furnish her with a reasonable support, and that the land was charged therewith, and that the defendants William and Fletcher Shired had not contributed anything to her support, and had not allowed her to live in the house. The defense consisted of a general denial, and the allegation that the plaintiff, by voluntarily abandoning the premises, had forfeited whatever claim she may have had.

The cause was referred to the master, who, after taking testimony, reported that the land was charged with the support of the widow, and that, considering the humble station in life of the testator and his family, he did not intend that the widow should receive for her support from the sons more than the rental value of the land, which he found to be $36 per annum. The master recommended a sale of the land for the payment of the accrued charge; the purchaser to take the land subject to the charge in favor of the widow of $36 per annum for her future support. The circuit judge on hearing the case held $150 per annum to be a reasonable support for the widow, and decreed that she should have judgment against William and Fletcher Shired for arrears of her support at the rate of $150 per annum, commencing six months after the date of the death of the testator. On all other points, the report of the master was confirmed. The appeal brings up for review all the issues passed on by the master and the circuit court.

[1, 2] First. Did the will of the testator charge the land with the care of his widow? It will be observed that the whole estate was devised to the sons, and, unless it was charged with the care of the widow, then she was left without any means of support. Such an intention should be attributed to the testator only when clearly expressed. The context, read in the light of the circumstances, must be construed to mean that the sons held the estate subject to the charge for the care of the widow. Bank of Florence v. Gregg, 46 S. C. 169, 24 S. E. 64; Dixon v. Roessler, 76 S. C. 415, 57 S. E. 203; Colton v. Colton, 127 U. S. 300, 8 Sup. Ct. 1164, 32 L. Ed. 138.

[3] Second. The abandonment by the widow of the house did not constitute waiver or abandonment of her claim to be taken care of, for the requirement that the sons should take care of her was not made conditional on her living at the home.

[4, 5] Third. The obligation imposed by the will on the sons was not limited to the rental value of the land. The rule is that one who accepts a devise coupled with an obligation binds himself by his acceptance of the devise to discharge the obligation. Porter v. Jackson, 95 Ind. 210, 48 Am. Rep. 704; Dodge v. Manning, 11 Paige (N. Y.) 834; Steele v. Korn, 137 Wis. 51, 118 N. W. 207, 120 N. W. 261, 129 Am. St. Rep. 1051; Case v. Hall, 52 Ohio St. 24, 38 N. E. 618, 25 L. R. A. 766; Davidson v. Coon, 125 Ind. 497, 25 N. E. 601, 9 L. R. A. 584, and note; 2 Jarman on Wills, 584. Hence, when the sons accepted the devise, they assumed the personal obligation to take care of the widow during her life, and the plaintiff is entitled to a judgment against them for the aggregate arising from an allowance of a reasonable sum for each year's support.

[6] There is a total lack of evidence as to what is necessary to "take care of" the widow in the sense in which the testator used that expression. The only shred of evidence touching the subject is the statement by the witness Searight "it takes about $150 a year to support her." But we think the record clearly shows that the testator had no intention of imposing on his sons the entire burden of supporting his widow without respect to her own exertions. The testator and his family were very poor, living in the humblest circumstances by their labor, and the widow still earns wages as a laborer. The only direct evidence of the value of the lot disposed of in the devise is that it is worth about $125 to $150. The defendant Nesbit testified that he paid $175 for it, a price in excess of its value, because it adjoined his land. The witness Searight gave it as his opinion that the house and lot would rent for $75 per annum, but he gave no reason whatever for this opinion. Even if the value of the property be placed as high as $175, the charge of $150 per annum against the sons to "take care of" the widow is out of proportion when set against such valuation; for the property would be entirely consumed by the charge for support in less than two years. It is clear, in view of the small value of the property and the station and habits of life of the parties concerned, that in requiring the sons to "take care of my beloved wife" the testator contemplated exertion on her part and contribution to her support by her own labor. But there is no evidence whatever of the earning capacity of the widow, and nothing in the record upon which a just conclusion can be reached as to what amount the sons should contribute to her support.

[7, 8] Fourth. Under the rule laid down in Dixon v. Roessler, 76 S. C. 415, 57 S. E. 203, the charge for the care of the widow extends to the whole estate—to the income derived from the land, as well as to the land itself—and the defendant C. D. Nesbit is liable to the plaintiff for the income received by him since his purchase. There was no evidence of the income actually received by Nesbit from the property. The master and the circuit judge agreed in the view that $36 a year was a fair rental value of the land, and there is nothing in the evidence warranting the court in disturbing this conclusion. In the absence of evidence of the actual income, the rental value will be taken as the measure of the income from the property. Griffin v. Griffin, 82 S. C. 258, 64 S. E. 160.

It is the judgment of this court that the judgment of the circuit court be set aside, and the cause remanded for the purpose of taking evidence and ascertaining what sum should be allowed to take care of the widow.

JONES, C. J., GARY, A. J., and HYDRICK, J., concur.

(39 S. C. 574)

JONES v. WILLIAMS et al.

(Supreme Court of South Carolina. Nov. 7, 1911.)

1. SPECIFIC PERFORMANCE (§ 131*)—DECREE—CONSTRUCTION.

In a suit for specific performance of a contract with defendant K. to exchange lots, in which plaintiff claimed that defendant W. had purchased K.'s lot with notice of the contract, the decree adjudged that the contract between plaintiff and defendant K. was valid, and that defendant W. had notice of plaintiff's rights when accepting a deed, and that plaintiff was entitled to specific performance, and directed

K. to make a good title to plaintiff on plaintiff making good and sufficient title to him (K.) to her lot." The decree further provided that the court would not then "pass upon the validity of plaintiff's title, because it has not been brought into court, and because it may be necessary that testimony be taken respecting its validity," and directed that plaintiff file her proposed deed in court, and that defendants within a certain time give notice of their acceptance or rejection of the title tendered, accompanied by their grounds of refusal, if they refused the deed. The decree further provided that the deed from K. to W. "be and is hereby canceled and annulled," but also permitted any party to apply for such further orders as might be necessary to carry out the provisions of the decree. Held, that the cancellation of K.'s deed to W. was not to be effective until it was ascertained that plaintiff could give good title to the property to be conveyed by her.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Specific Performance, Dec. Dig. § 131.*]

2. APPEAL AND ERROR (§ 80*)—DECREES APPEALABLE—FINAL DECREES.

Since the decree did not adjudicate that plaintiff had a marketable title to her lot, or the ultimate right of title to the lot conveyed by defendant K. to defendant W., either as between such defendants or as to plaintiff's rights, and did not operate to cancel the deed to W. until it was ascertained that plaintiff could give good title, the decree was not final as to the ultimate right of specific performance, so as to be appealable.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Appeal and Error, Cent. Dig. §§ 491-509; Dec. Dig. § 80.*]

3. PLEADING (§ 236*)—DISCRETION OF TRIAL COURT—ALLOWING AMENDMENTS.

The requirement of the decree, in a suit for specific performance of an agreement to exchange lots, that defendant serve upon plaintiff within a stated time any objections to plaintiff's title to her lot, required such objections to be set up by a pleading, so that there was no abuse of discretion in permitting grounds of objection served upon plaintiff within the stated time to be amended by adding other grounds, in the absence of a showing that defendant knew of such additional grounds when the original grounds were served, especially as plaintiff had better sources of information as to any defects in her title than defendant, and did not offer to show her chain of title.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Pleading, Dec. Dig. § 236.*]

4. SPECIFIC PERFORMANCE (§ 95*)—DEFENSES—OBJECTIONS TO TITLE—LACHES.

It was as much plaintiff's duty to show a good title to her lot, in a suit to compel specific performance of an agreement to exchange lots, as it was defendant's duty to point out defects in plaintiff's title; and plaintiff cannot complain that defendant was negligent in pointing out defects in plaintiff's title, if she herself did not ascertain such defects before defendant discovered them.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Specific Performance, Dec. Dig. § 95.*]

Appeal from Common Pleas Circuit Court of Williamsburg County; John S. Wilson, Judge.

"To be officially reported."

Action for specific performance by Ella F. Jones against A. H. Williams and another as A. H. Williams & Co. and others. From an order granting a temporary injunction to preserve the status quo pending the suit, and an order allowing amendment of defendants' grounds of refusal to the acceptance of plaintiff's deed, plaintiff appeals. Orders affirmed, and appeals dismissed.

Willcox & Willcox and Henry E. Davis, for appellant. W. L. Bass and Walter Hazard, for respondents.

JONES, C. J. This is an action seeking the specific performance of a contract between the plaintiff, Ella F. Jones, and the defendant C. M. Kelly, for the conveyance of a certain lot of land belonging at the time of the contract to the defendant Kelly, in exchange for a certain other lot of land alleged to belong to the plaintiff. A. H. Williams & Co. were made parties defendant as the grantees of the same lot in question; the allegation being that the said A. H. Williams & Co. had accepted a deed for the said premises with notice and knowledge of the contract between Kelly and the plaintiff. For what purpose or with what object the defendant Hall was made a party does not appear from the record, other than is shown by the statement that he acted as agent for the defendant Kelly in making the sale of the said lot to his codefendants, A. H. Williams & Co.

The cause was heard by Judge D. A. Townsend, who made a decree, January 22, 1903, adjudging that a valid contract had been made between the plaintiff and the defendant Kelly for the exchange and conveyance of the said lots, respectively, by each to the other; that the defendants A. H. Williams & Co. had accepted, with notice of the rights of the plaintiff, a conveyance from the defendant Kelly of the lot contracted by the latter to be conveyed to the plaintiff, adjudging that plaintiff is entitled to specific performance of the contract, and directing that defendant Kelly make good and sufficient title to plaintiff for said lot "on her making good and sufficient title to him (O. M. Kelly) to her lot, the lot last described in the complaint." But by the terms of the said decree Judge Townsend expressly declined to pass upon the question as to whether the plaintiff could make a good and sufficient title to her lot, declaring that he would not then "pass upon the validity of plaintiff's title, because it has not been brought into court, and because it may be necessary that testimony be taken respecting its validity." By the same decree, it was further directed that the plaintiff should file her proposed deed for her lot with the clerk of said court, within a time fixed, "deed to remain in the custody of clerk until the further order of this court," and the defendants were required within a period named to notify their acceptance or rejection of such title so tendered, "and if they refuse said deed the grounds of refusal shall be served along with the notice."

Leave was also therein granted to any party to apply to the court, or to a judge at chambers, "for such further orders as may be necessary to carry out the provisions of this decree." The decree further declared "that the deed of conveyance of the lot in question from C. M. Kelly to A. H. Williams & Co. be and is hereby canceled and annulled," but it is apparent from the general tenor and terms of the decree as a whole that this pronouncement of the decree was predicated entirely upon the right of the plaintiff to a specific performance, and that this latter right was held to be dependent upon her ultimate ability "to make good sufficient title to her lot," which she had contracted to convey in exchange. No adjudication appears to have been made by this decree of any rights or equities existing between the defendant C. M. Kelly and A. H. Williams & Co., arising out of the sale and conveyance of the Kelly lot by the former to the latter.

*For other cases see same topic and section NUMBER in Dec. Dig. & Am. Dig. Key No. Series & Rep'r Indexes

In compliance with the requirements of that decree, the plaintiff filed her proposed deed, and the defendants in due time served a notice of refusal to accept the deed, accompanying the same with a statement of certain grounds for such refusal, setting up alleged defects in the title of the plaintiff to the lot, objecting that the deed should be made to defendants A. H. Williams & Co., and not to defendant C. M. Kelly, and reserving or attempting to reserve the right "to add further grounds of refusal, if any be discovered." A notice by defendant of intention to appeal from the decree of Judge Townsend was duly served, but the appeal was afterwards formally abandoned.

On October 11, 1905, by consent of all parties, an order of reference was made "to take the testimony upon the objections of defendants to accepting plaintiff's deed of conveyance," but no further proceedings were thereafter had in the cause until the year 1910. It appears, however, from the letters and affidavits in the record that during this interval some efforts looking to a statement of the matter in controversy out of court were made by the counsel for the plaintiff, upon the one hand, and the defendants Williams & Co., upon the other.

Some attempt having been made or negotiations begun between the plaintiff and the defendant C. M. Kelly for an exchange of deeds for the lots in question out of court and in disregard of any rights of A. H. Williams & Co., on the 25th of April, 1910, upon the motion of the defendants last named, a temporary restraining order to preserve the status was granted by Judge Wilson, and a rule issued, requiring the plaintiff and the defendant C. M. Kelly to show cause why an injunction against the execution and delivery by the one to the other of them of any deeds for the lots in question should not be continued until the final decree in this suit. Upon hearing the return to this rule, and the affidavits in support of and against the granting of such injunction, which affidavits set forth substantially the facts and proceedings already recited, Judge Wilson granted an order, continuing in full force the injunction against the exception of the deeds until the further order of the court, but requiring the execution of a proper injunction bond by the defendants A. H. Williams & Co. Upon the same day (May 11, 1910) this order was granted, an order was made, with the consent of the attorneys for all parties, substituting a new referee, instead of the one named in the order of October 11, 1905, already mentioned.

Thereafter, on August 4, 1910, upon due notice, and upon affidavits made by the defendants, who are members of the firm of A. H. Williams & Co., and by the attorneys representing the said defendants, an order was made by Judge Wilson, allowing the said defendants to amend the notice and grounds of refusal to accept the deed filed by plaintiff in pursuance of the decree of Judge Townsend already mentioned; the amendment so granted being the addition of an objection that such deed could not operate to convey a good title, for the reason averred that said plaintiff was and is seised merely of an estate for the life of another in the said premises, and was and is not seised of a fee-simple title therein. In support of the motion of such leave to amend, affidavits, as stated, were submitted to the general purport that the said defendants Williams & Co. had been misled by the acts, conduct, and assurances of the defendant C. M. Kelly into the belief that he was defending in this action the title which he had executed to the said defendants Williams & Co., that the change of attitude of the defendant C. M. Kelly in the case had only recently been apparent, and that the defect in the title of the plaintiff to the lot in question, now sought to be made an objection to the acceptance of the deed by the plaintiff therefor, had been discovered for the first time on the day before such affidavits were made. There are also averments of facts in the affidavits, tending to excuse any delay on the part of the defendants A. H. Williams & Co. in bringing the cause to a final hearing.

The plaintiff now appeals, both from the said order of injunction and from the order allowing the amendment to the grounds of refusal to accept the plaintiff's deed, upon several exceptions to each order.

Considering first the grounds of appeal from the order of injunction, the question substantially presented by these exceptions is as to how far Judge Townsend's decree is to be regarded as a final adjudication of the rights of the parties to this action. Without stating in detail the contentions of the appellant upon this point, analysis of the decree in question will show that it did adjudge that the plaintiff is entitled to a specific performance of the agreement for the exchange of the lot involved in this controversy, provided the respective titles to the same be found to be marketable. But it is apparent upon a consideration of the entire decree that it was not thereby adjudicated that the plaintiff then had a marketable title to the lot to be conveyed by her, since the question as to the title to this lot was thereby expressly reserved for future determination, and a reference was therein directed for the ascertainment of the facts in this particular. It cannot be said that this decree finally adjudicates the matter of the ultimate right of title to the lot which had been conveyed by the defendant Kelly to the defendants Williams & Co., either as between the said defendants themselves or as regards the rights of the plaintiff.

[1] It is further apparent from the general tenor of the whole decree that the phrases used therein with reference to the cancellation of the deed from the defendant Kelly to the defendants Williams & Co. were intended merely as an expression of the right to which the plaintiff would be entitled in this particular, upon its finally being made to appear that the plaintiff could convey a good title to the lot contracted to be transferred by her in exchange. It is manifest that the language referred to was not intended as a determination of the rights of the defendants Kelly and Williams & Co. as between themselves; and that the cancellation was not proposed to be effective until it should be ascertained that the plaintiff could give a good title to the property to be conveyed by her.

[2] It is clear that there has been no final determination of the rights of the parties, in so far as the ultimate right to specific performance is concerned, and the decree therefore is not a final decree in this particular. Where a decree, even though it does adjudicate some of the issues in a cause, leaves other issues open for future determination, and where the ultimate rights of the parties are left dependent upon the conclusion to be reached upon such unadjudicated issues, it cannot be said that such decree is a final determination of the rights of the parties. Cauthen v. Cauthen, 70 S. C. 167, 49 S. E. 821; Lowndes v. Miller, 25 S. C. 119; Adickes v. Allison, 21 S. C. 259; Donaldson v. Banks, 4 S. C. 106. The exceptions to the order of injunction must therefore be overruled, and the appeal from said order is dismissed.

As to the appeal from the order allowing the amendment to the grounds of objection by the defendant to the title tendered by the plaintiff, but three specifications of alleged error appear to be presented for consideration.

The first contention on the part of the appellants as to this order is that the defendants A. H. Williams & Co. are now precluded from testing the validity of plaintiff's title to the lot to be conveyed by her, by reason of the alleged adjudication by the decree of Judge Townsend with regard to the right to the cancellation of the deeds of

C. M. Kelly to the said defendants, in consequence whereof it is claimed by appellant that A. H. Williams & Co. have no interest in the premises in question, and therefore no right of objection to the title to be executed by the plaintiff for the lot to be conveyed by her. The conclusions already announced, however, as to the true purport of the decree of Judge Townsend, shows that no such adjudication of the rights of the said defendants has been made, but that the right to cancellation of the deed to said Williams & Co. was to be dependent upon the question reserved for future determination as to whether the plaintiff could give good title to the lot to be conveyed by her. Indeed, the contention of the plaintiff upon this point is at war with the express terms of the decree of Judge Townsend, which makes use of the plural word "defendants" in describing those who are to have the right to serve notice of objections to the title to be tendered by plaintiff, and does not even by implication limit the right to make such objections to the defendant C. M. Kelly.

[3] It is further urged by the appellant that the allowance of the amendment to the grounds of objection by defendants to the plaintiff's title to the lot in question is in effect a modification of the decree of Judge Townsend, for the reason that by the decree defendants were required to serve upon the plaintiff a notice of such grounds within a limited time, which has long since expired. As to this proposition, it is to be noted that certain "grounds" were served along with the notice of objection and within the time limited by the decree, and it is further to be observed that there is nothing in the terms of the decree which can be construed as declaring that defendants should be precluded thereafter from interposing additional grounds which might subsequently be discovered. The requirement as to the service of the grounds of objection to the plaintiff's title cannot be regarded otherwise than as being in the nature of a direction that the defendant should set up such objections by pleading the same; and such pleading, like all other pleadings in the cause, would be subject to amendment at the discretion of the court.

It is true that it was held in Brown v. Easterling, 59 S. C. 472, 38 S. E. 118, that, where by order of one circuit judge a demurrer to a complaint is sustained and leave granted plaintiff to serve an amended complaint within a limited time, a succeeding circuit judge had no power to extend such time and permit such amended complaint to be served at a later date, where the application for such extension is made after the expiration of the time originally fixed; but the question here presented is materially different, as here the defendants did serve the notice and grounds of objection within the time required, and merely sought leave thereafter to amend the same by setting up an additional ground of objection, not known to defendants or their counsel at the time the original grounds were served. Under these circumstances, in the absence of any showing that defendants or their counsel had knowledge of such additional ground at the time of such original service, it cannot be said that any lack of sound discretion was shown in permitting such amendment, especially in view of the fact that plaintiff had better sources of information than the defendants as to the existence of any defect in her own title, and also for the reason that, using the phrase of Judge Townsend's decree, the plaintiff has not "brought her title into court," which is to say that no offer to show a chain of title has ever been made by her. The case is strictly analogous to that of an amended pleading ordered to be served by a certain day and actually so served, as to which it cannot with any show of reason be contended that no further amendment thereof could ever thereafter be allowed, even to set up facts bearing on the issue which were discovered subsequent to such former amendment.

There is no showing in this case of an abuse of discretion in granting the motion for such leave to amend, but, on the contrary, the amendment allowed appears to be in furtherance of justice. No trial of the issue as to the sufficiency of plaintiff's title has ever been had, and, so far as appears, no reference has ever been held under the order requiring the taking of the testimony upon that issue; and there is no showing that any material delay or other injustice will result from the granting of the order allowing such amendment. No reason has been shown, therefore, for an interference by this court with the discretion exercised by the circuit judge in making such order. Hall v. Woodward, 30 S. C. 564, 9 S. E. 684; Stallings v. Barrett, 26 S. C. 474, 2 S. E. 483; Trumbo v. Finley, 18 S. C. 305; Chichester v. Hastie, 9 S. C. 330.

[4] As to the matter of alleged negligence and laches, and as to the alleged lack of good faith on the part of the defendants in applying for leave to make such amendment, there is no showing of a lack of good faith in the particular charged and no proof of such negligence or laches as would defeat the right to set up the matter of defense sought to be interposed. Indeed, in so far as concerns the matter of the delay in bringing the cause to a final determination upon the unadjudicated issues, the record does not show that the parties defendant are in any greater fault than the party plaintiff; and, as to any alleged negligence or laches in the matter of discovering and bringing to the attention of the court the defect now alleged to exist in the plaintiff's title, it was as much the duty of the plaintiff to show a good title, as it was that of the defendant to point out any defects therein, and the plaintiff had at least an equal opportunity with the defendant to discover such defects. If she did not ascertain the defects in the title now alleged by the defendants at any time prior to the pointing out thereof by the defendants, she cannot complain that the defendants were any more negligent than herself; if she did previously know that such defect existed, she failed herself to do her duty, as good faith required her to bring it promptly to the attention of the court. If no such defect, however, exists in the title of the plaintiff no harm can result from the allowance of the amendment, since the issue as to the sufficiency of the title made by the objections originally filed has never yet been tried.

The orders of the circuit court are affirmed, and the appeals dismissed.

GARY, A. J., and WOODS and HYDRICK, JJ., concur.

(90 S. C. 14)

STELTS v. MARTIN et al.

(Supreme Court of South Carolina. Nov. 11, 1911.)

1. MORTGAGES (§ 58*)—REQUISITES—ATTESTATION.

A mortgage not attested by two witnesses is invalid as a legal mortgage, but must be sustained as an equitable mortgage, if actually signed and intended.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Mortgages, Cent. Dig. §§ 153, 154; Dec. Dig. § 58.*]

2. WITNESSES (§ 159*)—COMPETENCY—TRANSACTION WITH DECEDENT.

Under Code Civ. Proc. 1902, § 400, prohibiting a party to testify to transactions with his adversary's decedent, etc., plaintiff could not testify on an issue of execution of a mortgage that he saw the deceased mortgagor execute the mortgage.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Witnesses, Cent. Dig. §§ 664, 666-669, 671-682; Dec. Dig. § 159.*]

3. MORTGAGES (§ 74*)—EXECUTION—EVIDENCE—SUFFICIENCY.

Evidence held to show that decedent signed a mortgage, intending it as such.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Mortgages, Cent. Dig. § 172; Dec. Dig. § 74.*]

4. LIMITATION OF ACTIONS (§ 22*)—FORECLOSURE OF MORTGAGE.

A mortgage invalid as a legal mortgage through insufficient attestation, but enforceable as an equitable mortgage, is governed by Code Civ. Proc. 1902, § 111, limiting the time to suits on sealed instruments, other than notes or bonds to pay money only, to 20 years, and not by the 6-year statute.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Limitation of Actions, Dec. Dig. § 22.*]

5. HUSBAND AND WIFE (§ 48*)—MORTGAGES—PAYMENT—PRESUMPTIONS.

Payment of a mortgage from wife to husband cannot be presumed from his failure to sue to foreclose before or after their separation until her death.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Husband and Wife, Dec. Dig. § 48.*]

6. HUSBAND AND WIFE (§ 176*)—MORTGAGE BY WIFE—PURPOSE.

Evidence held to show that a wife's mortgage was given for the benefit of her separate estate, as affecting its validity.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Husband and Wife, Dec. Dig. § 176.*]

7. BONDS (§ 135*)—AMOUNT OF RECOVERY.

Generally recovery on an obligation cannot exceed the penal sum stated therein.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Bonds, Cent. Dig. §§ 241, 243, 259; Dec. Dig. § 135.*]

8. MORTGAGES (§ 489*)—RECOVERY—AMOUNT.

A mortgage for the "penal sum of eight hundred dollars" for payment of that amount, "with interest" at a specified rate, is enforceable for the full principal and interest.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Mortgages, Cent. Dig. §§ 1425-1430; Dec. Dig. § 489.*]

Appeal from Common Pleas Circuit Court of Abbeville County; R. C. Watts, Judge. "To be officially reported."

Action by W. E. Stelts against W. B. Martin and another. Judgment for defendants, and plaintiff appeals. Reversed.

W. N. Graydon, for appellant. W. P. Greene, for respondents.

WOODS, J. The plaintiff, W. E. Stelts, commenced this action on June 15, 1910, against W. B. Martin and Pearl M. Beckwith, devisees under the will of Ina H. Stelts, and W. B. Martin, as executor, to foreclose a mortgage alleged to have been executed by Ina H. Stelts on September 1, 1889. On hearing the pleadings and the testimony taken by the master the circuit court held that, as the mortgage had not been executed as required by law, it could have force only as an equitable mortgage, and that for that reason it became barred by the statute of limitations six years after its maturity. As this conclusion, if correct, was decisive, the circuit judge did not consider the other questions of law made in the pleadings and argument now brought to this court in the exceptions of the plaintiff and the additional grounds for sustaining the judgment submitted by counsel for the defendant W. B. Martin. The defendant Pearl M. Beckwith not only filed no answer to the complaint, but in her testimony admitted that the claim of the plaintiff was just, and expressed her intention to pay her share of it without respect to the result of the litigation. The defendant appeared at the references and in court by counsel, but was not present and offered no evidence. The plaintiff and Mrs. Ina H. Stelts were husband and wife. W. B. Martin and Mrs. Beckwith are children of Mrs. Stelts by a former marriage.

Taking up the points in logical order, without respect to whether they are made in the exceptions or the additional grounds for sustaining the judgment, we consider, first, whether there was evidence that Mrs. Stelts executed a paper having the effect of either a legal or an equitable mortgage. The plaintiff failed to produce the paper or the persons whose names are written as witnesses on the copy in the clerk's office, or to account for the absence of the witnesses, and, when sworn as a witness, the plaintiff admitted that Mrs. Julia Williams, whose name appears on the record along with that of Mrs. Sassard who did sign as a witness, was not present when the paper was executed. Whatever presumption there may have been of the due execution of the paper from its record was thus destroyed by the direct admission of the plaintiff.

[1] The execution not having taken place in the presence of two witnesses, and not being attested by the signatures of two witnesses, the paper cannot be held to be a valid legal mortgage. But if it was actually signed by Mrs. Stelts as a mortgage, and intended to secure a debt of $800, it must be treated as an equitable mortgage binding on the parties. Bryce v. Massey, 85 S. C. 127, 14 S. E. 768; Greesh v. Long, 72 S. C. 25, 51 S. E. 614.

[2] On this question of fact, the testimony of the plaintiff that he was present and saw the paper executed was clearly incompetent under section 400 of the Code of Procedure of 1902. All that the plaintiff says with respect to the execution of the paper must therefore be excluded from consideration, as relating to a transaction between himself and his deceased wife. The subject has been considered and the rule of exclusion stated in Merck v. Merck, 89 S. C. 347, 71 S. E. 969.

[3] But in letters to Mrs. Beckwith, introduced by the plaintiff, the defendant Martin admitted that his mother signed the paper, received the consideration, and intended to execute a valid mortgage; and Mrs. Beckwith admitted on the witness stand the validity of the plaintiff's claim. From this evidence no other fair inference can be drawn than that Mrs. Stelts signed the paper, and that she intended it to be, according to its purport, a valid mortgage on the property described in favor of the plaintiff for $800.

[4] We are unable to agree with the circuit judge that a paper, in form a mortgage and lacking a witness or a seal or other formal requisite of a legal mortgage, but valid between the parties as an equitable mortgage, is barred by the statute of limitations six years after its maturity. The paper is more than "a sealed note or personal bond for the payment of money only." It is a sealed instrument importing an obligation to pay money and a lien as between the obligor and obligee upon the land to secure payment. This being so, in a controversy between the obligor and obligee, the action does not fall under the six year statutory limitation, but under section 111 of the Code of Civil Procedure, providing a limitation of 20 years in "an action upon a sealed instrument other than a sealed note or personal bond for the payment of money only." The instrument was dated September 1, 1889, and fell due according to its terms on the 1st day of December, 1890. The action, having been commenced on June 15, 1910, was not barred by the statute above cited.

Nor is the defendant aided by section 2449 of the Civil Code of 1902, providing that "no mortgage, or deed having the effect of a mortgage, no judgment, decree or other lien on real estate shall constitute a lien upon any real estate after the lapse of twenty years from the date of the creation of the same. * * *." It was decided by a divided court in Lyles v. Lyles, 71 S. C. 391, 51 S. E. 113, that the period of 20 years commences to run, not from the date of the mortgage, but from its maturity.

[5] Defendant's counsel further contends that the case is one where the court should infer payment from lapse of time, coupled with other circumstances leading to that inference. Plaintiff, the mortgagee, and his wife, the mortgagor, lived together many years after the paper was executed. Certainly payment could not be presumed from plaintiff's failure to bring an action of foreclosure against his wife while he was living with her. Nor is it to be presumed from his failure to sue his wife after their separation, which occurred six or seven years before the action was brought, for nonaction might well be attributed to delicacy of feeling. So, also, the failure to produce the paper is entitled to little weight as evidence of payment in view of plaintiff's testimony that it had not been paid, and that, after having it recorded, he had put it in his trunk, and had last seen it among Mrs. Stelts' land papers. Besides, the testimony of Mrs. Beckwith and the letters of Martin show an admission of the debt rather than a claim of payment on the part of Mrs. Stelts and the defendants. The letters of Martin show further that the mortgage was burned by Mrs. Stelts.

[6] The facts fail to support the defense that the mortgage was not given for the benefit of the separate estate of Mrs. Stelts, a married woman, and that it was therefore invalid under the statute of 1887 (19 Stat. 819), governing the validity of papers executed by married women at the time this mortgage was given. Mrs. Sassard testified: "I have heard Mrs. Stelts often talk about her affairs, and heard her say that, if it had not been for the money Mrs. Stelts left her, she would have lost her property."

And in one of his letters to Mrs. Beckwith the defendant Martin wrote: "About papa's mortgage, when Uncle John Holcombe was about to break mama up and all looked so dark for her, she was living where Aunt Janie is now. She gave papa a mortgage for $800. The man at that time wanted $500 for that place and the house needed repairs, and they thought $300 would do it, and they wanted to save a home out of the ruins. So Mrs. Sassard was about to move to Charleston, and they got her to witness it, and then papa sent it to Aunt Julia, and got her to sign it. Then they recorded it." This is the only evidence on the subject, and it is affirmative proof that the mortgage was executed and the money actually paid for the benefit of the separate estate of Mrs. Stelts. It also leads to the inference that the money was borrowed and the mortgage executed to enable Mrs. Stelts to pay her creditors, rather than to an inference that the mortgage was executed to defeat creditors.

[7] The general rule is, as respondent contends, that in a suit on an obligation containing the statement of a penal sum the recovery cannot exceed that sum. Ellis v. Sanders, 34 S. C. 236, 13 S. E. 417. But when the terms of the paper distinctly provide otherwise, the general rule must yield to the contract of the parties.

[8] The recital of the mortgage is: "Whereas, I the said Ina H. Stelts, in and by my certain note and obligation bearing date the first day of September eighteen hundred and eighty nine, stand firmly held bound unto William E. Stelts in the penal sum of eight hundred dollars, conditioned for the payment of the full and just sum of eight hundred dollars to be paid on or by the first day of December, 1890, with interest at ten per cent per annum after maturity until the said eight hundred dollars is paid, as in and by the said note and conditions thereof, reference being made thereto had, will more fully appear." The penal sum and the principal sum to be paid are the same, but the mortgage expressly provides for the payment of more than the penal sum, namely, the penal sum $800, and interest thereon. This being the contract, the parties must stand by it. The plaintiff is therefore entitled to a judgment of foreclosure for the sum of $800 and interest at the rate of 10 per cent. per annum from December 1, 1890.

It is the judgment of this court that the judgment of the circuit court be reversed.

JONES, C. J., GARY, A. J., and HYDRICK, J., concur.

(90 S. C. 61)

WALLACE v. WALLACE et al.

(Supreme Court of South Carolina. Nov. 15, 1911.)

1. WILLS (§ 684*)—DISPOSAL OF TRUST PROPERTY—ACCRUED DIVIDENDS.

Where a testator devised property in trust to pay to his daughter the annual interest, income, or profits, undivided dividends and profits upon corporate stock held under the trust, which accrued during the life of the daughter, and were represented in part by stock dividends, and in part by the increase in book value of the shares, belonged to the life tenant, and not to the remainderman.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Wills, Cent. Dig. §§ 1616-1618; Dec. Dig. § 684.*]

2. LIFE ESTATES (§ 15*)—EQUITABLE ESTOPPEL.

Where a trust fund belonging to one for life, remainder over, was invested in corporate stock, which stock accumulated a large surplus, the failure of the life tenant to claim the accrued profits, though she knew of their existence, did not estop her from disposing of such profit by her will, for an estoppel is based upon some prejudice to the opposite party from the action or nonaction of the one sought to be estopped.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Life Estates, Dec. Dig. § 15.*]

3. LIFE ESTATES (§ 20*)—LOSS—APPORTIONMENT.

Where property was bequeathed in trust, the income and interest to one for life, with remainder over, and a substituted trustee, who became such long after the creation of the trust, renewed a mortgage, adding as principal a large amount of unpaid interest, due to the life tenant, and the mortgage security failed, the loss must be apportioned between the remainderman and the life tenant, for neither should have an advantage over the other, and each must share the loss as they would have shared it, had it occurred when they first became entitled to the fund, and, furthermore, the will having specifically bequeathed the interest from the fund to the life tenant, the remainderman was not entitled to the entire proceeds of the mortgage security, to the exclusion of the life tenant.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Life Estates, Cent. Dig. § 41; Dec. Dig. § 20.*]

Appeal from Common Pleas Circuit Court of Richland County; George E. Prince, Judge.

"To be officially reported."

Action by H. B. Wallace, as trustee of Eliza Wallace and in his own right, against Andrew Wallace and others. There was a decree for defendants Murdoch, and plaintiff excepted and appealed, while defendants Murdoch excepted and prosecuted a cross-appeal. Affirmed, with modifications.

The opinion of the circuit judge was as follows:

"This action is brought by the plaintiff as trustee of the estate of the late Miss Eliza Wallace to obtain the construction of the will of the late Col. Andrew Wallace, and to determine the parties between whom the estate is now divisible, and for settlement of said estate and discharge of the trustee, to which action all parties who under any construction of the will might have an interest are made parties.

"The cause was referred to the master to ascertain and report his conclusions of law and fact, but upon the reference it was agreed by counsel that the master do not report his conclusions of law or his conclusions of fact relative to the ownership of the funds derived from the sale of bank stock; it being agreed that the questions of law and the facts relative to the bank stock be left for the determination of the court. Under this agreement the master has filed his report, to which there is no exception, finding that all parties are properly before the court and the minors represented by their guardians, and that the facts stated in the complaint are true. And the cause came on to be heard before me at the first session of the spring term of the court of common pleas for Richland county.

"There is no dispute as to the facts necessary for the determination of the questions raised, and I shall content myself with briefly stating the substance of the facts necessary for an understanding of the conclusions of law reached upon the questions raised.

"In 1862 Mr. Andrew Wallace died, leaving his will, by which his estate was distributed among his 10 children. By the twenty-first clause of his will he directed that the shares devised and bequeathed to his children, whether delivered or advanced before his death, or whether the same be given specifically or generally in the distribution of the rest and residue, as well that they are to receive upon his death as that which they get after the death of their mother, also any share or shares which may return to them upon the death of any one or more of his children without leaving descendants living at the time of such child's death, as is hereinafter more particularly provided; and all and every estate or interest which his children shall take under his will is 'given to my said children for their respective lives only, and no longer, and such share or interest shall be held for my said children by the following trustees and upon the following trusts and limitations and conditions, and no others; that is to say: I give, devise and bequeath the respective shares of my children * * * and Eliza Wallace to my wife, Mrs. Sarah Wallace, and to my two sons, Edward Wallace and William Wallace * * * the said shares to be held by the said trustees, respectively, to and for the following uses and purposes; that is to say: The shares of my said daughters are to be held by my said trustees in trust for the sole and separate use, benefit and behoof of my said daughters, respectively, for and during the term of their respective lives, and no longer, and neither the corpus nor the income or profits of such shares is to be in any manner liable for the debts, contracts or liabilities, nor to be in any manner under the control of any of the husbands of my said daughters, respectively, or of any husband either of them may hereafter marry; and I hereby authorize, direct and empower the said trustees to pay over to my said daughters, respectively, during their respective lives, the annual income, interest or profits of their respective shares, taking the receipt of such daughter, respectively, for the same, which receipt alone shall constitute proper acquittance and discharge for such income or profits; and I expressly stipulate and provide that the receipt or discharge of the husbands of my said daughters shall not have the effect of discharging or releasing the trustees from their liability for such income or profits.' By the twenty-second clause of his will he provides: 'Upon the death of any one of my said children, the share or portion hereinbefore given to him or her for life shall be held by such trustees, respectively, in trust for such child or children as my said son or daughter may leave living at the time of his or her death, share and share alike, the child or children of any deceased child of my said son or daughter to take among them the share which their parent would have taken if living. But in the event any of my said sons or daughters shall die without leaving a child or children, or the child or children of any deceased child living at the time of the death of such son or daughter, then the share of such son or daughter shall be equally divided amongst my surviving children and the child or children of a deceased child, these latter taking among them the share which their parent would have taken if living; and the same shall be held subject to all the trusts, limitations and conditions of this will in regard to the shares of my children hereinbefore expressed.'

"Edward Wallace, one of the life tenants and trustees of Miss Eliza Wallace, died during the War, just after his father, unmarried and without issue, Mrs. Agnes Taylor, another life tenant, died without issue on 22d November, 1884, and Mrs. Sarah Wallace, the mother, died in 1880; and the portions of the estate devised them were, under the terms of the will, distributed amongst the surviving children of testator. William Wallace, the last surviving trustee of Miss Eliza Wallace, died on 13th November, 1902, and plaintiff, upon the application of Miss Eliza Wallace, was duly substituted as trustee by this court on the 18th of December, 1902, and as such came into the possession of the estate, a schedule of which is annexed to the master's report.

"All of testator's children are now dead, Miss Eliza having last died unmarried and without issue on 12th December, 1907, leaving a will by which she devised and bequeathed to her grandnephew, A. W. Murdoch, whatever portion of her trust estate she had a right to dispose of. Upon the death of the life tenant, the trustee proceeded to liquidate the estate for the purposes of division, when he was confronted with the difficulty which culminates in this action.

"The master reports the sales and contracts of sale made by the trustee full and fair, and recommends that they be confirmed, and in this I concur, and it is so ordered.

"Three questions are raised, which I proceed to dispose of:

"(1) Whether the limitation over to the trustee of the estate after the death of the life tenant without issue living at the time of her death is too remote?

"(2) If not too remote who are entitled to take thereunder?

"The limitation is to 'my surviving children and the child or children of a deceased child, these latter taking amongst them the share which the parent would have taken if living.' The limitation to surviving children prevents the interposition of the rule as to remoteness. Selman v. Robertson, 46 S. C. 263, 24 S. E. 187. And the rule that, where the limitation over is to a class after the happening of an event certain, only those who can bring themselves into the class at the happening of the event will take, excludes the great-grandchildren of the testator. Clark v. Clark, 19 S. C. 350; Hayne v. Irvine, 25 S. C. 289; Shanks v. Mills, 25 S. C. 358; Brown v. McCall, 44 S. C. 503, 22 S. E. 823. Therefore the limitation over is good, only the persons answering the description of children of testator's deceased child take to the exclusion of his great-grandchildren, the children of grandchildren who predeceased the life tenant.

"The third question is more difficult, and it is:

"(3) Whether the accretions of the bank stock, as shown by the difference in value of the stock at the time of its acquisition by the trust estate, and the value at the time of the death of the life tenant, due to accumulations in the interval of earnings represented in part by extra shares declared as stock dividends and in part by increase in book value of the shares from the retention of earnings undistributed, should pass to the devisee of the life tenant or to the remaindermen?

"The stock in question does not appear to have been a part of the original trust estate, but is presumably investments made by the trustee for the estate, and is stock in live, going banks now engaged in business in the cities of Columbia and Charleston, and the book value is obtained by adding the undistributed surplus and undivided profits of the respective banks to the par value of the shares. On behalf of the remaindermen, it is contended that the intention of the testator disclosed by his will above quoted is to give the life tenant only such 'annual interest, income or profits' as could be paid over annually to and receipted for by the life tenant during her life, and all undivided and undistributed accretions or profits beyond these to the remaindermen; and, further, the life tenant is now estopped from claiming and has waived any right she may have had by conduct and acquiescence.

"I do not think that either of these contentions should prevail, and will proceed to state my conclusions as to same: To support the claim of estoppel and waiver, the plaintiff relies upon the positions that the stock dividend of the Bank of Charleston, N. B. A., was distributed in 1893; that the plaintiff was appointed trustee upon the application of the life tenant, and after his appointment furnished the life tenant statements (Exhibits C and D) in January, 1903, and in February, 1907, in which the stock is listed and its par, and in the latter statement the supposed value given; and that the evidence does not show that the life tenant made any claim for these accretions. I do not think, however, that these positions are sufficient to warrant the application of the doctrine of estoppel and waiver against the life tenant. Estoppel and waiver should ordinarily be based upon knowledge on the part of the party to be estopped and some injury or prejudice resulting to the other party from nonaction after such knowledge. The evidence fails to show these necessary elements of estoppel. On the contrary, it may be reasonably inferred from the testimony of the plaintiff and E. B. Wallace, son and administrator of the former trustee, that the life tenant did not have such knowledge; and certainly it cannot be contended that the rights of the remaindermen have been prejudiced by the life tenant's nonaction. Moreover, the will of the life tenant shows that she intended to claim for herself and her devisee everything to which she might be legally entitled. I therefore find and hold that the life tenant and her devisee are not estopped to assert their rights as to this stock.

"With regard to the further question as to whether the increment to the bank stock belonged to the life tenant or to the remaindermen, my conclusions are as follows:

"Miss Eliza Wallace died on 12th December, 1907, leaving of force her will, of which the defendant J. W. Murdoch is the executor, and by which she gave all the property which she had the right to dispose of by will to the defendant A. W. Murdoch. The estate in possession of the trustee for Miss Eliza Wallace consisted at the time of her death, among other property, of the following shares of bank stock: 13 shares of the stock of the National Loan & Exchange Bank of Columbia, of the par value of $100 each; 9 shares of the State Bank, of the par value of $100 each; and 19½ shares of the Bank of Charleston, N. B. A., of the par value of $100 each. This stock was all sold by the trustee after the death of Miss Eliza Wallace, and he now holds the funds derived from such sale for the purposes of distribution among the persons entitled thereto. The evidence shows that during the currency of the life estate it was the policy of the several banks in which this stock was held not to distribute their entire annual earnings as dividends among their stockholders, but to retain a considerable part of such earnings and allow the same to accumulate as surplus or undivided profits; and by reason of such accumulations this stock greatly enhanced in value during the time it was held by the trustee, and was sold by him at a sum correspondingly in excess of the amount of the trust fund originally invested therein. The sum realized upon the sale, which represents the enhanced price the stock sold for due to these accumulations of earnings during the currency of the life estate, is claimed by the representatives of the life tenant as earnings or profits to which the life tenant was entitled and which passed under her will; while, on the other hand, this sum is claimed by the trustee as part of the corpus of the trust estate passing to the remaindermen under the will of Andrew Wallace. The evidence shows that on October 1, 1897, 10 shares of the stock of the Central National Bank of Columbia were issued to the trustee of Miss Eliza Wallace, this stock having at that date the book value of approximately $134.41 per share. In 1903 the Central National Bank of Columbia was consolidated with the National Loan & Exchange Bank of Columbia, and 13 shares of the latter bank were issued to the trustee in lieu of the 10 shares previously held in the Central National Bank of Columbia, the excess of the book value on the 10 shares being thus converted into three extra shares, and upon this new issue each share having a book value of approximately par. At the death of Miss Eliza Wallace, each of these 13 shares had acquired a book value of $144.02, and the 13 shares have been sold by the trustee at $150 per share; the aggregate increment received, which the evidence shows to be clearly due to the accumulation of undistributed earnings during the currency of the life estate, being $528.68.

"As to the 19½ shares of stock in the Bank of Charleston, N. B. A., the evidence shows that these shares represent two blocks of stock which had been held by the trustee or trustees of Miss Eliza Wallace, one block, then represented by a certificate of 5 shares having a book value of $120 per share, having been issued to the trustee for Miss Eliza Wallace in 1880; and the other block, then represented by a certificate for 8 shares, having a book value of $155 per share, having become a part of the trust estate of Miss Eliza Wallace upon the death in 1884 of her sister, Mrs. Agnes Taylor. On June 24, 1893, a 50 per cent. stock dividend having been declared by this bank, these blocks of stock were increased, respectively, to 7½ shares and 12 shares, making the aggregate of 19½ shares, which have been disposed of by the trustee. This stock, when sold by the trustee, had a book value of $230 per share, and was sold for $200 per share. The aggregate increment received on account of the enhancement due to the accumulated earnings on both of said blocks of stock amounts to $2,040. The nine shares in the State Bank were purchased by the trustee in 1903 at $111 per share, the book value per share being then $110.72. At the death of Miss Eliza Wallace this stock had a book value of $115.73 per share, and was subsequently sold by the trustee for $120 per share, the aggregate increment received, which is clearly creditable to accumulated earnings, being $42.51.

"The legal question involved is one of some difficulty. The testator by his will gave the shares of his children to trustees, who were directed 'to pay over to my said sons and daughters, respectively, during their respective lives, the annual interest, income or profits of their respective shares, taking the receipts of such daughters, respectively, for the same. * * *' I regard the direction to pay over the 'income or profits' as in effect the same as a gift of the income or profits, and I do not consider that, by the direction that the trustee shall take the receipt of the daughters for the income paid them, the testator intended to limit the generality of the gift, but only to protect the estate of the daughters from the control of their husbands. In my view, therefore, the inquiry resolves itself into whether or not the increment upon the shares in question should be regarded as income or profits, or as corpus of the trust estate. This question has been fully argued before me, and I have given the same careful consideration. While upon the subject of the distributions of dividends or earnings upon stock between life tenant and remaindermen the courts are much divided, I am of the opinion that the strongest consideration of reason and justice support the rule which apportions such dividends or earnings between life tenant and remaindermen according to the time when such earnings were made, and not according to the chance action of corporate officers in withholding or declaring dividends; and I think that upon the sale of the stock, as here, in which the funds of the life estate have been invested, the increment in value due to the undivided profits or surplus earned and to the credit of the stock, though not declared by the corporation as dividends should be awarded to the life tenant. Simpson v. Millsaps, 80 Miss. 239, 31 South. 912. The evidence shows with reasonable certainty the amount of the selling price of the stock in question, which represented the value of the undistributed earnings upon the conversion of the stock into money by sale, and there appears to be no difficulty in fairly apportioning proceeds of sale between the representatives of the life tenant and the remaindermen according to the equitable rule of apportionment just stated.

"The conclusions I have reached seem to me to be also in harmony with the principles underlying the decision in Cobb v. Fant, 36 S. C. 1, 14 S. E. 959. I accordingly hold that the increment in question is profit from the bank stock and belongs to the life estate; and it is hereby adjudged and decreed that such increment be paid over by the trustee to the personal representative of Miss Eliza Wallace, or his attorneys herein, this increment amounting in the aggregate, according to the figures already stated, to $2,631.17. This fund should be paid over as ordered, together with any interest which may have accumulated thereon since the sale of the stock, less the commissions of the trustee.

"As to the Chandler mortgage, when this security came into the hands of the present trustee, it was nearly barred by time and he procured a new mortgage on the same property in substitution, in which he added to the principal $714 interest then in arrears. The mortgagor is dead and was insolvent, and the security is only worth what the land will bring at the pending foreclosure sale. Holding, as I do, that the value of the security at the time of the investment constitutes the value of the trust estate that passes to the remaindermen, it follows that the principal must be made good from the proceeds of the sale before any part thereof is applicable to the estate of the life tenant, and it is so adjudged.

"It is therefore ordered, adjudged, and decreed: That the sales and contracts of sale of the bank stock made by the trustee and reported by the master be confirmed, and that the master's report be confirmed. That the parties now entitled to participate as remaindermen in the distribution of the trust estate are testator's grandchildren, the children of his deceased children who are living at the time of the death of the life tenant, Miss Eliza Wallace, to the exclusion of his great-grandchildren, the children of his grandchildren who predeceased the said life tenant. Further ordered that from the funds in his hands the trustee, after deducting his commissions, pay the costs and expenses of this suit, including the fees fixed by the court for plaintiff's attorney and the guardians ad litem of the infant defendants; next, that he pay to J. W. Murdoch, executor of Miss Eliza Wallace, or to his attorneys herein, the sum hereinbefore adjudged to pass under her will, less his commissions in the same; and that he divide the balance into seven equal shares, and distribute one equal share thereof among testator's grandchildren, children of testator's respective children who were alive at the date of the death of the life tenant, to wit: (1) One share to the children of Dr. John Wallace, (2) one share to the children of Wm. Wallace, (3) one share to the children of Alfred Wallace, (4) one share to the children of Mrs. Murdoch, (5) one share to the children of Mrs. Pearson, (6) one share to the children of Mrs. Evans, and (7) one share to the children of Mrs. Yates—all of whom are named in the sixth paragraph of the complaint, to the exclusion of the other defendants herein; and upon such distribution being made the trustee be discharged from any and all further trusts and liability."

Green & Green, for plaintiff. Melton & Belser and J. E. Belser, for defendants.

GARY, A. J. This action involves the construction of the late Col. Andrew Wallace's will, and was brought by the plaintiff as trustee of Miss Eliza Wallace for the purpose of determining the persons to whom her estate descended, and the manner in which it is to be distributed.

The facts are fully stated in the decree of his honor, the circuit judge, which is set out in the report of the case.

[1] The first question that will be considered is whether there was error on the part of his honor, the circuit judge, in his ruling that the accretion of the bank stock, as shown by the difference in value of the stock at the time of its acquisition by the trust estate, and the value at the time of the death of the life tenant, due to accumulations in the interval of earnings, represented in part by extra shares declared as stock dividends and in part by increase in book value of the shares from the retention of earnings undistributed passed to the devisees of the life tenant, and not to the remaindermen. Where property is given in trust, the interest, income, or profits of which is to be paid to one for life, and the principal paid to another, after the death of the life tenant, questions of difficulty frequently arise in determining whether certain receipts and profits are to be regarded as income which is to go to the life tenant, or as corpus belonging to the remainderman. As a rule, the life tenant takes the interest on a trust fund from the death of a testator, but, of course, it is subject to testamentary provisions.

In the case of Cobb v. Fant, 36 S. C. 1, 14 S. E. 959, a mother transferred bank stock to a trustee, "to pay the dividend, income, issues and profits thereof, as they may accrue, to me for and during the term of my natural life, and at my death to continue the collection of the same, and divide them, that is the income and profits equally between my said daughters, for and during the terms of their natural lives," with directions for sale and division of the stock among the issue of the daughters in remainder. At the time of the transfer, undivided profits had already accrued, and while dividends were declared, and received by the mother every year, other profits were made and accumulated until the bank closed its business and distributed its assets, when the accumulated profits amounted to 400 per cent. in all. It was held that the cestui que trust for life was entitled to all the profits which accumulated after the date of the deed, but that profits already accrued at that time were a part of the corpus of the trust estate. In that case his honor, the circuit judge, decided "that the accumulated dividends are certainly profits of the stocks, and the general rule in such cases is that the profits inure to the life tenant, and to the same purport are the terms of this trust. Although there is some conflict in the authorities upon the question, it appears to me that upon principle and sound reason plaintiff is entitled to the relief demanded." In reviewing this ruling the Supreme Court said: "It is admitted that the circuit judge announced the correct rule as to all dividends declared, ordinary or extraordinary; but the trustee suggests that it does not apply to a case like this, where the extra profits have never been declared as dividends at all, so that they could not be paid over 'as they accrued,' but were retained in the bank, which, now closing out, proposes to pay these accumulated profits to the stockholders along with the original stock. He insists that in such case the rule is that the enhanced price of stock by reason of dividends earned, but not declared, will be considered as capital, and must be reinvested for the benefit of the remaindermen, and cites authorities for the doctrine. Upon general principles there may be some force in this view; but here the trust deed is the law of the case. The plaintiff had the right to make or not to make the deed as she thought best, and making it she had the right to frame the terms as she pleased; and she made them so strong that we do not feel authorized to disregard them in favor of any supposed general rule of practice upon the subject. * * * We hold that all the issues and profits which accrued after the deed was executed belong to the plaintiff, the cestui que trust, for life." The words in that case which were construed to include the enhanced value of the shares of stock are similar to these in the present case, and there is no difference in principle between the two cases; but, even if this was an open question, the authorities cited in the argument of the respondent's attorneys show that this rule is just and reasonable and should be followed.

The exceptions assigning error in this respect are therefore overruled.

[2] The next assignment of error on the part of the circuit judge which will be considered is as follows: "That he erred in holding under the facts and circumstances of this case that the life tenant was not estopped, and has not waived any rights she may have had, to claim the accretions upon said bank stock; whereas he should have held that her action in placing these shares in the hands of her trustee, the plaintiff, as part of the trust estate, her silence and the failure to claim the same during her lifetime, coupled with the facts disclosed by the letters and exhibits of the trustee to her, were sufficient to show knowledge, acquiescence, and waiver on her part, and prevents her from devising the same." For the reasons stated by the circuit judge, this exception is overruled.

[3] The last assignment of error is as follows: "That his honor erred in holding and adjudging that from the proceeds of sale under the Chandler mortgage held by H. B. Wallace, trustee, the original sum loaned to the Chandlers should be made good to the remaindermen before any part of the proceeds of such sale should go to the representatives of the estate of the life tenant; whereas it is submitted he should have found and adjudged that the Chandler bond and mortgage for $2,000 was given to H. B. Wallace, trustee, to secure $1,286 belonging to the trust estate, and $714 belonging to the individual estate of Miss Eliza Wallace, and, so holding, should have adjudged that the said bond and mortgage were owned by the trust estate and the individual estate of Miss Eliza Wallace in proportion to these amounts, respectively, and that the representatives of the estate of Miss Eliza Wallace, the life tenant, were entitled to share in all proceeds of sale of the mortgaged property in proportion to the individual interest and ownership of Miss Eliza Wallace in said bond and mortgage."

In the case of Hagan v. Platt, 48 N. J. Eq. 206, 21 Atl. 860, the rule is thus correctly stated in the syllabus of the case by the court: "When a fund is held in trust for the benefit of one person for life, and to go to another in remainder, and a loss of a part of the fund occurs arising out of insufficient security of a particular investment, such loss is to be apportioned between the tenant for life and remainderman, in the proportion which the principal sum involved in the insufficient security bears to the interest due upon it at the time when the security is realized upon, and the amount of the loss determined." In the case of In re Tuttle, 49 N. J. Eq. 259, 24 Atl. 1, the principle is thus stated: "The remaindermen claim that, as it is less than the principal invested, it all belongs to them, that the responsibility for all loss to the fund must be charged to the life tenant. This insistence throws the responsibility, for the management of the trust, upon the life tenant, and that is not right. If the trustee can be charged with negligence or bad faith, he should be held responsible, but, if he be not so chargeable, and a loss happens from causes over which neither he nor the life tenant nor the remaindermen had control, it should not fall upon the life tenant alone. The trust does not exempt the remaindermen from possible perils through failure of investments, and throw these perils entirely upon the life tenant. The trust is instituted so that a person impartial between the life tenant and remaindermen may put the fund in a situation where it will not only yield income, but also be safe. If that situation fails, the loss should be equally apportioned between the innocent life tenant and remaindermen, according to their respective rights, at the time the loss is ascertained, and the apportionment of it is made."

This rule was also followed in the case of Parker v. Seeley, 56 N. J. Eq. 110, 38 Atl. 280. In Cox v. Cox, L. R. 8 Eq. 343, where a similar question was involved, Sir William M. James, V. C., said: "The true principle in all these cases is that neither the tenant for life nor the remainderman is to gain an advantage over the other, neither is to suffer more damage in proportion to his estate and interest than the other suffers from the default of the obligor. The two must share the loss in the same way as they would have shared it, had it occurred when they first became entitled in possession to the fund."

Furthermore, in considering the first question presented by the exceptions, we announced the conclusion that the life tenant was entitled to the income, interest, and profits on the shares of stock, even when they arose from the enhanced value of the corpus, for the reason that such was the intention of the testator, as shown by the language of the will. Therefore, the income, interest, and profits cannot be taken from the estate of the life tenant, and used for the benefit of the remaindermen, without violating the provisions of the will.

This exception is sustained.

It is the judgment of this court that the judgment of the circuit court be modified in accordance with the principles herein announced, and that in all other respects it be affirmed.

JONES, C. J., and WOODS and HYDRICK, JJ., concur.

(90 S. C. 25)

LUNDY v. SOUTHERN BELL TELEPHONE & TELEGRAPH CO. et al.

(Supreme Court of South Carolina. Nov. 13, 1911.)

1. APPEAL AND ERROR (§ 1078*)—EXCEPTIONS—WAIVER.

Exceptions not argued on appeal are deemed withdrawn.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Appeal and Error, Cent. Dig. §§ 4256-4261; Dec. Dig. § 1078.*]

2. APPEAL AND ERROR (§ 1057*)—HARMLESS ERROR—EXCLUSION OF EVIDENCE.

In an action for negligent death of an employee, any error in excluding from evidence written notice given decedent to show that he knew of the danger was harmless, where other evidence established his knowledge of the facts which the notice was intended to prove.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Appeal and Error, Cent. Dig. §§ 4194-4199; Dec. Dig. § 1057.*]

3. APPEAL AND ERROR (§ 1066*)—HARMLESS ERROR—INSTRUCTIONS.

In an action against a telephone company for death of a lineman, any error in instructing as to the duties of a city along whose streets electric and telephone lines are maintained was harmless.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Appeal and Error, Cent. Dig. § 4220; Dec. Dig. § 1066.*]

4. TRIAL (§ 296*)—INSTRUCTIONS—CONSTRUCTION AS WHOLE.

In an action against a telephone company for death of a city electrician while working on the company's pole, omission of an instruction to state that to render the company liable its negligence must have proximately caused the injury was not error, where another instruction required such finding.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Trial, Cent. Dig. §§ 705-713; Dec. Dig. § 296.*]

5. ELECTRICITY (§ 14*)—WIRES—CARE REQUIRED TO PREVENT INJURY.

One operating electric wires in streets must use a very high degree of care in their construction, repair, inspection, and maintenance to prevent injury to others.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Electricity, Cent. Dig. § 7; Dec. Dig. § 14.*]

6. ELECTRICITY (§ 19*)—ELECTROCUTION OF LINEMAN—INSTRUCTIONS—NEGLIGENCE.

In an action against a telephone company for death of a city electrician, who was electrocuted while at work on the company's pole through breaking of a telephone wire, which became charged with a dangerous current from electric light wires beneath, an instruction ignoring an issue whether the telephone company was negligent in suspending the wires was error.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Electricity, Cent. Dig. § 11; Dec. Dig. § 19.*]

7. NEGLIGENCE (§ 136*)—PROVINCE OF COURT AND JURY.

Negligence is a mixed question of law and of fact; it being for the court to define negligence, but for the jury to determine whether it existed.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Negligence, Cent. Dig. §§ 277-353; Dec. Dig. § 136.*]

8. ELECTRICITY (§ 14*)—ELECTROCUTION OF LINEMAN—CARE REQUIRED.

In an action against a telephone company for the death of a city electrician while working on the company's pole, caused by contact between a breaking telephone wire and an electric light wire beneath, it was not error to instruct that failure to adopt all usual appliances and methods to prevent contact and hurtful passage of current through another wire is a breach of duty to the public.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Electricity, Cent. Dig. § 7; Dec. Dig. § 14.*]

9. TRIAL (§ 191*)—INSTRUCTIONS ON FACTS—REFUSAL.

In an action against a telephone company for death of a city electrician, caused through contact between a broken telephone wire and a light wire beneath, an instruction that if one of ordinary prudence, in such circumstances as surrounded decedent, would have tested the telephone wires to ascertain if they were safe before bringing himself in contact with the wires while standing upon or in contact with a telephone cable, etc., plaintiff could not recover, was properly refused as embodying a charge on the facts.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Trial, Cent. Dig. §§ 420-431; Dec. Dig. § 191.*]

10. TRIAL (§ 250*)—INSTRUCTIONS—APPLICABILITY TO CASE.

In an action against a telephone company for the death of a city lineman while at work on the company's pole, an instruction that where an employe chooses a dangerous way of performing his work, instead of a safe way, which was equally open to him, he is guilty of negligence which will preclude recovery, was properly refused, being applicable only to the relation of master and servant, which was not involved.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Trial, Cent. Dig. §§ 584-586; Dec. Dig. § 250.*]

11. DEATH (§ 93*)—PUNITIVE DAMAGES.

In an action for negligent death, to sustain recovery of punitive damages, it is unnecessary that plaintiff's right thereto be established by any particular fact, if all the facts considered together show such right.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Death, Cent. Dig. § 98; Dec. Dig. § 93.*]

12. ELECTRICITY (§ 13*)—INJURY THROUGH CONTACT WITH WIRES—LIABILITY.

A telegraph or telephone company is not liable for injury to persons coming in contact with its wires unless it was negligent.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Electricity, Cent. Dig. § 6; Dec. Dig. § 13.*]

13. NEGLIGENCE (§ 1*)—DEFINITION.

"Negligence" is failure to use that degree of care which one of ordinary intelligence and prudence might reasonably be expected to use in the particular circumstances.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Negligence, Cent. Dig. § 1; Dec. Dig. § 1.*]

For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, vol. 5, pp. 4743-4763; vol. 8, pp. 7729-7731.]

14. ELECTRICITY (§ 14*)—TRIAL (§ 194*)—ELECTROCUTION OF LINEMAN—INSTRUCTIONS.

In an action against a telephone company for death of a city electrician while working on the company's pole, caused through contact between wires, an instruction, that the company must keep its wires "perfectly" insulated and must use the "utmost care" to keep them in that condition, was erroneous as invading the jury's province and as requiring a greater degree of care than the law imposes.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Electricity, Cent. Dig. § 7; Dec. Dig. § 14; Trial, Dec. Dig. § 194.*]

Hydrick, J., dissenting in part.

Appeal from Common Pleas Circuit Court of Richland County; J. W. De Vore, Judge.

Action by Minnie C. Lundy, Charles Lundy's administratrix, against the Southern Bell Telephone & Telegraph Company and another. Judgment for plaintiff, and the named defendant appeals. Reversed and remanded.

The following are appellant's exceptions:

"(1) That his honor erred in allowing the plaintiff, Mrs. Minnie C. Lundy, to testify, over the objection of defendant's counsel, that since the death of her husband she had been working in a hosiery mill for the support of herself and child; that prior to her marriage she had not been accustomed to do that kind of work, but that since her husband's death she had been compelled to do that kind of work for support. The error being that said testimony was irrelevant, in that it was not responsive to any allegation of the complaint and did not tend to prove any element of damage for which the defendants were responsible, and was prejudicial to the defendants, in that it tended to inflame the minds of the jury by showing that by reason of the alleged negligence of the defendants the plaintiff had been subjected to unusual and unaccustomed hardships.

"(2) That his honor erred in permitting the witness Talley Harth to testify, over objection of defendant's counsel, as follows: 'Q. What practice or rule or regulation did you adopt with reference to your linemen going upon this pole, with regard to the use of gloves? Did you have any or none? A. I did not require them to use gloves in working on telephone wires. Q. In your opinion, as representing the city and in control of that, did you consider it necessary or proper to make any such regulation? Mr. Belser: We object. His opinion is not competent, and speculative. The Court: I think he can express his opinion. A. I saw no reason why he should wear rubber gloves to handle telephone wires any more than to handle a telephone.' The error being that it was solely for the jury to say, under the facts of the case, whether or not the failure of the deceased to wear rubber gloves was negligent, and it appearing that the deceased was in the employ of the witness at the time of the accident, and the witness being a stranger to both defendants, any regulations which he may or may not have adopted, or his opinion as to whether or not such regulation was proper or necessary, was entirely incompetent, and the jury may have concluded that the deceased, having obeyed the regulations and used all precautions required by the witness, as his employer, was not negligent in the failure to use rubber gloves, as charged in this defendant's answer.

"(3) That his honor erred in not admitting in evidence the 'Notice to Employés,' signed by the deceased, and reading as follows: 'Southern Bell Telephone and Telegraph Company. Notice to All Employés. The attention of linemen, inspectors, repairmen, and all employés of this company, having occasion to climb poles or work upon the same, or in or upon the underground conduits of this company, or upon the central office apparatus, or any other part of the property of this company, is hereby called to the hazardous conditions surrounding such work. Every such employé is hereby notified to carefully inspect each pole before climbing same, and to thoroughly test each and every pole, both above and below the surface of the ground, to avoid accidents.

Cross-arms, platforms, steps, and other attachments placed upon poles, should be carefully inspected before depending upon same for support. All employés of this company, who have occasion to work on the pole lines, and other parts of the property or plant of this company, where there are high current wires, owned either by this company or other companies, or persons or firms, are specially warned of the extra hazardous conditions surrounding such work, and notified to observe such extra caution as the conditions require, and in each and every instance to be provided with rubber gloves, and all other available means of protection. Each and every employé of this company is required to provide themselves with such tools as may be necessary for them to perform the labor for which they are employed by this company. Southern Bell Telephone and Telegraph Co., W. T. Gentry, Vice President and Gen'l Manager. I, the undersigned, hereby acknowledge receipt of the above rule and notice, and acknowledge that I have carefully read the same, am acquainted with its provisions, and recognize its utility. [Signed] Charlie Lundy, Employé. Dated this third day of August, 1904.' The error being that said paper was competent, in that the signature of the deceased thereto had been identified and proven by the witness R. F. Walker, and said paper was relevant, in that it tended to show knowledge on the part of the deceased of the dangers and perils of the place in which he was working at the time of his death, and of the precautions which should and could be used to obviate and escape such dangers.

"(4) That his honor erred in not admitting in evidence the 'Notice to Employés,' signed by deceased, marked 'Exhibit 1' for identification, and reading as follows: 'Southern Bell Telephone and Telegraph Company. Notice to All Employés. The attention of linemen, inspectors, repairmen, and all employés of this company, having occasion to climb poles or work upon the same, or in or upon the underground conduits of this company, or upon the central office apparatus, or any other part of the property of this company, is hereby called to the hazardous conditions surrounding such work. Every such employé is hereby notified to carefully inspect each pole before climbing same, and to thoroughly test each and every pole, both above and below the surface of the ground, to avoid accidents. Cross-arms, platforms, steps, and other attachments placed upon poles, should be carefully inspected before depending upon same for support. All employés of this company, who have occasion to work on the pole lines, and other parts of the property or plant of this company, where there are high current wires, owned either by this company or other companies, or persons or firms, are specially warned of the extra hazardous conditions surrounding such work, and notified to observe such extra caution as the conditions require, and in each and every instance to be provided with rubber gloves, and all other available means of protection. Each and every employé of this company is required to provide themselves with such tools as may be necessary for them to perform the labor for which they are employed by this company. Southern Bell Telephone and Telegraph Co., W. T. Gentry, Vice President and Gen'l Manager. I, the undersigned, hereby acknowledge receipt of the above rule and notice, and acknowledge that I have carefully read the same, am acquainted with its provisions, and recognize its utility. [Signed] Charles Lundy, Employé. Dated this ——— day of ———. The error being that said paper was competent, in that the signature of the deceased thereto had been identified and proven by the plaintiff, Mrs. Minnie C. Lundy, and said paper was relevant, in that it tended to show knowledge on the part of the deceased of the dangers and perils of the place in which he was working at the time of his death, and of the precautions which should and could be used to obviate and escape such dangers.

"(5) That his honor erred in charging plaintiff's first request to charge, as follows: 'Where a city has authorized a telephone and electric light and power company to use its streets and public places to erect the necessary poles and string its wires thereupon, and to otherwise permit and allow them to conduct and operate their business in the usual manner of telephone and electric light and power companies, such city does not thereby assume or become chargeable with the duty of inspecting such poles and lines, nor maintaining them in safe condition for the protection of persons using the streets or using such poles in the performance of their duties, but its duty extends only to the general supervision over such companies, and it is only liable for injuries caused by defects when it itself has been negligent, after actual or constructive notice of any defect. The duty of properly maintaining, operating, and inspecting their poles and wires, and taking the proper care to protect all persons who have a right to use such poles or to come in proximity to the wires strung thereon, rests upon the telephone or electric companies so operating and maintaining such poles and wires, and if any person is injured by the negligence of such companies on account of a failure to erect the poles and string the wires properly, and to keep the same in safe and proper condition by reasonable and proper inspection, such company or companies are liable therefor.' The error being: (a) That said request does not state a correct proposition of law in regard to the duties of a city along whose streets electric and telephone lines are constructed and maintained, when applied to the case at bar, in that it is alleged in the complaint, and appears by the testimony, that the city of Columbia and deceased bore to each other the relation of master and servant, and the fact that deceased, at the time of his death, was at work for his master, the city of Columbia, on the poles of this defendant, does not absolve said city from the duties which it owed to the deceased as master. (b) That he failed to instruct the jury, in connection therewith, that, in order to render such electric or telephone company liable, its or their negligence must be the proximate cause of the injury sustained.

"(6) That his honor erred in charging the plaintiff's second request to charge, as follows: 'Where wires charged with a deadly current of electricity are strung along the streets of a city, the degree of care required to prevent injury to property or persons on the streets, or who have the right and duty to go about or in proximity to such wires, is governed by the amount of danger attending such use of the highways by the owner of the wires, and it is a general proposition that electricity is an invisible and impalpable force, highly dangerous to life and property, and those who make, sell, distribute, use, or handle it are bound to exercise care in proportion to the danger involved, and that those using the public streets for electric wires carrying a dangerous current are bound to use a very high degree of care in the construction, repair, inspection, and maintenance of such lines to prevent injury to those lawfully going upon such ways, or who may come in contact with such wires.' The error being: (a) That it was a charge upon the facts, in that it was for the jury to say what degree of care should be exercised by this defendant under the circumstances of the case. (b) That this defendant was only bound to use ordinary care, and not a very high degree of care, under the circumstances of the case. (c) That said charge was erroneous and misleading, in that it failed to distinguish between the duty owed an electric lineman in the position of plaintiff's intestate, at work upon defendant's pole, and the general public, passing along the public streets and highways, and held this defendant to the same degree of care to prevent injury to persons lawfully at work upon its poles, where the public have no right to go, as to prevent injury to persons using the public streets.

"(7) That his honor erred in charging the jury the following portion of the plaintiff's fifth request to charge: 'And it is held, as a matter of law, to be negligence on the part of the company to suspend wires in such a position that, in the event of their breaking or falling, they will become charged with a dangerous current of electricity from wires underneath.' The error being: (a) That he charged the jury as to matters of fact, when he stated that the particular act therein mentioned constituted negligence, and under the testimony in this case said charge in effect was that this defendant was guilty of actionable negligence. (b) That said request does not state a correct proposition of law, in that it is not negligence, as a matter of law, on the part of a company to 'suspend wires in such a position that, in the event of their breaking or falling, they will become charged with a dangerous current of electricity from wires underneath,' but in every such case it is a question of fact to be determined by the jury whether or not the stringing or suspension of wires in such position constitutes negligence.

"(8) That his honor erred in charging the jury the following portion of the plaintiff's sixth request to charge: 'Failure to adopt all usual appliances and methods to prevent contact and hurtful passage of the current through another wire is a breach of duty to the public.' The error being that since, at the time of his death, Charles Lundy was upon one of the poles of this defendant, where the general public has no right to go, said charge was erroneous, in that it held this defendant to a higher degree of care than the law requires under such circumstances.

"(9) That his honor erred in refusing this defendant's fourth request to charge, which was as follows: 'If the jury believe from the evidence that a man of ordinary prudence, exercising ordinary care for his own safety under such circumstances as surrounded Charles Lundy at the time of the accident, would have tested the telephone wires to ascertain if they were safe before bringing himself in contact with said wires while standing upon or in contact with the telephone cable, and without such prior test should, in the exercise of ordinary care, have kept clear of the said cable and its supports, and that Lundy, at the time of this accident, failed to do so, and that such failure was a proximate cause of the accident, without which the same would not have occurred, then the plaintiff cannot recover, and the jury must find for the defendants.' The error being that said request stated a correct principle of law applicable to the facts of the case and the issues raised by the pleadings, and was not covered by his honor in his general charge.

"(10) That his honor erred in refusing this defendant's sixth request to charge, which was as follows: 'Where an employé, in discharging the duty required of him, has the choice of two ways in performing it, one entirely safe and the other obviously and greatly dangerous, adopts the dangerous way, and is in consequence injured, he is, as a rule, guilty of negligence which will bar a recovery based on the defendant's negligence, and he cannot relieve himself of the consequences of such contributory negligence by showing that it was customary to perform the duty in the dangerous way.' The error being that said request stated a correct proposition of law applicable to the facts of the case and the issues raised by the pleadings, and was not covered by his honor in his general charge.

"(11) That his honor erred in refusing this defendant's eighth request to charge, which was as follows: 'The jury are instructed that in this case there is no evidence to support a verdict of punitive or vindictive damages, and that such damages cannot be awarded against the defendants.' And in charging the jury that they could award punitive or exemplary damages 'in case the wrongful act, neglect, or default of the defendants was the result of recklessness, willfulness, or malice.' The error being that there was no evidence of recklessness, willfulness, or malice on the part of this defendant, and no evidence of any willful, wanton, reckless, or intentional misconduct or breach of duty by the defendants, and his honor should not have submitted the issue of punitive damages to the jury.

"(12) That his honor erred in charging the jury the following portion of plaintiff's ninth request to charge: 'A company maintaining electric wires over which a high voltage of electricity is conveyed, rendering them highly dangerous to others, is under the duty of using the necessary care and prudence at places where others may have the right to go, either for work, business, or pleasure, to prevent injury. It is the duty of the company under such conditions to keep the wire perfectly insulated, and it must exercise the utmost care to maintain them in this condition at such places.' The error being: (a) That said charge does not state a sound proposition of law, in that this defendant was bound under the law to use only reasonable care under the circumstances of the case, and not the 'utmost care,' as charged by his honor. (b) That it was a charge on the facts, in that he thereby stated what acts were necessary to constitute due care in the maintenance of such wires."

Nelson, Nelson & Gettys and Melton & Belser, for appellant. B. L. Abney and John J. Earle, for respondent.

GARY, A. J. This is an action, by the administratrix of the estate of Charles Lundy, deceased, for damages on account of the death of her husband, Charles Lundy, alleged to have been caused by the joint and concurrent negligence, recklessness, willfulness, and wantonness of the defendants. The complaint alleges: That the defendants at the time hereinafter mentioned were corporations doing business in the city of Columbia and respectively owning and maintaining plants, poles, and wires, suspended on poles therein. That on or about the 11th day of June, 1908, the defendants carelessly, negligently, willfully, and wantonly had failed to properly and safely insulate their respective wires, and to inspect the same, and to keep the same in a proper and safe condition, and carelessly, negligently, recklessly, willfully, and wantonly had suffered their respective wires to cross and come in contact with each other, and, by rubbing against each other, to wear away the insulation thereon, whereby, on or about the 11th day of June, 1908, and while the said Charles Lundy in the performance of his duties was on one of the poles of the said Southern Bell Telephone & Telegraph Company on Main street in said city, and when he came in contact with a wire or wires, of the said Southern Bell Telephone & Telegraph Company, a powerful, dangerous and deadly current of electricity passed, and was conducted from the wire or wires of the said the Columbia Electric Street Railway Light & Power Company, along, through and over the said wire or wires of the said Southern Bell Telephone & Telegraph Company, with which the said Charles Lundy was in contact, and into the body of the said Charles Lundy, whereby he received a fatal shock. That the duties the said Charles Lundy was then performing were the arrangement and the working with or on certain lines or wires of the city of Columbia, connected, or to be connected, with the said poles of the said defendant Southern Bell Telephone & Telegraph Company, and that said duties were being performed for the city of Columbia. The defendants denied the allegations of negligence and intentional wrong, and set up the defenses of contributory negligence and assumption of risk. The jury rendered a verdict in favor of the plaintiff, against the defendant Southern Bell Telephone & Telegraph Company, for $20,000, and the said defendant appealed upon exceptions which will be reported.

We proceed to consider the exceptions.

First and second exceptions:

[1] These exceptions were not argued by the appellant's attorneys, and must be considered as being withdrawn.

Third and fourth exceptions:

[2] These exceptions assign error on the part of his honor, the presiding judge, in refusing to allow the defendant telephone company to introduce in evidence certain papers, entitled "Notice to all Employees" which the signature of Charles Lundy showed had been received by him several years previously, while he was in the employment of the telephone company. The papers were offered for the purpose of showing that Charles Lundy had knowledge that it was dangerous to handle electric wires. Even conceding that the ruling was erroneous, it was not prejudicial, as the testimony showed that Lundy was an experienced lineman, and there was other testimony to the effect that Lundy had knowledge of the facts which the papers were intended to prove.

Fifth exception:

[3] Assignment of error "a" cannot be sustained, for the reason that the charge in this respect, even if erroneous, was not prejudicial to the rights of the appellant.

[4] Nor can assignment of error "b" be sustained, as the charge in this respect must be considered in connection with the entire charge, when it will be seen that the presiding judge instructed the jury that the telephone company was not liable unless its negligence was the proximate cause of the injury sustained.

Sixth exception:

[5] It is axiomatic that the caution which an ordinarily prudent man is bound to exercise, in the operation of dangerous instrumentalities, must be greater than in those cases not attended with danger. And, as electric wires in streets are liable to become exceedingly dangerous, unless properly guarded, it necessarily follows that those operating such appliances are required to exercise a very high degree of care in their construction, repair, inspection, and maintenance, in order to prevent injury to others. Parsons v. Electric Co., 69 S. C. 305, 48 S. E. 284, 104 Am. St. Rep. 800.

Seventh exception:

[6] This charge eliminated from the consideration of the jury the question whether there was negligence on the part of the telephone company in suspending the wires.

If the wires were properly suspended, then their breaking or falling, whereby they became charged with a dangerous current of electricity, from wires underneath, would not render the telephone company liable for an injury resulting therefrom, in the absence of negligence on its part.

[7] "Negligence" is a mixed question of law and fact. It is the duty of the court to define negligence, but it is the province of the jury to determine whether it exists in a particular case.

The charge of the presiding judge was at variance with the rule thus stated in the case of Parsons v. Electric Co., 69 S. C. 305, 48 S. E. 284, 104 Am. St. Rep. 800: "The extent to which wires conveying deadly electric currents should be insulated or otherwise guarded must be decided by the jury, under the facts of each case. No rule of law can be laid down on the subject."

Under the said charge, it is hardly conceivable how the jury could have rendered any verdict, except for the plaintiff, as they were not permitted to consider the question of negligence. This exception is sustained.

Eighth exception:

[8] So much of the request as is set out in the exception is an exact reproduction of the language of the court in the case of Parsons v. Electric Co., 69 S. C. 305, 48 S. E. 284, 104 Am. St. Rep. 800, and this exception is overruled.

Ninth exception:

[9] The presiding judge properly refused the request on the ground that it embodied a charge on the facts. Weaver v. Railway, 76 S. C. 49, 56 S. E. 657, 121 Am. St. Rep.

934; Martin v. Railway, 84 S. C. 568, 86 S. E. 993; Turbyfill v. Railway, 86 S. C. 395, 88 S. E. 687; Finch v. Railway, 87 S. C. 190, 89 S. E. 208.

Tenth exception:

[10] In refusing the request mentioned in this exception, the presiding judge assigned the following reasons: "Now the sixth request I refuse to charge you, because that request distinctly sets forth the relation of employé, which is the law that governs master and servant. The first request which I charge you did not have any reference to employé or master and servant; the sixth does. I do not think the sixth is applicable to this case." These reasons show that the request was properly refused.

Eleventh exception:

[11] As this case must be remanded for a new trial, we deem it advisable not to comment upon the testimony, but merely to state that there was testimony tending to show that the plaintiff was entitled to punitive damages. Besides, even though no particular fact may be sufficient, alone, to show that the plaintiff was entitled to punitive damages, nevertheless, when considered together, they may have that effect. Railroad v. Partlow, 14 Rich. 237; Dantzler v. Cox, 75 S. C. 334, 55 S. E. 774; Wertz v. Ry., 76 S. C. 388, 57 S. E. 194; Rhodes v. Cotton Mills, 87 S. C. 18, 68 S. E. 824.

Twelfth exception:

In the case of Parsons v. Electric Co., 69 S. C. 305, 48 S. E. 284, 104 Am. St. Rep. 800, the court uses this language: "The rule as to the degree of care, in the use of electricity, is the same as in the use of steam and other agencies—the care must be proportionate to the danger. In determining the danger, it is the duty of those in control to have in view all the surroundings, including the contiguity of other wires, and their liability to fall and come in contact with the dangerously charged wires. As said by the Supreme Court of New Jersey in Anderson v. Jersey City Electric Light Co. [63 N. J. Law, 390] 43 Atl. 655: 'Care in this sense means more than mere mechanical skill; it includes circumspection and foresight with regard to reasonably probable contingencies.' The failure to adopt all usual appliances and methods to prevent contact and hurtful discharge of the current through another wire is a breach of duty to the public. This view is supported by the almost unbroken current of authority"—citing numerous cases.

[12, 13] A telegraph or telephone company is not liable in damages for injuries sustained by persons coming in contact with its wires, unless it was guilty of "negligence," which may be defined as the failure to exercise that degree of care which a person of ordinary intelligence and prudence might reasonably be expected to exercise, under the circumstances of the particular case.

While it is true that a telegraph or telephone company is only bound to exercise ordinary care, nevertheless a person of ordinary intelligence and prudence is expected to use greater caution in dealing with very dangerous instrumentalities than in those cases where there is less danger.

Questions of negligence arising in cases where injuries have been sustained through contact with electric wires in the streets are to be determined, like all other questions of negligence, by the jury, upon the facts in the particular case, unless they are only susceptible of one inference.

[14] Therefore, when the presiding judge charged that it was the duty of a telegraph or telephone company to keep its wires perfectly insulated, and that it must exercise the utmost care to keep them in that condition, he not only invaded the province of the jury, but required of the telegraph or telephone company a greater degree of care than the law imposes in such cases.

This exception is therefore sustained.

It is the judgment of this court that the judgment of the circuit court be reversed, and the case remanded to that court for a new trial.

JONES, C. J., and WOODS, J., concur.

HYDRICK, J. I concur in the opinion of Mr. Justice GARY, except as to the disposition of the ninth exception. I am unable to see wherein the defendant's fourth request embodies a charge upon the facts. But there was no prejudicial or reversible error in refusing the request, because substantially the same instruction as is therein requested was given to the jury in other parts of the charge.

(90 S. C. 123)

STATE v. GARLINGTON et al.†

(Supreme Court of South Carolina. Nov. 13, 1911.)

1. CRIMINAL LAW (§ 1167*)—APPEAL—HARMLESS ERROR—INDICTMENT.

Where accused were found guilty upon the fourth count only, the question of whether the other counts sufficiently charged an offense is immaterial on appeal, in absence of prejudicial error in admitting evidence under such other count.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Criminal Law, Cent. Dig. §§ 3101-3106; Dec. Dig. § 1167.*]

2. CRIMINAL LAW (§ 1169*)—APPEAL—HARMLESS ERROR—ADMISSION OF EVIDENCE.

The admission of immaterial evidence is not reversible in absence of a showing of prejudice to accused therefrom.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Criminal Law, Cent. Dig. §§ 3137-3143; Dec. Dig. § 1169.*]

3. CRIMINAL LAW (§ 1168*)—APPEAL—HARMLESS ERROR.

Any error in refusing to entertain a motion by accused at the close of the state's evidence for the direction of a verdict, because of the trial court's practice of hearing such motions only after all the evidence was in, was cured where, after accused's refusal to put in any evidence, the motion was renewed and refused after argument when the court offered to permit accused to put in evidence; accused not having been prejudiced by the ruling on the original motion.

*For other cases see same topic and section NUMBER in Dec. Dig. & Am. Dig. Key No. Series & Rep'r Indexes

† Rehearing denied December 1, 1911.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Criminal Law, Cent. Dig. §§ 3129-3136; Dec. Dig. § 1168.*]

4. CRIMINAL LAW (§ 699*)—DISCRETION OF TRIAL COURT—ORDER OF ARGUMENT.

Matters of detail as to the order in which the arguments of the state and accused shall be made is ordinarily for the trial judge's sound discretion.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Criminal Law, Cent. Dig. §§ 1655, 1656; Dec. Dig. § 690.*]

5. CRIMINAL LAW (§ 645*)—TRIAL—ARGUMENT—RIGHT TO OPEN AND CLOSE—WAIVER.

An accused who has the right to open and reply may waive either or both of such rights.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Criminal Law, Cent. Dig. §§ 1507-1509; Dec. Dig. § 645.*]

6. CRIMINAL LAW (§§ 763, 764*)—TRIAL—INSTRUCTIONS—PROVINCE OF JURY.

A requested charge that on a prosecution for larceny a strong presumption arises that there was no felonious intent if the taking was open, and that, if there was no subsequent attempt to conceal the property and an avowal of its taking, such presumption must be rebutted by clear and convincing evidence, was properly refused as invading the jury's province and violating the constitutional inhibition against the court's expressing an opinion as to the weight of the testimony.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Criminal Law, Cent. Dig. §§ 1731-1748; Dec. Dig. §§ 763, 764.*]

Appeal from General Sessions Circuit Court of Richland County; George E. Prince, Judge.

"To be officially reported."

John W. Garlington and another were convicted of fraudulent breach of trust, and they appeal. Affirmed.

Dial & Todd, Christie Benet, R. E. Carwile, and B. L. Abney, for appellants. Solicitor W. Hampton Cobb and J. W. Thurmond, for the State.

JONES, C. J. The appellants, having been brought to trial upon an indictment containing five counts, were found guilty upon the fourth count only, and now appeal to this court from the judgment and sentence.

The fourth count, upon which the conviction was had, charges a breach of trust by the said defendants by the conversion to their own use of the sum of $55,596 in money, of the property of the Seminole Securities Company, intrusted to the defendants and converted to their own use with fraudulent intention. It is alleged in the first ground of appeal that there was error in the refusal of a motion made by the defendants at the trial to quash the first, second, and third counts of the indictment upon certain grounds then stated. In the view taken by this court, however, it is not necessary here to set out the grounds of this motion in detail; but it is sufficient to say that the motions involved no charge of duplicity or improper joinder of counts, but were merely demurrers to the legal sufficiency of the averments contained in the said three counts.

As the defendants were acquitted by the verdict upon each of the counts so sought to be quashed, it is somewhat difficult to perceive how they could have been prejudiced by any alleged error in refusing to quash these counts. It is true that it is charged by the appellants in this exception that, by reason of the refusal to quash these counts, certain evidence was admitted as relevant and competent which could not otherwise have been introduced, and that thereby the defendants suffered prejudice. While, however, it is so charged in general terms that irrelevant and incompetent evidence was so admitted, it has not been made to appear that either of the defendants has thereby been prejudiced.

[1] The defendants having been found guilty upon the fourth count only, the question as to whether any crime was sufficiently charged in the other counts of the indictment becomes purely speculative, and it need not be considered in the absence of any showing of prejudicial error in the admission of evidence in support thereof. State v. Dalby, 86 S. C. 367, 68 S. E. 633.

The second and third exceptions assign error in the admission of testimony as to the value of the stock of the Carolina Agency Company at a time subsequent to the transfer of such stock by the defendant Garlington to the Seminole Securities Company; it being contended that only the value of the stock at the time of the transfer was relevant or material. Assuming that the evidence in question was immaterial and irrelevant, no showing has been made that any prejudice has resulted to either of the defendants in consequence of its admission.

[2] Even if it be true, as claimed in argument by appellants here, that "the subsequent value could not throw any light on the issue," it does not follow that prejudicial error was committed in receiving this evidence. If a circuit judgment is to be reversed in every instance in which any evidence is admitted which does not throw light upon the issue, there would be few cases in which the granting of a new trial would not be rendered necessary by the intrusion of some particle of testimony. The contention in these exceptions being merely that the evidence in question was irrelevant, and there being no allegation nor showing of prejudice to the defendants by reason of its admission, it is not necessary to consider the question of its materiality to the issue under the count of the indictment upon which the appellants were convicted.

*For other cases see same topic and section NUMBER in Dec. Dig. & Am. Dig. Key No. Series & Rep'r indexes

[3] The fourth, fifth, sixth, and sixteenth exceptions seek to present the question as to whether there was error in refusing to entertain a motion made by the defendants at the conclusion of the evidence in behalf of the state for the direction of a verdict of acquittal. Upon this point the record shows that, at the close of the evidence in chief, upon a motion by the counsel for defendants for the direction of a verdict of not guilty, the presiding judge would not then entertain the motion, announcing it to be his practice not to consider such motions until the entire evidence in the case was concluded. It further appears, however, that after said ruling has been made, the defendants announced that they would introduce no evidence, whereupon the motion for a direction of a verdict of not guilty was renewed, and, after full argument, was refused by the presiding judge. Thereafter the presiding judge ruled that the defendants would be permitted to introduce evidence in their own behalf, if they so desired stating that he would allow such evidence as matter of right on part of the defendants.

If there was any error, therefore, in the original ruling of the circuit judge upon this point, it was clearly cured by the subsequent decision allowing the defendants to offer evidence in their own behalf. Practically the action of the presiding judge in this particular was tantamount to acceding to the request of the defendants that their motion for the direction of a verdict might be heard, and, if refused, they should then be permitted to offer evidence in their defense. This motion for direction of verdict having thus been heard at the conclusion of the evidence on behalf of the state, and the defendants having thereafter been given full opportunity to introduce evidence in their own behalf, they cannot be permitted to decline to take advantage of such opportunity, and thereafter be heard to complain of a ruling alleged to be erroneous, which did not in any way deprive them of any substantial right, and which is not shown to have in any degree affected the result of the trial.

The seventh exception alleged error in refusing to grant the said motion for the direction of a verdict of acquittal upon each of the counts of the indictment. As, however, the defendants were in fact acquitted upon all the counts except the fourth, it will only be necessary to consider this exception in so far as it relates to that particular count. With reference to this count the averment is in general terms that there was no evidence of any conversion by defendants to their own use of any moneys as alleged nor any testimony or evidence tending to show any breach of trust with fraudulent intent committed by said defendants. Without undertaking to rehearse the evidence upon this point, it is sufficient to say that there was competent testimony for the consideration of the jury, tending to show that the defendant J. Y. Garlington, as president and director of the Seminole Securities Company, and the defendant James Stobo Young, as secretary and director of the said company, acting in concert, misappropriated and converted to their own use moneys belonging to the said company and then held by them in trust, to the amount of several thousand dollars, and that the defendants so made use of the said moneys with the fraudulent intention of depriving the said company and the stockholders thereof of their property thereon. Such being the evidence tending to establish the breach of trust as charged, there was no error by the presiding judge in refusing the motion to direct a verdict of acquittal as to either of the defendants upon this count of the indictment.

The substantial question sought to be presented by the eighth, ninth, and tenth grounds of appeal relates to the right to the opening and reply in argument before the jury. It appears that the presiding judge ruled that the defendants had the right to such opening and reply, and the only question of any moment which can be considered as raised by these exceptions is as to whether the state is required to make the opening argument to the jury in a case where the defendant has the right to open and reply.

[4] As to this question, it is to be noted that the matters of detail as to the order in which a number of arguments on behalf of the state and of the defendant shall be made is ordinarily to be left to the sound discretion of the presiding judge, and there is no complaint here of any abuse of discretion in this particular.

[5] No doubt the defendant in a criminal case, where he has a right to open and reply in argument, may waive either or both of those rights. It may be true, furthermore, that the defendant in a criminal case, having the right to reply in argument by reason of not introducing evidence, may decline to open in argument and still retain the right to make the closing argument to the jury, either upon the case in general or by way of reply to any contention on the part of the state. But no such question is presented here, as the defendants were not required to open in argument to the jury in any such sense as would limit their reply to the points made in the opening address to the jury. These exceptions, therefore, cannot be sustained, since there is no ground for contending that any substantial right of defendants in the matter of argument was either abridged or denied to them. When the charge of the trial judge is considered as a whole, it will be found free from error in any of the particulars to which reference is made in the remaining exceptions.

[6] The weight to be given to any evidence in the case being entirely a matter for determination by the jury, the presiding judge committed no error in refusing to charge the jury, as requested by the defendants, that, on a prosecution for larceny, "a strong presumption arises that there was no felonious intent, if the taking was open and notorious; and that, if there was no subsequent attempt to conceal the property and no denial but avowal of the taking, this presumption must be repelled by clear and convincing evidence." A charge in the language of the request just quoted would have been an invasion of the province of the jury and a violation of the constitutional inhibition against the expression of an opinion as to the weight to be given to the testimony in the case. All that the defendants had the right to ask upon this point was granted by the trial judge when he charged that any evidence as to the taking being open and notorious, as to the absence of any attempt to conceal the property, and as to there being no denial but an avowal of the taking should be considered by the jury in determining the issue as to felonious intent. The charge was free from error in any of the particulars as to which complaint is made by these exceptions.

The judgment of the circuit court is affirmed.

GARY, A. J., and WOODS and HYDRICK, JJ., concur.

(156 N. C. 643)

STATE v. LEAK.

(Supreme Court of North Carolina. Nov. 1, 1911.)

1. CRIMINAL LAW (§ 1036*)—APPEAL—OBJECTIONS—INSUFFICIENCY OF EVIDENCE.

The objection that there was not sufficient evidence to sustain a conviction cannot be first raised in the appellate court.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Criminal Law, Cent. Dig. §§ 2639-2641; Dec. Dig. § 1036.*]

2. CRIMINAL LAW (§ 829*)—TRIAL—INSTRUCTIONS—REQUESTS.

It was not error to refuse instructions requested by accused, where the court gave instructions identical in meaning and almost identical in language to those requested.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Criminal Law, Cent. Dig. § 2011; Dec. Dig. § 829.*]

3. RAPE (§ 35*)—PROSECUTION—ADMISSION OF EVIDENCE.

Evidence was admissible, in a prosecution for assault with intent to rape, that on the same day, as prosecutrix passed the accused, he caught her by the ankle, and said, "You are as fat as a pig, ain't you," being evidence of another assault, of which accused could have been convicted under the indictment.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Rape, Cent. Dig. §§ 42-45; Dec. Dig. § 35.*]

4. CRIMINAL LAW (§ 371*)—EVIDENCE—OTHER OFFENSES.

The evidence was also admissible as tending to prove the animus and intent of the accused.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Criminal Law, Cent. Dig. §§ 880-882; Dec. Dig. § 371.*]

5. CRIMINAL LAW (§ 1170½*)—APPEAL—HARMLESS ERROR—EXCLUSION OF EVIDENCE.

Where it does not appear what answer would have been given to a question, asked in a prosecution for assault with intent to commit rape, as to whether accused was considered bright, or had the reputation of not having a strong mind, and it appears that witness would have probably answered both questions in the negative, it cannot be said that accused was prejudiced by excluding the answer.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Criminal Law, Cent. Dig. §§ 8129-8135; Dec. Dig. § 1170½.*]

6. CRIMINAL LAW (§ 448*)—EVIDENCE—OPINION EVIDENCE.

Evidence, in a prosecution for assault with intent to commit rape, that the defendant would sort of "listen" while committing the assault was not objectionable as being an opinion; the instantaneous conclusions of the mind as to the condition of mental or physical state of persons, animals, etc., derived from observations of a variety of facts presented to the senses at one time, being really facts, and not opinion.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Criminal Law, Cent. Dig. §§ 1035-1051; Dec. Dig. § 448.*]

Appeal from Superior Court, Richmond County; Ferguson, Judge.

Jim Leak was convicted of assault with intent to rape, and he appeals. Affirmed.

The defendant is charged in the indictment with the crime of assaulting Maggie Hasty, who was about 12 years of age, with the intent to commit rape, and upon conviction was sentenced to a term of five years in the state's prison.

The assault is alleged to have been committed at the home of the prosecuting witness, where the defendant, who is an old negro man, was working, and the only person on the premises, except the defendant and the witness, was a little sister of the witness. Neighbors lived within a short distance, but, if the evidence of the state is believed, the place of the assault was at the back of the house, on the stairs leading into the basement, which was at least practically concealed.

Maggie Hasty was examined as a witness for the state, and testified to the assault and the circumstances surrounding her at the time. Among other things, she said that the defendant had his hand on her person under her clothes, when a neighbor called her, and that he then desisted. The witness was permitted to say that the defendant had put his hands on her before on the day of the assault, and the defendant excepted; also on what part of her person the defendant had his hands when the neighbor called her, and defendant excepted; also that, when committing the assault, the defendant "would kind of listen," and defendant excepted.

She was asked on cross-examination if the defendant was "considered bright," and if he did not have the reputation "of not being strong-minded." Upon objection, the witness was not permitted to answer either question, and the defendant excepted.

The defendant tendered the following prayers for instructions:

"(1) That the evidence must show, beyond a reasonable doubt, not only an assault, but that the defendant intended to gratify his passion on the person of Maggie Mae Hasty, and that he intended to do so at all events, notwithstanding any resistance made on her part. If they are not so satisfied, they cannot convict the defendant of an assault with intent to commit rape upon the said Maggie Mae Hasty.

"(2) That the defendant can be convicted of the lesser offense of assault and battery, or a simple assault.

"(3) That the jury must find, beyond a reasonable doubt, from the evidence that the defendant placed his hand upon the person of Maggie Mae Hasty with the intent and purpose at the time, notwithstanding any resistance she might make, and at all events, to gratify his passion on her person, before he can be convicted of an assault to commit rape."

There was no request to charge the jury that there was not sufficient evidence to sustain the indictment, but upon the rendition of the verdict the defendant moved the court to set aside the verdict: (1) As being against the weight of the evidence; (2) for errors in the admission and rejection of testimony; for errors in his honor's charge to the jury; (3) for failure to give the special instructions asked by the defendant.

The Attorney General and Geo. L. Jones, Asst. Atty. Gen., for the State.

ALLEN, J. Upon an examination of the record, we find no error which entitles the defendant to a new trial.

[1] The objection that there was not sufficient evidence to sustain a conviction cannot be entertained after verdict (State v. Harris, 120 N. C. 578, 26 S. E. 774; State v. Huggins, 126 N. C. 1055, 35 S. E. 606; State v. Williams, 129 N. C. 582, 40 S. E. 84); but, if it had been made in apt time, it could not avail the defendant, as the evidence is as conclusive as in State v. Page, 127 N. C. 512, 37 S. E. 66, and stronger than in State v. Garner, 129 N. C. 536, 40 S. E. 6, in which judgments upon verdicts of guilty were approved.

[2] His honor gave the defendant the benefit of all the instructions requested, as appears from the following excerpt from his charge: "The evidence must show, beyond a reasonable doubt, not only an assault, but that the defendant intended to gratify his passion on the person of Maggie Mae Hasty, and that he intended to do so at all events, notwithstanding any resistance made on her part; and, if the evidence does not so satisfy your mind, you cannot convict the defendant of the assault with intent to commit rape upon the said Maggie Mae Hasty. The defendant can be convicted of the lesser offense of assault and battery, or simple assault. The jury must find, beyond a reasonable doubt, that he placed his hands upon the person of Maggie Mae Hasty, with the intent and purpose at the time, notwithstanding any resistance she might make, and at all events, to gratify his passion on her person, before he can be convicted of an assault to commit rape."

[3, 4] It was competent for the state to prove that the defendant placed his hands on the prosecutrix at another time on the day of the assault, as evidence of another assault, of which the defendant could have been convicted under the indictment, and as tending to prove the animus and intent of the defendant. State v. Murphy, 84 N. C. 742; State v. Parish, 104 N. C. 692, 10 S. E. 457; State v. Adams, 138 N. C. 693, 50 S. E. 765. The evidence objected to was that a short time before it is alleged the defendant committed the assault with the felonious intent that the prosecutrix passed the defendant as he was sitting on the steps, and that he caught her by the ankle, and said, "You are as fat as a pig, ain't you?"

[5] The exception to the refusal to permit the witness to say whether or not the defendant was considered bright, or had the reputation of not having a strong mind, is without merit. There is nothing to indicate what was expected to be proved, or what answer would have been given to the questions, and, so far as we can see, the witness would have answered both questions in the negative. It does not therefore appear that the defendant has been prejudiced by the ruling.

[6] The evidence of the prosecutrix that the defendant was listening was objected to, upon the ground that it was an expression of an opinion. We do not think so. The rule applicable to evidence of this character is clearly and accurately stated in McKelvey on Evidence, p. 220 et seq., as follows: "The instantaneous conclusions of the mind as to the appearance, condition, or mental or physical state of persons, animals, and things, derived from observation of a variety of facts presented to the senses at one and the same time, are, legally speaking, matters of fact, and are admissible in evidence. A witness may say that a man appeared intoxicated, or angry, or pleased. In one sense, the statement is a conclusion or opinion of the witness, but in a legal sense, and within the meaning of the phrase 'matter of fact,' as used in the law of evidence, it is not opinion, but is one of the class of things above mentioned, which are better regarded as matters of fact. The appearance of a man, his actions, his expression, his conversation—a series of things—go to make up the mental picture in the mind of the witness which leads to a knowledge which is as certain, and as much a matter of fact, as if he testified, from evidence presented to his eyes, to the color of a person's hair, or any other physical fact of like nature. This class of evidence is treated in many of the cases as opinion admitted under exception to the general rule, and in others as matter of fact—"shorthand statement of fact," as it is called. It seems more accurate to treat it as fact, as it embraces only those impressions which are practically instantaneous, and require no conscious act of judgment in their formation. The evidence is almost universally admitted, and very properly, as it is helpful to the jury in aiding to a clearer comprehension of the facts." This principle has been approved in Britt v. Railroad, 148 N. C. 37, 61 S. E. 601; Wilkinson v. Dunbar, 149 N. C. 28, 62 S. E. 748, and in other cases in our reports.

We find no error.

No error.

(156 N. C. 455)

ACME CEMENT PLASTER CO. v. GREENSBORO WOOD FIBRE PLASTER CO.

(Supreme Court of North Carolina. Nov. 1, 1911.)

1. FRAUDS, STATUTE OF (§ 143*)—PERSONS ENTITLED TO ASSERT.

Since strangers to a transaction cannot take advantage of the statute of frauds, one seeking to charge a lessor of a business for goods actually furnished the lessee cannot assert the invalidity of the lease under the statute of frauds; the provision of the statute requiring registration not applying in determining whether such person was a creditor of the lessor.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Frauds, Statute of, Cent. Dig. §§ 344-350; Dec. Dig. § 143.*]

2. CORPORATIONS (§ 425*)—AGENCY—EQUITABLE ESTOPPEL—CLOTHING WITH APPARENT AUTHORITY.

Defendant, a manufacturing corporation, which had had business relations with plaintiff, leased its plant to C., and went out of business. Subsequently the lessee ordered goods from plaintiff, writing on paper which bore the name of the plaintiff on the top, but which omitted the names of defendant's officers, and bore the name of a different product as the thing manufactured, and was signed by defendant's corporate name, "W. E. C., Lessee." Held, that defendant's failure to notify plaintiff of the lease of its plant and its retirement from business did not estop it to deny its liability for the goods sold to the lessee, since such liability could only be based on conduct which would induce or mislead plaintiff to believe the lessee was acting on its behalf or by its authority, in spite of his signature as lessee.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Corporations, Cent. Dig. §§ 1697-1705; Dec. Dig. § 425.*]

3. CORPORATIONS (§ 429*)—AGENCY—ESTOPPEL—SALE—NOTICE.

One furnishing goods to the lessee of defendant corporation's business upon orders from the lessee, signed by defendant's name, followed by "W. E. C., Lessee," was sufficiently notified that the goods were ordered by the lessee and not by defendant, so that defendant was not liable therefor.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Corporations, Cent. Dig. §§ 1720-1725; Dec. Dig. § 429.*]

Appeal from Superior Court, Guilford County; Daniels, Judge.

Action by the Acme Cement Plaster Company against the Greensboro Wood Fibre Plaster Company. From a judgment for defendant, plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

Taylor & Scales, for appellant. Stern & Stern, for appellee.

CLARK, C. J. In 1906, the plaintiff sold the defendant two car loads of cement, for which the latter paid. On January 1, 1907, the defendant leased its property to one W. E. Cochran, and went out of business. Thereafter said Cochran ordered four car loads of cement from the plaintiff. The correspondence on Cochran's part was on letter heads bearing at the top the words "Greensboro Wood Fibre Plaster Co." And at the bottom the letters were signed, "Greensboro Wood Fibre Plaster Co., W. E. Cochran, Lessee." This signature was stamped with a rubber stamp, except the words "W. E. Cochran," which was written in pen and ink. The correspondence which the defendant company had had with the plaintiff was on letter heads which bore the words "Greensboro Wood Fibre Plaster Co.," and in addition bore at the head the words "W. C. Bain, President, J. R. McClamroch, Vice President, E. G. West, Sec., Treas. & Gen. Mgr.," and was signed "Greensboro Wood Fibre Plaster Co. per E. G. West, Sec. & Treas." The letter heads of the defendant also described its business as "Manufacturers of wall plaster," while that used by Cochran used the words "Manufacturers of Blue Bell Wood Fibre Plaster." This action is brought to recover of the defendant company the price of the four car loads of cement shipped on the order of W. E. Cochran, lessee, in 1907.

The plaintiff excepted because the defendant was allowed to show by the witness West that it had leased its plant to Cochran on January 1, 1907, and for this purpose offered in evidence the written lease. The plaintiff objected, on the ground that it was a lease of the defendant's entire plant for a period of five years, consisting, among other things, of real estate, and, not having been recorded, it was void under the statute of frauds. The exception is not well taken. The statute of frauds is not available as to third parties, and strangers to the transaction cannot avail themselves of the statute. Cowell v. Insurance Co., 126 N. C. 684, 36 S. E. 184; Davis v. Inscoe, 84 N. C. 396; Green v. Railroad, 77 N. C. 95. As to the plaintiff, the lease was a substantive fact, which could be proven by the witness West. Besides, the lease was in writing. Rev. 1905, § 978. The registration required by Rev. 1905, § 980, has no application when, as here, the issue to be determined is whether the plaintiff is a creditor or not.

There are numerous other exceptions, but they practically depend upon the one proposition that the defendant company should have granted the plaintiff's prayer for instruction that it was incumbent upon the defendant company to notify the plaintiff that it had leased its plant to Cochran, and that, not having done so, the defendant is liable for the goods bought by said Cochran. The plaintiff contended that, when a partner retires from a partnership, in order to relieve himself from liability on account of debts created thereafter by the firm, he must give actual notice of such retirement to such persons as have been accustomed to deal with the firm, or must show that they had knowledge of such facts as would put the creditor on notice. And as to those not theretofore dealing with the firm he must show public notice given of his retirement, and that the same is true when the purchaser of a partnership business conducts it in the same name and style.

[2] The defendant does not contest these propositions of law. It offered evidence that it did not authorize the lessee to use its name in the business, and had no knowledge of the fact, and contended that the change in the former letter head, by omitting the names of the officers, and the change in the description of the business, and the signature, "W. E. Cochran, Lessee," instead of "per E. G. West, Sec. & Treas.," were sufficient and full notice to the plaintiff that it was dealing with Cochran, and not with the defendant company. The case is not analogous to that of a partnership, where the business goes on in the same name. Here there was a lease of the entire business, and the defendant had no control or knowledge of the conduct of the lessee. It was not called upon to notify the plaintiff that it had gone out of business. It would only be responsible to the plaintiff if its conduct had been such as to induce the plaintiff to believe that Cochran was acting on its behalf or by its authority, notwithstanding he described himself as lessee, or had misled the plaintiff to so believe.

[3] The court properly charged the jury that the burden was upon the plaintiff to show that defendant by its conduct induced plaintiff to believe that the person making the order for the four car loads of cement had authority to make this contract, or by its conduct misled the plaintiff, so that it believed that the defendant was responsible for the order. The court could not instruct the jury, as requested by the plaintiff, to find the issue in favor of the plaintiff. The signature of the orders, "W. E. Cochran, Lessee," was sufficient notice to the plaintiff that it was not dealing with his lessor, the defendant company. It was certainly sufficient to put the plaintiff on inquiry, and it, and not the defendant company, must suffer for the plaintiff's negligence. It would be otherwise, if the defendant had by its conduct induced or misled the plaintiff into believing that it was liable for purchases made by its lessee, or had authorized him to make such purchases. This view of the evidence was submitted to the jury by the court. The lessor of a business does not stand in the same situation as a retiring partner, or the seller of a partnership business, who permits the business to be carried on in the same name and style as before. There former dealers with the firm must be shown to have actual notice. But when a business is carried on by a lessee, who describes himself as lessee, there is notice to all dealing with him that they are not dealing with the lessor.

The charge of his honor is very full and explicit; the evidence is voluminous, and was doubtless fully argued to the jury. There seems to be very slight contradiction as to the facts. We find no error.

(156 N. C. 535)

ROSEMOND v. McPHERSON.

(Supreme Court of North Carolina. Oct. 9, 1911.)

APPEAL AND ERROR (§ 773*)—DISMISSAL—GROUNDS.

Where appellant failed to file his brief within the time prescribed, and the case on appeal contains no assignments of error or grouped exceptions, as required by the rules of the Supreme Court, a motion by appellee to dismiss under rule 17 (39 S. E. vi) will be granted.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Appeal and Error, Cent. Dig. §§ 3108-3110; Dec. Dig. § 773.*]

Appeal from Superior Court, Orange County; Daniels, Judge.

Action by Charles E. Rosemond against John McPherson. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendant appeals. Dismissed.

C. D. Turner, for appellant. J. W. Graham, for appellee.

PER CURIAM. This appeal is dismissed. The motion to docket and dismiss under rule 17 (39 S. E. vi) was made before the appellant applied for writ of certiorari to bring up case on appeal. The appellant did not file his brief within the time prescribed, and the case on appeal contains no assignments of error or grouped exceptions, as required by the rules of this court.

Appeal dismissed.

(156 N. C. 444)

RUSS v. HARPER.

(Supreme Court of North Carolina. Nov. 1, 1911.)

1. MASTER AND SERVANT (§ 236*)—APPLIANCE—LATENT DEFECTS.

In an action for an injury to a laundry employé, caused by the alleged breaking of a device used for hoisting clothes to an upper story, evidence held to show that the appliance was not such an ordinary and common device as to require no special care or preparation of it by the master, so that the question of his negligence was properly left to the jury.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Master and Servant, Cent. Dig. §§ 1010-1050; Dec. Dig. § 236.*]

2. APPEAL AND ERROR (§ 1062*)—HARMLESS ERROR—INSTRUCTIONS.

In an employé's action for personal injuries, there was no evidence of plaintiff's contributory negligence, except such as might arise from the fact of her continuing to work with the defective appliance which finally caused the injury. Held, the doctrine of assumption of risk being, in its proper acceptance, not applicable to conditions caused by the master's negligence, or, if it exists, being determined on the principles applicable to contributory negligence, that the court committed no error to defendant's prejudice in submitting the question of plaintiff's contributory negligence, under an issue of assumption of risk.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Appeal and Error, Dec. Dig. § 1062.*]

3. RELEASE (§ 9*)—REQUISITES AND VALIDITY—SEAL.

A writing, to be valid as a technical release, must be under seal.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Release, Cent. Dig. § 13; Dec. Dig. § 9.*]

4. COMPROMISE AND SETTLEMENT (§ 20*)—BREACH OF CONDITION—RIGHT OF OPPOSITE PARTY.

On a breach by a master of the conditions of a writing which purports to be a settlement on mutually dependent conditions for an injury to a servant, the servant is remitted to his original rights.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Compromise and Settlement, Dec. Dig. § 20.*]

5. MASTER AND SERVANT (§ 270*)—RELEVANCY—SIMILAR ACCIDENT.

In an action for an injury to a servant by the breaking of a defective appliance, testimony of a former servant that the same device broke in the same way while she was operating it a year or two before the injury of plaintiff was properly admitted as tending to show the dangerous character of the appliance, where, from the testimony of the witness, it is apparent that conditions in both instances are the same.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Master and Servant, Cent. Dig. § 919; Dec. Dig. § 270.*]

Brown and Walker, JJ., dissenting.

Appeal from Superior Court, New Hanover County; Peebles, Judge.

Action by Lula Russ against J. T. Harper. From a judgment for plaintiff, defendant appeals. Affirmed.

There was evidence on the part of plaintiff tending to show that on the 2d of February, 1909, plaintiff, an employé of defendant, doing business as the Wilmington Steam Laundry, was injured by the negligence of defendant in failing to provide a safe place or appliance for doing her work, and in failing to give same proper supervision. There was also testimony for plaintiff tending to show that the conditions contained in the paper writing set up by defendant in lieu of her recovery had not been complied with, etc.

The defendant offered evidence tending to show there had been no negligence of defendant causing the injury, and resisted recovery further on the grounds that plaintiff had assumed the risk, was guilty of contributory negligence, and that any and all recovery was barred in the case by reason of an adjustment had between the parties, evidenced and contained in a paper writing executed by plaintiff in terms as follows: "Wilmington, N. C. In consideration of the fact that the Wilmington Steam Laundry will pay my doctor's and medicine bills and keep me on the pay roll at my regular salary until I am pronounced able to resume work by the doctor, I do hereby forever release and discharge said Wilmington Steam Laundry from any and all claims, demands, actions, which I now have or may hereafter have claim against for any injuries that I received on February 2d, 1900. [Signed] Lula Russ. Lizzie Russ, Charles T. Harper, Witnesses." Defendant claimed that said paper writing was and should have the effect of a release of plaintiff's demand, and offered evidence tending to show that all conditions and stipulations appearing in the agreement had been fully complied with.

The jury rendered the following verdict:

"(1) Was the plaintiff injured by the negligence of the defendant in his [defendant's] failure to furnish safe elevator arrangement? Answer: Yes.

"(2) Was the plaintiff guilty of contributory negligence as alleged? Answer: No.

"(3) Did the plaintiff assume the risk of the injury by her accepting employment and using the arrangement furnished her as alleged by defendant? Answer: No.

"(4) Did the plaintiff execute the agreement or paper writing offered in evidence by defendant, and did she receive her weekly pay and doctor's services under said agreement until the doctor determined her well and ready to return to work, in satisfaction of her claim for damages? Answer: No.

"(5) What damages, if any, is the plaintiff entitled to recover? Answer: Six hundred dollars in addition to anything paid on account."

Judgment on the verdict, and defendant excepted and appealed.

E. K. Bryan, for appellant. W. P. M. Turner, Rountree & Carr, and Herbert McClammy, for appellee.

HOKE, J. (after stating the facts as above). There was evidence tending to show that defendant was proprietor of a steam laundry, and in the ordinary progress of the work the wet clothes were placed in a large heavy basket, "large enough to lay a man's shirt in full," and raised by a hoisting rope and pulley to the third floor, where it became plaintiff's duty, as an employé, to pull the basket from the elevator shaft to the floor, remove the clothes, and give them to another employé to be placed in the dryer. That the handle of the basket was a short rope, with iron hooks at the ends. These hooks were caught in loops at either side of the basket, and this short rope, at or about the middle, was hitched to a large hook at the end of the hoisting rope, where it was or should have been held in place by some kind of proper and secure fastening, so placed as to hold the basket steady and in its proper position. That on this occasion the basket was very heavy, having from 50 to 75 wet shirts in it, and as plaintiff in the usual way was endeavoring to pull the same to its landing place, from the absence of the fastening, or because same was insufficient or insecure, the short rope slipped, tilting the basket, with the effect that one of the hooks at the side of the basket slipped from its hold, causing the basket to drop, and as it went down the shaft the hook at the loose end of the short rope caught in plaintiff's "right arm, between the elbow and wrist, cutting through the flesh for a distance of about three inches, and lodged in the bone and muscles of the wrist. That when the basket jerked forward and the hook fastened in plaintiff's arm she fell with one shoulder against a post at the side of the shaft, and in this way was kept from being jerked into the shaft; the basket filled with wet clothes, hanging down the shaft, suspended by the rope; one large iron hook being caught in plaintiff's wrist, and the other fastened to one end of the basket." That plaintiff remained in this position for a time, till relieved by the superintendent and another employé standing near. The negligence alleged against defendant on the facts in evidence was in not having any proper fastening to hold the short rope in or on the large hook at the end of the hoisting rope, that the hook did not have sufficient curvature, and in having an insufficient and insecure fastening to keep the short rope from slipping, rendering the basket liable to tilt as it did in this instance, and thereby making plaintiff's work less secure. Speaking to this question, the plaintiff, on being shown the appliance as at present operated, stated that it was not like it was at the time plaintiff received her injury. At that time "the hook on the rope from the drum did not have any wire wrapped across the top of the hook when I worked at the laundry, and, in fact, had nothing on the hook to prevent the rope from flying off. Where the rope came together and wound upon the top hook, there was wrapped around it a small cotton string, which kept the rope from slipping, and therefore held the basket in place. The rope you have here has a large twine string wrapped just under the hook, and this is interwoven in the two small ropes. This is entirely different from the way it was arranged when I was injured. When I was injured, the two large hooks which caught in the handles of the basket were sharp at the points, but since then they have been cut off. When the accident happened, I had caught hold of the basket by the side of it, as I had always done, to pull it from the shaft to the floor, and when I pulled it in, the small cotton cord, the center hook that held the rope in position broke, which caused one end of the basket to fly up, and in doing so one hook was released, and that end of the rope jerked loose from the top hook."

[1] There was evidence on part of defendant contradicting the portion of this above statement which tends to establish negligence on defendant's part, but on the testimony as quoted the question of defendant's negligence, under a proper charge, was for the jury. It was not a case presenting ordinary conditions requiring no special care, preparation, or prevision, where the element of proximate cause is not infrequently lacking," as in House v. Railroad, 152 N. C. 397, 67 S. E. 981, and Dunn v. Railroad, 151 N. C. 313, 66 S. E. 134, but comes under that class of cases illustrated in Hipp v. Fiber Co., 152 N. C. 753, 68 S. E. 215, and Wade v. Contracting Co., 149 N. C. 177, 62 S. E. 919, etc. The court was right, therefore, in submitting to the jury the issue as to defendant's negligence.

[2] We find no testimony tending to show contributory negligence by plaintiff, other than that which might arise by reason of her working on under the circumstances as they existed, and this was not improperly submitted to the jury, under an issue as to assumption of risk. Whatever may be the ruling in other jurisdictions, it is now very well established in this state that this doctrine of assumption of risk, in its proper acceptance, does not apply to conditions caused or created by the employer's negligence, or in such case, if it exists in name, it is to be determined on the principles applicable to contributory negligence. On this question, in Bissell v. Lumber Co., 152 N. C. 124, 67 S. E. 259, the court quotes with approval from Shearman & Redfield on Negligence (section 211) as follows: "The true rule, as nearly as it can be stated, is that a servant can recover for an injury suffered from defects due to the master's fault, of which he had notice, if under all the circumstances a servant of ordinary prudence, if acting with such prudence, would, under similar conditions, have continued the same work under the same risk." And this statement has been approved in numerous decisions of the court, as in Norris v. Holt, Morgan Mills, 154 N. C. 474, 70 S. E. 912; Pressly v. Yarn Mills, 138 N. C. 410, 51 S. E. 69; Tanner v. Lumber Co., 140 N. C. 475, 53 S. E. 287. In the Tanner Case, Associate Justice Brown states the doctrine we are considering as follows: "His honor instructed the jury that when the plaintiff went on the log car for the purpose of riding he assumed the risk of all the dangers incident to riding on a log train. As a general statement of the law, this proposition is correct; but it does not go far enough, and was liable to mislead the jury. The judge should have further stated that the plaintiff assumed no risk which was incurred by reason of a defective car. There was evidence tending to prove that one of the standards used to hold the logs securely in place was gone, and there was no evidence that the plaintiff was apprised of the danger liable to result when he mounted the loaded car. Inasmuch as it was the master's duty (he having undertaken it according to the plaintiff's contention) to furnish his laborers transportation on his log train to and from the 'quarters,' it was his further duty to see that such transportation was rendered as reasonably safe as the character of it would admit. While the plaintiff assumed the risks incident to riding on loaded log cars, he did not assume any risk resulting from a defective car. Hicks v. Manufacturing Co., 138 N. C. 319 [50 S. E. 703]; Pressly v. Yarn Mills [138 N. C. 410, 51 S. E. 69]. If the plaintiff knew that the standard was gone when he mounted the loaded log car, and if in consequence thereof the danger to himself was so obvious that no man of ordinary prudence would have ridden on it, then the plaintiff did assume the risk, and would be guilty of such contributory negligence as would bar a recovery." This being the doctrine as it obtains with us, on the facts in evidence, the court committed no error to defendant's prejudice in submitting the question of assumption of risk to the jury. See Hamilton v. Lumber Co., 72 S. E. 588, at the present term.

[3, 4] On the fourth issue, the paper writing relied on by defendant could not be treated as a technical release for lack of a seal. Redmond v. Coffin, 17 N. C. 441; Smithwick v. Ward, 52 N. C. 64, 75 Am. Dec. 453; Clark on Contracts, p. 491; but, whether termed a release, a compromise, or an accord and satisfaction, it purports on its face to be an adjustment on mutually dependent conditions, and a breach on the part of defendant having been established by the verdict the plaintiff is remitted to his original rights. Wacksmuth v. Atlantic Coast Line R. Co., 72 S. E. 813, present term; Wildes v. Nelson, 154 N. C. 590, 70 S. E. 940; City of Memphis v. Brown, 20 Wall. 289, 22 L. Ed. 264; Noe v. Christie, 51 N. Y. 270; 1 Am. & Eng. Enc. (2d Ed.) p. 422 et seq.

[5] There was also objection that Minnie Pickett, a witness for plaintiff, was allowed to testify that when she worked at this same place a year or two before the basket fell with her on two occasions; that the small string wrapped around the short rope just where the same was fastened to the hook on the long rope broke, causing the basket to drop to the bottom floor. The conditions appear to be the same, and the evidence tending, as it did, to show that this was a dangerous contrivance would seem to be a relevant circumstance, under Blevins v. Cotton Mills, 150 N. C. 493, 64 S. E. 428, and cases of like kind.

There is no reversible error, and the judgment in plaintiff's favor is affirmed.

No error.

BROWN, J. (dissenting). I am of opinion that upon all the evidence the giving way of the fastening which held one side of the basket was an accident which no reasonable care or human foresight can guard against, and that the defendant should not justly be held liable for the consequences.

WALKER, J., concurs in this opinion.

(156 N. C. 529)

REA v. REA.†

(Supreme Court of North Carolina. Oct. 9, 1911.)

1. HUSBAND AND WIFE (§ 48*)—CONTRACTS—CONVEYANCES.

Revisal 1905, § 2107, providing that no contract between a husband and wife during coverture shall be valid, unless executed in the prescribed manner, applies only to contracts, and has no application to a conveyance of real or personal property by a wife to her husband.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Husband and Wife, Dec. Dig. § 48.*]

2. HUSBAND AND WIFE (§ 49%*)—PERSONAL PROPERTY—TRANSFER—REQUISITES.

The Constitution confers on a married woman full power to dispose of her personal property without restriction; and Pub. Laws 1911, c. 109, declares that, subject to the provisions of Revisal 1905, § 2107, relating to contracts only, every married woman may contract and deal, so as to affect her personal property, in the same manner and to the same effect as if she were unmarried, but that no conveyance of real estate shall be valid, unless made with the written consent of her husband, required by Const. art. 10, § 6, and a privy examination as to the execution of the same, taken and certified as required by law. Held, that a married woman has unlimited power to convey her personal property without restriction; and hence was entitled to make a gift thereof to her husband.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Husband and Wife, Cent. Dig. §§ 256-260; Dec. Dig. § 49%.*]

Hoke and Allen, JJ., dissenting.

Appeal from Superior Court, Chowan County; Justice, Judge.

Action by Martha C. Rea against J. K. Rea, as administrator of C. W. Rea, deceased. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendant appeals. Reversed.

W. M. Bond and Pruden & Pruden, for appellant. C. S. Vann, for appellee.

CLARK, C. J. On April 6, 1908, the plaintiff, who owned 48 shares of stock in the Edenton Cotton Mills, delivered same to C. W. Rea, her husband, having indorsed on the certificate as follows: "For value received, I hereby sell, assign and transfer unto C. W. Rea, the shares of stock represented by the within certificate, and do hereby irrevocably constitute and appoint W. O. Elliott, secretary, attorney to transfer the said stock on the books of the within corporation with full power of substitution in the premises. Martha C. Rea. April 6, 1908. In presence of C. W. Rea." On April 8, 1908, said C. W. Rea surrendered said certificate to said cotton mill, and the same number of shares were issued to him. C. W. Rea died in 1909, and the certificate of stock which had been issued to him went into the hands of his administrator. The plaintiff contends in this action that said assignment, delivery, and transfer of said stock by her was a nullity, because of noncompliance with Revisal, § 2107.

*For other cases see same topic and section NUMBER in Dec. Dig. & Am. Dig. Key No. Series & Rep'r Indexes

†For concurring opinions, see 72 S. E. 873.

[1] There is a broad distinction between conveyances and contracts. Revisal, § 2107, applies only to contracts. Laws of 1911, c. 109, known as "Martin's Act," provides: "Subject to the provisions of section 2107, Revisal 1905, every married woman shall be authorized to contract and deal so as to affect her real and personal property in the same manner and with the same effect as if she were unmarried, but no conveyance of her real estate shall be valid unless made with the written assent of her husband, provided by section 6, art. 10, of the Constitution and a privy examination as to the execution of the same taken and certified as required by law." This recognizes that section 2107 applies to contracts, and that the only restriction upon conveyances by her is that constitutional one requiring the "written assent" of her husband as to conveyances of realty, and her privy examination in such case.

Revisal, § 2107, is equally explicit. It comes under subhead 3, entitled "Contracts between Husband and Wife," and provides: "No contract between a husband and wife during coverture shall be valid to affect or change any part of the real estate of the wife or the accruing income thereof, for longer time than 3 years next ensuing the making of such contracts, or to impair or change the body or capital of the personal estate of the wife, or of the accruing income thereof, for longer time than 3 years next ensuing the making of such contracts unless such contract shall be in writing, and be duly proved as is required for conveyances of land; and upon the examination of the wife separate and apart from her husband, as is now or may hereafter be required by law in the probate of deed of femmes covert, it shall appear to the satisfaction of such officer that the wife freely executed such contract, and freely consented thereto at the time of her separate examination, and that the same is not unreasonable or injurious to her. The certificate of the officer shall state his conclusions, and shall be conclusive of the facts therein stated. But the same may be impeached for fraud as other judgments may be."

An examination of section 2107 shows that it applies solely to contracts, and not to conveyances; indeed the word "contract" is used five times in that section. The object of the Legislature was clearly to prevent the wife making any contract with her husband, whereby she should incur a liability against her estate, which in future might prove a burden or charge upon it, or cause a change or impairment of her income or personalty. To that end, not only a privy examination was required, but the certificate of a magistrate that the contract is not unreasonable or injurious to her. This provision does not attempt to apply to conveyances by her, as to which the act of 1911 retains the constitutional restriction in regard to realty that there must be the written assent of the husband, and privy examination. Had the act attempted to impose a further restriction upon the conveyance of married women of realty, such as the approval of a third person, it would be in conflict with the Constitution, which gives her the power to convey her realty, if she has "the written assent of her husband." The majority of this court has sustained the statutory requirement of a privy examination in conveyances of realty by married women, but solely upon the ground that it is not an additional restriction, but merely a regulation to ascertain whether the wife really executed the deed.

[2] As to conveyances by the wife of her personalty, the Constitution gives her full power of jus disponendi without any restriction whatever. Nor is there any statute whatever that in any way has attempted to restrict it. This matter has been fully considered and settled by this court in a remarkably well-considered and able opinion by Mr. Justice Walker, in Vann v. Edwards, 135 N. C. 661, 47 S. E. 784, 67 L. R. A. 461, which leaves nothing to be added. That case overruled Walton v. Bristol, 125 N. C. 419, 34 S. E. 544, so far as it could be construed to intimate a different conclusion. In Sydnor v. Boyd, 119 N. C. 481, 26 S. E. 92, 37 L. R. A. 734, the wife attempted to assign her life insurance policy to her husband, so as to make it payable to him at her death, and guaranteed "the validity and sufficiency of the foregoing assignment." This was an executory contract, which would have changed or diminished the corpus of her estate at her death, and she would have incurred liability upon her guaranty. The court held that this was a contract, and invalid, because not made in compliance with the Code 1835 (now Revisal, § 2107).

If Revisal, § 2107, had included conveyances, it would have been invalid as to the transfers by a married woman of her personalty, because the Constitution gives her as to them the absolute jus disponendi, as if femme sole, without any restriction whatever. It would have been invalid as to conveyances of realty, because requiring the assent of a third person over and above the "written assent" of her husband, which is the only requirement of the Constitution, and an addition to the privy examination required by statute, which has been held a mere regulation, and not a restriction, upon the right of the woman to convey. In this case, the husband actually witnessed the transfer in writing, which, under the authority of Jennings v. Hinton, 128 N. C. 51, 35 S. E. 187, is a sufficient compliance with the requirement of the written assent of the husband to conveyance of realty.

In this case, there does not appear to have been any consideration, and the assignment was not only a conveyance, but a gift. No magistrate could certify that a gift by a woman to her husband is for her benefit, or does not diminish her estate. It would be a startling proposition that a married woman, who by our Constitution has full control of her property, as if unmarried, cannot make a present to her husband, if she sees fit. It is a matter of everyday occurrence. Whether she make her husband a gift of money, a dressing gown, or a pair of slippers, it would be astonishing if she could recover it from his administrator, or from him, if there should be a divorce. Of course, if the conveyance or gift by her has been procured by fraud or duress, it can be impeached, just as if made to any one else.

Summing up, the rights of married women in North Carolina as to conveyances and contracts are:

As to conveyances of personalty. There is no restriction whatever upon her right to dispose of her personalty as fully and freely as if she had remained unmarried, either in the Constitution or by any statute. Vann v. Edwards, 135 N. C. 661, 47 S. E. 784, 67 L. R. A. 461, cited with approval by Justice Connor in Ball v. Paquin, 140 N. C. 91, 52 S. E. 410, 3 L. R. A. (N. S.) 307.

As to conveyances of realty. The Constitution requires only "the written assent" of the husband. The statute superadds only a regulation providing for a privy examination, which has been upheld on the ground that it is not an additional requirement, but merely a method of ascertaining if the deed is really her voluntary act.

As to contracts. Laws 1911, c. 109, provides that a married woman is authorized to contract and to affect her real and personal property thereby in the same manner and to the same effect as if she were unmarried, excepting only contracts whereby she may incur liability to her husband, as to which the provisions of Revisal, § 2107, are retained.

The conveyance of the stock by the wife was not restricted by the Constitution or any statute. If, reversing Vann v. Edwards, 135 N. C. 661, 47 S. E. 784, 67 L. R. A. 461, it were now held otherwise, the cotton mills could be held liable, and every bank, railroad company, and other corporation which has transferred stock in like cases to this. Wooten v. Railroad, 128 N. C. 119, 38 S. E. 298, 56 L. R. A. 615. While the Legislature has seen fit to guard contracts, whereby a wife may incur liability to her husband, it has not attempted to restrict her right of conveyance, still less to forbid gifts by her to her husband, without the approval of a justice of the peace.

Upon the case agreed, judgment should have been entered in favor of the defendant.

Reversed.

HOKE, J. (dissenting). I do not think that article 10, § 6, of our Constitution, had or was intended to have effect upon conveyances or contracts between husband and wife, but that such transactions have been and should continue to be proper subjects of legislative regulation, unaffected by that instrument. This, in my judgment, being a correct position, I am of opinion that section 2107 of our Revisal (the section controlling on the subject referred to) should be upheld in its integrity and construed as it is plainly written. It has been sustained and applied in numerous and repeated cases before this court ever since its enactment, 40 years ago; was recognized as the law of the land in a decision at the last term, in Kearney v. Vann, 154 N. C. 311, 70 S. E. 747; and was expressly retained and approved by our Legislature at its last session. Public Laws N. C. 1911, c. 109. Further, I am utterly unable to perceive how a decision, setting aside the safeguards provided by this statute, and affording facilities for a married woman to deprive herself of her property, and, in many instances, of a home for herself and children, in favor of an improvident husband, can be properly regarded as part of an enlightened and progressive policy, or in any way having a tendency to liberate married women from the shackles of tyrannous precedent, and, in my opinion, the statute should be upheld in its entirety. Holding the view, however, as stated, I think it a matter of supreme importance that this question should be considered as settled, and shall therefore make no further protest.

I am authorized to say that ALLEN, J., concurs in this view.

(156 N. C. 537)

OVERMAN v. LANIER et al.

(Supreme Court of North Carolina. Oct. 9, 1911.)

1. APPEAL AND ERROR (§ 132*)—DECISIONS REVIEWABLE—PRO FORMA JUDGMENT.

Under Const. 1868, art. 4, § 8, authorizing the Supreme Court to review any "decision" of the courts below, a pro forma judgment, entered on the coming in of a referee's report, without any consideration of the exceptions to the report, was not reviewable.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Appeal and Error, Cent. Dig. § 896; Dec. Dig. § 132.*]

2. APPEAL AND ERROR (§ 125*)—DECISIONS REVIEWABLE—CONSENT JUDGMENT.

No appeal lies from a consent judgment.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Appeal and Error, Cent. Dig. § 883; Dec. Dig. § 125.*]

3. COSTS (§ 241*)—COSTS ON APPEAL.

Where a pro forma judgment, entered on a referee's report with the assent of the parties, was not reviewable, on remand each party should pay half the costs of the appeal.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Costs, Dec. Dig. § 241.*]

Appeal from Superior Court, Rowan County; Lyon, Judge.

Action by L. S. Overman, as administrator, against Mattie Lanier and others. From the judgment all parties appeal. Cause remanded.

T. F. Klutz, E. C. Gregory, T. J. Jerome, E. J. Justice, L. H. Clement, and Chas. W. Tillett, for plaintiff. Walser & Walser, G. W. Garland, Burwell & Cansler, and Manly, Hendren & Womble, for defendants.

CLARK, C. J. This case was referred by consent, and on the coming in of the report there were many exceptions, both to the findings of facts and to the conclusions of law. The record states that all exceptions were overruled and that the court confirmed the report in all respects. Both sides appealed. When the case was called in this court, it was stated by counsel on both sides that the judge below, owing to the rush of business and the anxiety of both parties to get the case sent up for review, had entered a pro forma judgment without having really considered any of the exceptions.

[1] Under the former system, before the Constitution of 1868, this court was the creation of the Legislature, and under the construction of the creating act causes in equity were usually transmitted to this court upon a pro forma judgment because this court passed upon the findings of fact. But under the Constitution of 1868, art. 4, § 8, this court reviews upon appeal any "decision" of the courts below. When a pro forma judgment is rendered, there has been no decision, and hence no appeal can be entertained. In State v. Locust, 63 N. C. 575, which was a civil judgment upon a peace bond, this court said: "We take occasion to remind the judges of the superior courts that we will not hereafter consider cases sent to this court upon pro forma judgments, as this court is entitled to the benefit of their well-considered opinions upon questions of law, which may arise in such cases." In Hines v. Hines, 84 N. C. 125, the court cites with approval the above quotation from State v. Locust. In Miller v. Groome, 109 N. C. 149, 13 S. E. 840, the court said: "It was perfectly competent for the judge, upon review, if he thought so, to adopt the findings of fact and conclusions of law of the referee, and then they would become the findings and conclusions of the court; but it was error in his honor to summarily dispose of the exceptions by overruling them and confirming the report without reviewing and passing upon them judicially." At this term, in Thompson v. Smith, 72 S. E. 379, Mr. Justice Walker reviews the subject, and says: "When exceptions are taken to a referee's findings of fact and law, it is the duty of the judge to consider the evidence and give his own opinion and conclusions both upon the facts and upon the law. He is not permitted to do this in a perfunctory way, but he must deliberate and decide as in other cases—use his own faculties and ascertain the truth, and form his own judgment as to fact and law. This is required not only as a check upon the referee and a safeguard against any possible errors on his part, but because we cannot review the referee's findings in any other way. The point was presented clearly and directly in Miller v. Groome, 109 N. C. 148 [13 S. E. 840], and controls this case." And thereupon it was further said: "The cause is remanded, with directions that the judge of the superior court will review the referee's findings of fact and his rulings as to law upon the exceptions thereto." There are other decisions to the same effect. But the above are sufficient, if indeed any authority were needed under the terms of our Constitution. The litigants are entitled to, and should have, the opinion of the learned lawyer who presides in the superior court, who should carefully review the entire evidence and make his own findings of fact and enter his own conclusions as to the law. If this is done in a perfunctory way as by a pro forma judgment, there is no method in which the findings of fact by the referee can be reviewed when there is any evidence whatever upon the findings excepted to. This court also, as well as the parties, are entitled to the aid of the judgment of the court below after the full consideration of the cause by him. The presumption is that the judgment below is correct, and the burden is upon the appellant to overcome that presumption. It is not fair to him nor to this court to throw the burden of that presumption against either party, unless the judge has fully and carefully considered the cause before rendering the judgment, as it is his duty to do in every case.

[2] If this were a consent judgment, no appeal would lie. Besides, "consent judgments are in effect merely contracts of the parties" and have no validity as precedents. Bank v. Commrs., 119 N. C. 226, 25 S. E. 966, and cases there cited.

Even if this court had power to recognize such a course as was here taken, it would not do so because the result would be to transfer into this court, without review or consideration by the judge below, all cases where there is a report by a referee. It would result that this court would necessarily be compelled to review the findings of fact by the referee, a duty which devolves upon the trial judge. The cause must therefore be remanded, as in Thompson v. Smith, ante, to the judge holding the courts of the district, with directions that he carefully review the findings of fact and conclusions of law of the referee wherever excepted to and enter his deliberate judgment as to each exception.

[3] As the pro forma judgment was entered with the assent of both parties, each will pay half the costs of this appeal.

It may be that the judgment entered by the judge below, upon consideration of the case in accordance with law, and as herein directed, may prove satisfactory to one or to both parties. But, if there should be an appeal from his judgment, the appellant may use so much of the printed matter sent up in this case as may be useful and appropriate in that appeal. To that end all the printed matter sent up in this case may be withdrawn by the parties.

Remanded.

(156 N. C. 504)

TOWN OF TARBORO v. STATON.

(Supreme Court of North Carolina. Oct. 9, 1911.)

1. MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS (§ 469*) — STREETS — IMPROVEMENT — ASSESSMENT — FRONT-FOOT RULE.

A municipal corporation may impose assessments on adjoining property by the front-foot rule for the improvement of streets.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Municipal Corporations, Cent. Dig. §§ 1113-1117; Dec. Dig. § 469.*]

2. MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS (§ 495*) — STREET IMPROVEMENTS—ASSESSMENTS—DISCRETION.

Authority of a municipal corporation to levy assessments on abutting property for benefits conferred by street improvements being derived solely from the Legislature, the courts will not interfere with the exercise of the city's discretion in determining the extent of the benefit conferred, unless there is a want of power, or the method of assessment is so clearly inequitable as to offend a constitutional principle.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Municipal Corporations, Dec. Dig. § 495.*]

3. MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS (§ 469*) — STREET ASSESSMENTS — BENEFITS—FRONT-FOOT RULE.

Where an ordinance directed the construction of a curb and gutter along a street, one half of the cost to be borne by the town and the other half by the abutting property owners according to frontage, an assessment of $63.12 against complainant's frontage of 252½ feet was not so unreasonable as to justify the interference by a court.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Municipal Corporations, Dec. Dig. § 469.*]

Walker, J., dissenting.

Appeal from Superior Court, Edgecombe County; Whedbee, Judge.

Action by the Town of Tarboro against one Staton. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendant appeals. Affirmed.

It appeared that the municipal authorities of Tarboro, acting under power expressly conferred by the Legislature, had passed an ordinance requiring the owners of property abutting on that part of Main street from Church street to Howard avenue to curb and gutter the portion of the street in front of their property according to certain stated specifications, the one half of the cost to be borne by the town and the other half by the owners of abutting property according to frontage, and providing, further, if any abutting owners should fail to make said improvement within 30 days after due notice given, the proper officers of the town should have same done, and that one-half costs thereof should be assessed against said property owners at so much per front foot, etc.; that defendant, after notice duly given, had failed and refused to comply with the terms of the ordinance. The work was done by the authorities, the cost thereof requiring an assessment of 50 cents per front foot, and showing defendant's portion to be $63.12. The act in question declares the amounts properly assessed to be a lien on respective lots enforceable by action in the superior courts, and contains the provision: "And in his answer to the action so instituted, the owner shall have the right to deny the whole or any part of the amount claimed to be due by the town, and to plead any irregularity in reference to the assessment, and the issue raised shall be tried and the cause in other respects disposed of according to law and the practice of the court." Defendant resists recovery chiefly on the grounds (1) that the property of defendant in fact received no special benefit by reason of the alleged improvement; (2) that such special benefits were in no wise considered by the authorities when the assessment was ordered or made, and, having made answer to this effect, tendered issues presenting his position, and same were declined.

On issues submitted by the court the jury rendered the following verdict:

"(1) Did the commissioners of Tarboro in making the assessment take in consideration the special benefits the property assessed received in addition to the benefits received by the community at large? Answer: No.

"(2) Was the work done according to the requirement of the notice served on the property owner? Answer: Yes.

"(3) Is the defendant's lot so situated and located that any assessment charged against it should not be measured by the frontage rule? Answer: No.

"(4) What amount, if any, is the plaintiff entitled to have charged and assessed as a lien against the property of the defendant described in the complaint? Answer: $63.12, which is admitted to be one-half of the actual reasonable cost of the curbing and gutter."

Judgment on the verdict, and defendant excepted and appealed, assigning for error the refusal to present or consider the questions embodied in his issues.

G. M. T. Fountain and Marshall C. Staton, for appellant. W. O. Howard, for appellee.

HOKE, J. (after stating the facts as above). [1] The right to impose burdens of this kind and the method of assessment by the front-foot rule in cases like the present have been upheld in several decisions of our court, as in Kinston v. Wooten, 150 N. C. 295, 63 S. E. 1061, Kinston v. Loftin, 149 N. C. 255, 62 S. E. 1069, Asheville v. Trust Co., 143 N. C. 360, 55 S. E. 800, Hilliard v. Asheville, 118 N. C. 845, 24 S. E. 738, and Raleigh v. Peace, 110 N. C. 32, 14 S. E. 521, 17 L. R. A. 330. While it is said in these and other cases that assessments of this character can only be upheld on the "theory of special benefit conferred and which bear some reasonable relation to the burdens imposed," the right to make them as a general proposition is referred to the sovereign power of taxation which is primarily, and as a rule exclusively, a legislative power. And it is held with us, and the ruling is, we think, in accord with the great weight of authority, that in reference to a local improvement, governmental in its nature, the action of the Legislature or of local authorities exercising legislative power expressly conferred for the purpose is conclusive as to the necessity for a given improvement and in establishing general rules by any of the recognized methods, imposing special assessments for its construction and maintenance. And in applying these rules or methods to the property of an individual owner and on the question of amount the legislative declaration shall so far prevail that it is only in rare and extreme cases that the courts are allowed to interfere.

[2] Speaking to this question in Peace v. City of Raleigh, supra, the court held: "The power to levy such assessments is derived solely from the Legislature, acting either directly or through its local instrumentalities, and the courts will not interfere with the exercise of the discretion vested in the Legislature as to the necessity for, or the manner of making such assessments, unless there is a want of power or the method adopted for the assessment of the benefits is so clearly inequitable as to offend some constitutional principle." And in Asheville v. Trust Co., 143 N. C. 370, 55 S. E. 804, it was said: "It has been repeatedly decided that the legislative act of assigning districts for special taxation on the basis of benefits cannot be attacked on the ground of error in judgment regarding the special benefits, and defeated by satisfying a court that no special and peculiar benefits are received. If the Legislature has fixed the district and laid the tax for the reason that in the opinion of the legislative body such district is peculiarly benefited, its action must in general be deemed conclusive." Again in Kinston v. Wooten, supra, it was held: "As a general rule, the assessment of adjoining property by a city for the paving of its streets and sidewalks by the front-foot rule will be upheld; but in instances where it is made to appear that in applying this rule to the property of an individual owner there is a marked disproportion between the burden imposed and any possible benefit, so that it is manifest that the principle of equality had been entirely ignored and gross injustice done, the court may interfere and afford proper relief." In this case the court further said: "It will thus be seen that, while the right of the court to interfere for the protection of the individual owner of property is recognized, its exercise can only be justified and upheld in rare and extreme cases, when it is manifest that otherwise palpable injustice will be done and the owner's rights clearly violated. This limitation arises of necessity in this scheme of taxation, for in its practical application it would well nigh arrest all imposition of these burdens if each individual owner of property were allowed to interfere and stay the action of the officials on any other principle." The opinion then refers with approval to the case of Atlanta v. Hamlein, 96 Ga. 383, 23 S. E. 409, and in which Atkinson, Judge, said: "As a general proposition, upon the question of benefit, whether general or special, the owner is concluded by an expression of the legislative will. Where power is conferred upon the municipal authorities in their discretion to inaugurate a system of street improvements, with the power likewise conferred of imposing upon the abutting lot owners a proportionate share of the cost of such improvements, such power may be well exercised by the city authorities without giving notice of any character to the lot owner; and it is inconsistent with the proper exercise of the taxing power, and would tend to a manifest embarrassment of the public in the prosecution of these public improvements, if, upon every assessment, the lot owner were entitled to have the question judicially determined whether or not he would be benefited by the proposed improvement. As to whether he was benefited or not is a question which should address itself to the discretion of the municipal authorities. Their judgment upon this subject is ordinarily, except in the most extreme cases, conclusive; but, as we have before stated, it is not allowable that the municipal authorities under the guise of a public improvement should arbitrarily deprive the citizen of his estate. If, therefore, in the levy of such assessments, the cost of the improvement be so disproportionated to the value of the estate sought to be improved, as that the levy of the assessment amounts to a virtual confiscation of the lot owner's property, such assessment cannot be upheld as a legal or valid exercise of the power to tax for such improvements." These decisions are sustained, we think, as stated by the weight of well-considered authority. The case of Norwood v. Baker, 172 U. S. 269, 19 Sup. Ct. 187, 43 L. Ed. 443, as interpreted and applied by subsequent decisions of the same high court not being in direct or necessary antagonism to the view presented, see French v. Asphalt Paving Co., 181 U. S. 324, 21 Sup. Ct. 625, 45 L. Ed. 879; Wright v. Davidson, 181 U. S. 871, 21 Sup. Ct. 618, 45 L. Ed. 900; Tonawanda v. Lyon, 181 U. S. 391, 21 Sup. Ct. 609, 45 L. Ed. 908; Atlanta v. Hamlein, supra; Preston v. Rudd, 84 Ky. 150; State ex rel. Wheeler v. District Court, 80 Minn. 293, 83 N. W. 183; Elliott on Roads and Streets (3d Ed.) § 685; Hamilton on Law of Special Assessments, § 181; Judson on Taxation, § 359. This, then, being the correct principle, the position contended for by defendant can in no wise be sustained. The statute confers ample authority.

[3] The front-foot rule has been adopted and declared a correct and proper method, and the amount assessed against defendant, $63.12, for a frontage of 252½ feet, would seem to be reasonable, just, and moderate. Certainly there is nothing in the record or in the evidence which shows, or tends to show, facts which would authorize the court to interfere or stay collection of the amount charged.

On the question of notice, the provision of the law affording defendants an opportunity to appear and question the amount or validity of an assessment has been approved and held sufficient in a statute of similar import in Kinston v. Wooten and Kinston v. Loftin, supra; the doctrine being stated in Loftin's Case as follows: "A statute authorizing such an assessment which provides for a notice that will enable the property owner to appear before some authorized tribunal and contest the validity and fairness of the assessment before it becomes a fixed charge on his property is not open to the objection that it deprives the owner of his property without due process of law."

There is no error, and the judgment below must be affirmed.

No error.

WALKER, J. (dissenting). This is a very important case, and the principle, which is said in the opinion of the court to control it, is far-reaching in its necessary consequences. It is held substantially that the state, either directly by legislative enactment, or indirectly by acting through some local municipal body, may practically take the citizen's property for a public use without just compensation, if that use consists in improving the streets and sidewalks of a village, town, or city. I do not for a moment controvert the position that abutting property in a town may be assessed to pay the expenses of improvements when it is especially benefited thereby, but there is no more power or right to make the owner of abutting property pay for improvements of streets or sidewalks where there is no benefit to him than there is to tax him for the general public benefit when there is no return to him in the way of protection to himself or his property, or to take his property by condemnation or otherwise without just compensation. One is as much confiscation as the other. The Legislature may provide for the determination of the question of benefit to any particular property, and, perhaps, under the authorities, the decision of the tribunal, so authorized to consider and decide whether there is a special benefit and how much it is, and to provide whether it shall be paid for by the front-foot rule or by establishing districts for the assessments of such benefits, may not be reviewed, but that is a very different question from the one presented in this case, where the defendant's property is made to pay tribute to the public, regardless of benefit to his property and without even providing any method for deciding whether his property has received a special benefit or not. Under the charter of the plaintiff, the owner is required to pave, curb, or otherwise improve the sidewalk in front of his lot, and to pave or improve one-fourth of the street without reference to benefits of any kind, and upon his failure to do so the town commissioners are authorized to have the work done, and "the cost thereof shall be borne by the owner or owners of such lot and shall constitute a lien to the same extent that municipal taxes assessed against the same are a lien thereon."

This is not in accordance with our Constitution, the Constitution of the United States, or the principles of natural justice and right, as declared by one of our greatest jurists, Chief Justice Ruffin, in Railroad v. Davis, 19 N. C. (Battle's Ed.) marg. p. 451, where it is said: "The principle (of compensation) is, however, so salutary to the citizen, and concerns so nearly the character of the state, that it may well be urged that it must be consecrated by its adoption in some part of the free Constitution of this state. We should be reluctant to pronounce judicially our inability to find it in that instrument. If it be not incorporated therein, the omission must be attributed to the belief of the founders of the government that the Legislature would never perpetrate so flagrant an act of gross oppression, or that it would not be tolerated by the people, but be redressed by the next representatives chosen. There is no doubt that, while the Legislature and people of this state expressly restricted the action of the general government on this subject, it must have been supposed by the people that their own local government was in like manner restrained, or would never act in a manner to make such a restraint necessary. There is, however, no clause in that instrument which seems to bear on the point, unless it be that which is relied on in the argument for the defendant. It is the seventeenth section of the Bill of Rights which declares 'that no freeman shall be dispossessed of his freehold, or deprived of his life, liberty or property, but by the law of the land.' Under the guaranty of this article, it has been held, and in our opinion properly held, that private property is protected from the power of despotic resumption upon a legislative declaration of forfeiture, or merely to deprive the owner of it, or to enrich the treasury, unless as a pecuniary contribution by way of tax. Such acts have no foundation in any of the reasons on which depends the power in virtue of the right of eminent domain to take private property for the public use, and they could not be sustained by the offer of the fullest compensation. Though not so obvious, it may also be true that the clause under consideration is restrictive of the right of the public to the use of private property, and impliedly forbids it without compensation." This fair and equitable principle has been so uniformly adopted in subsequent decisions of this court, following the precedent thus established by Railroad v. Davis, that no one now attempts to gainsay that under our system of state government a man's property cannot be taken directly or indirectly, nor can he be deprived of the use of the emoluments thereof without just compensation for the loss to him. Where is the difference between compelling him to pay the amount of an assessment levied upon his lot and which constitutes a lien thereon until paid, and to pay which it may be sold and thereby deprive him of it, and taking directly by condemnation for a public use? None at all, except in form. In the one case you make him give up his money to save his land, and money is itself property, and in the other you take the land itself without the right of redemption by paying the money. With all due deference to my Brethren, who have overruled my opinion, I take leave to say that there is no decision to be found in the books and no authority elsewhere that holds the arbitrary provision of this charter and the proceedings taken in pursuance thereof to be valid. It is far better that ambitious villages, towns, and cities should not grow so rapidly than that the sacred rights of the citizen should be destroyed or even impaired.

A similar idea was advanced by Judge Bynum in French v. Commissioners, 74 N. C. 692, in speaking of our dealing with the property and rights of others, with special reference to the power of taxation: "The other and better way, however," he said, "is to reduce the expenditures. The old proverb, 'Cut the garment according to the cloth,' has in it much practical wisdom. It is illustrated every day in private life, and is the foundation of individual integrity, contentment, and success. In every relation of wholesome life men adapt their wants and expenditures to their income. No good reason can exist why the same obligation does not rest upon corporations, and is not equally as practicable. Instead of which, as things now go, those who are intrusted with other people's money and property, whether states or counties, instead of practicing prudence and economy in the discharge of their trust, seem emulous of each other in extravagance. The end of such a course is easily seen, and must be one of disaster." It is much better not to progress so rapidly than to make the citizen pay tribute to the public for which he receives no corresponding benefit apart from that enjoyed by other members of the community. Judge Dillon said: "Special benefits to the property assessed—that is, benefits received by it in addition to those received by the community at large—is the true and only just foundation upon which local assessments can rest; and to the extent of special benefits it is everywhere admitted that the Legislature may authorize local taxes or assessments to be made." 2 Dillon on Mun. Corp. 933 (3).

I will refer to one case decided by this court, and then pass to a general consideration of the other authorities cited in the opinion, and to what is said upon the subject by the text-writers. In Kinston v. Wooten, 150 N. C. 300, 63 S. E. 1061, referring to Village of Norwood v. Baker, 172 U. S. 269, 19 Sup. Ct. 187, 43 L. Ed. 443, and French v. Paving Co., 181 U. S. 324, 21 Sup. Ct. 625, 45 L. Ed. 879, which is erroneously supposed to have modified it, it is said that "the system provided in the different states will usually be recognized by the federal courts as conclusive in so far as they establish general rules for making assessments, yet if, in applying these rules, or any given method, to the property of an individual, it should appear that there is a marked disproportion between the burden imposed upon the lot owner and any possible benefit his property may derive from the improvement, so that it will manifestly appear that the presumption of equality had been entirely ignored and gross injustice done, the court will interfere and grant relief." What greater inequality can there be between a burden imposed and no benefit at all in return? If, as said in that case, the courts will intervene and enjoin the assessment if the burden is great and the benefit small, what will the court do, when there is all burden and no benefit, as in this case, for, as the jury have found that benefits were not considered at all, we must assume there are none, for there are none shown to exist by the decision of a judicial tribunal or even of an arbitrary one, and then, again, the charter gives to the commissioners, who may be a municipal oligarchy, the unlimited and arbitrary power to assess a citizen out of his property without the slightest regard to his benefits or the right of compensation for property forcibly taken from him for the benefit of the public. This despotic power resides in the board of commissioners, to be exercised at their will, and they may simply declare in the exercise of it that the abutting owner shall pay all the costs of the improvement. Remember that I have fully conceded the right of the Legislature by itself or through a local municipal body to prescribe the manner in which the benefit may be ascertained, and to levy or apportion the assessment according to some rule, by district, front foot, superficial area, or value, or otherwise, so that there is not such manifest disproportion between burden and benefit as to work oppression or shock our sense of justice. But how can we adjudicate that there is such a disproportion unless we have at least some tangible idea of what the benefit is, so that we may compare it with the burden? Proportion must exist between two or more well-known things, something that can be seen or understood. It cannot be predicated of something that is not known as between it and something that is known. All burden and no benefit does not suggest the idea of proportion, and that is the nonproportion which this charter and the ordinance adopted in pursuance of it have established.

Recent text-writers on this subject, who have reviewed all the decisions rendered up to the time their treatises were published, have thus stated the conclusion reached by them, after examining all the authorities, many of which are cited in the notes to the section we quote, which is as follows: "In order to justify a local assessment, the improvement must not only be public in its nature, but it must confer an especial and local benefit upon the property which is so assessed therefor. If the improvement confers an especial local benefit, it is no objection to an assessment therefor that it is constructed so as to benefit the public as much as possible and to injure it as little as possible. Improvements of this sort must 'have a double aspect of general public benefit and also of peculiar local benefit.' The attempt to state in general terms what constitutes a local special benefit has often been made. 'Benefits are special when they increase the value of the land, relieve it from a burden, or make it especially adapted to a purpose which enhances its value.' 'Whatever gives an additional value to the particular parcel of land is a special, and not a general, benefit, and it may be a special benefit, though not an immediate one.' Without such local benefit, the improvement may be public in character, so that the expense thereof may be borne by general taxation, but a local assessment, based upon the theory of benefits, cannot be levied therefor." Jones & Page on Taxation by Assessments, § 284. Norwood v. Baker, 172 U. S. 269, 19 Sup. Ct. 187, 43 L. Ed. 443, is directly opposed to the decision in this case. It was there held that an assessment upon abutting property by the front foot, without taking special benefits into account, for the entire cost and expense of opening a street, including not only the amount to be paid for the land, but the cost and expense of the proceedings, is a taking of private property for public use without compensation. It is said, though, that the Norwood Case has been reconsidered since by that court, and so qualified, modified, and explained that there is little or nothing as an authority left of it. I do not agree to this criticism of the case, or to the effect of later decisions upon it as an authority. It has been distinguished in some cases, but not overruled, and its authority, as a precedent, when more recent cases reviewing it are rightly considered, has not even been impaired, and, at least, so far as the question involved in this case is concerned.

It is supposed that the case of French v. Barber Asphalt Paving Co., 181 U. S. 324, 21 Sup. Ct. 625, 45 L. Ed. 879, and the other cases cited in the opinion from that volume of the reports of the same court, have so modified the decision in Norwood's Case as to diminish, if not destroy, its weight as an authority. I do not think so. The reasoning in those cases is devoted largely to a consideration of the manner of apportioning the assessment, whether, "in proportion to frontage, the area or the market value of the land, or in proportion to the benefits as estimated by commissioners," without any reference to the other methods. But there will be seen running through all of the discussions in these cases that there must be some determination that the property is benefited, and then the Legislature may decide in its discretion how the assessment may be apportioned. This will appear by the extract I have just taken from Wright v. Davidson, 181 U. S. 379, 21 Sup. Ct. 619, 45 L. Ed. 900 (cited in the opinion of the court), and this expression of the court in that case: "The class of lands to be assessed for the purpose may be either determined by the Legislature itself by defining a territorial district, or by other designation; or it may be left by the Legislature to the determination of commissioners, and be made to consist of such lands, and such only, as the commissioners shall decide to be benefited." The Legislature may decide that certain lands within a given or prescribed area will be benefited by an improvement, and form a taxing district for the purpose of apportioning the assessment. It is not the method of apportionment that I am criticising, but the taking of a citizen's property, not only without just compensation, but without any compensation, and you may as well take his land specifically as his money. There is no difference, as far as he is concerned. In French v. Barber Asph. Co., supra, the court, in attempting to show that Norwood's Case does not conflict with the decision in that case, says that the decree in the Norwood Case did enjoin the making and collecting of the special assessment, as being equivalent to confiscation or a taking of property for a public use, without just compensation, and therefore without due process of law in violation of the fourteenth amendment, but it further says that it left the village of Norwood free "to make a new assessment upon the plaintiff's abutting property for so much of the expense of the opening of the street as was found, upon due and proper inquiry, to be equal to the special benefits accruing to the property"; the matter being left, with this limitation, under the control of the local authorities. In Williams v. Eggleston, 170 U. S. 304, 18 Sup. Ct. 617, 42 L. Ed. 1047, it was said by the court upon this very question: "Neither can it be doubted that, if the state Constitution does not prohibit, the Legislature, speaking generally, may create a new taxing district, determine what territory shall belong to such district, and what property shall be considered as benefited by a proposed improvement. But the power of the Legislature in these matters is not unlimited. There is a point beyond which the legislative department, even when exerting the power of taxation, may not go consistently with the citizen's right of property. As already indicated, the principle underlying special assessments to meet the cost of public improvements is that the property upon which they are imposed is peculiarly benefited, and therefore the owners do not, in fact, pay anything in excess of what they receive by reason of such improvement. But the guaranties for the protection of private property would be seriously impaired if it were established as a rule of constitutional law that the imposition by the Legislature upon particular private property of the entire cost of a public improvement, irrespective of any peculiar benefits accruing to the owner from such improvement, could not be questioned by him in the courts of the country." In Norwood v. Baker the court thus expressed itself: "Undoubtedly abutting owners may be subjected to special assessments to meet the expenses of opening public highways in front of their property, such assessments, according to well-established principles, resting upon the ground that special burdens may be imposed for special or peculiar benefits accruing from public improvements. Mobile County v. Kimball, 102 U. S. 691, 703, 704 [26 L. Ed. 238]; Illinois Central Railroad v. Decatur, 147 U. S. 190, 202 [13 Sup. Ct. 293, 37 L. Ed. 132]; Bauman v. Ross, 167 U. S. 548, 539,<sup>1</sup> and authorities there cited. And, according to the weight of judicial authority, the Legislature has a large discretion in defining the territory to be deemed specially benefited by a public improvement, and which may be subjected to special assessment to meet the cost of such improvement." But, while this is true, it has not the power itself, nor can it be conferred upon municipal boards, to arbitrarily take the property of the citizen without any reference to benefits to be received by him from the public improvement. In Raleigh v. Peace, 110 N. C. 38, 14 S. E. 523, 17 L. R. A. 330, Justice Shepherd said: "It is therefore pre-eminently just, as well as the duty of the lawmaking power, to provide for an equitable adjustment of such burdens in proportion to the benefits conferred." Ruffin, J., says in Shuford v. Commissioners, 86 N. C. 562: "[Such assessments] are committed to the unrestrained discretion of the lawmaking power of the state, only, as I take it, that the burden imposed on each citizen's property must be in proportion to the advantages it may derive therefrom." It is well not to vest too much authority in local tribunals in the matter of taking or assessing private property. It is liable to great abuse and often tends to oppression. Unlimited discretion is dangerous, and no man's property or rights should be held subject to the mere will or caprice of another. This is a government in which responsibility of the public official to the people is of the first importance. Power, it has been said, is always, though gradually, stealing from the many to the few, and recently this tendency has been somewhat increased and accelerated. This arbitrary element in government should be eliminated to the extent that such a course is consistent with the due and proper administration of public affairs and the welfare of the people. The citizen should be made to feel that he holds and enjoys his property under the protection of the law and not at the mere pleasure of one who may prove to be a petty despot, and who is not bound by any law or any restraint save his own will. This particular assessment may be just and right, and the real facts, if disclosed, might show that the defendant is only required to pay for the special benefit he will receive, which is the compensation for the loss of his money, but there is no provision of law for ascertaining the facts, and the case must be considered as if it had been found that his property will not be benefited at all. I adhere to the rule established in the Norwood Case, that the exaction from the owner of private property of the cost incurred in making a public improvement, or in substantial excess of the special benefits accruing to him, is in either case a taking of his property under the guise of taxation without compensation, and, when there is no provision for compensation at all, it is confiscation. All systems or schemes of taxation are based upon the idea of benefit to those who must bear their share of the public burden, and can be justified upon no other principle, and assessments for local improvements are conceded by the authorities to be an exercise of the taxing power. My conclusion is that the assessment in this case was laid upon an arbitrary principle, there being a total failure to exercise the judgment of the Legislature or the board in determining the actual benefit, or as to whether there was any benefit, and therefore the assessment is void. The amount involved should make no difference in the application of the fundamental principle of justice and the Bill of Rights (article 1, § 17), and, if anything, we should guard most zealously against wrong to and oppression of those who are the least able to resist the encroachments and aggression of a despotic power, not that the weak and humble have any greater legal rights than those more fortunate, but for the reason that they are more exposed to the danger of a wrong use of absolute power and less able to defend themselves against it. When enforcing the claims of the public, we should be careful not to overlook the natural and constitutional rights of the citizen, which should not be sacrificed even to promote the public welfare.

<sup>1</sup> 17 Sup. Ct. 566, 42 L. Ed. 270.

(156 N. C. 541)

MULLINAX v. WESTERN UNION TELEGRAPH CO.

(Supreme Court of North Carolina. Nov. 9, 1911.)

1. TELEGRAPHS AND TELEPHONES (§ 37*)— NEGLIGENCE IN DELIVERY OF MESSAGE— EVIDENCE.

The negligence of a telegraph company in the delivery of a message to plaintiff announcing the death of his sister at such time as prevented him from attending the funeral is established by proof that it transmitted the message incorrectly, both as to the person addressed and the names of deceased and the signer, and made no inquiry and no effort to deliver it to the plaintiff after being informed that it was probably intended for him.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Telegraphs and Telephones, Cent. Dig. §§ 24, 29, 32; Dec. Dig. § 37.*]

2. TELEGRAPHS AND TELEPHONES (§ 53*)— NEGLIGENCE IN DELIVERY OF MESSAGE— PROXIMATE CAUSE.

Plaintiff in an action against a telegraph company for mental anguish caused by its negligence in delaying the delivery of a telegram notifying him of the death of his sister so as to prevent him from attending her funeral must show that defendant's negligence was the proximate cause of his injury.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Telegraphs and Telephones, Cent. Dig. §§ 39-47; Dec. Dig. § 53.*]

3. TELEGRAPHS AND TELEPHONES (§ 51*)— NEGLIGENCE IN DELIVERY OF MESSAGE— CONTRIBUTORY NEGLIGENCE.

Contributory negligence on the part of the plaintiff in an action against a telegraph company for mental anguish caused by its negligence in delaying the delivery of a death message which prevented him from attending the funeral of his sister is fatal to a recovery, and, where plaintiff receives information of his sister's death from some other source in time to attend the funeral, and under such circumstances that he could have gone, and failed to go, he is guilty of contributory negligence; the negligence of defendant then not being the proximate cause of injury.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Telegraphs and Telephones, Cent. Dig. § 35; Dec. Dig. § 51.*]

4. TELEGRAPHS AND TELEPHONES (§ 73*)— ACTION—QUESTIONS FOR JURY.

On the evidence in an action against a telegraph company for mental anguish caused by its negligence in delaying the delivery of a death message, so as to prevent plaintiff from attending his sister's funeral, held, that the questions of proximate cause and contributory negligence were for the jury.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Telegraphs and Telephones, Cent. Dig. § 76; Dec. Dig. § 73.*]

5. TRIAL (§ 139*)—TAKING QUESTION FROM JURY—NONSUIT OR DIRECTION OF VERDICT.

The denial of a motion for a nonsuit and the refusal to direct a verdict for the defendant on issues of fact are proper if there was any aspect of the evidence on which a verdict can be returned in favor of plaintiff.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Trial, Cent. Dig. § 332; Dec. Dig. § 139.*]

6. TELEGRAPHS AND TELEPHONES (§ 51*)— DELAY—MISTAKE IN TRANSMISSION OF MESSAGE—CONTRIBUTORY NEGLIGENCE.

Where a telegraph company receives a message for transmission to plaintiff announcing the death of his sister, and the time of her funeral, and it is incorrectly transmitted and no inquiry or effort is made to find the plaintiff, it is the plaintiff's duty to exercise the care of a man of ordinary prudence as to the information contained in the telegram, received from other sources and reasonably calculated to put him on inquiry as to whether deceased was his sister, and to make inquiries and exercise ordinary care in ascertaining and attending her funeral, and to supply himself with necessary funds to make arrangements to leave in time for the funeral, and a failure to exercise such care is contributory negligence which will defeat a recovery for mental anguish caused by the company's negligence.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Telegraphs and Telephones, Cent. Dig. § 35; Dec. Dig. § 51.*]

7. TELEGRAPHS AND TELEPHONES (§ 61*)— ACTION FOR DELAY IN DELIVERY OF DEATH MESSAGE—DAMAGES.

Where a telegraph company has been negligent in the delivery of a message addressed to plaintiff, announcing the death of his sister and the time for the funeral, it is not a defense to an action for such negligence that the husband of the deceased declined to reasonably postpone the funeral until the arrival of the plaintiff.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Telegraphs and Telephones, Dec. Dig. § 61.*]

8. TELEGRAPHS AND TELEPHONES (§ 66*)— NEGLIGENCE IN DELIVERY OF MESSAGE— BURDEN OF PROOF—CONTRIBUTORY NEGLIGENCE.

In an action against a telegraph company for mental anguish caused by its negligence in delaying the delivery of a death message, so as to prevent plaintiff from attending his sister's funeral, the burden of proving plaintiff's alleged contributory negligence was upon the defendant.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Telegraphs and Telephones, Cent. Dig. §§ 61-63; Dec. Dig. § 66.*]

Appeal from Superior Court, Orange County; Daniels, Judge.

Action by J. P. Mullinax against the Western Union Telegraph Company. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendant appeals. No error.

This is an action to recover damages for mental anguish, caused, as the plaintiff alleges, by the negligence of the defendant in the delivery of a telegram, notifying him of the death of his sister, Jennie Rains, which prevented him from attending her funeral.

Jennie Rains lived at Franklinsville, in Randolph county. It was admitted that on February 28, 1910, about 3 o'clock p. m., the following telegram was delivered to the agent of the defendant at Franklinsville: "To J. P. Mullinax, care Eno Cotton Mills, Hillsboro, N. C.: Jennie Rains killed this morning by a cow. Funeral tomorrow evening. Answer. T. A. Slack." When received by the agent of the defendant at Hillsboro, at 3:35 p. m. of the same day, it read as follows: "To J. H. Mullins, care E. O. M. H. B.: Jennie Rans killed this morning by cow. Funeral tomorrow evening. Answer. E. A. Slack." It was also admitted that the sister of the plaintiff was buried about 2 o'clock p. m. on March 1, 1910, and that the plaintiff could have reached Franklinsville in time for the funeral on a train leaving Hillsboro at 5 o'clock p. m. of February 28th, and on one leaving the same place at 4 o'clock a. m. of March 1st. The telegram was delivered to the plaintiff in the form in which it was received at Hillsboro about 8 a. m. of March 1st, and the plaintiff immediately telegraphed that he would be at Franklinsville on the next train, which telegram was received before the funeral. It was also admitted that the plaintiff went to Franklinsville on the next train after the telegram was delivered to him, and reached there about 5 o'clock p. m. of March 1st, after his sister was buried.

The plaintiff introduced evidence tending to prove that he had been the engineer at the Eno Mills for seven years, and was well known; that he worked within 500 or 600 yards of the office of the defendant; and that, if the telegram had been promptly delivered, as it was when received by the defendant, he could, and would, have gone to Franklinsville in time for the funeral. There was evidence on the part of the defendant that the telegram was promptly sent out by its messenger boy, and that he made inquiry for J. H. Mullin, and could not find such a person.

J. M. O'Neill, a witness for the defendant, testified: That he was the manager of the defendant at Hillsboro, and that W. E. Haynes was its operator. That on the night of February 28th he had a conversation with Mr. H. S. Cates. That Mr. Cates, Haynes, and himself were at supper, and Haynes remarked to the witness that the boy had not delivered this death message; could not find the party J. H. Mullin. That Mr. Cates spoke up and wanted to know who was dead, and Haynes then repeated the message to him. That Mr. Cates said, "Maybe that is Jess Mullinax," and said, "I am going right on back to the store, and he lives close to the store, and, if it is some of his people, I will notify him." That Mr. Cates took an envelope, as witness remembers, out of his pocket, and copied down what Mr. Haynes told him was in the message from Franklinsville, and that "Jennie Rans" had been killed by a cow and "would be buried to-morrow afternoon," was not sure whether he told him who it was signed by or not. That Mr. Cates copied that down on an envelope he took out of his pocket. That it was in the afternoon, they were at supper, and that time of the year they had supper about 6 o'clock. That they were at Miss Bettie Conklin's boarding house near the depot. That he was in the telegraph office that night. That he was in there nearly every night on an average until about 11 o'clock. That he had two lamps burning. The doors were not open, but anybody could get in that wanted to. Mr. Mullinax did not come to the office that night. Witness was present when he came there the next morning. He came in, and Mr. Haynes was at the telegraph table, and witness was at the other side of the office, and Mullinax asked if there was a message for him, and Mr. Haynes told him there was one for J. H. Mullin, which might be intended for him, and gave it to him. Mullinax read it and signed for it. The message was addressed to J. H. Mullin. That, when the message was delivered to Mullinax, he sent a message to Mr. T. A. Slack. That this message was delivered to Mr. Haynes. Mullinax left on the train at 10:25 or 10:28.

H. S. Cates, who was a merchant in Hillsboro, witness for the defendant, testified: I live just south of the Occaneechee Mountain, about a mile and a half from the depot, and am not connected in any way with the Western Union Telegraph Company, and have no interest in the result of this litigation. When I went to supper just beyond the station, when I went into the dining room at Miss Bettie Conklin's, Mr. O'Neill was sitting at the table, and he and Mr. Haynes were discussing about a message, and Mr. O'Neill asked me if I knew a party by the name of 'J. H. Mullins' on the hill, and I told him I did not, but I did know a party by the name of 'J. P. Mulli-

*For other cases see same topic and section NUMBER in Dec. Dig. & Am. Dig. Key No. Series & Rep'r Indexes

nax,' who lived near my store, and I asked him about the message, and he told me about it, and I said I rather expected it was for Mr. Mullinax, and I said: 'If you will give me a copy of it, or give me the message, I will carry it there.' And Mr. Haynes gave me a copy. I took a right copy, don't know that I copied it exactly, but I took the outline. I don't know that I got a statement that the funeral would be the next evening, but I got a statement that Jennie Rans was dead. I got the statement that it was from Franklinsville, sent by some Mr. Slack. After I ate supper, I went back to the store, and I sent some party, I don't remember who, to see Mr. Mullinax. He lived off the path a distance and I sent a party by to tell Mr. Mullinax to come to the store, I wanted to see him, and in a few minutes Mr. Mullinax and his wife came in the store, and I was out, and, when I came in, he told me he had been waiting about five or ten minutes and he asked me what I wanted to see him about, and I told him I had a message, and had a copy of it in my pocket, and I began to look for it and could not find it at once, but afterwards I did find it and read the message to him. I read that a Mrs. Jennie Rans from Franklinsville was dead. I don't believe I stated when she would be buried. I told him she had been killed by a cow, and that Mr. Slack sent the message. I don't think I told him any initials. I told him that Mr. Slack had sent a message stating that Jennie Rans, of Franklinsville, had been killed by a cow. I don't think Mr. Mullinax said anything, but Mrs. Mullinax said, 'You have got some people up there, and I expect it is your sister.' And they remarked to each other one thing and another about it, and I think they finally decided it was his sister, but I told him the message was for J. H. Mullins. His wife said in a few minutes, 'You will have to go, won't you,' and he said, 'Yes,' and she said, 'You had better get ready and go.' This was about 8 o'clock on the night of the 28th."

There was other evidence on the part of the defendant tending to corroborate this evidence.

The plaintiff was examined as a witness, and among other things said: That he was fond of his sister, as much so as any brother could be of a sister. That it had been something like a year and a half or two years prior to her death that he had seen her. She lived at the same place she did when she died, when he last saw her. That he has suffered mental anguish and regretted the failure to see her before she was put away. That it had given him a lot of trouble. That he has been running an engine at the Eno Cotton Mills. He has had the same job ever since he has been there. That his reason for going to the telegraph office on the morning of March 1st and making inquiry about a telegram was that the night before Mr. Scott Cates sent for him to come up to his store about 8 o'clock. He went there, and it was some time after he got there before he saw Mr. Cates, some 20 or 25 minutes. Finally Mr. Cates came in, and said Mr. O'Neill, the agent, told him there came a telegram for somebody saying his sister was killed. It sounded like "Jennie Rans" or "Jennie Renn," or something like that. Mr. Cates had written it down, but he had lost the paper. Mr. Cates said "Jennie Rans" or "Jennie Renn," or something like that, and a name something like "J. H. Mullin." It was not his name, but sounded something like him, and it might be for him. That he did not think much about it at the time, and went on home. The next morning he got to thinking about it, and went to the depot. That he went to the depot after he had gone to work. That he went to the office as soon as it was opened. The mill opens at 6 o'clock, which was before the opening of the telegraph office. The telegraph office was not open at the time Mr. Cates spoke to him. That they did not have any night train and had closed up. That he did not know where Mr. O'Neill lived. That, if the telegram had been delivered on the evening of the 28th of February, he would have gone right away to Franklinsville to his sister's funeral on the first train he could have got, if he had been sure about it. That he is pretty sure he could have arranged with the mill between 3:25 and 5:28 to have gotten off. That in a case of that kind he certainly could have gone.

Cross-examination: That on the night of February 28th he went to Mr. Cates' store in response to a message from Mr. Cates sending for him. He did not know what Mr. Cates wanted. That his wife went with him. That they went into the store together. "Q. When you went in there, didn't Mr. Cates tell you that he had had a talk with Mr. Haynes and Mr. O'Neill? A. No, sir. Q. Didn't he tell you that the telegraph company had gotten a message saying that Jennie Rains, who lived in Franklinsville, had gotten killed, and it was addressed to some one named 'J. H. Mullin,' and he thought it might be for you? A. No, sir; he didn't tell me that way. Q. Didn't he say there was a message for J. H. Mullins, saying Jennie Rans or Jennie Rains had been killed, and sent from Franklinsville? A. He told me Mr. O'Neill had asked him to see if there was anybody there by that name, and he thought it was so much like my name it might be for me. He didn't say anything about Franklinsville. Q. He told you the message stated Jennie Rains had been killed by a cow? A. 'Jennie Rans,' he said. Q. Had been killed by a cow, and the funeral would be to-morrow? A. Yes, sir. Q. Didn't he tell you that the message was from Franklinsville? A. If he did, I don't remember it. If he had said anything about Franklinsville, I would have been more sure of it. Q. Didn't your wife turn to you and say, 'Jim, that is your sister, and you had better get ready to go'? A. No, sir; not that I know of. Q. After you had this conversation with Mr. Cates, you never went down to the telegraph office? A. No, sir; not that night. Q. You went home? A. Yes, sir." That the next morning about 8 o'clock he went to the telegraph office and got the message, and at 8:10 he sent a telegram. "Q. You went down and asked them to see this message addressed to J. H. Mullin? A. Yes, sir; and I saw it was from Franklinsville, and I was pretty sure it was my sister. Q. Then you telegraphed to T. A. Slack that you would be there on the next train? A. Yes, sir. Q. If you had left there at 4 o'clock in the morning, you would have got to Franklinsville exactly the same time as if you had left at 5:38 in the afternoon? A. Yes, sir; and I would have left if I had been sure it was my sister." That after he telegraphed Mr. Slack he went to Franklinsville. That after his talk with Mr. Cates he did not go to Miss Conklin's, where Mr. Haynes was boarding, to find out anything about the message. That he knew Mr. Haynes was working at the telegraph office. That he never went to where he was boarding, and he never went to the station until the next morning.

Redirect examination: He went to the mill after he got the message, and saw Mr. Webb, who was secretary and treasurer, and arranged with him to get off. The mill closed at 6 o'clock. That he did not go to the depot on the night of February 28th. That he did not go to the depot that night because the depot was shut up, and there was no use to go down there, and he was not sure it interested him anyhow to go. That he did not know the depot was shut up; knew it was customary for it to be shut up. He did not go down to see whether it was shut up or not. That on the morning of March 1st he got the money to go to Franklinsville on. That he got it from Mr. Webb at the office. That he could not have gone without first getting money and did not have the ready money that night. That the mill was not open that night, and that he did get the money without any trouble at the mill in the daytime when he asked for it.

The wife of the plaintiff corroborated his evidence.

Exceptions were taken by the defendant to the refusal of its motion to nonsuit, the failure to give certain prayers for instructions, and to parts of his honor's charge, all of which are embraced in five propositions:

(1) That the information given to the plaintiff by the witness Cates was as full as that he acted on the next morning, and that he received it in time to leave Hillsboro at 4 o'clock a. m. of March 1st. and in time to reach Franklinsville before the funeral. and that, therefore, his failure to act on this information was negligence and the proximate cause of the injury.

(2) That this information, if not as full as that he received next morning, was sufficient to put the plaintiff on inquiry, and that he failed to make the inquiry, and was therefore negligent, and that this was the proximate cause of his injury.

(3) That, predicated on the two preceding propositions, the plaintiff was guilty of contributory negligence on his own evidence.

(4) That if the funeral of the sister could have been reasonably postponed until the arrival of the plaintiff, and her husband declined to postpone it, the answer to the third issue should be, "Nothing."

(5) That his honor erred in charging that the burden of the second issue was on the defendant.

The jury returned the following verdict:

"(1) Was the plaintiff injured by the negligence of the defendant, as alleged in the complaint? Answer: Yes.

"(2) If so, did the plaintiff by negligence on his part contribute to said injury? Answer: No.

"(3) What damages, if any, is the plaintiff entitled to recover? Answer: $1,000."

From a judgment in accordance with the verdict, the defendant appealed.

King & Kimball, Geo. H. Fearons, and A. S. Barnard, for appellant. S. M. Gattis and Bryant & Brogden, for appellee.

ALLEN, J. [1] The negligence of the defendant cannot be disputed. It failed in its duty in that it transmitted the message incorrectly, and also in making no inquiry and no effort to deliver to the plaintiff, after being informed that it was probably intended for him.

[2] It is, however, true, as the defendant contends, that negligence alone will not entitle the plaintiff to recover, and that he must go further, and show that this negligence was the proximate cause of his injury.

[3] It is also true that contributory negligence on the part of the plaintiff is fatal to his action, and that if he received information of the death of his sister from some other source in time to attend the funeral, and under such circumstances that he could have gone and failed to go, that he would be guilty of contributory negligence, and the negligence of the defendant would not be proximate. There is practically no dispute as to the law. The controversy is as to the facts, and as to the meaning and effect to be given to the evidence.

[4] If we construed the evidence of the plaintiff as the defendant does, or if we were permitted to dispose of the case on the evidence of the defendant alone, we might be justified in denying a recovery, but in our opinion his honor held correctly that on the whole evidence the question of proximate cause and contributory negligence was for the jury, and this he submitted to them under proper instructions. The plaintiff does not say that the witness Cates told him that there was a telegram for him saying his sister was dead, but that a telegram had come for some one with a name like "J. H. Mullin" that "Jennie Rans," or "Jennie Renn" was dead. He denies that he was told that the telegram came from Franklinsville. The conversation with Cates was at 8 or 9 o'clock at night, when the telegraph office was closed. He had no money, and the mills were closed, where he could have gotten money. According to the plaintiff, he received the additional information the next morning that the telegram was from Franklinsville, and then concluded it was his sister. If the telegram had been transmitted correctly and had been promptly delivered, the plaintiff would have received it before 4 o'clock p. m. of February 28th, when the mills were open, and he says he could have gotten the money for his expenses, and would have left Hillsboro on the 5 o'clock train, and, if so, would have reached Franklinsville in time for the funeral. The defendant cannot, under these circumstances, escape liability by imposing upon one who owed no duty to the plaintiff the obligation of conveying information, which the plaintiff says was imperfect, and at night, when the plaintiff had no money and could not get it, and when the office of the defendant was closed.

[5] We have considered the first three propositions, insisted on by the defendant, largely on the evidence of the plaintiff, because they are presented under a motion to nonsuit, and under prayers for instructions directing a verdict in favor of the defendant on the first and second issues, all of which should have been denied, if there was any aspect of the evidence upon which a verdict could have been returned in favor of the plaintiff. His honor imposed upon the plaintiff all that is required by law. He charged the jury that the burden was on the plaintiff to prove negligence, and that this negligence was the proximate cause of his injury; that is, that it prevented him from attending the funeral.

[6] He also said as to the duty of the plaintiff: "It was his duty to exercise the care of a man of ordinary prudence, notwithstanding the fact, if the defendant had been negligent in getting the address wrong and the name wrong and the signature wrong, still he owed the duty not to be negligent himself, but to exercise the care of a man of ordinary prudence under all the circumstances. If he did that, you would answer this issue, 'No.' If the defendant has satisfied you from all this evidence, evidence of the plaintiff and the defendant all taken together, that he failed to act as an ordinarily prudent man would have acted under all the circumstances, you will answer it,

'Yes.' It was his duty, if information came to him that was reasonably calculated to put him on inquiry as to whether or not the dead woman was his sister. It was his duty to exercise ordinary care to find out whether or not it was his sister, and if he failed to exercise such ordinary care in making inquiry and in ascertaining and in attending her funeral, that is the reason he suffered, then he is guilty of contributory negligence, and you will answer this issue, 'Yes.' Or if he knew from what was told him by Mr. Cates that it was his sister, and then he did not exercise ordinary care to supply himself with the necessary funds, and to make his arrangements to get off and go in time for the funeral, then he would be guilty of negligence, and if that negligence caused him to fail to get to the funeral, and brought about his suffering, then you should answer that issue, 'Yes.' So, at last, the whole question upon this issue comes down to whether or not he exercised the care of an ordinarily prudent man under all the circumstances, taking into consideration what had been said to him and what he knew, and what he did, the time of night, the fact that he had no money at the time, his character and standing in the community, as to whether or not he could have secured the necessary funds and could have gotten off, whether he should have concluded that she was his sister, whether he made inquiry about it and pursued the investigation and acted as a man of ordinary prudence would have acted under all the circumstances. If he did, your answer to this issue should be, 'No'; that is, that he was not guilty of contributory negligence. But if the defendant has satisfied you that he failed to exercise the care of a man of ordinary prudence in the particulars I have mentioned, or any of them, then you will answer the issue, 'Yes.'"

[7] We do not agree with the defendant as to its fourth contention. There is no evidence that the funeral of the sister could have been reasonably postponed, and, if this fact appeared, we fail to see how the act of her husband, over whom the plaintiff had no control, in declining to do so, could affect his right to recover.

[8] His honor correctly held that the burden of the second issue was on the defendant. The cases of Hocutt v. Tel. Co., 147 N. C. 186, 60 S. E. 980, and Hauser v. Tel. Co., 150 N. C. 557, 64 S. E. 503, relied on by the defendant, are not in conflict with this view. No issue of contributory negligence was submitted in either case, and consequently the question here raised of the burden of proof on that issue could not be involved. What is said by Justice Walker in the last case as to the burden of proof relates entirely to the question of proximate cause, as is clearly shown by the language he uses. He says: "The burden of proof was not upon the defendant to show that the plaintiff had not exercised diligence, but upon the plaintiff to show, not only that the defendant had been guilty of negligence, but that its negligence was the proximate cause of the damage to him." This appears to us a clear case of negligence on the part of the defendant, resulting in damage to the plaintiff, and it has been presented to the jury with a just recognition of the rights of both parties.

No error.

(156 N. C. 519)

HAMILTON v. HINES BROS. LUMBER CO.

(Supreme Court of North Carolina. Nov. 9, 1911.)

1. MASTER AND SERVANT (§ 286*)—ACTIONS—EVIDENCE—SUFFICIENCY.

In an action for the death of a servant killed in defendant's employ, held that, under the rule that plaintiff's evidence must be taken as true and interpreted most favorably for him, the question of defendant's negligence should have been submitted to the jury.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Master and Servant, Cent. Dig. §§ 1010-1050; Dec. Dig. § 286.*]

2. APPEAL AND ERROR (§ 927*)—REVIEW—NONSUIT—CONSTRUCTION OF EVIDENCE.

To sustain an involuntary nonsuit, the court may not select and act upon that portion of plaintiff's evidence most favorable to defendant.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Appeal and Error, Cent. Dig. § 3748; Dec. Dig. § 927.*]

3. MASTER AND SERVANT (§ 107*)—INJURIES—APPLIANCES—MACHINEERY—"WAYS" OR APPLIANCES—STATUTE.

While the fellow servant law (Revisal 1905, § 2646), giving a right of action to an employé injured by reason of defective machinery, ways, or appliances, extends to logging railroads, the term "ways" refers rather to roadways and material objects, which it is the duty of the employer to provide, than to methods of work.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Master and Servant, Dec. Dig. § 107.*]

For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, vol. 8, pp. 7417-7421; vol. 8, p. 7834.]

4. MASTER AND SERVANT (§ 130*)—INJURIES—RULES—DIRECTIONS.

A master is liable for injury to his servants caused by negligence in directions given or methods of work.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Master and Servant, Cent. Dig. §§ 264, 266, 276; Dec. Dig. § 130.*]

5. MASTER AND SERVANT (§ 217*)—INJURIES—RISKS ASSUMED—EXTENT.

Where a master is negligent in establishing methods of work and directing his servants, the doctrine of assumption of risk, in its technical significance, does not apply, but the effect of working on in the presence of known conditions depends upon whether the attendant dangers were so obvious that a man of ordinary prudence should quit the employment rather than incur them, and the fact that service was rendered with the knowledge and approval of the master or his representative and the employé's reasonable apprehension of discharge in case of disobedience are circumstances bearing upon that question.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Master and Servant, Cent. Dig. §§ 574-600; Dec. Dig. § 217.*]

6. MASTER AND SERVANT (§ 270*)—INJURIES—ACTIONS—NEGLIGENCE—EVIDENCE.

Where the fireman on a logging train was killed by uncoupling cars for flying switch, evidence that the engineer requested another employé to go out on the train and help deceased was admissible because tending to show that deceased was acting under the orders of the engineer, who had knowledge of the way deceased was doing the work.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Master and Servant, Dec. Dig. § 270.*]

Appeal from Superior Court, Lenoir County; Peebles, Judge.

Action by H. K. Hamilton, as administrator of McCoy Hamilton, against Hines Brothers Lumber Company. From a judgment of nonsuit, plaintiff appeals. Reversed and remanded.

G. V. Cowper and Y. T. Ormond, for appellant. Rouse & Land, Loftin & Dawson, McLean, Varser & McLean, for appellee.

HOKE, J. [1] There was evidence tending to show: That in September, 1910, the intestate, an employé, was run over and killed by a train of defendant company. That, at the time of the occurrence, the intestate, a youth between 18 and 19 years of age, was acting as fireman; he and the engineer composing the train crew, and the duties of intestate being to fire the engine, couple and uncouple the cars, and change the switches. That the train in question consisted of an engine and 12 or 13 logging trucks or cars, two of them, several cars back from the end, being loaded with a barrel of oil and feed stuff and was backing at the time with the purpose of cutting out these loaded cars and leaving the empties on a siding near at hand. That, with this end in view, and while the train was in motion, approaching the switch, the intestate left the engine and went along the skeleton cars of the train and to the forward end of the loaded cars and took a position to uncouple the empty cars, in front. About the same time, one Lonnie Emerson, a young man who was also on the engine, but without regular duties, so far as the testimony shows, was requested by the engineer to go forward and assist the intestate by uncoupling the empties, which were just behind the loaded cars; the intent being for intestate to change the switch, throw the empty cars in front and rear onto the siding and allow the loaded cars to remain upon the main line. That, when Lonnie Emerson had reached his position, he looked off for a moment, and, when he looked back, the intestate, who had been sitting, as stated, on the front part of the loaded cars, where they were to be uncoupled, had disappeared. He had fallen between the cars and two of them had run over him, causing injuries from which he died in about three-quarters of an hour. There was also evidence tending to show that this plan was what is termed a "flying switch"; that it was not a safe and proper way to pursue in cutting out the loaded cars and was forbidden by the company's rules. Speaking to this question, plaintiff, H. K. Hamilton, intestate's father, on his examination in chief testified as follows: "Q. You have heard the kind of switching that was being done on this road, will you state from your knowledge as an engineer and from your experience how that work should be done and the proper way to do it? The Court: He can state what is a safe way and an unsafe way. A. The safe way would be to back your train to the switch and stop and cut off your cars. Q. Can it be done any other way? A. Yes, there are other ways that it is frequently done. Our rule book says you can't make a switch that way. Q. From your knowledge of this kind of work as an engineer other than by the usually accepted rules of trainmen, doing this kind of work in this part of the country, is it considered a safe and proper way to uncouple cars when moving downgrade without stopping? Q. Have you had experience in running log trains? A. Yes, I have handled quite a bit. I will answer that it is not safe to make a flying switch anywhere. Q. What kind of switching is that which has been described? A. That is a flying switch when you have a car to shift without stopping the train, or the train is in action all the time."

[2] It is true the witness, in his cross-examination, qualifies this statement to some extent; but, as we have said in a recent case "we are not at liberty to select the more favorable portions of a witness' statement and act on it for defendant's benefit. We have repeatedly held that, on a motion for nonsuit, the evidence making for plaintiff's claim must be taken as true and interpreted in the light most favorable for him." Dail v. Taylor, 151 N. C. 289, 68 S. E. 135, 28 L. R. A. (N. S.) 949; Deppe v. Railroad, 152 N. C. 79, 67 S. E. 262. As the case goes back for a new trial, we do not deem it desirable to make any extended reference to the inferences permissible and arising on the testimony, but, applying the rule well recognized with us, "that if two minds could reasonably draw different conclusions from the evidence, and one of them would be favorable to plaintiff, the matter is for the jury" (Allen, Judge, in Harvell v. Lumber Co., 154 N. C. 262, 70 S. E. 392), we are of opinion that the question of defendant's negligence should be submitted for the jury's decision.

[3] On the conduct of the intestate, while we have held that our statute, known as the fellow-servant law (Revisal 1905, § 2646), applies to these logging roads, we do not think that the terms of the law, giving a right of action to an employé injured by reason of defective "machinery, ways or appliances," refer to conditions as now disclosed in the testimony; the term "ways," we think, having reference rather to roadways and objective conditions relevant to the inquiry and which it is the duty of the employer to provide. The negligence, if any, imputable to defendant on the testimony, is by reason of negligent directions given and methods established by the employer subjective in their nature and to which the statute on the facts presented was not intended to apply.

[4-6] It is well understood, however, that an employer of labor may be held responsible for directions given or methods established, of the kind indicated, by reason of which an employé is injured, as in Noble v. Lumber Co., 151 N. C. 76, 65 S. E. 622, 134 Am. St. Rep. 974; Shaw v. Manufacturing Co., 146 N. C. 235, 59 S. E. 676; Jones v. Warehouse Co., 138 N. C. 546, 51 S. E. 106. And, where such negligence is established, it is further held, in this jurisdiction, that the doctrine of assumption of risk, in its technical acceptation, is no longer applicable. Norris v. Cotton Mills, 154 N. C. 475, 70 S. E. 912; Tanner v. Lumber Co., 140 N. C. 475, 53 S. E. 287. But the effect of working on in the presence of conditions which are known and observed must be considered and determined on the question whether the attendant dangers were so obvious that a man of ordinary prudence and acting with such prudence should quit the employment rather than incur them. Bissell v. Lumber Co., 152 N. C. 123, 67 S. E. 259. And, on the issues as to plaintiff's conduct, the fact that the particular service was rendered with the knowledge and approval of the employer or his vice principal or under his express directions, if given, also the employé's reasonable apprehensions of discharge in case of disobedience, etc., may be circumstances relevant to the inquiry. Hicks v. Manufacturing Co., 138 N. C. 328, 50 S. E. 703. In this view, we think the statement of the witness Lonnie Emerson was properly received in evidence; "that the engineer requested the witness to go out on the train and help McCoy." It tended to show that the intestate was doing his work with the knowledge of the engineer, and it was also relevant on the question whether he was not acting under the engineer's orders.

Applying the rules as they obtain with us to the facts in evidence, we are of opinion that there was error in directing a nonsuit, and the order to that effect must be set aside.

Error.

(156 N. C. 648)

STATE v. NOELL.

(Supreme Court of North Carolina. Nov. 9, 1911.)

1. ABDUCTION (§ 13*)—CORROBORATION—FORMER STATEMENT CORRESPONDING WITH TESTIMONY.

In a prosecution for the abduction of a girl under 14 years of age, evidence as to what the abducted girl afterwards told her mother is competent as corroborative of her testimony.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Abduction, Cent. Dig. § 23; Dec. Dig. § 13.*]

2. ABDUCTION (§ 12*)—PROSECUTION—SUFFICIENCY OF EVIDENCE.

Evidence in a prosecution under Revisal 1905, § 3358, making the abduction of any child under the age of 14 years residing with parents, etc., a felony, held sufficient to sustain a conviction.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Abduction, Cent. Dig. § 22; Dec. Dig. § 12.*]

3. CRIMINAL LAW (§ 1152*)—APPEAL—DISCRETION OF LOWER COURT—CONDUCT OF TRIAL—ARREST OF BYSTANDER.

During the argument of counsel for defendant, a white woman charged with abduction, and while denouncing the introduction of a negro to prove defendant's bad character, there was great applause, and the court had one woman arrested and seated on the prisoner's bench in full view of the jury. Held that, in the absence of anything to show a gross abuse of the lower court's discretion, its conduct was not reviewable.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Criminal Law, Dec. Dig. § 1152.*]

4. HUSBAND AND WIFE (§ 108*)—CRIMES—COERCION OF HUSBAND.

Where the acts leading up to an abduction of a child under 14 years of age were committed in the presence of the husband of defendant, and the actual taking of the child away was done by defendant and her husband, who was always present, there is a presumption that the part taken by the defendant was under the coercion of her husband, and it is not necessary to show that the act was done literally in sight of the husband, it being sufficient if it was done near enough to be under his immediate control or influence; but, while the presence of the husband makes out a prima facie case of coercion, it is subject to be controlled by evidence that the wife acted voluntarily, and not by compulsion.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Husband and Wife, Cent. Dig. §§ 389-391; Dec. Dig. § 108.*]

Appeal from Superior Court, Rowan County; Daniels, Judge.

Janie Noell was convicted of abduction, and she appeals. No error.

Defendant's eighth exception was as follows: "This evidence as to what Clara Gibbs told her mother was not competent as substantive evidence, but was admitted for all purposes." Supreme Court rule 27 (66 S. E. vii). The court failed to restrict this evidence to the corroboration of Clara Gibbs either when admitted or in his charge.

Walser & Walser, Stewart & McRae, and R. Lee Wright, for appellant. T. W. Bickett, Atty. Gen., and Geo. L. Jones, Asst. Atty. Gen., for the State.

BROWN, J. There are 26 assignments of error, 9 of which relate to the introduction of evidence. We have examined these assignments of error with care, and considered the evidence objected to, and, while his honor may have been technically wrong in one or two instances, we do not find any substantial error committed in the rulings upon evidence which would warrant us in ordering another trial.

[1] The corroborative evidence offered by the state and received in evidence we think comes within the rule as defined by this court. State v. Maultsby, 130 N. C. 664, 41 S. E. 97; State v. Freeman, 100 N. C. 424, 5 S. E. 921. The crime of which the defendant stands convicted is defined in Revisal 1905, § 3358, as follows: "If any one shall abduct, or by any means induce any child under the age of 14 years, who shall reside with the father, mother, uncle, aunt, brother, or elder sister, or shall reside at a school, or be an orphan and reside with a guardian, to leave such person or school, he shall be guilty of a felony, and on conviction shall be fined or imprisoned in the state's prison for a period not exceeding fifteen years." The evidence for the state tends to prove that the defendant and her husband resided in Charlotte, and that Clara Bell Gibbs, a girl under 14 years, resided in Lexington, N. C., with her parents. She testified that defendant came to her and solicited her to go to Charlotte and reside with her, stating that she should have fine clothes, plenty money, and an easy time. She refused to go. On May 9, 1911, defendant again saw her in Lexington, and solicited witness to go with her. The witness refused, saying that her mother was ill, and she could not leave her. She was seen again about 2 o'clock the same day by the defendant, and was again urged to leave home and go away with her. She again refused, but gave the matter some consideration. Again that afternoon, about 6 o'clock, she was seen by both defendant and defendant's husband, and they both insisted on her joining them and going away to a life of pleasure. She left them undecided, she said, and then, together with another girl, Virtie Kindly, joined them at the depot that night, and the four left on train No. 35 for Charlotte. The tickets for the two girls were furnished by husband of defendant. The defendant and the girls went on to Charlotte alone; the husband of the defendant leaving the train at Salisbury. Prosecuting witness testified that she was directed by defendant to change her dress on the train at Salisbury so she would not be recognized, and she did as directed. She further testified that, when they arrived at Charlotte, the defendant left the two girls in the station until she could secure a carriage; it being understood that they were to join her when she gave the signal. On their way to the home of the defendant, the darky asked defendant if these were the girls, and she said "Yes." He asked, then, where the other one was, and she said there was nothing doing with her. Both girls testified that they neither slept nor ate any that night, and next morning both girls cried and insisted on returning home. This request was refused both girls at first, but directly defendant allowed Vertie Kindly to return, but said prosecuting witness could not go. That afternoon the officer in search of her found the prosecuting witness at the home of the defendant, and returned her to her father, and he carried her back to her home in Lexington that night.

[2] The defendant admitted in her testimony that the girl Clara Bell went with her, but testified that she went of her own volition without coercion or persuasion, and introduced evidence tending to contradict and explain the testimony of the witness for the state. The evidence for the state, if believed to be true, is ample to justify a conviction.

[3] During the argument of counsel for defendant, and while denouncing the introduction of a negro witness to prove the bad character of defendant, a white woman, there was great applause. The court had one woman arrested and seated on prisoner's bench in full view of the jury. To this the defendant excepted. This exception is untenable. The conduct of the court in reference to such matters as the preservation of order and in respect to contempts in the presence of the court must of necessity be left to the sound discretion of the court. The conduct of the judge is not reviewable, unless there is a gross abuse of discretion which does not appear in this record. State v. Harrison, 145 N. C. 414, 59 S. E. 867; State v. Wilcox, 131 N. C. 707, 42 S. E. 538.

[4] The defendant submitted a prayer for instruction in reference to the defendant acting under the coercion of her husband, and excepted to portions of the charge upon that phase of the case. Upon this subject his honor charged at some length. He substantially told the jury that, where a married woman commits a crime in the presence of her husband, it is presumed, in the absence of proof to the contrary, that she did it under his coercion. "If you find that the acts leading up to the abduction charged were committed in the presence of the husband of the defendant, and that the actual taking of Clara Bell Gibbs away from Lexington was done by the defendant and her husband, the husband always being present, then the law presumes that the part taken by the defendant was under the coercion of her husband, and, unless the state has satisfied you that this presumption is not true, then you should find that the defendant is 'not guilty.' Should you find that the act was done under the coercion of the husband in this indictment against the wife, it is not necessary to show that the act was done literally in sight of the husband, but it is sufficient to raise the presumption it was done near enough to her husband to be under his immediate control or influence. If the jury find from the evidence that the defendant committed the act or acts for the commission of which she stands indicted, in the presence of her husband or near enough to him to be under his immediate control or influence, then the law raises the prima facie presumption that she acted under the coercion of her husband, and, if the jury further find that the state had not rebutted this prima facie presumption, the jury should find the defendant not guilty." We think this is a statement of the law of which the defendant has certainly no right to complain. State v. Williams, 65 N. C. 398. The court gave her the benefit of a presumption, but it is not a conclusive presumption. The presence of the husband makes out a prima facie case of coercion only, and is subject to be controlled by evidence that the wife acted voluntarily, and not by compulsion. 15 Am. & Eng. Ency. 904; 1 Russell on Crimes, 9 Am. Ed. 35.

It is not necessary to decide the question, but it may well be doubted whether the defendant could avail herself of such defense against a charge of this character, viz., the abduction of a girl by persuasion. It has been said by the early writers on criminal law that, "if the offense be of such a nature that it may be committed by wife alone without the concurrence of her husband, she may be punished for it without her husband." Archbold's Crim. Pr. & Pldg. 6; 1 Hawkins' Pleas, c. 1, § 13. Among the crimes excepted from the rule are keeping bawdyhouses and offenses of a like character. This principle would cover, we are inclined to think, abducting girls by solicitation for immoral purposes, a business in which the defendant was more likely to be acting upon her own initiative, rather than under the coercion of her husband. We have examined the charge as a whole, and find it to be a full, clear, and correct presentation of the case to the jury, and fully as favorable to the defendant as she had just right to expect.

No error.

(156 N. C. 569)

HENDRICKS et ux. v. MOCKSVILLE FURNITURE CO.

(Supreme Court of North Carolina. Oct. 9, 1911.)

1. SALES (§ 201*)—RECOVERY OF PRICE—CONDITIONS PRECEDENT.

Where timber, sold with the agreement that it was to be stacked for six months and delivered at a certain place, was burned before the end of the six months, there could be no recovery of the purchase price, if the contract was executory, and the title had not passed to defendant.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Sales, Cent. Dig. §§ 529-541; Dec. Dig. § 201.*]

2. SALES (§ 201*)—CONSTRUCTION OF CONTRACT—EXECUTORY CONTRACT.

A written contract for the sale to a furniture factory of lumber from land jointly owned by a husband and wife provided that the lumber should be sawed and stacked for six months, one half of the purchase price to be advanced upon cutting, and the other half to be paid upon delivery at the purchaser's factory. It also acknowledged receipt of a sum stated to be advanced upon the above lumber. Though the contract was signed by the wife, there was no seal to her signature, and she was not privately examined. Held that, as the purpose of the construction of a contract is to discover and give effect to the intention of the parties as embodied in the entire instrument, the contract must be accepted as executory; the title not passing to the purchaser until the final delivery of the lumber.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Sales, Cent. Dig. §§ 529-541; Dec. Dig. § 201.*]

Appeal from Superior Court, Davie County; Lyon, Judge.

Action by M. J. Hendricks and wife, Emma, against the Mocksville Furniture Company. From a judgment for plaintiffs, defendant appeals. Reversed and remanded.

This action is to recover the purchase price of certain lumber, which the plaintiffs M. J. Hendricks and wife, Emma G. Hendricks, alleged they sold to the defendant.

On the 23d day of December, 1905, the plaintiffs and defendant entered into the following contract:

"North Carolina, Davie County. This contract made and entered into this day by and between M. J. Hendricks, of Davie county, N. C., the Mocksville Furniture Company, witnesseth: That the said M. J. Hendricks has bargained, sold to the said Mocksville Furniture Company, its successors, and does hereby bargain, sell and convey to said Mocksville Furniture Company and its successors all the oak and poplar timber—except the young trees and some for board purposes—suitable for furniture purposes on the following lands situate in Davie county, N. C., and bounded as follows, to wit: On the east by the lands of Mrs. B. C. Rich and Mrs. M. E. Tatum and Mocksville Furniture Company; on the north by the lands of Mocksville Furniture Company and Sam Eaton; on the west by the lands of Miss Mattie Eaton; on the south by the lands of J. W. Etchison and A. J. Hutchins and L. A. Furches, containing 200 acres more or less. The price to be paid for said lumber by said Mocksville Furniture Company is $15.00 per thousand feet, less the mill culls, delivered at their factory in Mocksville, N. C., after the said lumber has been sawed and stacked by the said M. J. Hendricks for six months, and he agrees to cut and saw the whole within one year from this date. The Mocksville Furniture Company agrees to advance to said M. J. Hendricks $7.50 per thousand feet as soon as said lumber is stacked on sticks and the balance to be paid by said Mocksville Furniture Company when the same is delivered at Mocksville as aforesaid. Received of Mocksville Furniture Company $100.00 advanced on above lumber, receipt of which is hereby acknowledged. Witness my hand and seal this the 23d day of December, 1905. M. J. Hendricks. [Seal.] Emma G. Hendricks. Witness: J. Minor."

About the last of August or the 1st of September, 1907, acting under this contract, the plaintiffs had at their mill, about eight miles from Mocksville, 30,000 feet of lumber in stacks, but which had been stacked less than six months, and 2,000 feet of lumber, which had been recently sawed, and was not stacked, all of which was about that time destroyed by fire, without negligence on the part of plaintiffs or defendant. The defendant advanced to the plaintiffs $7.50 per thousand on the 30,000 feet, which had been stacked, and nothing on the 2,000 feet. Thereafter the plaintiffs delivered to the defendant 30,000 feet of lumber under said contract, upon which had been advanced $7.50 per thousand, and demanded payment of the remainder of the contract price, which the defendant refused, claiming that the plaintiffs owed it the amount it had advanced on the lumber which was burned. His honor held that under said contract the title to the lumber was in the defendant, and rendered judgment in favor of the plaintiffs for $480, being $7.50 per thousand on the 30,000 feet and $15 per thousand on the 2,000 feet, both of which lots were burned, and $7.50 per thousand on the 30,000 feet delivered, and for $32.36, which the defendant admitted it owed on other matters. The defendant excepted and appealed.

E. L. Gaffner and T. B. Bailey, for appellant. Jacob Stewart and E. E. Raper, for appellees.

ALLEN, J. (after stating the facts as above). The determination of the controversy between the plaintiffs and the defendant depends upon the interpretation of their contract.

[1] If it is executory, and under its provisions the title to the timber was not in the defendant, there could be no liability, because it is admitted that the timber had not been stacked six months, and there was no delivery at Mocksville—material stipulations, which the plaintiffs agreed to perform. This is upon the familiar principle that one who seeks to recover upon a contract with interdependent conditions must show performance on his part. Lawing v. Rintles, 97 N. C. 350, 2 S. E. 252.

[2] As was said in Hornthal v. Howcutt, 154 N. C. 229, 70 S. E. 172: "The object of courts in the construction of a paper writing is to discover what the parties to it intended, and whether apt language has been used to give effect to that intention;" and "the intent as embraced in the entire instrument is the end to be attained, and each and every part of the contract must be given effect, if this can be done by any fair and reasonable interpretation." Davis v. Frazier, 150 N. C. 451, 64 S. E. 200.

In this last case, Justice Hoke quotes with approval Lawson on Contracts, §§ 388 and 389, as follows: "The third main rule is that that construction will be given which will best effectuate the intention of the parties, to be collected from the whole of the agreement; and, to ascertain the intention, regard must be had to the nature of the instrument, the condition of the parties executing it, and the objects which they had in view. * * * Courts will examine the whole of the contract, and so construe each part with the others that all of them may, if possible, have some effect, for it is to be presumed that each part was inserted for a purpose, and has its office to perform. So, where two clauses are inconsistent, they should be construed so as to give effect to the intention of the parties, as gathered from the whole instrument. So every word will, if possible, be made to operate, if by law it may, according to the intention of the parties."

If we apply this rule of construction, and look at the entire instrument, what did the parties intend?

The plaintiffs argue with much force that there is nothing ambiguous in the language used, and that it says in express terms that the timber is conveyed to the defendant. This conclusion is reached, however, by looking at only a part of the contract, and that part, standing alone, has no consideration to support it. If the parties intended the title to the timber to pass upon the execution of the contract, it would be reasonable to expect the conveyance of the timber to be upon consideration of so many dollars, or for a certain amount per thousand feet. It nowhere appears that the defendant agreed to buy or pay for timber. It wanted lumber, and agreed to pay for it when delivered at Mocksville. The amount paid in advance is not spoken of as a payment, but an advancement.

Another circumstance which tends to show that it was not the intention of the parties that the paper writing should operate to pass the title to the timber at the time it was signed is that a part of the land on which the timber stood belonged to Mrs. Hendricks, and there is no seal to her signature, and no probate and private examination as to her. Mr. Hendricks said on his examination: "The description of the land in the contract covers about 150 acres of the lands of myself and wife." Also there is no provision allowing the defendant to enter and cut, upon failure of the plaintiffs to do so.

As it appears to us, the situation of the parties was this: The plaintiffs had timber, which they wished to sell, and the defendant needed lumber. The plaintiffs agreed to cut and saw their timber into lumber and deliver it at Mocksville for $15 per thousand feet; but, as the defendant could not use green lumber, it was stipulated that the lumber should be stacked six months before delivery, and that the defendant should advance $7.50 per thousand feet to aid in payment of operating expenses. This is, in our opinion, a proper interpretation of the contract, and, if so, it is executory, and the title to the lumber was not in the defendant at the time of the fire.

A contract, in many respects similar to the one now before us, was considered at this term, in Wiley v. Lumber Co., 72 S. E. 305. In that case plaintiff and another sold to the defendant "all the pine and gum timber of every description above the size of 12 inches at the base on a certain tract of land"; the written contract of conveyance and sale providing that defendant should have full time to have said timber cut and removed from said land, and extending in any event for such purpose to the full term of three years. The instrument also conveyed to defendant (the grantee) the privilege to have a right of way over the grantors' lands, and to erect thereon necessary tramroads, etc., for the purpose of carrying out the timber; and there was further provision that the grantors were to cut and deliver said timber at the logged of defendant's tramroad, and to be paid therefor at the rate of $4 per thousand, etc.; and Justice Hoke, speaking for the court, says: "Defendant is right in the position that when one has bought and paid for a lot of growing timber, and same has been conveyed him, with the privilege of removal within a given time, the contract as to the removal is so far unilateral that the purchaser is not obligated to cut and remove the timber. If he fails to do so within the time, his right or estate therein is forfeited, and inures, as a rule, to the owner of the land. We have so held in two cases at the last term. Hornthal v. Howcutt, 154 N. C. 228, 70 S. E. 171; Bateman v. Lumber Co., 154 N. C. 248, 70 S. E. 474. But the contract in question here is not of that character. Applying to it the accepted rule of construction 'that the intent of the parties as embodied in the entire instrument is the end to be attained, and that each and every part must be given effect, if this can be done by any fair and reasonable interpretation' (Davis v. Frazier, 150 N. C. 451 [64 S. E. 200]). A perusal of this entire instrument will disclose that, while it begins by reciting $450 as the consideration, the controlling stipulation of the contract provides that the parties plaintiff were to cut and deliver 'said timber' at the logbed, and the parties defendant were to pay for the same the sum of $4 per thousand 'feet'; and it is also expressly provided that the $450 first referred to as the consideration was only an advancement on the contract price, and to be accounted for as the timber was delivered."

There was error in the ruling of the court, and a new trial is ordered.

New trial.

(112 Va. 870)

YOST et al. v. CRITCHER.

(Supreme Court of Appeals of Virginia. Nov. 17, 1910. On Rehearing, Nov. 16, 1911.)

1. PARTNERSHIP (§§ 11, 70*)—EXISTENCE OF RELATION.

An agreement whereby complainant and defendant purchased land, defendants furnishing the money and complainant performing service in drawing attention to the land, for resale at a profit, was in the nature of a partnership agreement, and required of each in the transactions inter se a high degree of duty.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Partnership, Cent. Dig. § 114; Dec. Dig. §§ 11, 70.*]

2. PARTNERSHIP (§ 95*)—MUTUAL DUTIES—PURCHASE OF INTERESTS.

One partner must make a frank and honest disclosure to another of all knowledge from which a sound judgment may be formed as to the value of an interest to be acquired by the former from the latter.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Partnership, Cent. Dig. § 142; Dec. Dig. § 95.*]

3. PARTNERSHIP (§ 95*)—FIDUCIARY RELATION—RIGHT TO SHARE IN PROFITS.

Two partners who, knowing that their associate was peculiarly embarrassed, induced him to sell his interest at a sacrifice in ignorance of matters with their knowledge, and, who subsequently acquired his interest from the person to whom he sold, will be required to account to him for his share of the net profits, though such person did not act for them in purchasing.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Partnership, Cent. Dig. § 142; Dec. Dig. § 95.*]

4. VENDOR AND PURCHASER (§ 238*)—BONA FIDE PURCHASERS.

Generally a purchaser with notice from a purchaser without notice, takes a good title; but, if a purchaser with notice sells to a purchaser without notice and afterwards repurchases, he does not acquire any better title than he had in the first instance.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Vendor and Purchaser, Cent. Dig. §§ 580-582; Dec. Dig. § 238.*]

5. TRUSTS (§ 225*)—EXPENDITURES—INTEREST.

On an accounting by the trustees, interest should be allowed only on moneys actually paid by them from the time of payment, and on contracts to pay bearing interest from the time such interest began to run.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Trusts, Dec. Dig. § 225.*]

Harrison, J., dissenting.

Appeal from Corporation Court of Staunton.

Suit by John Critcher against Jacob Yost and others. From the decree, defendants appeal, and complainant files cross-errors. Modified and affirmed.

A. C. Gordon and J. M. Perry, for appellants. John Critcher, for appellee.

WHITTLE, J. In the spring of 1903 Glendy and wife conveyed to Jacob Yost, trustee, 3,249 acres of land in Bath county for $10,000. The deed did not declare the character of the trust, but it appears that William Patrick and John Critcher were interested in the purchase along with Yost, and a written agreement was made between the parties to the effect that Yost and Patrick should advance the purchase money, and the title was to be held by Yost for the common benefit of himself and his associates in the proportion of three-eighths each to Yost and Patrick and two-eighths to Critcher; that the trustee, in conjunction with the other parties and with their advice and assistance, should sell the property, and, after returning the purchase money with interest and all reasonable expenses, divide the profit in the proportions mentioned. Critcher's contribution to the joint venture consisted in drawing the attention of his companions to the land and its possibilities—a service the ultimate outcome of which was the realization of a gross profit of $14,000.

In June, 1903, Critcher, who was very much in need of money, wrote to Yost to inquire if there would be any objection to his selling one-half of his interest to an outside party, remarking that he would not sell unless it was agreeable to his associates. Yost in reply conceded Critcher's right to sell, but suggested that he ought in the first instance to give himself and Patrick the privilege of buying if so disposed. This correspondence was followed by an offer from Critcher of one-half of his holding for $500, and a counter proposition from Yost of $500 for his whole interest. Both propositions were declined, and soon after these occurrences the relations between Critcher and Yost became strained, and all direct communication between them ceased.

In September, 1904, the trustee entered into negotiations with Housel, of Bedford, Pa., for the sale of the timber on the land for $17,000; and on September 15th Housel telegraphed his agent to close the deal. The trustee, accordingly, executed a deed conveying the timber to Housel at the agreed price, reciting a cash payment of one-third of the purchase money. In fact only $200 were paid, and the deed with a draft attached for the residue was forwarded to Bedford to be delivered on payment of the draft. On September 28th Housel's attorney wrote Yost that when certain minor objections to the form of the deed, to which he called attention, were corrected, his client would pay the draft and complete the purchase. To that letter both Yost and Patrick replied agreeing to some of the suggested changes in the deed; but Yost insisted that the draft must either be paid and the bonds for the deferred payments signed, or else that all the papers be returned without delay. He, moreover, declared that, "at the very time this transaction was closed, other parties were ready to buy," observing that: "Unless you gentlemen propose to close this matter up without further delay, kindly return all the papers to me and consider the deal off. We cannot afford to give longer time. In fact we have already jeopardized our interests in the effort to accommodate you." On October 8th the deed was reformed in compliance with Housel's insistence, but not until October 22d was there a definite refusal on his part to comply with the agreement. So that until the latter date Yost and Patrick had every reason to believe the sale would be consummated.

In May, 1906, the trustee sold the timber to Housel and Layman. The price is not disclosed, but it appears that Yost subsequently paid a bonus of $3,700 to be released from the contract. That happened in this way: The Highland Development Company offered $24,000 for the entire property, land, and timber; whereupon Yost bought back the timber from Housel and Layman at the above-named advance on the selling price, and then sold land and timber to the Highland Development Company for $24,000. Meanwhile, on September 28, 1904, R. N. Page, through B. L. Partlow, opened negotiations with Critcher for the purchase of his interest, and the sale was made October 7th for $1,000. Within a few months thereafter Page sold to Yost and Patrick. The record is silent both as to the date and consideration for this transfer; but it appears that, though Yost and Patrick freely advised with each other touching every material step looking to a sale of the community property, Critcher was not informed of transactions vitally affecting his rights. Thus, at the very time when they believed a sale of the timber alone had been made for $7,000 (and other advantageous offers of purchase had been received), they not only failed to communicate to Critcher knowledge of these important facts, but he was suffered to part with his property for a grossly inadequate price, much less, indeed, than his share of the amount offered for the timber alone.

In these circumstances, upon a bill filed by Critcher for relief, the learned judge of the corporation court of the city of Staunton, in a convincing opinion, held that he was entitled to share in the net profits realized from the sale to the Highland Development Company, and decreed accordingly. From that decree this appeal was allowed.

The bill called for answer under oath from the trustee with respect to documents and correspondence in his possession. It also demanded sworn answers from Partlow and Page, but waived answer under oath from Patrick. It is conceded that Partlow was acting for Page in negotiating the purchase of Critcher's interest, and, though the parties all deny that Page represented Yost and Patrick, the facts remain that he made the purchase at Patrick's suggestion, and shortly thereafter transferred his purchase to them for "a valuable consideration." Yost, it is true, denied that he had any communication with Partlow in reference to the purchase prior to the institution of the suit. He likewise denied the agency of Page. Yet, though alertly on guard and weighing his words, he was careful not to deny knowledge of Page's purpose to purchase, or communication between them on the subject. As a matter of fact, in view of the close touch maintained between himself and Patrick throughout the transaction, it is not believable that Yost was kept in ignorance of a scheme obviously designed for the purpose of eliminating an unwelcome associate by acquiring his interest in the trust subject. If the transaction had been ingenuous, there would have been no occasion to conceal the actual consideration paid by Yost and Patrick to Page; and, instead of suppressing important facts, the parties, if necessary, would have taken the witness stand to make plain the fairness of their conduct in connection with a questionable transaction.

The defense of the appellants is founded on a misapprehension of the law regulating the conduct of persons occupying a fiduciary relation to each other with respect to their dealings with matters pertaining to the trust. In this case the contract between the parties was in the nature of a partnership agreement, and imposed upon each in transactions inter se the high degree of duty arising out of that confidential relation.

As was said in Tennant v. Dunlop, 97 Va. 234, 33 S. E. 620, speaking of the duty of the surviving partner seeking to purchase the interest of the deceased partner: "He cannot simply remain passive, but must make a frank and honest disclosure of all within his possession or knowledge from which a sound judgment may be formed as to the value of the interest to be sold. He cannot hold the representative at arm's length, and seek to make a profit for himself."

So, also, in 30 Cyc. 457, it is said that a purchase by one partner of his copartner's interest may be avoided either for actual fraud, "or for the violation of that high degree of good faith and fair dealing which the law requires of the partners in their transactions with each other, or for a nonperformance of a condition imposed by the contract."

In Sexton v. Sexton, 9 Grat. 204, the court held: "He (the selling partner) was bound not only to disclose truly any information in his possession that might be called for, but if he perceived that the purchasing partner was laboring under incorrect views in reference to the amount of the debt due by the concern, by which he might be misled into too high an offer for the interest to be sold, it was his duty to furnish all the data he might have by which such views might be corrected and the mischief prevented."

In the instant case, though we do not believe the parties were intentionally guilty of fraud, it is, nevertheless, plain that they did not exercise that "utmost good faith and fair dealing" which the law exacts in transactions between partners, or trustee and cestui que trust. Yost and Patrick knew that Critcher was laboring under great financial embarrassment, and, if they did not actually purchase his interest through Page, they, at least, induced the latter to buy and suffered Critcher to sell at a ruinous sacrifice, in ignorance of important facts in their possession materially affecting the price.

As was said in Miller v. Ferguson, 107 Va. 249, 255, 57 S. E. 649, 651, 122 Am. St. Rep. 840: "After availing themselves of Miller's plan and eliminating him as a possible competitor, they carried on negotiations behind his back and withheld from him information of the gravest importance, vitally affecting his interest."

It is immaterial whether Page did or did not act for Yost and Patrick in purchasing Critcher's interest. They permitted the sale to be made in circumstances which affected their consciences and involved a breach of trust, and the property which was subsequently acquired by them was impressed with the original trust in Critcher's favor.

It is true as a general proposition that a purchaser with notice from a purchaser without notice takes a good title. Otherwise, it is reasoned, a bona fide purchaser without notice might be hindered in the disposition of the property, "though entitled to have the whole world for his market." But the rule is subject to the exception that, when a purchaser with notice sells to a purchaser without notice and afterwards repurchases the property, he does not acquire any better title than he possessed in the first instance. Aragon Coffee Co. v. Rogers, 105 Va. 51, 52 S. E. 843. See note to principal case and authorities cited, 8 Am. & Eng. Ann. Cas. 626.

"As between cestui que trust and trustee, and all parties claiming under the trustee otherwise than by purchase for valuable consideration without notice, all property belonging to a trust, however much it may be changed or altered in its nature or character, and all the fruit of such property, whether in its original or altered state, continues to be subject to or affected by the trust." 28 Am. & Eng. Ency. of Law (2d Ed.) 1108g and note 10.

In considering the cross-errors assigned by the appellee, the commissioner should require proof of the alleged payment by Yost of $3,700 to Housel and Layman. He must also allow interest only on moneys actually paid by Yost and Patrick from the time of payment, or upon any contract made by them for the payment of money bearing interest from the time such interest began to run. In these particulars the decree of the corporation court will be modified, and as thus modified will be affirmed.

Affirmed.

CARDWELL, J., absent.

HARRISON, J. (dissenting). With my view of the facts of this case, I cannot concur in the conclusion reached by the majority of the court.

On Rehearing.

PER CURIAM. This case is before us on a rehearing of a decree entered by this court at the November term, 1910, modifying and affirming a decree of the corporation court of the city of Staunton.

After careful consideration of the arguments on behalf of appellants and appellee, upon the rehearing, we are of opinion to adhere to the conclusion formerly reached, and the opinion then delivered, with some minor amendments, will be filed as the opinion of the court.

(136 Ga. 780)

BYROM v. VARNER et al.†

(Supreme Court of Georgia. Aug. 17, 1911.)

(Syllabus by the Court.)

INFANTS (§ 113*)—CONCLUSIVENESS OF JUDGMENT—PARTIES OF RECORD.

Where minors were interested as tenants in remainder, and before determination of the life estate the life tenant, in behalf of herself and as prochein ami for the minors, instituted suit for recovery of the land, in which suit it was also sought to set aside a trustee's deed under which the defendant held, and the order of the court authorizing the trustee to sell, it being alleged that the minors were necessary parties, and prayed that a guardian ad litem be appointed for them, and the court having passed an order declaring the minors necessary parties, and appointing the prochein ami guardian ad litem for them, and the defendant by answer having set up the validity of the administrator's deed and order of the court under which the sale was made, and also prescriptive title by virtue of possession for more than seven years under color of the administrator's deed, in the absence of all fraud or bad faith in making the minors parties plaintiff, the judgment rendered in favor of the validity of the defendant's title was an adjudication of the plaintiff's title, not only as against the life tenant, but also as against the minors, who had been made parties plaintiff under order of the court.

*For other cases see same topic and section NUMBER in Dec. Dig. & Am. Dig. Key No. Series & Rep'r Indexes

† Rehearing denied September 22, 1911.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Infants, Cent. Dig. § 321; Dec. Dig. § 113.*]

Error from Superior Court, Houston County; W. H. Felton, Judge.

Proceedings by John S. Byrom, as administrator of Julia M. Gunn, for an order to sell lands. Forest Gray Varner and others interposed claims to the property sought to be sold. Judgment for claimants, and the administrator brings error. Reversed.

It appears from the record that in 1854 Benjamin H. Gray died testate. In the eighth item of his will he devised to "Patrick Gray in trust for and to the sole and separate use and benefit of [testator's] daughter, Anne Gray, * * * for and during her natural life, and after her death to her children in fee simple, one half of [testator's] plantation on the Fort Valley road, and the other half to go as hereinafter devised." By the ninth item a devise of said other half was made to Patrick Gray in trust for the sole and separate use and benefit of the testator's daughter, Jane Gray, for and during her natural life, and after her death to her children in fee simple; it being further stated in this item that it was the will of the testator "that the said plantation be equally divided between my two daughters." In other items specific legacies were given to other children of the testator. The thirteenth item provided "that the whole residue of my estate, both real and personal, after the payment and satisfaction of all my just debts and the legacies or items hereinbefore given, be equally divided between all my children in the same manner and under the same conditions and trusts as I have hereinbefore followed in regard to my children and the property given to them in this my will." The fourteenth item was as follows: "It is my will, and I hereby direct, that if any of my children should die, leaving no child or representative of children, then and in that case the property which I have given to such child, so dying without a child or representative of children, shall revert to my estate and be equally divided between my other children in the same manner and under the same directions and trusts as hereinbefore followed by me in this my will in regard to my children and the property given to them." Anne Gray married Varner in 1855. Jane Gray married Walker prior to October, 1855. In 1856, after the marriage of Anne and Jane, Patrick Gray, as trustee, petitioned the superior court of Houston county to be removed as trustee, and that Varner and Walker be appointed trustees for their respective wives in his place. Upon this application, the court, in October, 1856, passed an order removing Patrick Gray as trustee, and appointed Varner and Walker trustees, as requested, in his place and stead. In May, 1857, Varner and Walker, as trustees, petitioned the judge of the superior court of the Macon circuit, Houston county being within that circuit, for leave to sell the lands composing the plantation referred to in the eighth and ninth items of the will of Benjamin H. Gray, for the purpose of reinvestment. Their respective wives joined in the petition. Afterwards the judge at chambers, after considering the application, granted leave to Varner and Walker, as trustees, to sell the land at public or private sale, and empowered the trustees to convey the same by deed and receive what the land might sell for, and invest the same in other property upon like limitations, conditions, and trusts as those on which the land to be sold was then held by the trustees. On October 8, 1857, Walker, as trustee, conveyed, by warranty deed reciting that it was in pursuance of the aforesaid order, a one-half undivided interest in the lands described in the order to Daniel F. Gunn, for the stated consideration of $4,000. On January 5, 1859, Varner, as trustee, conveyed, by warranty deed reciting that it was in pursuance of the aforesaid order, to Daniel F. Gunn the remaining one-half undivided interest in the same lands for the recited consideration of $4,885. Both of these deeds purported to convey the lands described therein "to the said Daniel F. Gunn, his heirs and assigns, forever." Walker died in 1864. His wife, Jane, died in 1867, leaving no children. Daniel F. Gunn, though he took such conveyances to himself, purchased a one-third interest in the lands for Julia M. Gunn, and the remaining two-thirds interest for his wards, Ulysses Gunn and Valeria Gunn; and subsequently, in 1865, by an order of the court of ordinary, Daniel F. Gunn turned the interest of his wards over to them in a settlement with them as guardian. Subsequently Valeria Gunn sold and conveyed her undivided interest in the land to Julia M. Gunn, and afterwards, upon the petition of U. M. Gunn, the lands were partitioned between him and Julia M. Gunn. The lands have been in the adverse possession of Daniel F. Gunn and those claiming under him, as above stated, from the time of his purchase of them from Varner and Walker as trustees.

In 1874 Mrs. Anne Varner, for herself and as next friend of her minor children, A. J. Varner, Julia F. Varner, Forrest Gray Varner, Paul H. Varner, and R. L. Varner, brought a bill in the superior court of Houston county, against Daniel F. Gunn, U. M. Gunn, and Julia M. Gunn, for the recovery of the one-half interest in the lands as devised in the eighth item of the will of Benjamin H. Gray, and of one-sixth interest in the land as devised in the ninth item of the will. Attached as exhibits to the will and made a part thereof were copies of the will of Benjamin H. Gray, the order of the court substituting Varner and Walker as trustees in the place of Patrick Gray, the order granted to Varner and Walker as trustees to sell the land for reinvestment, and the deeds made by them to Daniel H. Gunn. The bill alleged that the order for sale and reinvestment was fraudulently obtained; that Anne Varner was unduly coerced by her husband to consent to the granting of such order; that the sale to Gunn was collusive, and not for the purpose of reinvestment; that Gunn never paid any money for the lands, but settled with Varner for the same in notes held by Gunn against Varner; and that all of the defendants had knowledge that the order for sale was fraudulently obtained, and of the collusion between Varner and Walker on the one side and Daniel F. Gunn on the other, as to the latter's purchase of the lands. The prayers were for the recovery of the land and mesne profits, that the order of sale be set aside, that the deed from Varner as trustee be set aside and canceled, and that "some fit and suitable person may, it being necessary, be appointed to act as her trustee and as trustee for her said minor children." Subsequently the following order was passed: "Georgia, Houston County. It appearing to the court that H. A. Varner, Julia F. Varner, Forrest Gray Varner, Paul H. Varner and Robert L. Varner are minors, and are interested in the suit of Anne Varner v. D. F. Gunn et al., it is therefore ordered by the court that Mrs. Anne Varner be and she is hereby appointed guardian ad litem of said minors, and that said cause proceed in her name as such guardian. In open court, C. F. Crisp, J. S. C., S. W. C., Presiding." On November 26, 1877, Mrs. Anne Varner in writing accepted the appointment of guardian ad litem of her said minor children. The defendants answered, to the effect that Daniel F. Gunn purchased the lands from the trustees in good faith, and paid full value in money to the trustees for the same, believing that he was getting a valid and absolute title thereto. All knowledge or notice of the alleged coercion inducing Mrs. Varner to consent to the granting of the order to sell, and her objection to the sale, and collusion of Daniel F. Gunn with Varner, was denied. A prescriptive title under seven years' adverse possession with color was set up. Upon the trial of that bill a verdict was rendered in favor of the defendants, which by order was made the decree of the court. The plaintiffs moved for a new trial; two grounds of the motion being as follows:

*For other cases see same topic and section NUMBER in Dec. Dig. & Am. Dig. Key No. Series & Rep'r Indexes

"Because the court erred in charging the jury as follows: 'Under the terms of the will of old man Benjamin Gray, he created a trust estate for the benefit of his daughters and their children, a life estate in the daughters, and the remainder in their children, appointing his son, Patrick Gray, trustee. If

Patrick Gray resigned his trust, or by order of a court of chancery other trustees were appointed, then the legal title to the estate was in the trustee so appointed; and if there was such action as that, and the trustee or trustees so appointed applied to the judge of the superior court of this circuit for an order to sell the property at private sale, and the cestuis que trust, these ladies, had notice of that order and consented to it, and if the judge of the superior court granted an order that it might be sold and the proceeds reinvested for the same uses and trusts, and if bought bona fide, for a valuable consideration, without fraud between them and the trustees at such sale, they got a good title and the complainants in this action cannot recover.'

"Because the court erred in charging the jury as follows: 'The defendants say more. If that proposition is not true, if they did not get a good title at such sale, if the sale was made, yet they say that these trustees obtained an order from the judge of the proper court to sell this property, and that, bona fide and for a valuable consideration, they bought it from said trustees in pursuance of that order, that they took a deed from the trustee and went into possession under that deed, and that they and those claiming under them have remained in possession of this property more than seven years under color of title before the institution of this suit, and that therefore they have what the law calls a good prescriptive title.'

The motion was overruled. On exception to this ruling, the case was brought to the Supreme Court, where the judgment was affirmed. Varner v. Gunn, 61 Ga. 54. In the opinion then rendered it was said: "The controlling question in this case is whether the complainant's right to recover the amount sued for was barred by the statute of limitations, it being in the nature of an equitable action of ejectment." After stating the relevant facts and the charge of the trial judge on the subject of prescriptive title, which was excepted to in the motion for a new trial, it was held: "This charge of the court was not erroneous, especially when taken in connection with the other portions of the charge contained in the record"—citing two former decisions of this court. The decision was rendered at the August term, 1878, of this court.

After the death of Anne Varner, which occurred in September, 1909, John S. Byrom, as administrator of the estate of Julia M. Gunn, applied to the ordinary of Houston county for an order to sell the land or lands belonging to the estate of his intestate, which were the same lands that had been awarded to her in the partition proceedings between U. M. Gunn and herself. F. G. Varner and Julia Chapman (née Varner), who were surviving children of Anne Varner, and Lena B. Stembridge, who was the widow of Paul H. Varner, another of the children of Anne Varner, interposed claims to the property sought to be sold by the administrator, basing their claim of title upon the will of Benjamin H. Gray, as fully set forth in their equitable petition filed in aid of their claim. The administrator filed answer to this petition, alleging, among other things, that the legal title passed under the sales by the trustees of Anne Varner and Jane Walker to Daniel F. Gunn, and finally vested in Julia M. Gunn, as fully set forth in the record in the case of Varner v. Gunn et al., before referred to, and that the claimants were concluded by the judgment against them in the case brought by their mother, Anne Varner, for herself and as next friend and guardian ad litem for the claimants, against Julia M. Gunn and other defendants.

Upon trial of the case now under review, wherein all of the facts above set forth appeared, the court directed a verdict in favor of the claimants. The administrator moved for a new trial, which being refused, he excepted.

Guerry, Hall & Roberts, for plaintiff in error. H. A. Mathews and Jno. P. Ross, for defendants in error.

ATKINSON, J. (after stating the facts as above). This case, we think, turns upon the question whether the claimants were concluded by the judgment rendered in the case brought by Mrs. Varner, for herself and as next friend and guardian ad litem for all of her minor children, among whom were two of the claimants, and Paul H. Varner, of whom the third claimant is the sole heir at law, against Julia M. Gunn, the intestate of the plaintiff in error, and other defendants. In that case the order granted by the superior court to the trustees of Anne Varner and Jane Walker to sell the entire interest in the lands in question was attacked and sought to be set aside on the ground that Mrs. Varner's consent thereto was obtained through coercion on the part of her husband. The deed from the trustees to Daniel F. Gunn, made in pursuance of such order of sale, was also attacked on the ground of collusion between Varner and Daniel F. Gunn, the purchaser. The deed purported to convey the fee in the land; and it is evident, from the order of sale, and the terms of the deed, and the consideration purporting to have been paid, that a sale and conveyance of the entire interest in the land could be made and the proceeds reinvested by the trustees in other property under the same trusts, conditions, and limitations. It further appears that Mrs. Varner, in bringing that action, believed that her children, all of whom were then minors, were interested in that action. In the bill there was a recital that they were necessary parties, and a request that the judge should appoint a guardian ad litem to represent their interests in the suit. The judge appointed Mrs. Varner as guardian ad litem for the minors, reciting in the order that it appeared that they were necessary parties, and whether they were such was a question to be then determined by the court. It appears, from the issues made by the answers of the defendants in that case, that the defenses set up by them were alike applicable to Mrs. Varner and her children, for whom she was guardian ad litem. The judge who presided at the trial of that case was evidently of the opinion that the minors were interested in that litigation, for the order appointing a guardian ad litem for them expressly so states; and this opinion of the judge is further indicated in the instructions he gave to the jury, upon which error was assigned in the motion made for a new trial. This court, upon the review of the trial in that case, affirmed the judgment. They deemed it necessary to discuss rulings on but one point, namely, prescription.

As the claimants in the present action were parties in the former case against the intestate of the plaintiff in error and others, and as the judgment was there rendered against them to the effect that the defendants in that action had a good prescriptive title to the identical land involved in the present suit, the plaintiffs must be held to be concluded by that judgment; it appearing that they were made parties to the former case in good faith and for the protection of what was then considered to be their interest in the suit, and there being nothing tending to show that there was any fraud, collusion, or any improper motive of any character tending to injuriously affect their interests by making them parties in that action. Ross v. Southwestern R. Co., 53 Ga. 514; Watkins v. Lawton, 69 Ga. 371; Freeman v. Prendergast, 94 Ga. 385, 21 S. E. 837; Lowe v. Equitable Mortgage Co., 102 Ga. 103, 29 S. E. 148; Walden v. Walden, 128 Ga. 126, 57 S. E. 323. It follows, from what has been said, that a verdict was demanded in favor of the administrator, and that the court erred in directing a verdict for the claimants.

Judgment reversed.

BECK, J., absent. The other Justices concur.

(10 Ga. App. 29)

BOATRIGHT v. STATE (No. 3,434.)

(Court of Appeals of Georgia. Nov. 7, 1911.)

(Syllabus by the Court.)

1. CRIMINAL LAW (§ 250*)—HABEAS CORPUS (§ 30*)—IRREGULARITIES IN JUSTICE'S COURT—WAIVER.

There was no error in striking the plea to the jurisdiction. The mere fact that there were irregularities in the justice's court during the commitment trial would not deprive the city court of jurisdiction to try the case, on accusation duly made. If the commitment was irregular or illegal, the defendant might have raised such questions by habeas corpus, but could not, after having been bound over, and having given bond, plead them to the jurisdiction of the city court.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Criminal Law, Dec. Dig. § 250;* Habeas Corpus, Dec. Dig. § 30.*]

2. LARCENY (§ 56*)—EVIDENCE—SUFFICIENCY.

The evidence showed that the defendant, an employé of a railway company, was seen to leave an express car with a package and go to an old passenger car, where he left it. Investigation disclosed that a barrel of shad fish, contained in the express car, had been opened with a knife. The defendant was watched, and was seen to return to the passenger car and get the package and start toward home. The express agent overtook him, and, after defendant's denial that the package contained fish, broke it open and found two shad. The agent went to every fish dealer in town, and none of them had any such fish in stock on that day. Held, the corpus delicti was properly proved, and the verdict of guilty authorized.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Larceny, Cent. Dig. § 149; Dec. Dig. § 56.*]

Error from City Court of Sandersville; E. W. Jordan, Judge.

Levi Boatright was convicted of larceny, and brings error. Affirmed.

Goodwin & Wood, for plaintiff in error. J. E. Hyman, Sol., for the State.

RUSSELL, J. Judgment affirmed.

(10 Ga. App. 88)

HERRING v. STATE (No. 3,576.)

(Court of Appeals of Georgia. Oct. 10, 1911.
Rehearing Denied Nov. 20, 1911.)

(Syllabus by the Court.)

1. INTOXICATING LIQUORS (§ 236*)—CRIMINAL PROSECUTION—SUFFICIENCY OF EVIDENCE.

The evidence authorizes a conviction.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Intoxicating Liquors, Cent. Dig. §§ 300-322; Dec. Dig. § 236.*]

2. CRIMINAL LAW (§ 730*)—TRIAL—CONDUCT OF COUNSEL—OFFER OF ILLEGAL TESTIMONY.

Ordinarily it is not cause for a mistrial in a criminal case that the Solicitor General merely tenders illegal testimony, where the court refuses to admit it, and instructs the jury not to consider it.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Criminal Law, Cent. Dig. § 1693; Dec. Dig. § 730.*]

3. CHARGE OF COURT—NO ERROR.

The charge of the court was not subject to the assignments of error made against it.

Error from City Court of Macon; Robt. Hodges, Judge.

J. F. Herring was convicted of keeping intoxicating liquor on hand at his place of business, and brings error. Affirmed.

W. D. McNeill, for plaintiff in error. W. J. Grace, Sol. Gen., for the State.

POWELL, J. [1] 1. The defendant was indicted for keeping intoxicating liquor on hand at his place of business. Liquor was found in his store, and also in an adjacent barn. His defense was that the liquor had been put there, without his knowledge or consent, by other persons. If the jury had believed the witnesses by whom the accused attempted to support this defense, they doubtless would have acquitted him; but evidently they did not believe the witnesses. We do not blame the jury for refusing to believe the testimony of these witnesses, for it carried on its face the inherent marks of falsity, and jurors are not required to believe even sworn testimony which because of its inconsistencies, improbabilities, and contradictions, does not commend itself to the reasonable mind as being true.

[2] 2. A witness for the defendant had testified that he was a clerk in the defendant's store, and that no liquor had been kept therein since the defendant had pleaded guilty (at a previous date) of the offense of selling liquor. The state cross-examined him as to the time when his employment began, and, for the purpose of showing that he had not truly stated the length of his service, offered in evidence the former indictment against the accused. Defendant's counsel objected to the solicitor's introducing this indictment, and moved the court declare a mistrial, because he had tendered it in evidence. There was nothing in this transaction which required the grant of a mistrial. The judge did all that he was required to do when he sustained the objection to the testimony, even if, as a matter of fact, the testimony was not legally admissible; but the court went further in this case and told the jury to disregard this matter entirely, and not to let it influence them in any way. Certainly the defendant will not be given a new trial for this occurrence, under the circumstances.

[3] 3. Certain criticisms are made upon the charge of the court, but, without going into details, we will simply say that here was no error, and that the defendant was fairly tried and legally convicted.

Judgment affirmed.

(10 Ga. App. 13)

JAMES v. STATE (No. 3,322.)

(Court of Appeals of Georgia. Nov. 7, 1911.)

(Syllabus by the Court.)

1. WEAPONS (§ 3*)—CARRYING WITHOUT LICENSE—CONSTITUTIONAL PROVISION.

The act of the General Assembly approved August 12, 1910 (Acts 1910, p. 134), making it unlawful "to have or carry about the person any pistol or revolver," without first obtaining license from the ordinary, is held by the Supreme Court to be constitutional, in Strickland v. State, 137 Ga. 1, 72 S. E. 260.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Weapons, Dec. Dig. § 3.*]

2. STATES (§ 12*)—BOUNDARIES—RIVER.

The boundary line between the states of Georgia and South Carolina is that agreed on by the commissioners of both states at the convention of Beaufort on April 28, 1787. This boundary line, as then fixed and established, was not altered by the fact that subsequently the United States government, in the course of its work to improve the navigation of the Savannah river, changed the location of the main current or channel of the river; but it remains where the main channel or current of the river flowed naturally when the boundary line was originally fixed and established.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see States, Dec. Dig. § 12.*]

3. CRIMINAL LAW (§ 564*) — JURISDICTION — BOUNDARY BETWEEN STATES.

The evidence shows that the offense was committed at a point on the bridge which connects Georgia with South Carolina, and on the Georgia side of the main current or channel of the river, as said current or channel was located when it was originally fixed and established as the boundary line between the two states. The venue was thus fully proved.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Criminal Law, Cent. Dig. §§ 1277-1284; Dec. Dig. § 564.*]

Error from City Court of Richmond County, W. F. Eve, Judge.

George James was convicted of carrying on his person a pistol without having procured a license, and brings error. Affirmed.

E. Foster Brigham, B. B. McCowen, and Isaac S. Peebles, Jr., for plaintiff in error. Jas. C. C. Black, Jr., Sol., for the State.

HILL, C. J. George James was convicted of a violation of the act of the General Assembly (Acts 1910, p. 134) making it a misdemeanor for one to carry on his person a pistol without having procured a license as provided by the act. The record raised two questions: (1) As to the constitutionality of the act upon which the indictment was framed; and (2) whether the jurisdictional fact of venue was proved.

[1] The first question has been settled by the Supreme Court in the case of Strickland v. State, 137 Ga. 1, 72 S. E. 260, on certificate from this court for instructions.

[2, 3] The evidence necessary to determine the question of venue, briefly stated, is as follows: James was arrested by a police officer of the city of Augusta on the bridge over the Savannah river, known as the "Center Street Bridge"; this bridge connecting the states of Georgia and South Carolina. At the time of the arrest James had a revolver on his person and had not procured a license to carry it. The arrest was made about the middle of the bridge, and at a point which would be in the state of South Carolina if the present channel of the Savannah river is to be accepted as the boundary line between these two states; but if the boundary line between the two states is the current or main thread of the channel of the river as originally fixed and determined by the treaty of Beaufort as the boundary line between them, then the offense was committed in the state of Georgia. So the question which must determine the venue in the present case is dependent upon the location of the boundary line between the states of Georgia and South Carolina as above indicated. The evidence further showed that, for a distance of about a mile above and below where the Center Street bridge crosses the river, the United States government by a series of training dikes has diverted the natural channel of the river from the South Carolina side to the Georgia side, for the purpose of improving the navigation of the river on the Georgia side at the city of Augusta, and that before the building of these dikes the channel of the river was 600 or 700 feet from the Georgia side, and 200 or 300 feet from the South Carolina side, and was gradually changing to the Carolina side, but since the building of the dikes the current of the river is only 250 feet from the Georgia side. In other words, the building of the training dikes by the United States government has changed the natural current of the river, so that, instead of being 600 to 700 feet from the Georgia side, as formerly, it is now only 250 feet from the Georgia side. According to the treaty of Beaufort between the states of Georgia and South Carolina, agreed on by the commissioners of both states on the 28th of April, 1787, the current or main thread of the channel of the Savannah river fixed and established the boundary between the two states. Pol. Code 1910, § 16; Hotchkiss' Statutes, §§ 913-917; Simpson v. State, 92 Ga. 41, 17 S. E. 984, 22 L. R. A. 248, 44 Am. St. Rep. 75. The boundary line so fixed was intended to be a permanent boundary line between the two states, subject to be changed only by the subsequent joint action of the two states.

There is no Georgia decision exactly in point, but the question here involved has been before the Supreme Court of the United States in several cases, and that august tribunal has clearly laid down the rule by which the question in this case can be determined. In the case of State of Nebraska v. State of Iowa, 143 U. S. 369, 12 Sup. Ct. 393, 36 L. Ed. 186, in a very learned opinion by Justice Brewer, it is held that where the boundary between states or nations is, by prescription or treaty, found in running water, accretion, no matter to which side it adds ground, leaves the boundary still the center; that avulsion has no effect on boundaries, but leaves it in the center of the old channel. In other words, an accretion on an ordinary river would leave the boundary between two states the varying center of the channel, and an avulsion would leave the boundary the center of the abandoned channel. See, also, a very elaborate opinion by Attorney General Cushing, in which the subject is very exhaustively considered and the above distinction made; also the general subject treated in Gould on Waters, § 159, and Angell on Water Courses, § 60. In the case of Missouri v. Nebraska, 198 U. S. 23, 25 Sup. Ct. 155, 49 L. Ed. 372, which was a case to determine the boundary line between the two states and to define what was the center of the main channel of the Missouri river, it was held that accretion is the gradual accumulation by alluvial formation, and, where a boundary river changes its course gradually in such manner, the boundary remains the varying center of the channel, but that avulsion is a rapid change in the course or channel of a river, and does not work any change in the boundary, which remains as it was in the center of the river, although no water may be flowing therein. These principles apply alike whether the river is a boundary line between private property or between states and nations. Now, the boundary line between the state of Georgia and South Carolina, as fixed by the treaty of Beaufort in 1787, was the current or main thread of the Savannah river between designated points. There is no evidence that this channel has been changed, either by the gradual process of accretion or by the sudden and violent process of avulsion.

It is insisted, however, by learned counsel for the plaintiff in error, that this current or main thread of the channel has been changed by the work of the United States government for the purpose of improving the navigability of the Savannah river near the city of Augusta, and that the channel of the river is now located much nearer the Georgia side, and that this change in the channel or current of the river changes ipso facto the boundary line between the two states. In support of this contention it is said that Const. U. S. art. 1, § 8, par. 3, gives to the federal government control of all navigable rivers between states, and that it therefore follows that any change in the channel or current of a navigable river is a lawful change, and thereafter the channel of the river is fixed, and the boundary line follows this current or channel. Unquestionably the United States government, by the provision of the Constitution above quoted, has control over navigable rivers for the purpose of improving navigation; but the exercise of this right cannot in any sense affect the boundary lines as fixed by treaties, or law, or prescription, between the states, or between riparian owners. Where grants of land border on navigable streams, no change which the United States government might make in the course of such stream could affect in any way the rights of the riparian owners as fixed and determined by deeds or prescription, and, of course, where a river is made a boundary line between two states, if the course of the river is changed or diverted by the United States government in the exercise of its authority to improve navigation, the change in the course of the river would not affect the boundary line, but the boundary line would remain as fixed by law, treaty, or prescription. The legal effect of the act of the government in changing the main channel or current of the river is analogous to a change caused by avulsion, and not by accretion. The treaty of Beaufort, as therein stated, settled and adjusted the boundary differences between the states of Georgia and South Carolina, and established a fixed and permanent boundary line between them, and this boundary line was distinctly declared to be the current or main thread or channel of the Savannah river between the two states, between designated points on said river. This boundary line, so fixed and established by authority of the two sovereign states, could not be changed or affected by any act of the federal government in pursuance of its power over navigable rivers. Indeed, we do not think that this right to regulate and improve navigable rivers has any relation whatever to the question of boundary lines.

We conclude, therefore, that the existing boundary line between the states of Georgia and South Carolina is as fixed and established by the treaty of Beaufort; and this being true, under the evidence, the offense in this case was committed within the state of Georgia, and the venue was sufficiently shown.

Judgment affirmed.

(10 Ga. App. 30)

CARSWELL v. STATE. (No. 3,439.)

(Court of Appeals of Georgia. Nov. 7, 1911.)

(Syllabus by the Court.)

1. CRIMINAL LAW (§ 364*)—EVIDENCE—RES GESTÆ.

Where a killing took place in front of a store and across the street from it, a statement of the accused, after he had walked away from the scene of the difficulty and into the store, in which he voluntarily stated to the bystanders, "Men, what I done, I had to do it," was not improperly rejected as not being part of the res gestæ, on the ground that it was not free from suspicion of device or afterthought.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Criminal Law, Cent. Dig. § 816; Dec. Dig. § 364.*]

2. HOMICIDE (§ 309*)—INSTRUCTIONS—APPLICABILITY TO EVIDENCE.

Under the evidence, there was no error in failing to charge the law of involuntary manslaughter.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Homicide, Cent. Dig. §§ 649-656; Dec. Dig. § 309.*]

3. CRIMINAL LAW (§ 715*)—TRIAL—ARGUMENT OF COUNSEL.

The judge was justified in not permitting counsel for the defendant to use, in his argument before the jury, a gun which had not been introduced in evidence.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Criminal Law, Cent. Dig. § 1666; Dec. Dig. § 715.*]

4. INSTRUCTIONS—CONSTRUCTION AS A WHOLE.

When the excerpt from the charge upon which error is assigned is considered in connection with the charge as a whole and with the facts of the case, it appears that there was no error in the charge on provocation by words, threats, and contemptuous gestures.

5. INSTRUCTIONS — APPLICABILITY TO EVIDENCE.

The request to charge was not adjusted to the evidence.

(Additional Syllabus by Editorial Staff.)

6. CRIMINAL LAW (§ 363*)—EVIDENCE—"RES GESTÆ."

The "res gestæ" of a transaction is what is done during the progress of it, or so nearly upon the actual occurrence as fairly to be treated as contemporaneous with it. No precise point of time can be fixed a priori where the res gestæ ends. Each case turns on its own circumstances, and the inquiry is rather into events, than into the precise time which has elapsed.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Criminal Law, Cent. Dig. § 804; Dec. Dig. § 363.*

For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, vol. 7, pp. 6130-6136; vol. 8, p. 7787.]

Error from Superior Court, Laurens County; J. H. Martin, Judge.

Robert Carswell was convicted of voluntary manslaughter, and brings error. Affirmed.

The defendant was convicted of voluntary manslaughter, and excepts to the overruling of his motion for a new trial. The facts leading up to the homicide are, in brief, as follows: The defendant walked into the store of the deceased one night after dark, whereupon an argument took place between them (in which the deceased was the aggressor) as to whether or not the defendant had been "dodging around" the former's house after his little 12 year old daughter. The defendant denied the charge, but the deceased persisted that, unless the rumor ceased, he would kill the defendant. As the quarrel progressed, mutual cursing was indulged in. As to what happened after this the evidence is in sharp conflict. The defendant and his witnesses say that he was ordered out of the deceased's store, and went directly across the street, and was sitting on the porch of that store; that the deceased, with a breech-loading shotgun, went out of the side door of his store, and around toward the back of the other store, and slipped up on the defendant unawares, and had cocked the gun, and, with it pointed at the defendant's head, said, "Don't you move." The defendant grabbed the barrel of the gun and endeavored to wrest it from the deceased's hand, and, in the scuffle which followed, the defendant shot the deceased three times with a pistol; two of the wounds being of fatal character. After the three pistol shots, a gun was shot, and the shot from it took effect in the deceased's hip. This wound was not necessarily of fatal character. According to the defendant, the gun was discharged either by him or the deceased in the scuffle.

A few moments before his death the deceased made a dying statement, to the effect that after the quarrel had been entered upon, and while he was standing in the door of his store with the gun under his arm, the defendant's brother grabbed it, while the defendant shot the pistol three times, after which his brother shot the gun, inflicting the wounds resulting in death. This dying statement, as thus related by the deceased's wife, is in conflict with the version of the transaction as detailed by the eyewitnesses, and is opposed to the physical fact that the deceased's body was directly in front of the store across the street, where the defendant and his witnesses said he went after leaving the deceased's store. The evidence is that the deceased was of a violent character, and that he had purchased a box of gun shells a short while before the quarrel.

Howard & Hightower, for plaintiff in error. E. D. Graham, Sol. Gen., for the State.

RUSSELL, J. [1] 1. The defendant claims that the court erred in excluding from the jury the statement of the defendant, made a short while after the fatality, under the following circumstances: After the three pistol shots and a short pause of a few seconds came the gunshot. Then the defendant's brother came into the store door with the gun in his hands and said: "Let me have some shells. I am going out there and kill that God damn Charles McCall, who is the instigation of all this row." The storekeeper said: "You get out of this store with that gun. You can't get no shells in here." Whereupon the speaker walked back to the door, looked out on the ground, then slipped back in the store, and handed the gun to a bystander, remarking: "There's nothing in it." About that time the defendant jumped right up in the door with the pistol in his hands and said: "Men, what I done, I had to do it." On motion this statement was ruled out, and the question presented is whether it was admissible as a part of the res gestæ. The witness estimated that the time elapsing after the gunshot and the making of the statement was about half a minute.

[8] Under such circumstances a witness' estimate of the exact number of seconds or minutes intervening is not very trustworthy. The important fact is that the statement was made, not during the fight, but after it was over, and after the defendant had left the scene of the homicide and appeared before the onlookers. However brief the time, the physical facts show that the statement was not wholly free from the suspicion of device or afterthought. As is said in Hall v. State, 48 Ga. 607: "The res gestæ of a transaction is what is done during the progress of it, or so nearly upon the actual occurrence as fairly to be treated as contemporaneous with it. No precise point of time can be fixed a priori where the res gestæ ends. Each case turns on its own circumstances. Indeed, the inquiry is rather into events than into the precise time which has elapsed."

*For other cases see same topic and section NUMBER in Dec. Dig. & Am. Dig. Key No. Series & Rep'r indexes

It has been held that a witness cannot testify that within a minute after the shooting another person ran into the house, a distance of 25 or 30 steps from the scene of the shooting, and whispered that the accused had shot the deceased. "The whispering indicated premeditation, rather than spontaneous exclamation; there being apparently nothing to call for the lowering of the voice, if the speaker was prompted by natural impulse only." Futch v. State, 90 Ga. 472, 16 S. E. 102. The line of demarcation between self-serving declarations, inadmissible under the hearsay rule, and involuntary spontaneous verbal acts, admissible as part of the res gestæ, is shadowy and hard to delineate with accuracy and generality. Circumstances alter cases, and each case must be governed by its own peculiar and individual facts. The defendant in this case, in saying that he had to kill, was not making an involuntary exclamation, but had left the scene of the killing, and reason had returned. We are of the opinion, therefore, that there was no error in excluding the testimony.

[2] 2. Complaint is made that the judge erred in failing to charge the law of involuntary manslaughter. Under the dying declaration offered by the state, the defendant was guilty of murder. According to the statement of the accused and the evidence in his behalf, the killing was justifiable. Under no theory was the killing unintentional or involuntary, and therefore the judge very properly omitted the law of involuntary manslaughter from his charge. Indeed, it would have been reversible error to have so charged under such circumstances. Branch v. State, 5 Ga. App. 651, 63 S. E. 714; Clark v. State, 117 Ga. 254 (6), 43 S. E. 853. In holding that the evidence authorized the charge on the law of involuntary manslaughter in the case of Chapman v. State, 120 Ga. 855, 857, 48 S. E. 350, 351, it was said: "If the brick was hastily picked up and thrown, with no intention of killing the deceased, and the evidence failed to disclose that the brick was either a deadly weapon or was thrown in such a manner as ordinarily would have produced death, the homicide would be involuntary." Here the evidence discloses both that the weapon used was deadly and that it was used with the intention to kill. In the other case relied on by counsel for plaintiff in error, Dorsey v. State, 126 Ga. 633, 55 S. E. 479, the fatal blow was made with the end of a billiard cue of a kind and character from which the jury could have inferred that there was no intention to kill.

[3] 3. In arguing the case to the jury the defendant's counsel undertook to illustrate with a single-barrel shotgun how the gunshot wound could have been inflicted as the defendant had stated. On objection from the solicitor general that the gun had not been introduced in evidence, the judge refused to permit the use of the gun as aforesaid. It does not appear whether the gun which it was sought to use was the one with which the deceased was shot. Ordinarily, in illustrating to the jury an argument, counsel may use any means at hand; but it would be manifestly unfair to permit a party to get the benefit of having introduced evidence which had not been introduced. Under the circumstances, we see no reason for reversing the judgment because of this supposed error. Nobles v. State, 127 Ga. 213 (4), 56 S. E. 125.

[4, 5] 4, 5. When the charge as a whole is considered in connection with the excerpt upon which the assignment of error is predicated and the facts of the case, the law relating to provocation by words, threats, and contemptuous gestures was correctly given. Irrespective of whether the written request was a correct statement of the law in the abstract, it was not adjusted to the evidence, and therefore there was no error in refusing to give it in the charge. None of the assignments of error present any reason for a reversal of the judgment.

Judgment affirmed.

(10 Ga. App. 18)

TURNER v. STATE. (No. 3,330.)

(Court of Appeals of Georgia. Nov. 7, 1911.)

(Syllabus by the Court.)

1. RAILROADS (§ 255*)—OPERATION—OFFENSES—WRECKING TRAINS.

There was no error in overruling the demurrer to the indictment.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Railroads, Dec. Dig. § 255.*]

2. RAILROADS (§ 255*)—OPERATION—OFFENSES—WRECKING TRAINS.

In an indictment, under section 513 of the Penal Code of 1910, it is unnecessary to prove ownership of the railroad track, if possession of it consistently with the allegations of the indictment be shown.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Railroads, Cent. Dig. §§ 785, 786; Dec. Dig. § 255.*]

3. RAILROADS (§ 255*)—OPERATION—OFFENSES—WRECKING TRAINS.

Intent and purpose to wreck a train was sufficiently shown by evidence that the defendant placed an iron bar, 3½ feet long, weighing 20 pounds, on a railroad track, laying the small end on the iron rail and the other end against the cross-tie, a few moments before a passenger train was due, that the track at this point is on an embankment, and that the defendant then went across into a field and hid behind some bushes.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Railroads, Dec. Dig. § 255.*]

Error from Superior Court, Greene County; B. F. Walker, Judge.

J. T. Turner was convicted of attempting to wreck a train, and brings error. Affirmed.

Jas. Davison and Miles W. Lewis, for plaintiff in error. Jos. E. Pottle, Sol. Gen., Jos. B. & Bryan Cumming, and Noel P. Park, for the State.

RUSSELL, J. [1] 1. The defendant was indicted for a violation of section 513 of the Penal Code of 1910. The language of the indictment conforms substantially to that used in the statute. The instrument used was alleged to be "an iron article, the exact character of which is to said grand jurors unknown." The manner of making the attempt was alleged to be by placing the iron article on the railroad of the Georgia Railroad & Banking Company. The defendant filed a special demurrer to the indictment, because the train which it was claimed the defendant attempted to wreck was not described, and because the means or manner of the attempt was not set forth with sufficient particularity. We think the indictment is sufficient. It is not necessary to describe the train with particularity; for that does not enter into the gravamen of the crime. An attempt to wreck any train is a crime; and, as the offender may not know what train he will wreck, the state is not required to show what train he intends to wreck. The defendant was informed by the indictment that he was charged with an attempt to wreck a train on the railroad track of the Georgia Railroad & Banking Company. This was sufficient to notify him of the gist of the charge against him. We likewise think both the means and the manner are sufficiently alleged; it being stated that the defendant placed an iron article on the railroad track.

[2] 2. One of the grounds of the motion for a new trial complains that a witness for the state was allowed to testify that the railroad track was owned by the Georgia Railroad & Banking Company, over the defendant's objection that the record title was the best evidence. Ownership of the tracks would not necessarily have to be evidenced by a written record title; and, it not appearing to the court that there was any such title, it would seem that no proper foundation for the objection had been laid. Furthermore, the evidence objected to was immaterial. Under section 513 of the Penal Code, the ownership of the track is immaterial, it being entirely sufficient that the track was in the possession of a railroad company. Adkins v. State, 115 Ga. 582, 41 S. E. 987.

[3] 3. It is unnecessary to elaborate the third headnote. The charge was eminently fair, and the verdict fully authorized, and the judgment is

Affirmed.

(10 Ga. App. 67)

WILSON v. STATE. (No. 3,669.)

(Court of Appeals of Georgia. Nov. 7, 1911.)

(Syllabus by the Court.)

1. DUPLICITY IN INDICTMENT—WRECKING TRAIN.

The indictment in this case was not duplicitous. It set forth the offense as defined by section 513 of the Penal Code of 1910, and did not include the offense as defined by section 522. The allegations were sufficient in form and substance, and the demurrer was properly overruled.

2. RAILROADS (§ 255*)—OPERATION—OFFENSES AGAINST RAILROADS—INDICTMENT—EVIDENCE.

An indictment, under section 513 of the Penal Code of 1910, need not allege the ownership of the "railroad train, locomotive, car, coach, or vehicle" which was being used and run on the railroad track when it was wrecked or attempted to be wrecked, nor is it necessary to allege and prove the ownership of the railroad track. It was sufficient to allege and prove that the railroad train, locomotive, car, or coach was "passenger train No. 2 of the Georgia Railroad, which was then and there being used and was on the railroad track of the Georgia Railroad for the purpose of travel and transportation." Testimony that the Georgia Railroad was a corporation was wholly immaterial, and there was no error in excluding it. Walker v. State, 97 Ga. 213, 22 S. E. 528; Turner v. State, 10 Ga. App. —, 72 S. E. 604, this day decided.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Railroads, Cent. Dig. § 785; Dec. Dig. § 255.*]

3. CRIMINAL LAW (§ 784*)—TRIAL—INSTRUCTIONS—CIRCUMSTANTIAL EVIDENCE.

The evidence was direct as to the commission of the offense and the identity of the accused as the offender, and the court was not required to charge on the probative value of circumstantial evidence because, in addition to the direct evidence, there were also circumstances indicating guilt. Bivins v. State, 5 Ga. App. 434, 68 S. E. 523, and cases there cited.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Criminal Law, Cent. Dig. §§ 1883-1888; Dec. Dig. § 784.*]

4. SUFFICIENCY OF EVIDENCE—NO ERROR.

The evidence supports the verdict, and no error of law appears.

Error from Superior Court, Warren County; B. F. Walker, Judge.

Charlie Wilson was convicted of wrecking or attempting to wreck a train, and brings error. Affirmed.

M. L. Felts, for plaintiff in error. Thos. J. Brown, Sol. Gen., and E. P. Davis, for defendant in error.

HILL, C. J. Judgment affirmed.

(10 Ga. App. 66)

COCKER v. CITY OF TIFTON. (No. 3,641.)
(Court of Appeals of Georgia. Nov. 7, 1911.)*(Syllabus by the Court.)1. CRIMINAL LAW (§§ 1028, 1033*)—CERTIORARI—OBJECTIONS WAIVED.

Questions involving the validity of a municipal ordinance and the jurisdiction of the trial court, not made in that court, and raised for the first time on certiorari in the superior court, will not be considered by the latter court, or by this court. Sutton v. Council of Washington, 4 Ga. App. 30, 60 S. E. 811; S. F. & W. Ry. Co. v. Hardin, 110 Ga. 433, 35 S. E. 681.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Criminal Law, Cent. Dig. §§ 2619, 2629; Dec. Dig. §§ 1028, 1033.*]

2. REVIEW ON APPEAL.

No error of law appears, and the verdict fully supports the finding of the trial court.

Error from Superior Court, Tift County; W. E. Thomas, Judge.

Jack Coker was convicted of violating a city ordinance. From an order refusing certiorari, he brings error. Affirmed.

J. B. Murrow and J. J. Murray, for plaintiff in error. Fulwood & Murray, for defendant in error.

HILL, C. J. Judgment affirmed.

(10 Ga. App. 90)

WALLACE v. SOUTHERN RY. CO.
(No. 3,894.)

(Court of Appeals of Georgia. Nov. 7, 1911.
Rehearing Denied Nov. 20, 1911.)

*(Syllabus by the Court.)1. TRIAL (§ 139*)—NONSUIT—SUFFICIENCY OF EVIDENCE.

Where the jury can reasonably infer, from the evidence, that an allegation of negligence which would authorize a recovery has been proved, a nonsuit should not be granted.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Trial, Cent. Dig. §§ 338-341; Dec. Dig. § 139.*]

2. DEATH (§ 58*)—ACTION FOR WRONGFUL DEATH—PRESUMPTION OF NEGLIGENCE.

The presumption of negligence against the employé "in case death results from injury to the employé," created by the act of 1909 (Acts 1909, p. 160), is a part of the integral right to recover, and is not alone a rule of evidence, and is applicable only to causes of action arising subsequently to the passage of the act in question.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Death, Dec. Dig. § 58.*]

Error from City Court of Atlanta; H. M. Reid, Judge.

Action by C. H. Wallace against the Southern Railway Company. Judgment for defendant, and plaintiff brings error. Reversed.

See, also, 6 Ga. App. 526, 65 S. E. 299.

Burton Smith and R. W. Crenshaw, for plaintiff in error. McDaniel & Black, for defendant in error.

HILL, C. J. Wallace was employed by the Southern Railway Company as a switchman, and on or about October 26, 1906, in the early part of the night, and while engaged in the discharge of his duties, he was killed by the running of an engine operated by the railway company. His widow brought suit to recover damages for the homicide. At the conclusion of the plaintiff's evidence a nonsuit was granted, and to this judgment she excepts. Illustrating the question of nonsuit, there are also two special assignments of error on the admission and rejection of testimony.

This is the second appearance of the case before this court on an assignment of error to the judgment awarding a nonsuit. When first here, this court held that the plaintiff failed to show a prima facie case of liability, and consequently affirmed the judgment. Wallace v. Southern Ry. Co., 6 Ga. App. 526, 65 S. E. 299. There is some substantial difference between the allegations of negligence in the first and second petitions, but very little, if any, material difference in the evidence in support of the allegations on the two trials. In a judgment awarding a nonsuit, as nothing is decided except the sufficiency of the evidence presented in support of the allegations in that particular case, it is not deemed necessary to call attention to any difference between the allegations and evidence in the present case and the first case. We shall only consider and decide the correctness of the judgment, under the allegations and the proof offered in support thereof, on the question of liability in the case sub judice. The employment by the railway company of the husband of the plaintiff as a switchman, and the fact that he was killed in the discharge of his duties by the engine of the railway company, were not controverted, and the only question for the determination of this court relates to the issue of negligence under the allegations of the petition and the evidence for the plaintiff.

The allegations on the subject of negligence are as follows: "In the course of his duties, deceased was switching cars in [Fulton] county, near Armour. * * * At said time and place deceased threw a switch [in front of the engine] and gave a signal to the engineer to move forward. Immediately upon his giving the signal, and just as the engine was in the act of starting, a great volume of steam gushed out, surrounding the engine in every direction, and enveloping the deceased. The engine continued to advance, and ran over the deceased and killed him. * * * It is impossible for plaintiff to give any of the details from the time the steam enveloped her husband until his mangled body was found in the rear of the engine." She alleges that "the escaping steam obscured the vision of the deceased, and was so opaque that he could not see through it, and, furthermore, it stung and blinded his eyes, and it was impossible for him to see, or know direction, or tell in which direction the engine was, or in which direction he should go, or save himself in any way. She does not know and cannot say whether the engine struck the deceased while he was trying to escape from it, or exactly how it happened." In this connection it is further alleged that, "some time before the death of the decedent, the defendant knew the condition of this engine, had promised to repair it repeatedly, and had had it in the shop for that purpose," but, "notwithstanding this, they sent it out to be used for yard purposes, when the character of the work made it essential that the engine should start and stop properly"; that the decedent was killed on the very night of the day that the engine came from the shop, and he had no chance to know its defective condition, and, under these circumstances, it is insisted that the decedent was relieved from any assumption of risk. She charges that "the escaping steam and the action of the engineer in moving the engine while the deceased was endangered," as described, "were the real and proximate cause of his death." She charges that "the valves of said engine around the piston rods, and also the steam chest and cylinders, were leaking badly," that by proper examination and repairs this defective condition of the engine could have been discovered and repaired, and that the defendant was negligent in failing to make a proper inspection and in failing to correct these defects; and she further charges that it was negligence to operate the engine in such defective condition, and, under these circumstances, it is insisted that the decedent was relieved of any assumption of risk.

These are substantially the allegations of negligence, and they may be divided into two grounds: First, the negligence of the railway company in failing to inspect and repair the defects in the engine, and in knowingly using the engine in this defective condition; and, second, the negligence of the engineer in continuing to move forward his engine after he had received the signal to move forward by the switchman, when he discovered that the escaping steam had so enveloped the switchman as to make it impossible to observe his location on the track in front of the moving engine.

1. In support of the first allegation of negligence, the evidence is not controverted that the engine was in a defective condition as described; nor is it denied that the defendant company knew of this condition, or by proper inspection could have found it out, and an inference of negligence was reasonably deducible from the facts in evidence. We think, however, as to this the deceased switchman had assumed the risk. The evidence is clear that his opportunity for discovering the defective condition of the engine was as good as that of the master, that he had been working as a front switchman on this engine in the yards of the company from 6 o'clock in the morning until the time when he was killed, and the evidence shows that this engine had been leaking badly during this whole day, up to the very time of the accident, and that everybody connected with this engine and its operation could not possibly have failed to see the escaping steam and have knowledge of the defective character of the engine. The deceased switchman therefore knew, or in the exercise of ordinary care in connection with the discharge of his duties as a switchman could have known, that the engine had not been fixed, although it had been in the shop for that purpose, that it was defective, that the steam did escape whenever the engine started, that he fully realized his danger in connection with the escaping steam, and that, notwithstanding this knowledge, he continued his work. We think it clear, therefore, that he assumed the risk resulting from the defective condition of the engine, and that as to this ground of negligence he was not entitled to recover.

[1] 2. Illustrating the second allegation of negligence, the evidence shows, or it is reasonably deducible therefrom, that the switchman, in the proper discharge of his duty and for the proper signaling for the engineer to start forward, crossed the track a few feet in front of the engine, "to the engineer's side, and gave the signal for the engineer to start forward"; that the manner in which this was done by the switchman was the customary and proper way to do it; that the engineer saw the signal and immediately started the engine forward; that the steam rushed out suddenly "in a great volume," and completely enveloped the switchman, and hid him from the engineer's view; that as the steam enveloped the switchman, the light of his lantern immediately went out; that the engineer saw that the switchman was thus enveloped, and saw that he was standing on the track when he gave the signal; that he knew that it was customary for switchmen, after giving signals of this character, to get upon the moving engine; that, seeing this perilous position of the switchman, it was the engineer's duty to stop his engine until the vapor should have been dissipated, and he, the engineer, enabled to see the exact location of the switchman, and the switchman allowed without danger to himself to get upon the moving engine; that, notwithstanding these facts, he continued to move his engine towards the place where the switchman was last seen standing on the track, and the evidence is that he could have stopped his engine "in 4 or 5 feet," but that he did not stop the engine for 90 feet from where he struck and ran over the switchman.

We do not mean to say that on these issues the evidence is altogether in favor of the contention of the plaintiff, for it is insisted by learned counsel for the railway company that the only reasonable deduction from the evidence is that the switchman was not on the track in front of the engine when he gave the signal for the engineer to start, but that he had passed over the track, and was standing off the track, in front of the engine, on the ground, in a position of safety and, himself seeing the enveloping steam, and realizing that it would be unsafe for him in that condition to attempt to step on the track, he nevertheless endeavored to do so; that instead of waiting until the steam passed away, or until the engine stopped, to get upon the engine, he, notwithstanding the dangerous situation, through his own negligence attempted to get upon the engine, and in this manner met his death, and, therefore, that his own negligence was the proximate cause of his death. Under the evidence it is not clear how the switchman was killed. It does not disclose that he attempted to get on the engine while it was moving. He may have been walking on the track in front of the engine, and his feet may have caught in the frog of the track, and he may have been thrown, and in that position may have been run over and killed. Neither is it clearly shown that he was standing on the track in front of the engine when he gave the signal, but it is fairly issuable from the evidence that he was so standing. The uncertainty as to these questions should be left to the solution of a jury. It is not so conclusive that as matter of law it can be held that the negligence of the deceased caused his death, or that by the exercise of ordinary diligence he could have avoided the negligence of the engineer in continuing to move his engine under the circumstances. It cannot be doubted that the question whether the engineer was guilty of negligence in moving forward his engine, notwithstanding he saw the perilous situation of the decedent, and whether, if the engine was so moved forward, this was the cause of the killing, are, under the evidence and inferences fairly deducible therefrom, at least issuable, and cannot certainly be determined as questions of law. On this allegation of negligence, under the evidence, our minds are in a condition of uncertainty and unrest, and we prefer to leave the question to be solved by the jury, where, if issuable at all, the law places the responsibility of solution.

[2] 3. Learned counsel for the plaintiff contends that the act of 1909 (Acts 1909, p. 160) is applicable to this case. He concedes that it could not be applicable if the question involved a right to recover, because it would be retroactive in character, as the homicide occurred in 1906; and he insists that the presumption of negligence created by this act, under certain facts, is a rule of evidence, and as such would apply to any cause of action arising after the passage of the act. The general rule of law which counsel states is undoubtedly correct, that the Legislature has power to make rules of evidence, and presumptions are ordinarily rules of evidence, applicable to causes of action which have accrued prior to the passage of the act. In this case, however, the act expressly provides that it is applicable only to causes of action arising subsequently to its passage, and the act is intended to modify the extreme hardship of the statute, which prohibited an employé from recovering damages unless he himself was absolutely faultless in connection with his injury. The act does provide that, in case death results from an injury to an employé, a presumption of negligence is thus raised which must be rebutted by the employer; but this presumption constitutes an integral part of the right to recover, and can have no retroactive effect. In Louisville & Nashville R. Co. v. Bradford, 135 Ga. 522, 69 S. E. 870, it is expressly held that causes of action arising prior to the act of 1909, supra, are unaffected by its provisions, and that an instruction which the trial judge in that case gave to the jury, to the effect that the presumption of negligence created by the act did apply to a cause of action arising prior to its passage, was erroneous. This seems to settle the question, and really renders unnecessary an opinion by the court on this point. However, under the statute as it stood at the time of the homicide, whenever the plaintiff proved the negligence of the engineer, this cast the burden on the railroad company of proving the contributory negligence of the employé.

4. The assignments of error as to the rulings on evidence are conceded by counsel for plaintiff in error not to be controlling or material, and, as they may probably not occur on a second trial, it is not now necessary to decide them. We reverse the judgment, awarding a nonsuit in this case, solely on the ground discussed in the second division of the opinion.

Judgment reversed.

(157 N. C. 1)

MAYNARD et al. v. SEARS.

(Supreme Court of North Carolina. Nov. 15, 1911.)

1. WILLS (§ 602*) — ESTATE CONVEYED — DEFEASIBLE FEE.

A will, after making specific dispositions of certain slaves to J., C., and S., gave the balance of testator's land and negroes to be equally divided between J., C., and S., and provided that, if they all died without such heirs, the property should return to testator's brother and sister or their lawful heirs. Held, that J., C., and S. took a defeasible fee in the land devised.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Wills, Cent. Dig. §§ 1351-1359; Dec. Dig. § 602.*]

2. REMAINDERS (§ 17*) — LIMITATIONS.

The statute of limitations does not run against remaindermen in favor of a grantee of the life tenant until the life estate falls in.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Remainders, Cent. Dig. §§ 12-17; Dec. Dig. § 17.* Limitation of Actions, Cent. Dig. § 231.]

3. APPEAL AND ERROR (§ 927*) — NONSUIT — EVIDENCE.

On appeal from a nonsuit, the evidence must be considered in the light most favorable to plaintiff.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Appeal and Error, Cent. Dig. §§ 3748-3757; Dec. Dig. § 927.*]

4. EJECTMENT (§ 95*) — ACTION — SUFFICIENCY OF EVIDENCE.

Evidence in an action to recover land in which plaintiff claimed as heir at law to B.'s brother held to sustain a finding that B. had owned the land.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Ejectment, Cent. Dig. §§ 280-295; Dec. Dig. § 95.*]

5. TRIAL (§ 140*) — WEIGHT OF EVIDENCE — QUESTION FOR JURY.

The weight of the testimony of a witness as to occurrences 60 or 70 years ago was for the jury, and not for the court, though the witness was only five or six years of age at the time of the matters as to which he testified.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Trial, Cent. Dig. §§ 334, 335; Dec. Dig. § 140.*]

Appeal from Superior Court, Wake County; Whedbee, Judge.

Action by James Maynard and others against A. S. Sears. From a judgment for defendant, plaintiffs appeals. Reversed.

Aycock & Winston and Peele & Maynard, for appellants. R. N. Simms, for appellee.

CLARK, C. J. This is an action to recover 100 acres of land. Berry Surls died in 1842, having executed his will as follows:

"In the name of God, Amen. I, Berry Surls, of county of Wake, being of sound and perfect mind and memory, blessed be God, do this 10th day of February, one thousand eight hundred and forty two, make and publish this my last will and testament in manner following: That I say, first I give and bequeath to John Pollard one negro girl by the name of Jane, to him and his lawful heirs, begotten of his body, dying without such to return to Caswell Pollard and Thomas Slaughter, or their lawful heirs, begotten of their body. Item the second: I give Caswell Pollard one negro girl by the name of Hannah, to him and his lawful heirs begotten of his body, dying without such to return as above directed. Thirdly, I give to Thomas Slaughter one negro girl by the name of Pat, to him and his lawful heirs begotten of his body, dying without such to return to John and Caswell Pollard, or their lawful heirs begotten of their body, and the balance of my land and negroes to be equally divided between John Pollard, Caswell Pollard and Thomas Slaughter, after paying all my just debts, with the exception of Buck. It is my desire that he be sold to a speculator and it is my desire that all my stock of all kinds be sold and equally divided between them as above stated. Also my money and notes to be divided * * * in the manner above stated equally between my three sons which are named in this will. It is my desire that if they all should die without such heirs to return to my brother and sister, or their lawful heirs. I also appoint and ordain my worthy friend, Henry Williams, my executor to this my last will and testament. In testimony whereof I have hereunto set my hand and affixed my seal, in the presence of Dempsey Sorrell and John Brown, this 10th day of February, 1842.

his
"Berry (X) Surls."
mark

The plaintiffs claim that they are the heirs at law of John Surls, who was a brother of Berry Surls, and offered evidence thereof. Berry Surls left no legitimate children. Soon after he died, his three devisees, John and Caswell Pollard and Thomas Slaughter, took possession of the land sued for, and cultivated the same, which they undertook to convey on October 4, 1851, to Bartlett Sears, who took possession of the land, and held it till his death. It was sold February, 10, 1878, to pay the debts of Bartlett Sears. It was purchased by W. H. Crabtree, who took possession. The deed to him recites that the land is the same as that sold by John Pollard, Caswell Pollard, and Thomas Slaughter to Bartlett Sears by aforesaid deed October 4, 1851. On November 20, 1878, Crabtree sold the land, together with adjoining land, making a tract of 282 acres to S. R. Horne, who remained in possession till April 24, 1897, when he conveyed the land to the defendant, Sears. The last one of the three devisees named in the will of Berry Surls, to wit Caswell Pollard, died in February, 1908. This action was brought the following year.

[1] The plaintiffs correctly contend that, under the will of Berry Surls, John and Caswell Pollard and Thomas Slaughter took a defeasible fee in said 100 acres, and that their deed to Bartlett Sears conveyed only such estate, and that the successive mesne conveyances down to the defendant, Sears, conveyed no more than such defeasible fee in the land. The statute of limitations did not begin to run against the plaintiffs, if heirs at law of John Surls, till the death of Caswell Pollard in 1908. Only one of the three devisees married, and the plaintiffs offered evidence that he left no children.

[2] The statute of limitations does not run against the remainderman in favor of the grantee of the life tenant until the life estate falls in. Hauser v. Craft, 134 N. C. 319, 46 S. E. 756; Cox v. Jernigan, 154 N. C. 584, 70 S. E. 949; Staton v. Mullis, 92 N. C. 623. The defendant contends that the evidence does not show that the land ever belonged to Berry Surls, nor that the plaintiffs are the heirs at law of John Surls, nor that Thomas Slaughter and John Pollard are yet dead, and that they did not leave children. There was evidence upon all these propositions, but the defendant claimed that it was not sufficient to be submitted to the jury to prove these contentions of the plaintiffs.

[3] The judge having directed a nonsuit, the evidence must be taken in the light of the most favorable inferences which can be drawn from it. It is manifest from the entire will that the testator intended that each of the devisees should have a fee simple defeasible upon failure to heirs of his body. He makes this direction as to the slaves, his money and notes, and directs "the balance of the land and negroes be equally divided between the three," adding that it was his desire "that if they all should die without such heirs to return to my brother and sister or their lawful heirs." The testator applied the significant word "return" to everything.

[4] The witness Markham testified that, when he first knew the land, Berry Surls was cultivating it; that the witness was then five or six years old; that he saw the negro Buck named in the will at work on the land; and that the description of the 100 acres in the deed from the three devisees to Sears embraced the 100 acres of land which he identified and described. He says that 50 acres were in cultivation when he first knew the land; that he remembers that a man was found dead on the tract, and that Berry Surls had a grave dug on the land to bury him; that, after the death of Berry Surls, the three devisees took possession of the land, and cultivated it; that Berry Surls lived on the land; that he saw him in the house he lived in, saw him two or three times, and saw him walking in the fields where Buck and Beck mentioned in his will were working. It is true that the witness states that he was then only five or six years of age.

[5] But the weight of his testimony was a matter for the jury. A son of Bartlett G. Sears, former owner of the land, fully identified the 100 acres. The witness Markham testified that Bartlett Sears while in possession cut down the timber on the land, and stated that his title was only good for the lifetime of the three devisees named in the will. The witness Sears also stated that he was present when the land was sold to pay his father's debts, and it was stated at the time that the title was in dispute, and the land brought only $160 or $170, whereas it was really worth $500 or $600. The witness Byrd testified that he heard Horne, the defendant's grantor, say that he told the defendant that there was a defect in the title of the 100-acre tract. The will of Berry Surls shows that he claimed to own this land in fee simple.

There is also evidence sufficient, if believed by the jury, to justify the finding that the plaintiffs were heirs at law of John Surls, and that neither John nor Caswell Pollard nor Thomas Slaughter left any children. Whether the jury would have found the facts on these points in accord with the contentions of the plaintiff or not, there was sufficient evidence to submit the case to their finding. In directing a nonsuit there was error.

(156 N. C. 463)

SAUNDERS et ux. v. GILBERT.

(Supreme Court of North Carolina. Nov. 9, 1911.)

1. EVIDENCE (§ 121*)—RES GESTÆ.

Plaintiff was accosted on the street by defendant, accompanied by a crowd of persons, and offensive epithets were applied to him. On reaching his home, the crowd, which had followed him, remained in the street, and, in an action by plaintiff and his wife for trespass and assault, it appeared that defendant said, "Will give you 24 hours to leave town;" that some one in the crowd said, "Get him now;" and that, just as plaintiff got inside the gate, some one said, "That was all that saved you;" that plaintiff fired into the air to frighten the crowd, whereupon defendant fired; the bullet striking a post in front of plaintiff's wife, who was standing on the piazza. Held, that the evidence as to what was said by persons in the crowd was admissible as part of the res gestæ.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Evidence, Cent. Dig. §§ 303-338; Dec. Dig. § 121.*]

2. APPEAL AND ERROR (§ 1050*)—HARMLESS ERROR—ADMISSION OF EVIDENCE.

In an action for assault and trespass, the plaintiff proved without contradiction her highly excited and nervous state after it was over, and that the doctor whom she sent for administered medicine hypodermically, and testified that he said it was morphine. Held, that, even if it was error to admit his statement in evidence, it was harmless; it being evident that the medicine given was a sedative, and wholly immaterial what its exact nature was.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Appeal and Error, Cent. Dig. §§ 4153-4160; Dec. Dig. § 1050.*]

3. TRIAL (§ 256*)—INSTRUCTIONS—REQUESTS.

The court instructed that if defendant fired through a reasonable apprehension that he was in danger, or that a felony was about to be committed, he would not be guilty of assault or trespass; that if plaintiff fired to protect himself, and defendant fired in a reckless manner, without reasonable apprehension that any one was to suffer from plaintiff, defendant would not be guilty of an assault or trespass. Held, that, if defendant thought himself entitled to an instruction that one exercising self-defense may act upon appearances, or the facts as they appear to him at the time, he should have requested it.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Trial, Cent. Dig. §§ 628-641; Dec. Dig. § 256.*]

4. ASSAULT AND BATTERY (§ 13*)—TRESPASS (§ 26*)—DEFENSES.

Defendant's liability for trespass or assault did not depend on his right of self-defense; the trespass and assault having already been committed.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Assault and Battery, Cent. Dig. § 11; Dec. Dig. § 13; *Trespass, Cent. Dig. § 58; Dec. Dig. § 26.*]

5. ASSAULT AND BATTERY (§ 2*)—TRESPASS (§ 10*)—WHAT CONSTITUTES.

Plaintiff was accosted on the street by defendant, accompanied by a crowd of persons, and offensive epithets applied to him. On reaching his home, the crowd, which had followed him, remained in the street, and, in an action by plaintiff and his wife for trespass and assault, it appeared that defendant said, "Will give you 24 hours to leave town;" that some one in the crowd said, "Get him now;" and that, just as plaintiff got inside the gate, some one said, "That was all that saved you;" that plaintiff fired into the air to frighten the crowd, whereupon defendant fired; the bullet striking a post in front of plaintiff's wife, who was standing on the piazza. Held, that defendant was guilty of assault and trespass.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Assault and Battery, Cent. Dig. § 1; Dec. Dig. § 2; *Trespass, Cent. Dig. §§ 8-12; Dec. Dig. § 10.*]

6. ASSAULT AND BATTERY (§ 38*)—PUNITIVE DAMAGES.

It was proper to instruct that the jury might award actual damages, giving consideration to mental and physical pain, and also punitive damages, if the assault was committed maliciously or wantonly.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Assault and Battery, Cent. Dig. § 53; Dec. Dig. § 38.*]

Appeal from Superior Court, Pasquotank County; Justice, Judge.

Actions by W. O. Saunders and Columbia Saunders against Oliver F. Gilbert. From judgments for plaintiffs, after consolidation of the actions, defendant appeals. Affirmed.

These are actions, one by the plaintiff W. O. Saunders, and the other by his wife, Columbia Saunders, against the defendant for trespass and assault. They were consolidated and tried together, resulting in a verdict and judgment for the plaintiffs, from which the defendant appealed. As the parties differ materially as to the nature of the evidence, it becomes necessary to state it at some length, all of it having been introduced by the plaintiffs:

The plaintiff Columbia Saunders testified: "I live on Cypress street, and have lived in this town since I was a child; am the daughter of John Ballance and wife of W. O. Saunders; have known the defendant 12 or 13 years; was once a clerk in his store about three years, and for Mitchell, his brother-in-law, in which the defendant was a clerk, for about five years. On July 31, 1910, I was at home alone in my house until about 9 p. m., and was on the porch when my husband came, a large crowd of people following him, from church; some in front and some behind him. My husband came in the gate and closed it; heard Gilbert's voice. He said to Mr. Saunders, 'Will give you 24 hours to leave town.'" Plaintiff was then asked, "What did the crowd do?" Defendant objected. Objection overruled and defendant excepted. "A. The people leaned up against the fence, and I heard other threats. My husband told them to leave, and the first man who came in the yard he would shoot. I was in the light, and had on a white dress; saw a large crowd—two or three hundred people—and heard some one in the crowd say, 'Get him now.' My husband fired upwards from the doorstep towards treetops. I then pulled him on the porch, and some firing began on the street. A bullet struck the wall, just did miss me. I saw the flash. Another bullet struck the piazza post immediately in front of me, and between me and the person firing. If the bullet had not struck the post, it would have hit me. Q. What did any one say? A. Just as Mr. Saunders got inside the gate, some one said, 'That was all that saved you.' (To this question and answer, defendant objected. Objection overruled, and defendant excepted.) Two bullets struck the house, and one struck the fence. The crowd seemed angry; saw no arms, except flash of pistol. It made me nervous, and I was nearly wild; did not sleep that night; have not gotten over it yet; sent for Dr. McMullan, and he came. Q. What did Dr. McMullan say he gave you? (Defendant objected; objection overruled; defendant excepted.) A. He said it was morphine. Q. How did he administer it. A. He put it in my arm. It did not put me to sleep. There were several others saw me, among them Mr. and Mrs. Simons and Mr. and Mrs. White. I was screaming and crying, and could not eat or sleep any scarcely for about a week. I had a baby about five months old and two other children, three and five years old, in the house with me. I am still afraid to sleep without doors and blinds closed. On Monday I sent for Dr. Fearing."

Cross-examined, she testified: "This was on Sunday night immediately after service. Some people always passed my house going from church, but no large crowd like this. Mr. Saunders' father was with him, and went in the yard when he did. No one else came in the yard. The gate was 10 or 15 feet from the porch. Mr. Saunders came to about the bottom of the step and fired two or three times; nobody else had fired before he shot. He fired twice. I don't know whether he fired the third shot then or a little after. Then the firing was from the street. I pulled Mr. Saunders in just after he had fired. I closed the door when he went in; don't know whether it was before the third shot or not. He went upstairs, and left me on the piazza. Mr. Saunders had been to Blackwell

*For other cases see same topic and section NUMBER in Dec. Dig. & Am. Dig. Key No. Series & Rep'r Indices

Memorial Church. Nobody attempted to go into the gate, but pushed against the fence in a threatening manner. Mr. Saunders had not been in the house, since he left to go to church, until after the firing began."

Edward Brinson testified: "I have lived in Elizabeth City 17 years; know defendant. On July 31, 1910, was at Blackwell Memorial Church; saw W. O. Saunders there; did not see Gilbert at church. I came out on sidewalk, and saw it was full of people, and I got into the street in front of Saunders' house; heard some one say, 'Stop,' or 'Halt.' Some one in the yard fired. It was Saunders who shot; held the pistol and fired up above the crowd. I saw Gilbert fire towards the house. I dodged around Gilbert, and heard several shots from where Gilbert was standing near the oak. Gilbert kind of leaned forward when he fired. I ran. I heard no threats. The street and the sidewalks were full of people, some walking leisurely, some fast, and some running."

J. M. Ballance testified: "I met O. F. Gilbert on the street Monday, July 25, 1910, a week before the occurrence, and had a talk with him. He said, 'I understand you have stock in the Independent.' I said: 'No, I have not; all I have done is to sign Saunders' bond to keep him out of jail.' He said, 'I want to tell you that I want to withdraw from you, if you have any stock in it.' He said, 'Why don't you help to stop this man [referring to Saunders] from talking about your pastor?' I said, 'I have nothing to do with that.' I said something, and he said, 'Don't you think, if I am going to kill a man, it is my place to warn him beforehand of it?' Saunders was editor of the Independent. On the 31st, at night, I was at Blackwell Memorial Church. I went towards home along Cypress street. When I got about 80 feet of Saunders' house, some one fired two shots upward from Saunders' doorsteps; then there were four shots fired from the street towards Saunders' house, in quick succession, from near the oak. I went home, and then back to Saunders' house. Mrs. Saunders was very nervous. I stayed there that night with the chief of police and a guard. I am half-brother to Mrs. Saunders. I saw three bullet holes, but saw no bullets; saw the glancing dents in the wood. I was 80 feet away; no one between me and the party firing on the sidewalk. I heard Saunders say he fired three times before any one else shot. When Saunders drew his pistol, the people on the sidewalk and on the street began to run. I am on Saunders' prosecution bond."

Mr. Matthews testified: "I live six or eight hundred feet from Saunders' house. Was in front of my gate and heard two shots, and four to six more. I went to Saunders' house. The street was full of people, in groups; considerable excitement; saw Mrs. Saunders. She was greatly distressed—on the porch wringing her hands and appealing for help."

Dr. Zenas Fearing testified: "I know plaintiffs. As mayor of Elizabeth City, I was phoned to come to Saunders' house Sunday night, and went as mayor and not as physician. Mrs. Saunders was very nervous and on the verge of collapse. This was on Sunday night. Dr. McMullan was there Sunday night. She was nervous. On the 2d of August, saw Mrs. Saunders professionally, and treated her for nervousness."

Charles Reid, sheriff of the county, testified: "Was at church, and was going home; heard the shots—three shots—then four or five; went to the house of Saunders. Mrs. Saunders was nervous, and asked me to protect her; stayed there until the crowd dispersed. I left guard around the house."

Plaintiff rests, and defendant introduced no evidence. The court, after reading the evidence to the jury, stating the contention of the parties, respectively, among other things, charged the jury as follows:

"(1) If you find that Gilbert fired the shots towards the house through a reasonable apprehension that he was in danger of serious bodily harm from Saunders, or if he fired the shots, believing that a felony was about to be committed, then Gilbert would not be guilty of committing a trespass as charged in the complaint, and it would be the duty of the jury to answer the issue as to trespass, 'No.'" Defendant excepted.

"2. If you find that Gilbert fired the shots toward the house under a reasonable apprehension that he was about to suffer serious bodily harm himself, or that a felony was about to be committed, then he would have had a right to so fire the shots, and he would not be guilty of assault or trespass, as charged in the complaint, and it would be the duty of the jury to answer the issue as to assault and trespass, 'No.'" Defendant excepted.

"3. If you find that the plaintiff W. O. Saunders fired the shots in the air above the heads of the crowd for the purpose of protecting his home and frightening the crowd away, and protecting himself from serious danger, and the said defendant fired the shots in the direction of the plaintiffs, in a reckless manner, without having any reasonable apprehension that he or anybody else was about to suffer from Saunders, then you should answer the issue as to unlawful assault, 'Yes.'" Defendant excepted.

"4. If you shall find that the plaintiff W. O. Saunders fired the shots in the air above the heads of the crowd, for the purpose of protecting his home and frightening the crowd away, and protecting himself from serious danger, and defendant fired the shots in the direction of the plaintiffs, in a reckless manner, without having any reasonable apprehension that he or anybody else was about to suffer from W. O. Saunders, then you should answer the issue as to unlawful trespass, 'Yes.'" Defendant excepted.

Upon the subject of damages, the court charged the jury: "That if they should answer the issues as to the assaults and trespasses which appear in the record, 'No,' they need go no further, for the plaintiffs would have suffered no damages. But if they answer those issues, 'Yes,' then they would go further, and consider the question of damages, and give to the plaintiffs such actual damages as they may have sustained because of the alleged wrongful conduct of the defendant, Gilbert; and in reaching their conclusion as to such actual damage they might consider any mental and physical pain which they find that the plaintiffs suffered by reason of the said alleged wrongful conduct on the part of the defendant, and in addition might add such amount as, in their judgment and discretion, they deemed right as punitive or exemplary damages, provided you find that there was an assault committed on plaintiffs, maliciously or wantonly." Defendant excepted.

J. C. B. Ehringhaus, J. B. Leigh, W. M. Bond, and E. F. Aydtlett, for appellant. S. Brown Shepherd, Pruden & Pruden, and Meekins & Tillett, for appellees.

WALKER, J. (after stating the facts as above). [1] The testimony as to what was said in the road and in front of the plaintiffs' home was clearly competent. The res gestæ includes what was said, as well as what was done. The acts and the outcries of this unlawful assembly (for that is, in plain speech and in law, what it was) is held to be competent as pars rei gestæ, and also as tending to show their purpose, or quo animo. Nothing is better settled than this rule of evidence. State v. Rawles, 65 N. C. 334; State v. Worthington, 64 N. C. 594. We find it stated in 4 Elliott on Evidence, § 3128, that "what is said and done by persons during the time they are engaged in a riot (or unlawful assembly) constitutes the res gestæ, and it is, of course, competent, as a rule, to prove all that is said and done"—the acts and the words of the mob, or any members of it—as in Rex v. Gordon, 21 State Trials, 485 (563), wherein evidence of the cries of the mob, "No popery," as it was proceeding towards Parliament House, were held competent and admissible as a part of the res gestæ.

[2] What Dr. McMullan said to the feme plaintiff, Mrs. Saunders, when he was administering morphine hyperdermically, is not of sufficient importance to warrant the granting of a new trial, if it was incompetent as evidence. The evidence as to her highly excited and nervous condition was overwhelmingly established by the evidence, and there was none to the contrary. We are permitted to use our common sense sometimes in deciding legal questions, and every one must know that the good doctor was administering something medicinally for the alleviations of her sufferings and to quiet her excited nerves. Whether it was morphine, or any other opiate, narcotic, anodyne or sedative, can make no essential difference. It was evidently given, whether internally or by hyperdermic, to calm and soothe her disturbed feelings. We do not mean to imply that it was not competent as a statement accompanying an act and explanatory of it, but waiving, for the present, the question of its admissibility under the strict rule of evidence, it was harmless, if incompetent.

[3] Having passed the skirmish line, we will now address ourselves to the remaining point in the case—the validity of the judge's charge upon the subject of forcible trespass and the right of self-defense. The charge was clear and sufficiently full, in the absence of requests for more specific instructions. If the defendant thought himself entitled to an instruction that "a person exercising the right of self-defense may safely act upon appearances, or the facts and circumstances as they appeared to him at the time, if he entertained an honest belief in their existence," he should have asked the judge to make his charge more definite in that respect, and, having failed to do so, he cannot, after the verdict, complain. Simmons v. Davenport, 140 N. C. 407, 53 S. E. 225. He appeared, by his silence, to be content with the instructions, and we will not hear him speak now. The judge laid down a correct rule that the defendant must have had a reasonable apprehension that his own life or limb was in jeopardy, and the jury are to judge of the reasonableness of his fear, notwithstanding the other principle asserted. State v. Nash, 88 N. C. 618. Would a man of ordinary firmness, and similarly situated, have reasonably acted upon the assumption that he was about to receive serious bodily harm, and defended himself, giving him the benefit of his view of the circumstances at the time? In Nash's Case, Judge Ashe said: "The court did not give the prisoner, in Scott's Case, 26 N. C. 409, [42 Am. Dec. 148], the benefit of the principle, for the reason that no such instruction had been asked in the court below; the judge concluding that the prisoner would have requested the instruction, if he had acted upon such belief." This is a sufficient answer to defendant's exception for failure to give the instruction, the omission of which in the charge is now assigned as error. A defendant must not sleep upon his rights, but be vigilant; otherwise the court may be betrayed into assuming that he had none, because he did not assert it.

[4] But, on other grounds, should the failure to insert the instruction in the charge, even if it is correct in itself, be reversible error? We think not. The defendant's liability for a trespass or an assault depended not upon his right of self-defense. He was the aggressor, and, with his associates, had pursued the plaintiff W. O. Saunders, even into his own yard—it may, with strict regard for the facts, be said, had forced him there by his fear of superior numbers, until he took refuge in his own house, and escaped from threatened violence to his person. The offense of forcible trespass or assault was complete at that very moment, and what occurred afterwards when, in the apprehension that he was about to be attacked on his own premises, Saunders fired his pistol to “scare them off,” and defendant returned the fire, has nothing to do with the unlawfulness of the defendant’s acts, and does not excuse what they did. He had already committed a forcible trespass and assault, as we will see, and Saunders’ conduct, defensible in law, as it is (State v. Nash, supra), did not excuse him or condone the offense he had already committed. Who will say that Saunders did not have reasonable ground to apprehend that they were about to attack him, and even his wife, whom he had the right to defend, in his own house?

[8] It would seem unnecessary to discuss the character of the defendant’s acts, in order to show that they were unlawful and violative of the plaintiff’s rights of person and property. They were, at least, sufficient to constitute a civil trespass. “If three persons commit a trespass upon property, in the presence of the person in possession, their number makes it indictable, although actual force is not used.” State v. Fisher, 12 N. C. 504. In that case the learned and just judge, who presided over this court at the time (Taylor, C. J.), said: “The inquiry therefore is whether the facts proved, according to the case sent up, amount to an indictable trespass. In Regina v. Soley and others, it is said by Lord Holt that, ‘as to what act will make a riot or trespass, such act as will make a trespass will also make a riot,’ by which he must be understood to mean if committed by three or more persons (11 Mod. 116). The converse of the proposition must be true that a trespass, committed by three or more persons, will make a riot. In every trespass, as well as riot, there must be some circumstances, either of an actual force or violence, or at least of an apparent tendency thereto, as are apt to strike a terror into the people; but it is not necessary that personal violence should have been committed. Clifford v. Brandon, 2 Campbell, 369. Any resistance on the part of the prosecutrix must have led to an actual breach of the peace; but the resistance of two women to the four persons who came to take the corn must have been unavailing.” So in State v. Rawles, 65 N. C. 334, it was held that when even four persons, with a gun and hoe, pursued another, who is at a place where he has a right to be, and by threatening and insulting language put him in fear, or (by what is) calculated to do so, and thereby induce him to go home sooner than he would have gone, or in a different way or course, and compel him by their number to do what he would not otherwise have done, they were guilty of a forcible trespass, although they did not approach nearer to him than 75 yards, and did not attempt to use their weapons. It is further said: “When a number of persons meet together, and there is evidence tending to show a common design to commit an assault upon another, they may all be properly found guilty, though only one of them used threatening and insulting language to him.” And again said Judge Settle: “The prosecutor was where he had a right to be, and had just been engaged in repairing his fences, which some one had knocked down, and no one had the right, by numbers, manner, language, weapons, or otherwise, to drive him home by a different path, or at a different pace, than that which he chose to take. What was the prosecutor to do? Was he to stand still and submit to a battery? Can the defendants stand in a more favorable light before a court of justice, merely because their violence was not fully consummated in consequence of the flight of the prosecutor? Some stress seems to be laid upon the fact that the gun and other weapons were not taken from the shoulders of those carrying them. As is said in State v. Church, 63 N. C. 16, that makes no difference, for ‘that would have been but the work of a moment, and was not needed to put the prosecutor in fear and to interfere with his personal liberty.’” But the subject was fully discussed at this term in State v. Davenport, and the authorities cited, and it covers the questions now raised by the defendant. There can be no question that defendant is civilly liable for the trespass and assault.

It can make no difference that this large multitude of people did not actually enter upon the premises of the plaintiffs, or go within their curtilage. We have held that the gathering of a large number of persons on the public road in front of a man’s house, or the use of violence, abusive or insulting language in a public or private road, or in the street of a city, in the presence and hearing of the owner of adjoining property, constitutes a forcible trespass. State v. Lloyd, 85 N. C. 573; State v. Hinson, 83 N. C. 640. In State v. Widenhouse, 71 N. C. 279, it is said that “the only privilege which the public have in a public road is that of passing over it, and those who abuse that privilege become trespassers ab initio—” citing State v. Buckner, 61 N. C. 558, 98 Am. Dec. 88, where Judge Reade says: “All misbehavior is aggravated by being in a public place. The only privilege which the public have in a public road is that of passing over it. If they misbehave in it, they create a nuisance. The road is for travel, and for no other purpose.” Judge Ashe said, in State v. Davis, 80 N. C. 351, 30 Am. Rep. 86: “He [the defendant] seemed to have rested his defense upon the ground that he was in the public road, and had the right to do there as he pleased. In this he was mistaken. The public have only an easement in a highway; that is, the right of passing and repassing along it. The soil remains in the owner, and where one stops in the road, and conducts himself as the defendant is charged to have done, he becomes a trespasser, and the owner has the right to abate the nuisance which he is creating. The principle of molliter manus does not apply to a case like this, where the trespasser, armed with a pistol, is acting in such belligerent defiance. See State v. Buckner, 61 N. C. 558 [98 Am. Dec. 83]. The defendant used language which was calculated and intended to bring on a fight, and a fight ensued. He is guilty. State v. Perry, 50 N. C. 9 [69 Am. Dec. 768]; State v. Robbins, 78 N. C. 431." In our case it was a pistol duel, which ensued from the defendant's aggressive conduct, and the multitude with him supplied the place of the required force or violence, as it certainly tended to intimidate the plaintiffs and to put them in fear. State v. Laney, 87 N. C. 535. It is therefore because the acts were committed in a public place, and were just as much calculated to produce a breach of the peace as if actual entry had been made upon the premises, which could be done in a moment, that we cannot escape the conviction that this invasion of the defendant was conducted in such numbers and with such a display of force as to overawe and intimidate the plaintiffs; and it surely tended to a breach of the peace. He is contending that it did actually lead to that result, as he is charging the plaintiff W. O. Saunders with assaulting him and putting him on the defensive, so that he returned his fire, and we have an alleged duel; yet nobody is guilty, and surely not the aggressors! The cases collected in Walser's Index Digest of the Criminal Law, at pages 162-166, will be found, when examined, to fully sustain our view of the facts of this case, when considered in their legal aspect. "A person who merely stops on the sidewalk in front of a man's house and remains there, using abusive and insulting language towards him, commits a (civil) trespass." 28 Am. & Eng. Enc. 553, citing Adams v. Rivers, 11 Barb. (N. Y.) 390.

[8] It is argued, and with some plausibility, that the court erred in allowing the jury to award punitive damages, in addition to those which are actual and compensatory. It would be exceedingly strange if a civil injury, which is also a crime, does not entitle the injured party to vindictive damages, and yet it is said that the reason why the law should be so is the very fact that the defendant will be punished in the criminal indictment, if convicted. But he may not be either indicted or adequately punished. Whatever may be the law elsewhere, this court has held, according to the rule, which we think is general, that when the defendant has been indicted and punished for the crime the pecuniary punishment can be considered by the jury in reduction of punitive damages. Johnston v. Crawford, 61 N. C. 342. Is not this the fair and equitable rule? Should the wrongdoer escape his full and proper measure of punishment in the civil suit, until he is ready to show that he has made proper amends to the public in the criminal prosecution? Even then, the payment of the fine may be considered only in reduction of the damages, as we have shown, and does not bar the claim to vindictive damages. In Sowers v. Sowers, 87 N. C. 303, Smith, C. J., says: "Even after conviction and punishment by fine, under an indictment for an assault, it would not defeat the right of the injured party to recover exemplary damages, or, as it is sometimes called, 'smart money,' and could only be made available in reduction of damages"—citing Smithwick v. Ward, 52 N. C. 64, 75 Am. Dec. 453, and approving the law thus stated by Judge Manly: "This element, in the estimate of damages, is allowed to punish the defendants for violating the laws, and by making them smart to deter others, as well as themselves, from similar violations. The principles upon which society acts in punishing criminally is precisely the same. The public never is actuated by revenge, but solely by a motive of self-protection, and punishes to prevent a repetition of the offense by the culprit, or its perpetration by others." It is not, and should not be, his liability to be criminally indicted and punished for the same offense that entitles him to any reduction, but his actual prosecution and punishment for the same. Sedgwick, one of our most accurate writers upon this subject, has given this rule to guide us: "Thus far we have been speaking of the great class of cases where no question of fraud, malice, gross negligence, or oppression intervenes. Where either of these elements mingle in the controversy, the law, instead of adhering to the system, or even the language of compensation, adopts a wholly different rule. It permits the jury to give what it terms punitive, vindictive, or exemplary damages; in other words, blends together the interests of society and of the aggrieved individual, and gives damages, not only to recompense the sufferer, but to punish the offender." 1 Sedgwick on Damages, p. 53; 13 Cyc. 106. We had occasion to consider this question in Jackson v. Telephone Co., 139 N. C. 347, 51 S. E. 1015, 70 L. R. A. 738, and in that case, after a review of the precedents, we arrived at this conclusion: "The doctrine is well settled that the jury, in addition to compensatory damages, may award exemplary, punitive, or vindictive damages, sometimes called 'smart money,' if the defendant has acted wantonly, or with criminal indifference to civil obligations (Railroad v. Prentiss, 147 U. S. 106 [13 Sup. Ct. 261, 37 L. Ed. 97]), or (the defendant) has been guilty of an intentional and willful violation of the plaintiff's rights. Railroad v. Arms, 91 U. S. 489 [23 L. Ed. 374]; Hansley v. Railroad, 117 N. C. 565 [23 S. E. 443, 32 L. R. A. 543, 53 Am. St. Rep. 600].” Barry v. Edmunds, 116 U. S. 550, 6 Sup. Ct. 501, 29 L. Ed. 729, sustains the doctrine in the following words: “It is settled in this court that, in an action for trespass, accompanied with malice, the plaintiff may recover exemplary damages in excess of the amount of his injuries, if the ad damnum is properly laid.” See, also, Williams v. Railroad, 144 N. C. 498, 57 S. E. 216, 12 L. R. A. (N. S.) 191. Even under the rule as stated in Remington v. Kirby, 120 N. C. 320, 26 S. E. 917, the plaintiff was entitled to punitive damages. It is the willful disregard of the rights of another, treating him with contempt or insult, or willfully or wantonly trespassing upon his lawful rights, that requires rebuke and makes the necessity for vindictive justice, sets an example to wrongdoers, and appeases an offended society, whose members should be permitted to live in peace and without molestation, and not be subjected to disturbance in their Sunday devotions, or in their quiet and peaceful homes, by an unlawful invasion of those who strangely enough imagine that they can resent alleged grievances by themselves becoming the violators of the law. This is an aggravated case, and the verdict was none too large. A citizen, returning from church on a Sabbath evening, is accosted on the street by the defendant and his associates, and offensive epithets applied to him, and he is pressed upon so hard that he is compelled to seek protection and safety in the recesses of his home, and still the defendant contends that these acts are but a simple violation of the plaintiff's rights, without any features of aggravation, when it appears that he fired into the house and narrowly missed killing or severely injuring plaintiff's wife—a defenseless woman, whom he should have seen, as she was standing under the light. This case is the equal of any in our law books for its flagrancy, whatever the provocation may have been, and calls, if any state of facts can call, for the award of punitive damages. Chief Baron Pollock (of the Exchequer Chamber) said that vindictive damages were generally awarded in actions of trespass, if accompanied with circumstances of insult or humiliation, or if the wrong is willfully committed in reckless or contemptuous disregard of the plaintiff's rights. In such a case, he thought, and his associates, Barons Bramwell, Wilde, and Channel, agreed with him, the jury should be free to assess damages beyond those which are awarded in the ordinary case, where the wrong is unattended by any such circumstances, and he added that the courts have always recognized the distinction between damages given with a liberal and a sparing hand. Embleu v. Myers, 6 Harl. & Norman, 54; Day v. Woodworth, 13 How. 363, 371, 14 L. Ed. 181; McNamara

v. King, 7 Ill. (2 Gilman) 432. If a wrong is willful, compensatory damages are not adequate, but the defendant must pay an additional sum for the sake of society, and to discourage a repetition of his offense against its laws. In a case where the circumstances of the assault were much less aggravated than those appearing in the record, Gibbs, C. J., said: “I wish to know, in a case where a man disregards every principle which actuates the conduct of good citizens, what is to restrain him, except large damages? To be sure, one can hardly conceive worse conduct than this. What would be said to a person in a low station of life who should behave himself in this manner? I do not know upon what principle we can grant a rule [for a new trial] in this case, unless we were to lay it down that the jury are not justified in giving more than the absolute pecuniary damage that the plaintiff may sustain.” The subject of punitive damages has been considered at this term in a learned opinion by Justice Hoke, delivered in Blow v. Joyner, 72 S. E. 319 a case much like this in some of its features.

But the defendant's counsel contended that there were no actual damages, and, at most, the plaintiffs could recover only nominal damages, and, this being so, it follows that no exemplary damages can be awarded. We do not assent to the premises or the conclusion. In answer to a similar contention, we find the following in 1 Sedgwick on Damages (8th Ed.) § 361: “If the plaintiff has suffered no actual loss, he cannot maintain an action merely to recover exemplary damages. A plaintiff has no right, the courts say, to maintain an action merely to inflict punishment; exemplary damages are in no case a right of the plaintiff, and cannot, therefore, become a cause of action. If, however, a right of action exists, though the loss is nominal, exemplary damages may be recovered in a proper case; for the plaintiff had a right to maintain his action apart from the privilege of recovering exemplary damages. So, in case of a malicious trespass on land, though the actual damage is nominal, exemplary damages may be recovered.” Wilson v. Vaughan (C. C.) 23 Fed. 229; Hefley v. Baker, 19 Kan. 9. The same rule was applied by Wilnot, C. J., in Tullidge v. Wade, 3 Wils. 18. It is erroneous, though, to assume that there was no actual damage done by the defendant, which gave the plaintiff a right to substantial compensation. He deliberately shot into the house, frightened and alarmed the plaintiffs, who were rightfully and peacefully its occupants; these and some other acts are properly subjects of fair compensation, and not merely of nominal damages. In Rogers v. Spence, 13 M. & W. 571, Denman, C. J., said: “The actions of trespass on real and personal property were an extension of that protection which the law throws around the person, and substantial damages may be recovered in respect of such rights, though no loss or diminution in value of property may have occurred." It is held to be the law that an individual, whose rights of person or property are thus violated, is generally entitled to recover damages for pecuniary loss, physical pain, if any, inconvenience, injury to feelings, and mental suffering, pain, vexation, anxiety, the sense of wrong, shame, or humiliation in the sufferer's breast, resulting from an act dictated by a spirit of willful injustice, or by a deliberate intention to vex, degrade, or insult; the latter being sometimes called solatium—solace—or recompense for the wounded feelings, as distinguished from special or pecuniary damages. 1 Sedgwick (8th Ed.) § 37 et seq. Inconvenience, annoyance, or discomfort may also be considered. This, of course, is physical, and must not be purely imaginative, and must be produced through the medium of the senses, not flow from mere delicacy of taste, or refined fancy, or abnormal sensibility. It must be in a tangible form, and assessable at a money value. 1 Sedgwick, § 42, and cases cited: Williams v. Railroad, supra; 4 Sutherland on Damages, §§ 1010 and 1241. "The motive with which a wrong is done in some cases affects the rule by which compensation is measured or losses estimated. Where there is fraud or other intentional wrong, compensatory damages are given with a more liberal hand by juries, and their verdicts in such cases are less closely scanned by courts than in cases where that element is absent. * * * But there is a more liberal allowance of damages where the tort is an aggressive one, and the entire damages, or some part of them, are not capable of measurement by some standard of value or definite rule." We again remind those who are disposed to take the law into their own hands and punish their enemies, or a supposed wrongdoer, that there is a sufficient legal remedy for every alleged grievance, and if they will not resort to the courts where it can be enforced, but prefer to act in defiance of constituted authority, the fault and the consequences will all be theirs, and they have no reason to complain if that same offended law, whose peaceful methods they have ignored, rebukes their defiance with heavy damages.

It is suggested in the evidence that W. O. Saunders had committed some gross impropriety by criticising a minister of the gospel in his newspaper. The specific offense is not pointed out, nor are we in any way informed as to the nature of his criticism. But this is all immaterial. Perhaps he may have greatly exceeded the limits of fair and proper comment, and that which he did should be reprobated. We cannot say how this is, nor need we, as the matter is not before us. There is one thing very certain, though, the defendant, and the multitude he was leading, had no right to resent what he had said by approaching him and his home in a hostile manner, with threats and menaces, and with a deadly weapon, to execute revenge upon him, however grievous his offense against them or against society, and not even if it was a criminal libel he had published. Government could not, upon any other principle, exist or continue as it was designed to be, when organized for the peace, safety, welfare, and happiness of the people. If the plaintiff W. O. Saunders has committed any wrong, if he has willfully criticised a minister, or committed any other offense against public decency or social order, we have not the slightest word to utter in extenuation of the outrage, but he should be punished by the law, and not by the mob.

We find no error in this record, and it must be so certified.

No error.

(156 N. C. 534)

NORTH CAROLINA CHRISTIAN CONFERENCE et al. v. ALLEN et al.
(Supreme Court of North Carolina. Nov. 9, 1911.)

1. RELIGIOUS SOCIETIES (§ 11*)—CONGREGATIONAL SYSTEM OF CHURCH GOVERNMENT—RIGHTS OF CHURCHES.

Under the congregational system of church government, each individual congregation is governed by a majority of its members, and, though such congregations combine into associations, the associations have no supervision or governmental authority over the individual congregations.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Religious Societies, Cent. Dig. §§ 80-86; Dec. Dig. § 11.*]

2. RELIGIOUS SOCIETIES (§ 9*)—ELECTION AND REMOVAL OF TRUSTEES—STATUTORY AUTHORITY.

Under Revisal 1905, §§ 2670, 2671, providing that any religious body may, from time to time, and at any time, appoint and remove trustees, a church governed by the congregational system of church government may remove its trustees at will, without notice or cause shown; and the discipline of the denomination, which provides for 10 days' notice and trial of offenses, is applicable to moral infractions of church discipline, and does not abridge the power to remove or appoint trustees at will; and a majority of the members of such church may remove trustees, acting with a minority against the majority, and the majority may elect new trustees, and the majority of the members and the trustees may control the church property as against the minority and the trustees so removed.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Religious Societies, Cent. Dig. §§ 47-74; Dec. Dig. § 9.*]

Allen, J., dissenting.

Appeal from Superior Court, Granville County; Daniels, Judge.

Action by the North Carolina Christian Conference and others against John Allen and others. From a judgment for plaintiffs, defendants appeal. Reversed.

Graham & Devin, for appellants. B. S. Royster, T. T. Hicks, and A. A. Hicks, for appellees.

OLARK, C. J. This was an action by the North Carolina Christian Conference and several members of the Rock Spring Christian Church, Colored, for an injunction against Rev. John Allen, Thomas Grissom, John Meadows, Ben Smith, and James Bailey from interfering with the plaintiffs in their occupation and control of said Rock Spring Christian Church building and property and their conduct of public worship in said building.

It appears by the evidence, both for the plaintiffs and defendants, that said Rock Spring Christian Church, and it is so decreed by the judge, is of the Christian faith, whose government is congregational, and that the North Carolina Conference of said church is a merely voluntary association, exercising no control over the church property or the congregations; and hence the plaintiff the North Carolina Christian Conference has no right or interest in the church property, and is not a proper party to this action.

[1] In Simmons v. Allison, 118 N. C. 770, 24 S. E. 716, we had occasion to call attention to the distinction between those churches whose organization is connectional, such as the Protestant Episcopal, the various Methodist churches, the Presbyterian, the Roman Catholic, and others, which are governed by large bodies, such as diocese, conferences, and synods, and the like, in which the individual congregations bear the same relation to the governing body as counties bear to the state, and, on the other hand, the congregational system, which is in use among the Baptists, the Congregational, and the Christian, and other denominations. In these latter, the individual congregation is each an independent republic, governed by the majority of its members, and subject to control or supervision by no higher authority. To the latter order, the Rock Spring Christian Church belonged. The churches of the congregational system often combine into associations, conferences, and general conventions. But, unlike such organizations under the connectional system, these bodies, under the congregational system, are purely voluntary associations, for the purpose of joining their efforts for missions and similar work, but having no supervision, control, or governmental authority of any kind whatsoever over the individual congregations, which are absolutely independent of each other.

To the latter system, the Rock Springs Christian Church, Colored, belonged. It appeared in evidence that this congregation had re-elected the Reverend John Allen their pastor in the fall of 1909. He had already served as such for eight years. Soon afterwards, on Sunday, December 18, 1909, Rev. J. A. Alexander appeared at the church, claiming that he was sent by the North Carolina Christian Conference. At that time there were three trustees—Arch Preddy, Alex.

Brooks, and Thomas Grissom. The first two named, being a majority of the trustees sided with Rev. J. A. Alexander, and, they claiming control of the building, said Alexander held services therein. Rev. John Allen and the majority of the congregation objected, but Brooks and Preddy claimed to be the legal custodians of the property. The majority of the congregation, with the Reverend John Allen, with commendable forbearance, refrained from any interference. It appears from the evidence of the plaintiff that the objecting membership, headed by the Reverend John Allen were very largely in the majority. It appears in the evidence that from 7 to 12 members, including the 2 trustees, were with Alexander, and that 36 members sided with Rev. John Allen. This small minority, after holding services, were dismissed, whereupon Pastor Allen and his 36 members took possession and held services, in spite of the prohibition of Alex. Brooks and Arch Preddy. It was the regular day for church conference. The minutes show that the meeting then regularly met and re-elected John Allen pastor by 86 votes; that resolutions were also passed, removing Alex. Brooks as trustee for "forbidding the members to meet in the church," and A. R. Preddy for "forcing his way into the church and removing the lock," and thereupon the defendants John Meadows and James Bailey, named herein as defendants, were elected trustees in their place. The contest therefore turns upon the validity of the election of said trustees at a regular church meeting and the removal of the other two, for Thos. Grissom, the other trustee, had sided with the majority and the Reverend John Allen.

[2] Revisal 1905, 2670, provides that any religious body "may from time to time and at any time, appoint in such manner as such body, society, or congregation deem proper, a suitable number of persons as trustees." And Revisal 1905, 2671, provides: "The body appointing shall remove such trustees or any of them." In Thornton v. Harris, 140 N. C. 499, 53 S. E. 342, it was held under those sections any church has a right "to remove its trustees at will." The trustees of a church have no property interest as against the governing body of the church. They are merely agents, or, as it is expressed in one of our opinions, "A church trustee is a mere locum tenens." Speaking algebraically, church trustees are merely x, y, and z. For legal purposes, they represent the church as to the world. But, as to the cestui que trustant, they can be appointed or removed at will. The statute requires no notice or cause to be shown. The discipline of the Christian denomination, with which the Rock Springs Church is affiliated, provides for 10 days' notice and trial of "offenses." But this applies to moral delinquencies or infractions of church discipline —in short, to trials for offenses. It could not abridge, and does not even refer to, the power given by the statutes to remove or appoint trustees at will.

The Rock Springs Church, under the congregational policy, is an independent entity, recognizing no superior in its government. Under the policy of the denomination to which it belongs, the majority of the members control its government and management. The minutes of the church show that they had cause to remove Preddy and Brooks as trustees, who had taken possession of the church, because, being a majority of the trustees, they had held the building for hours for a small minority, and in behalf of a minister not elected by the congregation, against the majority of the members and regular elected pastor. Even if the congregation had not possessed the right to remove Brooks and Preddy at will, still there was no restriction in the statute, or in the church discipline, restricting the number of trustees, and the election of the two new trustees was certainly valid. These two, with Thomas Grissom, who had remained loyal to the majority, constituted a majority of the trustees, and it was error to enjoin them from controlling the property and conducting public worship.

The minutes of the church show that after the 36 members, together with their duly chosen pastor, John Allen, obtained possession of the church, upon its vacation by Rev. Alexander and the small minority, services were regularly conducted. Such services appear to have been opened by singing, not inappropriately, the hymn, "When I can read my title clear." The text discussed by the pastor, Rev. John Allen, is given as Jeremiah, ii, 24. The nature of the sermon preached on that text and its application to the occasion is not so clear. The defendants have a majority of the trustees (three out of five), even if Preddy and Brooks were not properly removed. And they have all the trustees, if they were legally removed, as we think is the case under our statute, and the judgment below must be reversed.

ALLEN, J., dissents.

(157 N. C. 21)

CARMICHAEL v. BELL TELEPHONE CO.
(Supreme Court of North Carolina. Nov. 15, 1911.)

1. DAMAGES (§§ 48, 87*)—"COMPENSATORY DAMAGES"—"PUNITIVE DAMAGES."

"Compensatory damages" are not necessarily confined to actual pecuniary loss in money or time, but embrace injury to feelings and mental anguish following as a natural and proximate result of the wrong complained of; while "punitive damages" are awarded in addition to compensation, as a punishment to the wrongdoer, and as a warning to others, and they are allowed only where there are some features of aggravation, as where the wrong is done willfully and maliciously.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Damages, Cent. Dig. §§ 100-103, 188-192; Dec. Dig. §§ 48, 87.*

For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, vol. 2, pp. 1357-1358; vol. 7, pp. 5851, 5852; vol. 8, p. 7775.]

2. DAMAGES (§ 23*)—BREACH OF CONTRACT—EXTENT OF RECOVERY.

A recovery for breach of contract is confined to such damages as were in the reasonable contemplation of the parties at the time the contract was made, and which are susceptible of ascertainment with a reasonable degree of certainty, and is ordinarily limited to pecuniary recompense for the loss sustained by the injured party, except where an agreement clearly has reference to a different standard, in which case the damages must be awarded according to such standard.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Damages, Cent. Dig. §§ 58, 62; Dec. Dig. § 23.*]

3. TELEGRAPHS AND TELEPHONES (§ 67*)—WRONGFUL REMOVAL OF TELEPHONE SERVICE—LIABILITY.

Where a telephone company operating under a public franchise breaches its duty to render service it has undertaken to perform, a customer having a contractual relation with it, and suffering special injury by reason of such breach, may sue in tort and recover compensation for the annoyance and inconvenience and humiliation fairly attributable to the wrong done.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Telegraphs and Telephones, Dec. Dig. § 67.*]

4. TELEGRAPHS AND TELEPHONES (§ 67*)—WRONGFUL REMOVAL OF TELEPHONE SERVICE—LIABILITY.

Where a telephone company operating under a public franchise disconnected the telephone of a customer, who refused to pay an unjust demand, and who, to obtain a restoration of the telephone service, paid the sum demanded, and it appeared that the telephone service was for household purposes, the customer could for the wrong recover the damages resulting from the annoyance and inconvenience, together with the special damages resulting from the fact that the customer's father-in-law was at the time in a hospital, dangerously sick; the company, at the time of the discontinuance of the service, having notice of that fact.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Telegraphs and Telephones, Dec. Dig. § 67.*]

5. TELEGRAPHS AND TELEPHONES (§ 69*)—DISCONTINUANCE OF TELEPHONE SERVICE—PUNITIVE DAMAGES.

Where a telephone company wrongfully disconnected the telephone of a customer, who refused to pay an unlawful demand, the jury, in determining the award of punitive damages, must consider the facts of the case in determining whether the act of the company was done maliciously, in which case only could they award punitive damages.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Telegraphs and Telephones, Dec. Dig. § 69.*]

Appeal from Superior Court, New Hanover County; Peebles, Judge.

Action by John Carmichael against the Bell Telephone Company. From a judgment granting insufficient relief, plaintiff appeals. Reversed, and new trial granted.

Civil action to recover damages for wrongfully removing a telephone from plaintiff's premises, tried before his honor, R. B. Peebles, judge, and a jury, at April term, 1911, of the superior court of New Hanover county. There was evidence tending to show: That the telephone charges due from plaintiff were at the rate of $4.50 per quarter, payable in advance, beginning January 1st. That plaintiff, on 3d of June, 1908, paid defendant the $4.50 for the quarter beginning April 1st, and took a receipt for same. That in the latter part of June plaintiff was notified there was a balance against him of $3 for said quarter, and, unless same was paid, the telephone would be removed. Plaintiff protested, and informed the agents of defendant company that he had paid the dues, and could produce a receipt. Plaintiff failed to find the receipt readily, as he had given it to his wife, who was temporarily from home in daily attendance on her father, who had been operated on, and was in the hospital, and thereupon, in afternoon of June 27, 1908, defendant company, while plaintiff was absent, disconnected the phone, and deprived plaintiff and his family of its use from Saturday night until Monday morning, June 29th. That on Monday morning, June 29th, plaintiff went to the offices of the company, paid the $3 claimed under protest, and the service was thereupon restored. That in July following the plaintiff found the receipt for the $4.50, the entire price for the quarter, and on failure to adjust matters action was instituted. On the question of damages, plaintiff testified, among other things, that the telephone was used for the purpose of calling up physicians, hospitals, druggists, doing the marketing, grocery business, and other general household uses, and proposed further to show that at this particular time, plaintiff suffered special inconvenience and annoyance by reason of the fact that his father-in-law had been operated on, and was then at the hospital in a dangerous condition, and plaintiff was unable to communicate with the hospital concerning him, or with his family, which was then at the beach some distance away. This, with evidence from which knowledge of these special conditions on the part of the company might be inferred, as proposed evidence, was excluded, and plaintiff excepted. There was testimony on the part of defendant to the effect that plaintiff was not prompt in payment of his telephone dues, and that on two or three occasions before this it had been necessary to disconnect his telephone for nonpayment of dues. That while plaintiff produced a receipt for the $4.50, the dues for the quarter ending June 30, 1908, as a matter of fact, he had only paid $1.50, and it was so reported to the company by the collecting agent. That the receipt for $4.50 was signed by mistake to a printed form, in which the amount was so stated; the agent failing to change this to $1.50, the amount actually paid, and that the books of the company showed the amount due to be

$3, and that in fact such amount was due for said quarter. That defendant had no malicious or improper motive in disconnecting the telephone, or in collecting the $3, but acted in the honest belief it was enforcing its rights in the premises.

His honor ruled that plaintiff could not in any event recover damages in excess of $3, the amount of overcharge as claimed by plaintiff, and under such ruling the following verdict was rendered:

"(1) Did the defendant unlawfully cut out plaintiff's telephone, as alleged in the complaint? Answer: Yes.

"(2) If so, what damage is plaintiff entitled to recover therefor? Answer: Three dollars, and interest to date from June 29, 1908."

Judgment on the verdict for $3, with interest, and plaintiff excepted and appealed, assigning errors.

Rountree & Carr, for appellant. H. E. Palmer, B. J. Clay, and J. D. Bellamy, for appellee.

HOKE, J. (after stating the facts as above). [1] An impression not infrequently exists, and is sometimes acted on, that in the larger number of ordinary causes compensatory damages should be confined to actual pecuniary loss, and that any recovery above actual loss in money or time, having definite pecuniary value, partakes of the nature of punitive damages. Speaking to this question in a concurring opinion in Ammons v. Railroad, 140 N. C. 199, 52 S. E. 733, it was said: "The court below and the parties litigant seem to have considered that the seventh issue on actual damages was confined to pecuniary loss, and that any recovery over and above this must be had, if at all, on the eighth issue, above set out. But this is not at all true. 'Actual,' in the sense of compensatory damages, is not restricted necessarily to the actual loss in time or money. The claimant may be confined to this, if the jury so determine; but more than this is contained in the term, and more than this is covered by the issue. As said by Clark, C. J., in Osborn v. Leach, 135 N. C. 628, 47 S. E. 811, 66 L. R. A. 648: 'Where the facts and nature of the action so warrant, actual damages include pecuniary loss, physical pain, and mental suffering,' etc. And again: 'Compensatory damages include all other damages than punitive, thus embracing not only special damage as direct pecuniary loss, but injury to feelings, mental anguish,' etc.—citing 18 Am. & Eng. Enc. (2d Ed.) 1082; Hale on Damages, pp. 99, 106. And this last author says: 'It may be stated as a general rule, in actions of tort, that whenever a wrong is committed which will support an action to recover some damages compensation for mental suffering may also be recovered, if such suffering follows as a natural and proximate result.' And so here, where a passenger is wrongfully ejected from a railroad train, the demand may be considered as one in tort, and, on an issue as to actual or compensatory damages, he may recover what the jury may decide to be a fair and just compensation for the injury, including his actual loss in time or money, physical inconvenience and mental suffering, or humiliation, endured, and which could be considered as a reasonable and probable result of the wrong done. McNeill v. Railroad, 135 N. C. 683, 47 S. E. 765, 67 L. R. A. 227; Head v. Railroad, 79 Ga. 358, 7 S. E. 217, 11 Am. St. Rep. 434; Hale on Damages, supra, § 261. As said by Beckley, J., in Head's Case: 'Wounding a man's feelings is as much actual damages as breaking his limb. The difference is that one is internal and the other external; one mental, the other physical. At common law, compensatory damages include, upon principle, and, I think, upon authority, salve for wounded feelings, and our Code had no purpose to deny such damages where the common law allowed them.' And on the subject of punitive damages it was further said: 'Exemplary or punitive damages are not given with a view to compensation, but are under certain circumstances awarded in addition to compensation, as a punishment to defendant, and as a warning to other wrongdoers. They are not allowed as a matter of course, but only where there are some features of aggravation, as when the wrong is done willfully and maliciously, or under circumstances of rudeness or oppression, or in a manner which evinces a reckless and wanton disregard of plaintiff's rights.' In the view of compensatory damages, suggested with approval in this citation, there was error in the ruling which limited plaintiff's recovery in any aspect of the case to the $3, the amount of money wrongfully collected by defendant, whether the action should be considered as one for a breach of contract or for a tort.

[2] It is true that recovery for breach of contract is confined to such damages as were in the reasonable contemplation of the parties at the time same was made, and which are susceptible of ascertainment with a reasonable degree of certainty, and that ordinarily this damage is limited to pecuniary recompense for the loss sustained by the injured party; but this will be found to have its origin and basis in the fact that the vast majority of contracts concern themselves with pecuniary values, and have the pecuniary standard for adjustment alone in contemplation; but, where an agreement clearly has reference to a different standard, damages in case of breach must be awarded according to the standard which the parties have adopted. This is the principle upon which recoveries for mental anguish in a certain class of telegraph cases, and when treated simply as actions for breach of contract, are properly made to rest, as shown in the well-considered opinion by our present Chief Justice, in Young v. Telegraph Co., 107 N. C. 370, 11 S. E. 1044, 9 L. R. A. 669, 22 Am. St. Rep. 883, a decision since followed and applied by the court in numerous cases; and so in contracts for telephone service for household purposes pecuniary values are not ordinarily in contemplation, and on breach, even when the action is simply for breach of contract, a different standard of adjustment must necessarily or may properly be adopted, to wit, a fair compensation for the loss and for the inconvenience and annoyance in being wrongfully deprived of the service stipulated for. Telephone v. Hobart, 89 Miss. 252, 42 South. 349. Hale on Damages, p. 102.

[3] On the allegations of the complaint, however, and the facts in evidence, the plaintiff is not confined to a recovery for breach of contract. It appears that defendant is a public service corporation, operating under a public franchise, and for breach of duty in rendering the service it has undertaken to perform, one having contract relations with such company, and suffering special injury by reason of such breach, is entitled to sue in tort, and, in case of recovery, have his damages admeasured as in that character of action. This was held in Peanut Co. v. Railroad, 155 N. C. 148, 71 S. E. 71, citing several other decisions to like effect, and see in that case more especially the concurring opinion of Associate Justice Allen, as to the obligation of diligence imposed by the law upon corporations of this kind, and the character of action available in case of breach causing special damages to persons having contract relations with such companies. Plaintiff, then, having a right to sue in tort, if his cause of action is established, is entitled to recover a compensation for the annoyance and inconvenience and humiliation fairly attributable to the wrong done, and under facts as they existed at the time the same was committed. Peanut Co. v. Railroad, supra.

[4] And in this view the annoyance and inconvenience naturally arising from the fact that plaintiff's father-in-law was at the time in the hospital, and supposed to be in a dangerous condition, if this circumstance was known to the company or its managing officers—not, of course, the suffering and anxiety caused by the father-in-law's placing and condition, but the annoyance and anxiety occasioned by the loss of the telephone service at such time—in considering any damages imputable to this source, the obligation on plaintiff to do what he could reasonably do to lessen his anxiety is also a proper subject for consideration. Bowen v. King, 146 N. C. 385, 59 S. E. 1044; Railroad v. Hardware Co., 143 N. C. 54, 55 S. E. 422.

[5] On the question of punitive or exemplary damages, recurring again to the doctrine as stated in the Ammons Case, supra if the jury should find that the wrong complained of was committed, and that the same was done maliciously, or under such circumstance of willfulness on part of defendant as to show a wanton or reckless disregard of plaintiff's rights, they may, in addition to compensatory damages, award such additional damages by way of punishment as they may deem right and proper. In this aspect of the matter, the principles and authorities applicable are more fully discussed and referred to in the case of Williams v. Railroad, 144 N. C. 502, 57 S. E. 216, 12 L. R. A. (N. S.) 191.

On this question of allowing exemplary damages, as well as the amount, in case the jury should determine to award the same, the fact that plaintiff informed defendant of the payment of the amount due, and that he had a receipt showing this, and that defendant still insisted there was no such payment, and further the fact that plaintiff had several times before made default in payment of his dues, and that this collecting agent had informed the managing officers of the company there was a balance still due, and that the books of the company showed this to be correct, are circumstances relevant to the inquiry.

For the error indicated, plaintiff is entitled to a new trial of this cause, and it is so ordered.

New trial.

DE BRUHL v. HOOD.

(Supreme Court of North Carolina. Nov. 9, 1911.)

Upon Rehearing.

COSTS (§ 42*)—EFFECT OF TENDER.

In a suit to enjoin foreclosure, where the mortgagor alleged that only a certain amount was due and made a tender of it, which was refused by the mortgagee, who claimed a much larger sum, a verdict for an amount less than the sum tendered entitled the mortgagor to his costs.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Costs, Cent. Dig. §§ 137-164; Dec. Dig. § 42.*]

On motion for rehearing, motion denied. For former opinion, see 72 S. E. 83.

PER CURIAM. This is a motion to reconsider this case, as decided at this term, for the purpose of having the plaintiff taxed with the costs of the lower court, instead of the defendant, who was taxed with the costs by that court. It is based upon the ground that this court held that the tender of payment had not been kept good, and as the court below held that "a tender had been made and the verdict of the jury was far less than the amount of the tender," and costs were adjudged against the defendant, there should be a reversal as to costs. We do not think so. The motion is based on a misapprehension as to the scope of our decision. The dispute was as to the true amount due upon the mortgage; the suit having been brought by the mortgagor, who is plaintiff herein, to enjoin a sale under the powers of sale contained in the mortgages. Plaintiff erroneously supposed the amount was $273.68 and tendered that sum, which defendant, the mortgagor, refused to accept, contending that the amount due was $1,180.96. An issue was made up upon those contentions and submitted to the jury, and they found upon sufficient evidence that it was neither of the amounts as claimed by the parties, but $203, and judgment for the defendant was entered for that amount. The defendant lost upon the issue, and was therefore properly taxed with the costs. The validity of the tender had nothing to do with the judgment for costs against the defendant. That was based entirely upon the verdict by which he failed to recover the amount demanded, but much less than plaintiff had tendered. We decided that the refusal to accept the money, when tendered by the plaintiff, left the matter open as to the correct amount due upon the debt.

This will clearly appear by this extract taken from the opinion of this court: "We see from this case that, even when the tender was held to be good and continuing, by reason of what was said to be equivalent to actual payment into court, the court had the right to find the correct amount and enter judgment for it, and not for the larger amount which was tendered; and, a fortiori, this can be done when the tender was made out of court, and under the circumstances in this case." De Bruhl v. Hood, 72 S. E. 83. The defendant was really cast in the suit, and was therefore properly adjudged to pay the costs.

Motion denied.

(156 N. C. 573)

DAVIDSON v. SOUTHERN RY. CO.

(Supreme Court of North Carolina. Nov. 15, 1911.)

1. RAILROADS (§ 440*)—INJURIES TO ANIMALS AT CROSSING—ACTIONS—ISSUES—LAST CLEAR CHANCE.

The evidence for plaintiff in an action for injuries to his team at a railroad crossing tended to prove that, as his driver approached the tracks, the watchman signaled him to cross, and that, as he was crossing, the yardmaster hit the mules and tried to stop them, and that in consequence they were injured by a train. Defendant's evidence tended to prove that the watchman signaled the driver to stop before he started to cross the tracks, that he did not heed the signal, and that, when the yardmaster attempted to stop and turn the mules, the driver whipped them up, in consequence of which they were struck by a train. Held, that the issue as to last clear chance is not raised.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Railroads, Cent. Dig. §§ 1570-1574; Dec. Dig. § 440.*]

2. APPEAL AND ERROR (§ 662*)—RECORD—CONCLUSIVENESS.

The Supreme Court is bound by the record, even though it seems improbable that it can be true.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Appeal and Error, Cent. Dig. §§ 2850-2852; Dec. Dig. § 662.*]

3. APPEAL AND ERROR (§ 1064*)—REVIEW—HARMLESS ERROR—INSTRUCTIONS INVADING PROVINCE OF JURY.

In an action against a railroad for injuries to plaintiff's team at a crossing, where the evidence was conflicting both as to negligence and contributory negligence, a charge substantially to the effect that, if it was not found that plaintiff's driver was guilty of negligence, the issue as to whether the injury was caused by the contributory negligence of the plaintiff's driver should be answered affirmatively, is manifest error, entitling plaintiff to a new trial.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Appeal and Error, Cent. Dig. §§ 4219, 4221-4224; Dec. Dig. § 1064.*]

Appeal from Superior Court, Iredell County; Lyon, Judge.

Action by J. A. Davidson against the Southern Railway Company. Judgment for defendant, and plaintiff appeals. New trial.

These issues were submitted without objection:

"(1) Was plaintiff's mules and wagon injured by the negligence of the defendant, as alleged in the complaint? Answer: Yes.

"(2) Was the mules and wagon injured by the contributory negligence of the plaintiff's driver, as alleged in the answer? Answer: Yes.

"(3) What damage, if any, is the plaintiff entitled to recover? Answer: ———."

H. P. Grier and Z. V. Long, for appellant. L. C. Caldwell, for appellee.

BROWN, J. [1] The evidence for plaintiff tends to prove that his driver, Arthur Johnson, approached defendant's tracks at Statesville with a view to crossing; that the watchman signaled him to cross, and, as he was driving across, the yardmaster hit the mules in the face, and tried to stop them; and that in consequence they were injured by a train. Plaintiff contends that, if the yardmaster had not interfered, his team would have safely crossed. The defendant's evidence tends to prove that the watchman signaled the driver to stop before he started across the tracks; that he did not heed the signal; that, when the yardmaster attempted to stop and turn the mules, the driver whipped them up, in consequence of which the approaching train ran into them.

It is contended that his honor should have submitted an issue as to the last clear chance. Upon the evidence in this case and the contentions of the parties we do not think the issue is raised. If it was, however, the plaintiff failed to tender the issue and except to those submitted.

The plaintiff excepted to the charge of the court upon the second issue, which is as follows: "Now, the defendant contends that, if you should find that the defendant was negligent, if you should find that it signaled, or invited the plaintiff's driver, Johnson, to come on with the wagon and team, that still plaintiff's servant was guilty of contributory negligence. When he was on the main track, when they tried to stop him, the evidence you will remember tends to show that the plaintiff Johnson was on the middle track, the main track, that Garrison jumped off the car and ran and hit the mules in the face with his hat, caught hold of one of them, and the flagman ran around with his flag trying to flag them down. The evidence tends to show that the driver of plaintiff's team put whip to them and forced them on, if you find that to be a fact, notwithstanding the negligence of the defendant, if you find that the defendant was negligent, if you further find that notwithstanding the defendant's negligence, the plaintiff could have avoided the injury by assisting the flagman and Garrison to stop the mules and not whip them, and if you find that his putting whip to the mules and not trying to stop is the proximate cause, the burden being on the defendant to show by the greater weight of the evidence, it would be your duty to answer the second issue 'Yes.' If you do not so find that it was the negligence on the part of Johnson, the driver, why you would answer the second issue 'Yes.'"

[2, 3] It may be that his honor inadvertently used the word "Yes" at close of the above paragraph, and intended to use the word "No." But we are bound by the record. If the evidence offered by the defendant is believed, the driver, Johnson, was guilty of very gross negligence which directly caused the injury, and would bar a recovery, but this evidence was controverted by plaintiff. The instruction of the court as appearing in the record was tantamount to directing a verdict. He charged substantially: "If you do not find that Johnson was guilty of negligence, you will answer second issue, 'Yes.'" This is manifest error, and entitles plaintiff to another trial. We doubt not that the record is erroneous, or else that it was a lapsus linguae upon the part of the careful and painstaking judge, but it appears so in the record, and we are bound by it. It is our duty to state that the case on appeal was agreed to by counsel and not submitted to the judge.

New trial.

*For other cases see same topic and section NUMBER in Dec. Dig. & Am. Dig. Key No. Series & Rep'r indexes

156 N. C. 494)

HORNER v. OXFORD WATER & ELECTRIC CO.

(Supreme Court of North Carolina. Nov. 9, 1911.)

1. COSTS (§ 74*)—POWER OF AWARD—AFTER AFFIRMANCE ON APPEAL.

Where the court on rendering judgment for defendant makes no allowance to a referee and commissioner, it can adjust and apportion such costs on motion therefor after an affirmance by the Supreme Court has been certified down.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Costs, Dec. Dig. § 74.*]

2. APPEAL AND ERROR (§ 119*)—ALLOWANCE OF COSTS—REVIEW.

A ruling of the court below on a motion to allow and apportion costs founded upon a lack of power is reviewable.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Appeal and Error, Cent. Dig. §§ 823-839; Dec. Dig. § 119.*]

3. COSTS (§ 12*)—DISCRETION OF COURT—FEES OF REFEREES AND COMMISSIONERS.

Under Revisal 1905, § 1268, fees of referees and commissioners to take depositions may be taxed against either party or apportioned among the parties, in the discretion of the superior court.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Costs, Dec. Dig. § 12.*]

Appeal from Superior Court, Granville County; Daniels, Judge.

Action by J. C. Horner against the Oxford Water & Electric Company. Motion to divide the fees of a referee and commissioner between plaintiff and defendant denied, and plaintiff appeals. Reversed.

Motion to divide the fees of referee and commissioner between plaintiff and defendant under Revisal, § 1268. The court denied the motion, and plaintiff appealed.

Graham & Devin and B. S. Royster, for appellant. John W. Hinsdale, for appellee.

BROWN, J. At August term, 1910, of the superior court of Granville county, Judge Lyon rendered judgment against the plaintiff, dissolving the restraining order theretofore issued, and ordered "that the defendants do recover against the plaintiff and the surety on his prosecution bond the costs of this action." From said judgment plaintiff appealed to Supreme Court, which affirmed the judgment. 153 N. C. 535, 69 S. E. 607, 138 Am. St. Rep. 681. Upon the opinion being certified down, the defendant, at May term, 1911, moved for judgment in accordance with said opinion. Plaintiff moved that the allowance to the referee and stenographer and commissioner to take depositions be paid equally by plaintiff and defendant. The court, "being of opinion that he is concluded by the judgment rendered at a former term, adjudging that the defendant recover of plaintiff the payment by defendant of any part of the costs, adjudged that the defendant above named do recover against plaintiff above named the costs of this action, including an allowance to the referee of $375, $75 of which shall be paid to his stenographer as a part of the costs of the referee, and costs of taking depositions; Francis J. McLaughlin, commissioner, $38.75, and Harry Winfield, commissioner, $20. It is ordered that the clerk shall tax the said amounts in the costs in this action." From this ruling the plaintiff appealed.

[1] The court made no allowance to referee and commissioner at August term, 1910, when the judgment was rendered which this court affirmed, but those fees were fixed and allowed by Judge Daniels at May term, 1911. His honor bases his refusal to apportion them upon a supposed lack of power, thinking he was precluded by the former judgment.

[2] In that he was in error, and, as he founds his ruling upon a lack of power, it is reviewable. State v. Fuller, 114 N. C. 894, 19 S. E. 797; Martin v. Bank, 131 N. C. 123, 42 S. E. 558. We think he had as much right to apportion or divide the fees, if he saw fit to do so, as he had to fix them at all.

[3] Under Revisal 1905, § 1268, fees of referees and commissioners to take depositions may be taxed against either party or apportioned among the parties in the discretion of the superior court. Cobb v. Rhea, 137 N. C. 298, 49 S. E. 161; Field v. Wheeler, 120 N. C. 269, 26 S. E. 812. As the judge who tried the cause and rendered judgment failed to pass on the matter of referees' fees and commissions and as the judgment then rendered contains no reference to them, it was entirely within the power of the superior court at a subsequent term to adjust them.

The superior court will hear and pass on the motion and tax the fees as a whole against plaintiff, or apportion them in its sound discretion between plaintiff and defendant.

Reversed.

(157 N. C. 10)

JEFFORDS et al. v. ALBEMARLE WATERWORKS.

(Supreme Court of North Carolina. Nov. 15, 1911.)

1. EVIDENCE (§ 474½*)—OPINION EVIDENCE—CONDITION OF MACHINE.

Testimony in an action on a contract for boring an artesian well that witness used the best and latest all-round equipped machine for drilling water wells, that it was equipped with all necessary tools for drilling and straightening crooks in water wells, and that he could have gone on with the machine to any desired depth within 800 feet, was competent, though the witness had not qualified as an expert, since the testimony of a witness as to a physical fact peculiarly within his knowledge is not expert evidence.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Evidence, Cent. Dig. §§ 2220-2233; Dec. Dig. § 474½.*]

2. CONTRACTS (§ 346*) — ACTION — ISSUES — PROOF AND VARIANCE.

In an action to recover the contract price for boring an artesian well, evidence of a second contract, which was not pleaded, was properly excluded.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Contracts, Cent. Dig. §§ 1718-1753; Dec. Dig. § 346.*]

3. DEPOSITIONS (§ 12*)—ADMISSION IN EVIDENCE—DEPONENT OUT OF STATE.

Under the express provisions of Revisal 1905, § 1645, subds. 2, 9, a deposition of a witness not present at the trial who is a resident of another state, or is more than 75 miles from the place where the court is sitting, is admissible.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Depositions, Cent. Dig. § 27; Dec. Dig. § 12.*]

4. EVIDENCE (§ 441*)—PAROL EVIDENCE—ADMISSIBILITY.

Conversations preceding the execution of a written contract are not admissible, in the absence of fraud or misrepresentation, to vary the contract.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Evidence, Cent. Dig. §§ 2030-2047; Dec. Dig. § 441.*]

5. EVIDENCE (§ 129*)—ADMISSIBILITY—OTHER TRANSACTIONS.

In an action on a contract for the boring of an artesian well, the question as to the insufficiency of a prior machine and its equipment is irrelevant, since it would throw no light upon the inquiry of the court.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Evidence, Cent. Dig. §§ 388-393, 395-398; Dec. Dig. § 129.*]

6. DEPOSITIONS (§ 83*)—QUASHING—GROUNDS.

A deposition can be quashed only for irregularities in the taking or for the incompetency of the witness, and not upon the ground that some of the answers were incompetent or irrelevant, as such questions and answers should be excepted to.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Depositions, Cent. Dig. §§ 219-226; Dec. Dig. § 83.*]

7. DEPOSITIONS (§ 40*)—COMMISSION AND NOTICE—NAME OF WITNESS.

Where the notice to take a deposition gives the name of the witness and the address of the commissioner before whom it is to be taken, so that defendant knew that such witness was to be examined, the cause in which, the place where, and the commissioner before whom he was to be examined, the commission was sufficient, though the name of the witness was not stated in the commission.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Depositions, Cent. Dig. § 61; Dec. Dig. § 40.*]

8. REFERENCE (§ 101*) — RECOMMITTAL — DISCRETION OF COURT.

The refusal of the court to which a referee's report is returned to recommit the report is a matter which rests in the court's discretion.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Reference, Cent. Dig. §§ 169-180; Dec. Dig. § 101.*]

9. APPEAL AND ERROR (§ 1022*)—FINDINGS OF REFERENCE—REPORT—CONCLUSIVENESS.

Exceptions to the findings of facts by a referee on the ground that they are contrary to the weight of the evidence are addressed solely to the trial judge, and not reviewable on appeal.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Appeal and Error, Cent. Dig. §§ 4015-4018; Dec. Dig. § 1022.*]

Appeal from Superior Court, Stanly County, Lyon, Judge.

Action by George Jeffords and others against the Albemarle Waterworks. Judgment for plaintiffs, and defendant appeals Affirmed.

J. R. Price and T. F. Kluttz, for appellant. Jerome & Price and R. L. Smith, for appellees.

CLARK, C. J. This is an action to recover the contract price for boring an artesian well. The plaintiffs alleged that they were wrongfully prevented by the defendants from completing the contract; but the defendants denied this, and alleged that the failure of the plaintiffs to complete the contract was caused by their failure or refusal to use the necessary machinery for straightening crooked places in the well, caused by the drill being deflected by hard rock.

[1] The case was referred to a referee, who adjudged the plaintiffs entitled to recover the contract price for the work actually done up to the time they were stopped by the defendants. The exceptions before us are to the judge's overruling the exceptions by the defendants to the referee's report. Exceptions 1, 2, and 3 are to the witness stating in reply to questions asked that the machine was "the best and latest all-round equipped machine for drilling water wells; that it was equipped with all necessary tools for drilling and straightening crooks in water wells; and that he could have gone on any desired depth within 800 feet with that machine." The objection is on the ground that the witness had not qualified as an expert, but we do not think that "the testimony of a witness concerning a physical fact peculiarly within his knowledge" is expert evidence. Britt v. Railroad, 148 N. C. 40, 61 S. E. 601, and cases there cited.

[2] The evidence as to the second contract was properly ruled out, as there was no plea of a second contract.

[3] The objection to the deposition of George Jeffords because he was a party to the action, and was in this state when the action was begun cannot be sustained, for the referee finds as a fact that the witness was a resident of Pennsylvania when the deposition was taken. Revisal 1905, § 1645 (2). The deposition is competent, if the witness is out of the state at the time of the trial, and is more than 75 miles from the place where the court is sitting. Revisal 1905, § 1645(9); Barnhardt v. Smith, 86 N. C. 473.

[4] The contract being in writing and no allegation of fraud or misrepresentation, it was not error to exclude conversations preceding the execution of the contract. Bowser v. Tarpy, 72 S. E. 74, at this term.

[5] The question as to the insufficiency of a prior machine and its equipment was irrelevant, and could throw no light upon the inquiry before the court. It was properly excluded.

[6] Exceptions 8 and 9 for refusal of motion to quash because of the irrelevancy or incompetency of some of the testimony cannot be sustained. A deposition can be quashed only for irregularities in the taking or for the incompetency of the witness, and not upon the ground that some of the answers were incompetent or irrelevant. Such questions and answers should be excepted to.

[7] Exception 10 is that the name of the witness was not given in the commission to take the deposition. But the notice to take the deposition gave the name of the witness and the address of the commissioner before whom it was to be taken. The defendant knew that this witness was to be examined, the cause in which, the place where, and the commissioner before whom, he was to be examined. The statute does not require the name of the witness to be stated in the commission. The names of other witnesses were, however, given in the commission. It does not appear that the defendant was prejudiced, for the notice to take the deposition did name this witness. In McDougal v. Smith, 33 N. C. 576, the notice was to take the deposition "of A., B., and C. et al.," and no deposition of A., B. or C. was taken, and it was held that this was not ground for exception to the depositions of the other witnesses which were taken.

[8] The refusal of the judge to recommit the report to the referee was a matter which rested in his discretion.

[9] The exceptions to the findings of fact by the referee are that they are "contrary to the weight of the evidence." That was a matter addressed solely to the trial judge, and cannot be considered here. Lewis v. Covington, 130 N. C. 541, 41 S. E. 677. When, as here, the referee's findings of fact are affirmed by the judge, his action is conclusive if there is any evidence to support such findings. Brown v. Railroad, 154 N. C. 300, 70 S. E. 625; Mirror Co. v. Casualty Co., 153 N. C. 373, 69 S. E. 261. On examination we find that there was evidence as to each finding of fact, and such findings are not open to review on appeal. Williams v. Hyman, 153 N. C. 167, 69 S. E. 50.

Affirmed.

(157 N. C. 16)

CURRY v. FLEER.

(Supreme Court of North Carolina. Nov. 15, 1911.)

1. HIGHWAYS (§ 181*)—CARE REQUIRED IN USE OF HIGHWAYS—AUTOMOBILES.

Under Laws 1909, c. 445, Fell's Supp. §§ 3876, "a" to "t," inclusive, it is the duty of the operator of an automobile upon highways to use every reasonable precaution to avoid causing injury; and the fixing of a maximum rate of speed, on approaching horses that are driven on the highways, "not exceeding eight miles an hour" does not always permit that rate of speed; the operator is charged with notice of the tendency of an automobile to frighten animals, and conditions may require him to move at a slower rate of speed, or stop altogether.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Highways, Cent. Dig. § 469; Dec. Dig. § 181.*]

2. HIGHWAYS (§ 184*)—ACTION FOR INJURIES—QUESTION FOR JURY.

On evidence in an action for injuries resulting from the running away of plaintiff's horses upon the approach of an automobile, held, that the question of defendant's negligence was for the jury.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Highways, Cent. Dig. §§ 471-474; Dec. Dig. § 184.*]

3. WITNESSES (§ 370*)—CREDIBILITY—BIAS—SALE BY WITNESS TO PARTY.

The answer of a witness for the defendant, in an action for damages as to whether he had not sold his land to defendant at a big price is admissible as tending to show a bias in defendant's favor, where, on the facts, it had a reasonable and natural tendency to create such bias.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Witnesses, Cent. Dig. § 1189; Dec. Dig. § 370.*]

4. APPEAL AND ERROR (§ 1048*)—HARMLESS ERROR—ADMISSION OF EVIDENCE—BIAS OF WITNESS.

Where the answer of a witness for defendant, in a civil action for damages, to a question as to whether he had not sold his land to defendant at a big price has no reasonable and natural tendency to create a bias in defendant's favor, its admission is harmless.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Appeal and Error, Cent. Dig. §§ 4140-4160; Dec. Dig. § 1048.*]

Appeal from Superior Court, Davidson County; Lyon, Judge.

Action by one Curry against one Fleer. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendant appeals. Affirmed.

There was evidence on part of plaintiff tending to show that on the 7th day of December, 1909, on the road about 1½ miles from Thomasville, plaintiff was driving a two-horse wagon, loaded with 100 chairs, when his horses took fright at defendant's automobile, and, getting beyond his control, ran the wagon against a telephone post, whereby plaintiff was thrown to the ground and received painful physical injuries; that the automobile, driven by defendant, approached from behind, at a speed of 15 or 20 miles an hour, sounded the warning signal when only 25 yards back, and came so suddenly on witness that he had no chance to get control of his team and prevent the running. Speaking to this question, the witness said: "Just passed right by me all at once, and didn't give me any chance to hold onto the horses, trying to do all I could with them. If I had had warning in time, I might have prevented the horses from running away." The evidence of defendant tended to show that he approached at a speed of 12 miles, reduced to 8, when nearing the team, gave the ordinary and usual signals 100 feet back, and passed without observing any sign of fright in the horses, or of any change or disturbance in the movement of the team, etc. There was further evidence on part of defendant tending to show that the horses were young horses, unused to the road, and that there was no default on part of defendant in the use and operation of the machine, or in failing to give the proper signal. The question of defendant's negligence was submitted to the jury, and the following verdict rendered: "Was the plaintiff injured by the negligence of the defendant as alleged in the complaint? Answer: Yes. What damages, if any, is plaintiff entitled to recover? Answer: $500." Judgment on the verdict, and defendant excepted, alleging for error chiefly the refusal of the court to order a nonsuit.

*For other cases see same topic and section NUMBER in Dec. Dig. & Am. Dig. Key No. Series & Rep'r Indexes

E. E. Raper and A. F. Sams, for appellant. Phillips & Bower and McCrary & McCrary, for appellee.

HOKE, J. (after stating the facts as above). [1] The General Assembly of 1909 made extended regulation in reference to the ownership, operation, and use of the automobile (Laws 1909, c. 445; Pell's Supplement, § 3876, "a" to "t," inclusive), and on matters more directly relevant the statute provides as follows: "Upon approaching a horse or horses, or other draft animals, being ridden, led or driven thereon, a person operating a motor vehicle shall slow down to a speed not exceeding eight miles an hour and give reasonable warning of its approach and use every reasonable precaution to insure the safety of such person or animal and in case of a horse or horses or other draft animals, to prevent frightening the same." With the exception of establishing speed limits, this legislation is to a great extent an embodiment of the general principles of law, applicable to these motor vehicles, when operated on the highway and on places where their use is likely to be a source of danger to others; principles recognized and applied in two recent cases before the court (Gaskins v. Hancock, 72 S. E. 80, present term; Tudor v. Bowen, 152 N. C. 441, 67 S. E. 1015, 30 L. R. A. [N. S.] 804, 136 Am. St. Rep. 836). Speaking to the duties incumbent upon chauffeurs and others driving these cars, in Tudor's Case, supra, Associate Justice Brown said: "Although the use of automobiles began in recent years, it seems to have caused much litigation, though not in this state. It is the consensus of judicial opinion that it is the duty of the operator of an automobile upon highways and public streets to use every reasonable precaution to avoid causing injury, and this duty requires him to take into consideration 'the character of his machine and its tendency to frighten horses.' Hannigan v. Wright, 5 Pennewill (Del.) 537, 63 Atl. 234; House v. Cramer, 13 Am. & Eng. Ann. Cas. 463, note, and cases cited. The possession of a powerful or dangerous vehicle imposes upon the chauffeur the duty of employing a degree of care commensurate with the risk of danger to others engendered by the use of such a machine on a public thoroughfare." And it may be well to note that the legislation referred to establishes, as a rule, a maximum rate of speed, "not exceeding 8 miles an hour," etc., and in doing so it is not at all contemplated or intended that the specified limit is always permissible. The chauffeur or other driving a machine of this character on the public highway is charged with notice of things which he observes or could observe in the exercise of proper care, having regard to the nature of the vehicle he is operating and its tendency to frighten animals; and not infrequently it may become his duty to move at a much slower speed, and stop altogether, if conditions so require. This, too, is in accord with approved precedent (Christy v. Elliott, 216 Ill. 81, 74 N. E. 1035, 1 L. R. A. [N. S.] 215, 108 Am. St. Rep. 196), and is expressly recognized in other sections of the statute, notably Pell's Supplement, 3876m, 3876n, 3876p, 3876r, and 3876s; the last citation being in terms as follows: "Nothing in the general law shall be construed to curtail or abridge the right of any person to prosecute a civil action for damages by reason of injuries to person or property resulting from the negligence of the owner or operator or his agent, employe or servant of any motor vehicle, or resulting from the negligent use of the highway by them or any of them."

[2] Applying the principle, the case was clearly one for the jury. The grievance alleged on part of plaintiff, being not so much and of itself that the speed limit was exceeded—a limit established principally to lessen the danger of collision—but because, by reason in part of exceeding the speed limit, the machine was upon the plaintiff's team without adequate warning; that at 20 miles per hour and a signal at 25 steps behind, to use the plaintiff's own language, the vehicle "just passed right by me all at once, and didn't give me any chance to hold onto my horses, trying to do all I could." True there is evidence on defendant's part in contradiction of this testimony; but, under a correct charge, the jury have accepted the plaintiff's version, and, in our opinion, an actionable wrong is clearly established.

[3, 4] Objection was further made that the court allowed plaintiff to ask a witness who testified for defendant if he had not sold his land to defendant at a big price. The answer was admitted as tending to show a bias in defendant's favor. If on the facts the answer had a reasonable and natural tendency to create a bias in defendant's favor, it was relevant; and if otherwise it should be treated as harmless, and certainly not held for reversible error. We find no error in the record, and the judgment in plaintiff's favor must be affirmed.

No error.

(156 N. C. 576)

GALLIMORE v. GRUBB et al.

(Supreme Court of North Carolina. Nov. 15, 1911.)

1. TRIAL (§ 351*)—ISSUES—PRESENTATION.

Where the issues submitted were sufficient to enable the parties to present every phase of the controversy, they have no ground to complain because the court declined certain issues presented.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Trial, Cent. Dig. § 834; Dec. Dig. § 351.*]

2. EVIDENCE (§ 208*)—ADMISSIONS—PLEADING.

In a suit for specific performance of a land contract, the court did not err in allowing the introduction of the complaint and answer solely to show that plaintiff had offered to pay the balance of the purchase money, if defendant would clear the property of liens; the introduction of the complaint being necessary to make clear the admissions in the answer.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Evidence, Cent. Dig. §§ 713-725; Dec. Dig. § 208.*]

3. VENDOR AND PURCHASER (§ 170*)—WAIVER.

Where a vendor stated he would not accept plaintiff's offer to pay the balance of the consideration, which plaintiff offered to pay on condition that defendant would free the property from liens, there was a waiver of a formal tender.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Vendor and Purchaser, Cent. Dig. §§ 344-348; Dec. Dig. § 170.*]

4. VENDOR AND PURCHASER (§ 129*)—LIENS—DUTY TO CLEAR—TITLE.

Unless a vendee has otherwise agreed, he may demand a clear title, even though he has agreed to accept a deed without a warranty.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Vendor and Purchaser, Cent. Dig. §§ 238-244; Dec. Dig. § 129.*]

5. SPECIFIC PERFORMANCE (§ 127*)—CONTRACT—ENFORCEMENT—JUDGMENT.

Where a vendee refused to clear property of liens which could be discharged by a mere payment thereof, and the amount was not larger than the purchase money due, the court might direct the payment of a sufficient part of the purchase money to the holders of the incumbrances, instead of the vendor, even though such holders were not before the court; or might authorize the vendee to remove the liens on failure of the vendor to remove them, and to reimburse himself out of the deferred payments of the price.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Specific Performance, Dec. Dig. § 127.*]

Appeal from Superior Court, Davidson County; Lyon, Judge.

Action by J. A. Gallimore against Henry K. Grubb and another. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendants appeal. Affirmed.

Walser & Walser and Thos. J. Shaw, for appellants. E. E. Raper, for appellee.

CLARK, C. J. On January 3, 1910, the defendant sold and contracted in writing to convey the land in controversy to plaintiff for $2,500. Fifty dollars was paid in cash. On the same day, defendant and wife executed a deed for the property, duly signed and acknowledged, and delivered same to one Beck, to hold till the purchase money was paid in full, and then to be delivered to the plaintiff. This deed was in fee simple, with the usual covenants and warranty. On January 6th, plaintiff paid Grubb $1,200 more on the purchase price, and arranged to borrow the balance of the money. He repaired the house with his own lumber about January 12th, and January 15th, with consent of Grubb, moved upon the land. Grubb had represented the land to be clear of incumbrances. Plaintiff, learning that there was a mortgage for $100 on the land, and a judgment in favor of the United States for $250 penalty, interest, and cost, called Grubb's attention to the liens, who admitted the mortgage, but said it was not due, and he would pay it off when it fell due, and claimed that the judgment had been settled. Plaintiff offered to pay the balance of the price for the land, but wanted the liens satisfied and the title cleared, or proposed to pay the price, less the liens. The defendant refused to clear the title of these liens, or to accept the price, less the amount of the liens, and insisted upon plaintiff paying the price in full. In the latter part of February, Grubb demanded back and obtained from Beck the deed he had deposited with him. On March 10th, plaintiff brought this action to enforce specific performance of the contract, offering to pay balance of money as above. Grubb offered to pay back the money which had been paid, which plaintiff refused to accept. Grubb contended that the deed had been deposited with an agreement that the purchase money should be paid in full in a week or 10 days, and if it was not done that the contract would be canceled. This the plaintiff denied, and the jury found that issue in favor of the plaintiff.

[1] The defendant tendered certain issues, which the court declined, and submitted those in the record. The issues submitted were sufficient to enable the parties to present every phase of the controversy. When such is the case, as this court has repeatedly held, the parties have no ground to complain. Pretzfelder v. Insurance Co., 123 N. C. 165, 31 S. E. 470, 44 L. R. A. 424; Tuttle v. Tuttle, 146 N. C. 487, 59 S. E. 1008, 125 Am. St. Rep. 481. On examination of the issues, we do not see that the defendant has been deprived of presenting any contention of his as to the facts.

The exceptions to the charge are not well taken. The case turned almost entirely upon the disputed facts, and were fully answered by the jury in favor of the plaintiff.

[2] The defendant also excepted because the judge allowed the complaint to be put in evidence. The court allowed the complaint and answer to be put in evidence, but solely for the purpose of showing that the plaintiff had offered to pay the balance of the purchase money, if the defendant would clear the property of the liens, and the admissions in the answer which would not have been clear, unless the complaint was also put in evidence.

[3] It was not necessary to present the money when defendant stated he would not take the plaintiff's offer to pay it. This was a waiver of any formal tender. Hughes v. Knott, 138 N. C. 105, 50 S. E. 586; Phelps v. Davenport, 151 N. C. 22, 65 S. E. 459.

[4] The jury find that Grubb agreed to convey said land free from incumbrances. But, if he had not, the law is thus stated in Leach v. Johnson, 114 N. C. 88, 19 S. E. 240, 41 Am. St. Rep. 784: "Unless the vendee has otherwise agreed, it is his undoubted right to demand a clear title. 1 War. Vendors, 315. That the vendee agreed to take a deed without warranty is not a waiver of the right to demand a clear title; on the contrary, the fact that a warranty in the conveyance is waived is all the stronger reason why the vendee should insist upon the cancellation of all liens and incumbrances, since he will have no warranty to fall back upon, if the title should prove to be defective. The vendee in such case is not cut off from his rights till he has paid the purchase money and taken the deed."

[5] As to the form of the judgment, "In a suit, either by vendor or vendee, where the incumbrances can be discharged by mere payment thereof, and are not larger in amount than the purchase money due, the court in its decree may direct the payment of a sufficient part of the purchase money for the purpose to the holders of the incumbrances, instead of the vendor, even though such holders are not before the court; or the court may authorize the vendee to remove the lien on failure of the vendor to remove it, and to reimburse himself out of his deferred payments of the purchase price." 36 Cyc. 745(4).

No error.

(187 N. C. 12)

PATTERSON v. GREENSBORO LOAN & TRUST CO. et al.

(Supreme Court of North Carolina. Nov. 15, 1911.)

1. GIFTS (§ 15*)—REQUISITES—VALIDITY—INTENT.

In order to constitute a valid gift of personal property, there must be an actual or constructive delivery, with a present intent to pass title.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Gifts, Cent. Dig. § 14; Dec. Dig. § 15.*]

2. GIFTS (§ 22*)—DELIVERY—EVIDENCE.

Plaintiff having been possessed of a trunk, decedent, her grandfather, on being shown a $5 gold piece that had been given to the child by another, remarked that he expected to give her $5 in gold every 22d of the month for her birthday. He then began the practice of putting into the child's trunk $5 every month. After the death of his wife, the trunk was brought into his room. Some of plaintiff's things were in the trunk, and during decedent's last illness he told plaintiff's mother that he wanted the trunk moved; that she could move it then, if she wished, or could wait until after his death. The trunk was not then removed, and after decedent's death it was opened, and found to contain $1,050 in gold. There was no evidence that it contained anything of value belonging to decedent. Held to show a sufficient delivery to constitute a valid gift.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Gifts, Cent. Dig. § 37; Dec. Dig. § 22.*]

3. GIFTS (§ 22*)—ELEMENTS—DELIVERY.

Where articles are present, and are capable of actual manual delivery, such delivery must be made, in order to constitute a valid gift; but, where the donor's intention to make the gift plainly appears, and the articles intended to be given are not present, or, if present, are incapable of manual delivery, a constructive delivery is sufficient.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Gifts, Cent. Dig. § 37; Dec. Dig. § 22.*]

Appeal from Superior Court, Guilford County; Daniels, Judge.

Action by Lella A. Patterson, by her next friend, against the Greensboro Loan & Trust Company, administrator of William Collins, deceased, and others. The jury found that the money in controversy had been given to plaintiff by decedent in his lifetime, and from a judgment entered thereon in plaintiff's favor defendants appeal. Affirmed.

G. S. Bradshaw and King & Kimball, for appellants. John A. Barringer and Thos. H. Calvert, for appellee.

HOKE, J. [1] The authorities in this state are in full support of the position contended for by defendant that, in order to a valid gift of personal property, there must be an actual or constructive delivery, with the present intent to pass the title. Gross v. Smith, 132 N. C. 604, 44 S. E. 111; Duckworth, Adm'r, v. Orr et al., 126 N. C. 674, 36 S. E. 150; Wilson v. Featherston, 122 N. C. 747, 30 S. E. 325; Newman v. Bost, 122 N. C. 524, 29 S. E. 848; Medlock v. Powell, 96 N. C. 499, 2 S. E. 149; Adams v. Hays, 24 N. C. 361.

[2] The court is of opinion, however, that, without any impairment of the principle recognized and sustained in these cases, there are facts in evidence from which delivery could be properly inferred by the jury. From the testimony of the principal witness, it appeared: "That Lella A. Patterson is the daughter of Roxie Patterson, and the granddaughter of William Collins. That William Collins died on April 6, 1907, and that the wife of William Collins, grandmother of Lella, died about 18 years ago. That the grandmother of Lella had given Roxie Patterson a trunk for Lella, and that the trunk was always called and used as Lella's, and remained in an upstairs room in the Collins home until after the death of the grandmother. That in the summer after the birth of Lella, while Roxie Patterson and child were on a visit to the grandparents, the mother showed the grandfather a $5 gold piece which she said Judge Armfield had given to her for the child; whereupon the grandfather remarked: 'Well, we will keep that up. I will keep that up. I expect to give her $5 in gold every 22d of the month for her birthday.' He then and there began the practice of putting into the child's trunk $5 in gold every month, and after the death of the grandmother the trunk was brought down into his room. On several visits of the mother, she saw the grandfather put $5 in gold into it, when the monthly birthday of Lelia happened at the time. 'Some of Lelia's things were in the trunk; that is to say, shoes, little hose, dresses, and things of that kind.' Lelia's pet name was Hon, and in the grandfather's last illness he said to his daughter: 'There's Hon's trunk; I want you to move it. You may move this trunk now, if you want to, or you can wait and move it after I am dead.' The trunk was not then removed, and after his death it was opened and the sum of $1,050 in gold was found therein. There is no evidence that the trunk contained anything of value belonging to the deceased; that is, there was no other money in gold, nor were there any valuable papers." True there is a case in our reports (Brewer v. Harry, 72 N. C. 176) where a father, standing on his piazza with his wife and child, a girl 12 years of age, pointed to a colt some distance off, and said to the child: "That is yours; I give it to you." And in another case a colt on the father's farm was always recognized by and spoken of as his son's colt, and the father had told the son he might have the colt, if he would raise it. In both, the court held there was not a valid gift for lack of proper delivery; but in both it will be noted that there was no possession or control of the property given to the alleged donee, or to any one for him. In our case, the money was, from time to time, put by the intestate in the trunk recognized as the child's trunk, and in the last illness of the donor he said to the child's mother, the trunk being present: "There's Hon's trunk; I want you to move it. You may move it now, if you want to, or you can wait and move it after I am dead." On this testimony, we think his honor correctly ruled that the question of delivery was for the jury.

[3] The case comes rather within the principle applied in Newman v. Bost, supra, in which it was held: "Where the articles are present, and are capable of actual manual delivery, such delivery must be made, in order to constitute a gift inter vivos or causa mortis; but, where the intention of the donor to make the gift plainly appears, and the articles intended to be given are not present, or, if present, are incapable of manual delivery, effect will be given to a constructive delivery."

There is no error, and the judgment for plaintiff must be affirmed.

No error.

(156 N. C. 581)

URQUHART v. DURHAM & S. C. R. CO.
(Supreme Court of North Carolina. Nov. 15, 1911.)

1. MASTER AND SERVANT (§ 204*)—ASSUMPTION OF RISK—DEFECTIVE APPLIANCES.

Under Revisal 1905, § 2646, providing that any employé of a railroad company who suffers injury to his person by any defect in the ways or appliances may maintain an action against the company, a railroad brakeman injured because of a defective and dangerous step on the tender could not be held to have assumed the risk.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Master and Servant, Cent. Dig. §§ 544-546; Dec. Dig. § 204.*]

2. NEW TRIAL (§ 44*)—GROUNDS—MISCONDUCT OF JURY.

That the jury only remained out 20 minutes before bringing in their verdict was not of itself ground for a new trial.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see New Trial, Cent. Dig. §§ 80-85; Dec. Dig. § 44.*]

3. TRIAL (§ 304*)—MISCONDUCT OF JURY—DISCRETION OF TRIAL COURT.

The trial court could in the exercise of its discretion compel the jury to reconsider the case or set aside the verdict for contemptuous disregard of their duty in considering the case, but such matter is, as a rule, for the trial court's discretion.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Trial, Cent. Dig. §§ 725-727; Dec. Dig. § 304.*]

Appeal from Superior Court, Durham County; Daniels, Judge.

Action by R. H. Urquhart against the Durham & South Carolina Railroad Company. From a judgment for plaintiff, defendant appeals. Affirmed.

Manning & Everett and J. W. Hinsdale, for appellant. Bryant & Brogden, for appellee.

CLARK, C. J. This is an action to recover damages for personal injury caused by the negligence of the defendant. The defendant took 94 exceptions, but abandoned 51 of them in this court.

While the record is voluminous and the exceptions numerous, the matter for decision lies in a very small compass. The case comes within the principles of law laid down in Coley v. Railroad, 128 N. C. 534, 39 S. E. 43, 57 L. R. A. 817; Id., 129 N. C. 407, 40 S. E. 195, 57 L. R. A. 817. The plaintiff was employed by the defendant December 1, 1907, as a brakeman on its road. Twenty-four days later he lost his foot by reason, as he alleges, of negligence on the part of the defendant.

The plaintiff contends there was negligence on the part of the defendant, in that (a) it furnished an engine without a step, as was usual and necessary on railroads properly equipped; (b) that the step upon the tender was defective and dangerous, and was too high to be reached with safety in boarding a moving train; (c) that it permitted water to drip from the sprinkler hose on the step of the tender and form ice there, making a dangerous place to board the train; and (d) that he, being a green hand, without experience, was required in the discharge of his duties to board the train, when in motion, without any proper warning or instructions as to his duties and the dangers. He insisted that, by reason of this negligence when he undertook to board the moving train, his left foot slipped from the tender step, passed under the wheels of the moving tender, and was so crushed that amputation was necessary. The defendant admitted the absence of the step from the engine, contended one was unnecessary, denied the other allegation of negligence, pleaded assumption of risk, and also contributory negligence on part of plaintiff in attempting to board the tender as he did. It especially urged that plaintiff was rear brakeman, and should not have attempted to board the engine or tender at all. In reply, plaintiff contended he had duties in the rear and front; that he boarded the engine and rode there as often as he did elsewhere; that he had been ordered so to do; that this was necessary in the discharge of his duties; was done in the presence of the conductor in charge of the train; and that the duties on the rear of the train were assigned by the superintendent of the road to another on the afternoon of the injury in presence of the plaintiff just a few hours before he (plaintiff) was hurt.

There was evidence that the plaintiff was inexperienced as a brakeman; that no written or printed rules were furnished him, nor in use by the defendant; and that he was not instructed or cautioned as to dangers incident to his employment. The plaintiff was discharging various duties as brakeman on the train, sometimes being in the coach and sometimes on the engine. The train reached Wilson siding about dark, and stopped to unload some freight. Plaintiff helped in the discharge of this duty, and, when the freight had been unloaded, the conductor signaled the train forward. Plaintiff, in order to be in front, to change the switch at next station, undertook to mount the tender. The train was moving at the rate of three or four miles an hour. He could not mount the engine because there was no step. A boy who was permitted to go on the train was also standing in his way. Plaintiff then caught the grabiron on the tender, and undertook to get on board by means of the step on the tender. There was but one step on the tender which was 30 inches from the ground. The first effort resulted in his foot slipping off. He made a second effort with the same result, and his foot that time slipped from the edge of the tender step; there being no side to the step or guard to prevent it. A hose sprinkler was leaking. From this cause the step was wet and covered with ice. The wheel was just a few inches from the rear of this step, and plaintiff's foot when it slipped a second time passed in front of the wheel, and was crushed between the wheel and iron rail. It was getting dark, and plaintiff did not know that ice was on the steps at that time. When the train started out that afternoon, the superintendent had told the boy to knock the ice off, saying "some one was going to get their neck broke," but the ice had not been removed.

There was also evidence that the defendant was using an old secondhand engine; that there was a grabiron on the engine for the use of those mounting it, but no step on the engine. There was also evidence by experienced engineers that prior to the time of this injury steps for mounting engines and tenders were in general use which were made of iron with sides and backs to them so that the foot when placed therein would not slip out. There is also evidence that such a step was in use on the only other engine on this road and two steps on its tender. There is also evidence that this tender step was too high; that there was but one step 26 inches above the cross-ties and 30 inches from the ground; that it was dangerous, defective, and not a safe appliance; that it had no back to protect the foot from slipping through and no side guards or pieces to keep the foot from slipping off; that it was a wooden step worn so that it was beveled, which caused it to slant; that the hose used by defendant for sprinkling the coal had been carelessly left above the step; that it was leaking, and the water dripping therefrom had frozen on the step, making it dangerous.

The defendant contended that the plaintiff was guilty of contributory negligence, in that he failed to take hold of both grabirons at the same time which the defendant contended was the proper way. But it did not contend that the plaintiff had ever been instructed or warned by it to board the train in that way. The defendant also offered evidence that the plaintiff was a rear brakeman, and should not have attempted to board the engine or tender, but offered no explanation of the fact that prior to the injury he had frequently ridden on the engine with the conductor without reproach.

Upon all the evidence, the case was properly submitted to the jury under a charge which followed our well-settled precedents, and the jury found that there was negligence on the part of the defendant, and that the plaintiff was not guilty of contributory negligence.

[1] There was no issue as to assumption of risk, and this court has held in Coley v. Railroad, 128 N. C. 534, 39 S. E. 43, 57 L. R. A. 817, Id., 129 N. C. 407, 40 S. E. 195, 57 L. R. A. 817, and Biles v. Railroad, 139 N. C. 532, 52 S. E. 129, that under the fellow servant law (Rev. 1905, § 2846), assumption of risk is not open to the defendant where the injury was proximately caused by defective ways or appliances. Every phase of the contention of the parties in the case has been so often before the court and the judge in his charge and his rulings upon the evidence has so carefully followed the precedents that it would serve no useful purpose to go over the exceptions in detail and reiterate our former rulings. No new proposition, nor new application of an old, is presented.

[2] The last exception is that the jury did not remain out more than 20 minutes before bringing in their verdict. The case had doubtless been so fully, carefully, and indeed minutely presented to their consideration in every aspect by the able counsel in the cause both in presenting the testimony and in arguing the case as well as by the lucid instructions of his honor that the jury doubtless thoroughly understood the points at issue, and did not need more time. Of that they are usually the best judges. We know of no rule by which this court can estimate the time, or lay down a rule, as to how long a jury shall remain in consultation, before bringing in their verdict.

[3] Of course, if there was misconduct on the part of the jury or a contemptuous or flippant disregard of their duties in considering a matter submitted to them, the trial judge is intrusted with the power and the duty to rebuke them, and either send them back to reconsider the case, or to set aside their verdict. But this is a matter which is left to his sound discretion, and cannot be intelligently reviewed by this court.

No error.

(157 N. C. 106)

H. L. BECK & CO. v. BANK OF THOMASVILLE et al.

(Supreme Court of North Carolina. Nov. 15, 1911.)

APPEAL AND ERROR (§ 80*)—JUDGMENTS APPEALABLE—FINAL JUDGMENTS.

Plaintiff brought two actions, one against defendant bank to correct certain errors in plaintiff's account, and the other against its cashier for slander, injury to plaintiff's credit, and the wrongful protest of plaintiff's checks. These actions being consolidated, all matters of account involved in the actions were referred, reserving, however, for trial by jury the issues raised in the pleadings as to slander, refusing payment of checks and protesting checks for nonpayment, and other torts. Held, that a judgment for defendant entered on the referee's report prior to the trial of the reserved issues was interlocutory, and not appealable.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Appeal and Error, Dec. Dig. § 80.*]

Appeal from Superior Court, Davidson County; Long, Judge.

Action by H. L. Beck & Co. against the Bank of Thomasville and another. Judgment for defendants, and plaintiff appeals. Dismissed.

E. E. Raper, Walser & Walser, and Thos. J. Shaw, for appellant. Watson, Buxton & Watson, for appellees.

ALLEN, J. The plaintiff instituted two actions in the superior court of Davidson county; one being against the bank of Thomasville, and the other against J. L. Armfield, its cashier. These actions were consolidated by order of court. The plaintiffs allege certain errors in their account with the bank, which they ask to have corrected, and also that they are entitled to recover damages for slander, injury to their credit, and the wrongful protesting of checks they issued. No objection was made as to misjoinder, and at August term, 1909, an order of reference was made as to "all matters of account involved in the actions," but expressly reserving for trial by jury "the issues raised in the pleadings as to slander, refusing payment of checks, and protesting checks for nonpayment and other torts." The referee filed his report, and, upon exceptions being filed, the judge heard the same, and entered his judgment, from which an appeal is taken to this court. The issues reserved in the order of reference have not been tried.

In this condition of the record, the appeal is premature, and must be dismissed. As was said by Justice Hoke in Pritchard v. Spring Company, 151 N. C. 249, 65 S. E. 968: "If a departure from this procedure is allowed in one case, it could be insisted upon in another, and each claimant, conceiving himself aggrieved, could bring the cause here for consideration, and litigation of this character would be indefinitely prolonged, costs unduly enhanced, and the seemly and proper disposal of causes prevented."

The appeal is dismissed without prejudice to the right of the parties to reserve their exceptions, which will be considered upon an appeal from the final judgment.

Appeal dismissed.

(156 N. C. 659.)

STATE v. MITCHELL.

(Supreme Court of North Carolina. Nov. 15, 1911.)

INTOXICATING LIQUORS (§ 146*)—PROHIBITORY LAW—SALE—BARTER.

An exchange or barter of whisky is a violation of Pub. Acts (Ex. Sess.) 1908, c. 71, making it unlawful for any person or persons, firm or corporation, to manufacture, or in any manner make or sell, or otherwise dispose of, intoxicating liquors for gain.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Intoxicating Liquors, Dec. Dig. § 146.*]

Appeal from Superior Court, Forsyth County; Adams, Judge.

George Mitchell was convicted of selling liquor in violation of the prohibitory law, both in the recorder's court and on appeal to the superior court, and he appeals. Affirmed.

Louis M. Swink and J. S. Grogan, for appellant. T. W. Bickett, Atty. Gen., and G. L. Jones, Asst. Atty. Gen., for the State.

BROWN, J. There is but one question presented, and that is: Is it a violation of the prohibition act for one to lend another whisky, upon the understanding that other whisky will be returned in place of it? The evidence is contradictory. The prosecuting witness testified that he purchased the liquor for cash, and paid 50 cents down when he made the purchase. The defendant testified that he furnished whisky to the prosecuting witness, but that it was a loan, and upon the understanding that the whisky was to be returned as soon as an order made by prosecuting witness could be received.

The point comes up on the charge of the court, who instructed the jury as follows: "If you find from the evidence, beyond a reasonable doubt, that the witness Curry applied to the defendant for liquor, and it was then and there agreed by and between the witness Curry and the defendant that the defendant would let Curry have whisky, in consideration of an agreement on the part of Curry to deliver to the defendant other whisky in return for that which he received, and after this agreement was made the defendant delivered to the witness Curry a quantity of whisky, in consideration of the agreement of Curry to deliver to the defendant a like quantity when Curry's whisky arrived on the train, such transaction, if not a technical sale, would nevertheless be such as is made unlawful by the statute to which your attention has been directed, and your verdict will be 'guilty.'"

This exact question has never been decided in this state, and it has been decided both ways in other jurisdictions. The Cyclopedia of Law and Procedure says: "Where the statute prohibits the sale of liquor by certain persons or under certain conditions, when the indictment distinctly charges the sale, there can be no conviction on evidence which proves a gift or exchange of liquor as distinguished from a sale." Again, on page 181 of the same volume: "A loan of liquor, with the understanding that it is to be repaid in other liquor of the same kind, is not a sale." 23 Cyc. 269. The author of the article in Cyc. is Henry C. Black, author of the well-known work on Intoxicating Liquors. The cases cited in the notes do not appear to fully sustain the text. It is held in Georgia that an exchange of liquor does not constitute a sale. Skinner v. State, 97 Ga. 690, 25 S. E. 364. Same in Arkansas. Robinson v. State, 59 Ark. 341, 27 S. W. 233. It was so decided in Texas in Ray v. State, 46 Tex. Cr. R. 176, 79 S. W. 535, but specially held otherwise, and the Ray Case overruled, in Tombeaugh v. State, 50 Tex. Cr. R. 286, 98 S. W.

1054, 8 L. R. A. (N. S.) 937, 123 Am. St. Rep. 841.

The true rule, we think, is clearly stated by the Supreme Court of Texas in the latter case: "While the doctrine of an accommodation exchange seems to have been recognized by this court in the Ray Case, supra, in our opinion that case should be overruled. There might be a case—to illustrate, where some member of a family should be bitten by a snake, or some venomous insect—that would require the immediate use of whisky, with no time to send for a physician to obtain a prescription. In such case it might be allowable to borrow whisky from a neighbor on account of such emergency. We do not believe the doctrine should be extended beyond some pressing necessity. Certainly not to a case of a loan by one club member of whisky to a stranger in social drinking as a beverage. In our opinion, it makes no difference in this respect whether the party loaning be a club member or not. His exchange of whisky to another person under the circumstances here detailed would be a sale, and comes under the doctrine announced in Keaton's Case, 36 Tex. Cr. R. 259, 38 S. W. 522. We fail to see any difference between such transaction and the payment of money for the whisky at the time." These cases appear to sustain that view: Com. v. Clark, 14 Gray (Mass.) 367; Com. v. Abrams, 150 Mass. 393, 23 N. E. 53; Leach v. State (Tex. Cr. App.) 53 S. W. 630; Taggart v. State (Tex. Cr. App.) 97 S. W. 95; Sparks v. State (Tex. Cr. App.) 99 S. W. 546; Coleman v. State, 53 Tex. Cr. R. 578, 111 S. W. 1011; Beckham v. State, 54 Tex. Cr. R. 28, 111 S. W. 1017; Wilson v. State, 54 Tex. Cr. R. 13, 111 S. W. 1018.

Justice Manning, in State v. Colonial Club, 154 N. C. 177, 69 S. E. 771, 31 L. R. A. (N. S.) 387, reviews the authorities to some extent as to what constitutes a sale. Quoting from 2 Black. Com. 446, he says: "A sale is a transmutation of property from one man to another in consideration of some price or recompense in value." Justice Dillard, in State v. McMinn, 83 N. C. 668, defines a sale as follows: "A sale is the transmutation of the property in a personal chattel from one to another on a quid pro quo, paid or agreed to be paid, and such a change of property in the retail of spirituous liquors by the small measure is usually effected by the delivery of the article and the payment of the price simultaneously; but it may be made in other modes," etc.

We think, tested by these definitions, in any view of the evidence, the transaction constituted a sale, and was a clear violation of the prohibition law of this state. The transaction was nothing more or less, according to the defendant's own evidence, than a barter of liquor. The title to the liquor passed absolutely, and the same rules of law are applicable to the transaction, whether the consideration of the contract is money or other liquor to be delivered at some future date. As said in Commonwealth v. Clark, supra, by the Supreme Court of Massachusetts: "It can make no essential difference in the rights and obligations of parties that goods and merchandise are transferred and paid for by other goods and merchandise, instead of by money, which is but the representative of value or property."

In adopting the prohibition statute enacted by the General Assembly, our voters had in view the prevention of the traffic in intoxicating liquors in the state. If it were allowable to carry on an exchange or barter for whisky, the law would be rendered practically worthless and incapable of enforcement. Whenever a person was charged with an illicit sale of liquor, the defense in most cases doubtless would be that the transaction was only an exchange or barter. Our statute is very broad and comprehensive in its terms, and its framers evidently had in view, not only the prohibition of a sale of liquor for money, but for barter likewise. It reads: "It shall be unlawful for any person or persons, firm or corporation to manufacture or in any manner make, or sell, or otherwise dispose of for gain," etc. Public Acts, Extra Session, 1908, c. 71.

We think his honor was correct in his instructions to the jury.

No error.

(90 S. C. 42)

BOUCHILLON v. CHARLESTON & W. C. RY. CO.

(Supreme Court of South Carolina. Nov. 15, 1911.)

1. MASTER AND SERVANT (§ 282*)—WILLFUL INJURY TO SERVANT—DAMAGES.

The operation of a work train at a high rate of speed on a straight track supposed to be in good condition is not of itself such willfulness as will justify punitive damages for the death of an employé on the train killed by the derailment of the engine caused by a low joint in the rails not known to the railway company, nor any of its agents prior to the accident; the track having been recently inspected.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Master and Servant, Cent. Dig. §§ 997-999; Dec. Dig. § 282.*]

2. MASTER AND SERVANT (§ 243*)—INJURY TO SERVANT—CONTRIBUTORY NEGLIGENCE.

A member of a train crew repairing the track was killed by the derailment of the engine of work train. The rules of the railroad company required the members of the crew to ride in shanty cars, but decedent, in violation of the rule, and without any necessity therefor, rode in the engine when it was derailed. The cars did not leave the track, and he would not have been killed had he obeyed the rules. Held, that decedent was guilty of contributory negligence as a matter of law.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Master and Servant, Cent. Dig. §§ 682, 759-775; Dec. Dig. § 243.*]

3. MASTER AND SERVANT (§ 289*)—ACTION FOR DEATH—CONTRIBUTORY NEGLIGENCE.

Where it appeared from the entire evidence that no other reasonable conclusion could be reached except that the death was the result of decedent's negligence concurring with that of defendant, and that his negligence was the proximate cause of the death, the question was for the court.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Master and Servant, Cent. Dig. §§ 1089-1132; Dec. Dig. § 289.*]

4. MASTER AND SERVANT (§ 240*)—CONTRIBUTORY NEGLIGENCE—OPERATION OF RAILROADS.

Where a member of a train crew left a shanty car provided for him and in which he was riding, and rode on the engine, and was killed when it was derailed, and the car did not leave the track, he was guilty of contributory negligence in leaving the place of comparative safety provided for him for a place of greater danger known by him to be such.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Master and Servant, Cent. Dig. §§ 751-756; Dec. Dig. § 240.*]

5. MASTER AND SERVANT (§ 228*)—INJURY TO SERVANT—CONSTITUTIONAL PROVISIONS.

Const. art. 9, § 15, giving to railroad employes the rights and remedies allowed to persons not employes who sustain injuries, applies only to the defense of assumption of risk by an employé and does not refer to the question of contributory negligence.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Master and Servant, Dec. Dig. § 228.*]

Appeal from Common Pleas Circuit Court of Abbeville County; R. C. Watts, Judge.

"To be officially reported."

Action by H. M. Bouchillon, administrator of Stony Bouchillon, deceased, against the Charleston & Western Carolina Railway Company. From a judgment for defendant, plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

Wm. N. Graydon and C. J. Perryman, for appellant. Wm. P. Greene, for respondent.

JONES, C. J. This was an action to recover actual and punitive damages alleged to have been suffered by reason of the death of the plaintiff's intestate, averred to have been caused by the negligent, willful, wanton, and reckless acts of the defendant set forth in the complaint. At the close of the evidence on behalf of the plaintiff, a motion for a nonsuit on the cause of action for punitive damages was granted, and at the conclusion of the entire testimony the presiding judge directed a verdict for defendant upon the cause of action for compensatory damages, upon the ground that the evidence established the fact that the death of the plaintiff's intestate was the result of contributory negligence on his part. The plaintiff now appeals to this court, charging error both in the granting of the order of nonsuit as to the cause of action for vindictive damages and in the direction of a verdict upon the issue as to actual damages.

While the exceptions are numerous and lengthy, they appear to present but three questions for determination, and these propositions alone are presented to this court in the argument. The appellant here contends: (1) That there was evidence to go to the jury upon the cause of action based upon the allegations of willfulness and recklessness. (2) That there was error in the holding that no other reasonable inference could be drawn from the evidence, but that the injury and death of plaintiff's intestate was due to his own contributory negligence. (3) That the act of negligence on the part of said intestate held by the court to have contributed to his death consisted in a violation of a rule of the defendant company, as to which there was evidence to go to the jury of a waiver by the defendant of such rule.

The evidence shows that the intestate was in the employ of the defendant as a member of a train crew engaged in the work of keeping in repair the track and roadbed of the defendant's railroad, his position being that of engineer of a hoisting engine placed upon a flat car by which was operated a ditching machine. The flat car contained the hoisting engine and tender and four shanty cars for the transportation and use of the employees engaged in the repair of the tracks, among whom was included the plaintiff's intestate. When this work train was being used for the transportation of the employees of defendant to the scene of their labors upon defendant's track, the assigned place of said intestate was in one of the shanty cars, and he had no duties to perform nor work to be done upon the occasion in question, requiring him to go upon the engine by which this train was drawn. Furthermore, the rules of the company then known to the plaintiff's intestate forbade his riding upon the engine, and he had been warned that it was dangerous, and had been expressly forbidden to ride upon the same. Upon the day he was killed, the plaintiff's intestate boarded this work train, going first into the shanty car where he belonged, and where he remained until the train had proceeded for some distance toward the place at which the work was to be done, after which interval, and before such destination had been reached, he climbed over the top of the other cars, and went into the cab of the engine drawing the train, such action on his part being entirely voluntary and without any call of duty or necessity requiring it. This engine, running equally well either way, was then running backward and pulling the train of shanty cars, but the evidence is uncontradicted that there is no more danger upon a straight track in running such an engine backward than forward. A short time after the plaintiff's intestate had thus gone upon the engine, where he went of his own volition, without invitation and for his own private reasons, the work train left the track, and, being then upon the engine, he received injuries in this derailment which resulted in his death. As it appears that the shanty cars were not derailed or otherwise injured in this accident, and no one in those cars received any hurt whatsoever, it is evident that the death of the plaintiff's intestate was due to the fact that he was not in his proper place upon the train. There was evidence tending to show that the derailing of the engine was caused by a low joint in the rails upon the track, but there was no evidence that this defective condition was known to the defendant or any of its agents prior to the occurrence. The track had been recently inspected, and had been put in good condition a few days before. There was only testimony which tended to establish the fact that the work train in question, shortly before the happening of the wreck, was traveling at a high rate of speed, fixed by some of the witnesses at 38 miles an hour, but there is no witness who states the rate of travel at the very point in question as exceeding 10 or 15 miles an hour.

[1] The act of willfulness and recklessness on the part of the defendant being alleged to consist in the running of this train at a high rate of speed over a defective track, it is apparent that neither willfulness nor recklessness can be said to be inferable from this testimony, unless there be evidence tending to show either knowledge by the defendant of the unsafe condition or some other conscious disregard of duty by the defendant's agents, either in failing to repair the track at the point in question or in running the engine at an unsafe rate of speed. As to these matters, there is nothing appearing in the record which tends to show knowledge by the defendant, prior to the accident, of any unsafe condition of the track, nor any testimony going towards proving that the train was being run at an unsafe or reckless rate of speed at the time of the occurrence in question. The fact that a train was being operated at a high rate of speed at the time, if it were made to appear, would not alone be sufficient to show either willfulness or recklessness, in the absence of evidence that such speed was obviously dangerous under the facts and circumstances as they then appeared to the agents and servants of the defendant in charge of such train. But the evidence was that the track at the point in question was straight, and that, upon such a track, in good condition as it was then supposed to be, it was reasonably safe to operate such a train, with the engine running backward, at a rate of speed of 35 or 40 miles an hour.

Without further rehearsing the evidence, therefore, it appears that there was an entire lack of proof to establish either a conscious failure to observe due care or a reckless disregard of safety in the operation of the train in question. There being thus no evidence to support the allegation of willfulness, wantonness, and recklessness, or either of them, it must be concluded that there was no error by the presiding judge in granting the motion for a nonsuit upon the cause of action for punitive damages. On the contrary, in the absence of such evidence, it would have been reversible error on the part of the circuit judge had this motion been refused. Trimmer v. Railroad, 81 S. C. 203, 62 S. E. 209. Conceding that there was some testimony tending to show negligence on the part of the defendant, even though it be but a scintilla of evidence, the circuit judge directed a verdict in favor of the defendant upon the cause of action for actual damages, upon the ground that there was no evidence in the case upon which any other conclusion could be reached by the jury than that the death of plaintiff's intestate was due to his own contributory negligence.

[2] As to the complaint of error in this ruling and direction of verdict, it is to be remarked that from the facts already recited and from the evidence contained in the entire record, which has been carefully examined, it incontestably appears that the injury and death of the intestate was the result in part of his own negligent act in going to a place of great danger upon the engine away from the place provided by his employers upon the cars and in violation of the rules of his employment, without necessity and without pretense of any call of duty or necessity. Had he remained in the car provided for his transportation, no injury would have befallen him; and it is thus apparent that his negligent act in going to a place of greater danger was a proximate cause of the injury which befell him, and without which it would not have occurred.

[3] It is immaterial by what testimony the fact of such contributory negligence was made to appear, whether it be by that introduced on behalf of the plaintiff or that offered on the part of the defendant, since it does appear from the entire evidence in the cause that no other reasonable conclusion could be reached by the jury, except that the injury and death was the result of his own negligence, combining and concurring with that of the defendant, and being a proximate cause of the injury and damage in question. McLean v. Railroad, 81 S. C. 100, 61 S. E. 900, 1071, 18 L. R. A. (N. S.) 763, 128 Am. St. Rep. 892; Lyon v. Railroad, 77 S. C. 329, 58 S. E. 12; Jarrell v. Railroad, 58 S. C. 494, 36 S. E. 910.

As to the point raised by the exceptions that there was evidence of waiver by the defendant of the rule prohibiting employes to ride on the engine, and that, therefore, there was error by the circuit court in directing the verdict, it is to be remarked that, assuming there was evidence of such waiver, this would not necessarily affect the question of contributory negligence under the facts and circumstances. [4] Even if there had been no such rule of the defendant company, the evidence shows that the plaintiff's intestate was guilty of contributory negligence in leaving the comparatively safe place provided for him by the master without any necessity and not in the performance of his duty, and going into a place of known and obviously greater danger. He had been told that it was dangerous to ride on the engine, and the evidence shows that he must have been conscious of the greater danger involved in his being there. The rule is applied in the case of passengers, where one voluntarily rides in a place of obvious danger, without any necessity or emergency requiring it, where he knows or by the exercise of ordinary care should have known that he is not in the place provided for him, that such passenger is guilty of contributory negligence, and cannot recover if his act does contribute to his injury as a proximate cause thereof. McLean v. Railroad, supra. No distinction upon this point can be shown between the case just cited and the one at bar, unless it be found in the fact that in this case the person injured was an employe, and not a passenger. The employe here placed himself in a situation of greater danger entirely of his own volition, without even an invitation from any agent of the defendant, leaving the comparatively safe place provided by his employer, and going to a place of obviously greater danger, and known by him to be such more dangerous position. It cannot be doubted that this act contributed directly to his injury, as a proximate cause thereof, and without which the danger would not have occurred. No reason has been shown or suggested why the same rule applied in the case of the passenger above cited should not also be applicable in this case to the employe. The same rule was applied to employes of a railroad company in the similar case of Railroad v. Jones, 95 U. S. 439, 24 L. Ed. 506, in the case of Railroad Co. v. Myers, 112 Ga. 237, 37 S. E. 439, and in many other cases which are cited in the argument of the respondent.

[5] It is suggested in one of the exceptions that the defendant company is precluded by the provisions of article 9, § 15, of the Constitution of this state from interposing the defense of contributory negligence in this case, but this suggestion is without force, as that provision applies only to the defense of assumption of risks by an employe of a railroad company, and has no reference to the question of contributory negligence here presented. See Bodle v. Railroad, 61 S. C. 468, 39 S. E. 715.

There is therefore no reason either in the nature of the case or in the constitutional provision mentioned for the adoption in the case of an employe upon a railroad train of a rule as to the effect of contributory negligence different from that applied in the case of a passenger upon such train; and it must, therefore, be held that where an employe leaves the place provided for him on the train, without any call of duty or necessity or direction from a superior officer, and voluntarily places himself in a position of obviously greater peril or one known to be more dangerous, and in consequence thereof is injured or killed, even though by the negligence of the railroad company, if it appears that such act of the employé was one proximately contributing to his injury or death and without which the same would not have occurred, such act must be held as in the case of a passenger an act of contributory negligence which would defeat any right of recovery otherwise existing.

The exceptions are overruled, and the judgment of the circuit court is affirmed.

GARY, A. J., and WOODS and HYDRICK, JJ., concur.

(90 S. C. 79)

SAUNDERS v. SOUTHERN RY. CO.

(Supreme Court of South Carolina. Nov. 18, 1911.)

1. CARRIERS (§ 134*)—FREIGHT CLAIMS—ADJUSTMENT—VALUE AT PLACE OF SHIPMENT.

Under provision in a bill of lading that the amount of any loss shall be computed at the value of the property at the time and place of shipment, the invoice price of the goods is not conclusive as to value.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Carriers, Dec. Dig. § 134.*]

2. APPEAL AND ERROR (§ 1010*)—REVIEW—CONCLUSIVENESS OF FINDING.

A finding supported by evidence will not be disturbed on appeal.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Appeal and Error, Cent. Dig. §§ 3979-3982; Dec. Dig. § 1010.*]

3. APPEAL AND ERROR (§ 1051*)—HARMLESS ERROR—ADMISSION OF EVIDENCE.

Where the value of a shipment at the place of shipment was in issue, any error in admitting testimony as to value at the destination was harmless, where the points were not far apart, and the value at the point of shipment was sufficiently established.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Appeal and Error, Cent. Dig. §§ 4161-4170; Dec. Dig. § 1051.*]

4. TRIAL (§ 253*)—FREIGHT CLAIMS—FAILURE TO ADJUST—ACTION FOR PENALTY—INSTRUCTIONS.

In an action against a carrier for failing to adjust a freight loss claim, an instruction, ignoring the proposition that in estimating value at the place of shipment freight charges might be considered, was properly refused.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Trial, Cent. Dig. §§ 613-623; Dec. Dig. § 253.*]

5. CARRIERS (§ 137*)—FREIGHT CLAIMS—FAILURE TO ADJUST—ACTION FOR PENALTY—INSTRUCTIONS.

In an action for failure to adjust a freight loss claim, it was proper to refuse to instruct as to the liability of a gratuitous bailee, where there was no testimony that the company had given notice that it would no longer hold as warehouseman; its liability being either that of carrier or warehouseman.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Carriers, Dec. Dig. § 137.*]

6. CARRIERS (§ 140*)—WAREHOUSEMEN—LIABILITY FOR LOSS.

That a consignee paid freight charges on a shipment and signed the waybill without removing the shipment, which arrived a few days before, did not show release of the company's liability as warehouseman.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Carriers, Cent. Dig. §§ 609½-616; Dec. Dig. § 140.*]

7. CARRIERS (§ 121*)—FREIGHT CLAIMS—FAILURE TO ADJUST—ACTION FOR PENALTY—EVIDENCE.

In an action for the value of goods and for penalty for refusing to adjust a freight loss claim, the fact that the shipment remained in the depot at the destination five days after plaintiff paid the freight charges and signed the waybill does not show contributory negligence, though it might tend to show that the company's liability as a carrier had ceased, and that its liability was only that of a warehouseman.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Carriers, Cent. Dig. §§ 531-536; Dec. Dig. § 121.*]

Appeal from Common Pleas Circuit Court of Sumter County; W. C. Davis, Special Judge.

"To be officially reported."

Action by George M. Saunders against the Southern Railway Company. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendant appeals. Affirmed.

Mark Reynolds, for appellant. L. D. Jennings, for respondent.

JONES, C. J. This action was brought in a magistrate court to recover $16, alleged value of a shipment of goods, consisting of one sack of sugar, one sack of rice, and one box of soap, and $50 penalty for failure to adjust the claim within the time required by law. The magistrate gave judgment for $66, the full amount claimed, and on appeal therefrom the circuit court, Hon. W. C. Davis, special judge, presiding, affirmed the judgment, holding that no prejudicial error had been committed, and that substantial justice had been rendered.

It appears that the goods were shipped at Camden, S. C., by the Camden Wholesale Grocery Company, on March 1, 1909, consigned to plaintiff at Claremont, S. C., and were destroyed in the fire which burned up the Claremont depot and contents on March 9, 1909.

[1] The bill of lading stipulated that "the amount of any loss or damage for which any carrier becomes liable shall be computed at the value of the property at the place and time of shipment," etc. Granting that such a stipulation is binding on a shipper or consignee, there was some testimony that the value of the goods at the place of shipment was equal to the amount claimed therefor, and the circuit court held that the testimony was ample to show that fact. It is true the invoice of the goods showed the invoice price to be $15.15, but the invoice price is not the conclusive test of value. The goods may have been worth more or less than the invoice price, dependent upon the circumstances. Value at the place of shipment means value when delivered to the carrier under contract of shipment, and would certainly allow freight to be added to the invoice price. Kelly v. Southern Ry., 84 S. C. 252, 86 S. E. 198, 137 Am. St. Rep. 842; Des Champs v. Railroad Co., 84 S. C. 360, 86 S. E. 414.

[2] The freight paid was 30 cents. But plaintiff testified that the goods were worth more than $16 in Camden, S. C., the place of shipment. The conclusion of the circuit court that the value of the goods at the place of shipment was as great as claimed, being supported by the evidence, is final; hence the first, second, and third exceptions, which depend upon a contrary view of the facts, cannot be sustained.

[3] The admission of testimony as to the market value of the goods at Claremont, S. C., the point of destination, which is the basis of the fourth and fifth exceptions, can only be sustained as bearing somewhat remotely on the question of value at the place of shipment, since the two places are not far apart, and the conditions creating value may not be materially different; but, waiving this, there was no prejudice in the ruling, since the circuit court has finally adjudged that the evidence showed the value at the place of shipment sufficient to support the claim as filed.

[4] The magistrate refused to charge certain requests of defendant, to the effect that the carrier would not be liable for the value of the property at the place of shipment, and that the consignee cannot add to this the value at Claremont, the destination, and in addition thereto the freight charges. The requests were faulty in not making it clear that in estimating value at the place of shipment the freight charges may be taken into consideration, as shown in the Kelly and Des Champs Cases, supra. Hence the sixth and seventh exceptions cannot be sustained.

[5] The defendant requested the magistrate to instruct the jury as to the rule of liability with respect to a gratuitous bailee, and that such rule required the exercise of only slight care on the part of the bailee, and imposed liability for only gross negligence. The magistrate modified the request, so as to hold the carrier to the duty of ordinary care. There was no testimony to show that the defendant gave notice that it would no longer hold as warehouseman, and would not insist on charges as such; hence there was no basis in the testimony for instruction on the subject of a gratuitous bailee. Brunson & Boatwright v. Railroad, 76 S. C. 13, 56 S. E. 538, 9 L. R. A. (N. S.) 577. Whatever liability existed against defendant in this case was either as carrier, liable as an insurer, or as warehouseman, liable for failure to exercise ordinary care. Hence the charge as given was too favorable for defendant, and the eighth exception must be overruled.

The refusal of the magistrate to charge defendant's fourth request, which is the basis of the ninth exception, does not warrant reversal, because there was no testimony tending to show that the defendant's agent agreed to hold the goods in the depot as a mere matter of personal accommodation and convenience, and at the risk of the consignee, contrary to the rule of the company.

[6] The fact that the plaintiff paid the freight charges and signed the waybill, without immediately removing the goods, which had arrived a few days before the fire, would not tend to show that defendant was not liable as warehouseman for negligence.

[7] The refusal to submit the matter of contributory negligence to the jury, of which complaint is made in the tenth exception, affords no ground for disturbing the judgment, as there was no testimony of any such negligence of plaintiff. The fact that the goods may have remained in the depot from March 4th to March 9th after plaintiff had paid the freight charges and signed the waybill does not tend to show contributory negligence of the plaintiff. This may tend to show that defendant's liability as common carrier had ceased, and that the liability was only as warehouseman.

We do not understand that the circuit court held defendant liable as common carrier, as complained in the eleventh exception. The conclusions of the circuit court were that substantial justice has been done between the parties, and if there was error committed by the magistrate it was harmless. The judgment may well be rested on the theory of defendant's liability as warehouseman.

The judgment of the circuit court is affirmed.

GARY, A. J., and WOODS and HYDRICK, JJ., concur.

(90 S. C. 90)

EDWARDS et al. v. JOHNSON.

(Supreme Court of South Carolina. Oct. 20, 1911.)

1. JOINT ADVENTURES (§ 1*)—CONTRACT—CONSTRUCTION—PARTNERSHIP.

Complainant E., having an option on a large tract of timber land, an agreement was made between complainants and defendant that, if the land should be sold at any time through the efforts of any of them, all profits arising over and above the price paid to the owners should be divided as thereafter specified. After reciting that the price asked by the owners was $125,000, and providing that any commission to E. from the owners out of the price should go to him individually, as compensation for expenses incurred by him and time spent in investigation of the property, it was stipulated that any other profits should be divided in the proportion of one-third to defendant J., and the remaining two-thirds to be equally divided among the complainants; all expenses to be borne by the parties in the same proportion. Held, that the agreement constituted a joint adventure, and that the parties were joint adventurers.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Joint Adventures, Cent. Dig. § 1; Dec. Dig. § 1.*]

2. JOINT ADVENTURES (§ 2*)—SALE OF LAND—AGREEMENT.

Where complainants and defendant entered into an agreement for a joint adventure in the sale of timber land on which complainant E. had an option, but no reference was made to such option in the agreement, the fact that it may have been without consideration and not binding on the signers, or that it might have expired on or before the date when defendant J. obtained a new option to himself from the owners, in violation of the agreement, had no bearing on the question of the existence of the relation of joint adventurers between complainants and defendant, except so far as the alleged expiration of the option might tend to show the term the relation was intended to endure.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Joint Adventures, Cent. Dig. § 2; Dec. Dig. § 2.*]

3. JOINT ADVENTURES (§ 1*)—CONTRACT—CONTINUANCE OF PARTNERSHIP.

Where a contract between complainants and defendant to jointly promote the sale of a large tract of timber land contained no limit as to the duration of the term, except as specified in a provision that the parties would use their best efforts to effect a sale of the property, and if at any time the land should be sold through the efforts of any of the parties there should be a division of the profits, the term of its existence was a matter of inference from the nature of the engagement; the agreement being necessarily construed as terminable at the will of any one of the parties, on notice.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Joint Adventures, Cent. Dig. § 1; Dec. Dig. § 1.*]

4. JOINT ADVENTURES (§ 1*)—CONTRACT—TERMINATION—TRUST RELATION—VIOLATION.

Complainants and defendant entered into an agreement for a joint adventure in the sale of timber land on which complainant E. had an option, which was extended to the close of September 23, 1904. The agreement contained no provision for the termination of the relation, but declared that the parties should use their best efforts to effect a sale, and if the lands at any time should be sold through the efforts of any of the parties then there should be a division of the profits. There being no sale up to September 23, 1904, defendant, before the close of that day, secretly obtained a new option from the owners, and then sold the property to a corporation organized by him to purchase the same, to his great profit. Held that, there having been no notice by any member to terminate the same prior to defendant's acquiring a new option, the relationship continued in existence on and after that date; and hence defendant would be regarded as having obtained the option and sold the property for the benefit of the firm.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Joint Adventures, Cent. Dig. § 1; Dec. Dig. § 1.*]

5. PARTNERSHIP (§ 70*)—DUTY OF PARTNERS—GOOD FAITH.

Each member of a partnership is held to the highest degree of good faith in his dealings with reference to any matter concerning the business of the common engagement, and each partner, being an agent of the firm, must be held, during the existence of the relation, to the same accountability as other trustees in all matters affecting the common interest.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Partnership, Cent. Dig. § 114; Dec. Dig. § 70.*]

6. JOINT ADVENTURES (§ 5*)—PRIVATE INTEREST—EVIDENCE.

In a suit for an accounting of the profits of a joint adventure, evidence held to warrant a finding that defendant, during the time the agreement was in force, not only failed to carry out his part thereof in good faith, but began a course of deception which was intended to promote his secret purpose to prevent a sale of the property in question by the firm, in order that he might thereafter, as he did, obtain an option to purchase the property himself, and obtain for himself the entire profits of such sale.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Joint Adventures, Dec. Dig. § 5.*]

7. ABATEMENT AND REVIVAL (§ 17*)—ELECTION OF OTHER REMEDY—PLEADING.

An election of remedies, being an affirmative defense, must be pleaded in order to be available.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Abatement and Revival, Dec. Dig. § 17.*]

8. ELECTION OF REMEDIES (§ 3*)—REMEDIAL RIGHTS—RECONCILIABILITY.

Complainants and defendant having entered into an agreement to sell a timber tract on which complainant E. had an option, defendant during the continuance of the relation, obtained a new option in his own name, and sold the land to a corporation for his individual benefit. Thereafter one or more of the present complainants brought a suit in the North Carolina state court against defendant J. and others, to which the other complainants in the present action were made parties defendant, and a third action was commenced by one of the present complainants against the same defendants and the corporation which purchased the land in a United States court for the District of North Carolina, seeking an accounting, and also praying relief by way of a judgment in rem. The first action was brought against the original owners of the property, to recover commissions alleged to be due E. on the sale of the property, which were the same commissions recognized by the agreement between complainants and defendants as belonging to E. alone. There was no adjudication nor relief granted on the merits in either of such actions. Held, that they did not constitute an election of remedies, precluding complainants from maintaining a subsequent action against defendant for an accounting of the profits realized on the sale of the property to the corporation, under the rule that no act constitutes a conclusive election, unless the remedial right on which it is based is irreconcilable with the remedial right which the subsequent action is brought to enforce.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Election of Remedies, Cent. Dig. §§ 3, 4; Dec. Dig. § 3.*]

9. JOINT ADVENTURES (§ 5*)—SUIT FOR ACCOUNTING—LACHES.

Where, from the time complainants first received information of defendant's attempted violation of a joint agreement to accomplish the sale of certain lands, complainants had undeviatingly insisted on their right to a participation in the profits, and had repeatedly endeavored to induce defendant to make a satisfactory settlement, and a comparatively brief delay in commencing prior suits had been induced by defendant's conduct and statements, calculated to inspire complainants with the belief that an amicable adjustment of the matter might be reached, complainants' suit for an accounting was not barred by laches, under the rule that, to constitute laches, there must be not merely neglect to enforce a right, where such neglect is not long enough to be a bar under the statute of limitations, but there must also be either a failure to perform a legal duty prejudicial to the defendant, or some act of complainant which operated to mislead the defendant to his prejudice, so that it would be inequitable thereafter to permit the enforcement of the right.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Joint Adventures, Cent. Dig. § 7; Dec. Dig. § 5.*]

10. JOINT ADVENTURES (§ 4*)—ACCOUNTING—TENDER.

Where defendant breached a contract of joint adventure with complainants for the sale of a tract of timber land by obtaining a new option to himself from the owners, and making an individual sale of the property to a corporation, and refused to account to complainants for their share of the profits, defendant was estopped to complain that complainants did not tender him their proportionate shares of the expenses incurred by him.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Joint Adventures, Cent. Dig. §§ 3-6; Dec. Dig. § 4.*]

11. JUDGMENT (§ 253*)—PLEADING—RELIEF DEMANDED—PRAYER.

Where, in a suit for an accounting of profits made by defendant pursuant to a joint adventure, the complaint alleged that complainants' interest in the profits would amount to "at least $100,000," and that complainants were entitled to recover that sum against defendant, and to have him account for any further sums realized by him, and prayed for a judgment "for the sum of $100,000, and that he account for any further sums realized by him," complainants were not limited by such prayer to a judgment for $100,000 but could recover such sum as they appeared to be entitled to on an accounting.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Judgment, Cent. Dig. §§ 443, 444; Dec. Dig. § 253.*]

Appeal from Common Pleas Circuit Court of Greenville County; Robt. Aldrich, Judge.

"To be officially reported."

Action by H. A. Edwards and others against R. E. Johnson. Judgment for complainants for less than the relief demanded, and both parties appeal. Affirmed on defendant's appeal, and reversed on complainants' appeal, with directions.

C. F. Haynsworth, Cothran, Dean & Cothran, and Busbee & Busbee, for plaintiffs. John C. Gittings and Jos. A. McCullough, for defendant.

JONES, C. J. This is an action for an accounting by the defendant to the plaintiffs for their shares in profits alleged to have been realized by the defendant in a certain joint undertaking of the parties, and which the plaintiffs claim to be entitled to recover by reason of the relation of trust alleged to have existed. Both the plaintiffs and the defendant appeal from the decree of Judge Watts, which overruled certain findings and conclusions of the master, and directed judgment in favor of the plaintiffs for the sum of $100,000.

The appeal by the defendant is upon numerous exceptions to the findings of fact and conclusions of law by the circuit judge, and questions the correctness of the decree, not only as to the right of the plaintiffs to judgment against the defendant for any sum whatever, but also as to the amount for which the defendant can in any event be held liable. The plaintiffs' appeal concedes the correctness of the findings and conclusions of the circuit judgment as to all particulars, except as to the amount which they are entitled to recover.

[1] It appears that, on or about the 15th day of June, 1904, an agreement in writing, under seal, was entered into between the parties plaintiff and defendant, whereby they associated themselves together for the purpose of making sale of a certain tract of timber land in Dare county, N. C., containing about 169,000 acres; the said agreement embracing the statement that the said lands "are owned by certain parties who desire to dispose of the same, and who have approached the said H. A. Edwards for the said purpose," and also reciting that "said H. A. Edwards has in turn approached H. J. Haynesworth, R. E. Johnson, and W. J. Thackston with the view of effecting a sale thereof." By this agreement, it was covenanted between the plaintiffs and the defendant "that all of the said property, and, if the said lands should at any time be sold through the efforts of any of the said parties, then all profits arising over and above the price paid by the owners, shall be divided in the manner hereinafter indicated." It may be remarked in passing that it is evident from the context that the words "by the owners," in the clause last above quoted, were intended and should be made to read "to the owners."

After reciting in said agreement that the price asked by the owners for the said lands was the sum of $125,000, and providing that "any commission which the said H. A. Edwards may be able to obtain from the owners out of said price shall go to him individually, this being compensation to him for all expenses heretofore incurred by him and all time spent in investigation of said property," it was stipulated that any other profits should be divided between the parties in the proportion of one-third thereof to the defendant, and the remaining two-thirds to be equally divided among the plaintiffs, and that all expenses incurred in investigating said property and in efforts to make a sale thereof should be borne by the said parties in the same proportions as stipulated for the division of the profits, provided that no such expense should be contracted, unless three of the said parties should consent in advance to the incurring thereof, and that any expense incurred otherwise than with such consent should be borne by the party contracting the same.

Irrespective of any question as to whether the plaintiff Edwards then held any valid option, authorizing the sale by him of the said lands, it is manifest that the provisions of the agreement just recited are such as to constitute a partnership of the plaintiffs in the joint enterprise of endeavoring to sell the lands in question for a price which would net a profit over and above the sum at which the owners were willing to sell. The agreement between the parties substantially was that they would each contribute to the expenses of the joint adventure in certain proportions, and would each share in the profits in a like degree. Beyond doubt, such agreement constituted a partnership in a joint adventure. See 30 Cyc. 366, 371. The test of a partnership is the agreement to engage in a common business or adventure, and to share the profits to be realized therefrom, as well as the expenses or losses incident thereto; and there can be no hesitation in reaching the conclusion, which does not appear to be seriously questioned, that the agreement was of such a character as to establish a partnership. 1 Lindley on Partnership (4th Ed.) pp. 15, 18; Williams, Black & Co. v. Connor, 14 S. C. 621.

[2] The fact that the so-called option obtained by the plaintiff H. A. Edwards from the owners of the property may have been without consideration, and may not have been binding upon the signers thereof, has no bearing upon the question of the existence of the partnership between the plaintiffs and the defendant, as no reference is made to such option in the partnership agreement. Nor does the fact that this option may have expired, on or before the 23d of September, 1904, have any such bearing, further than that it may be taken as tending to show how long the partnership was intended to endure. Even, however, if the evidence as to the options be considered as shedding some light upon the last-mentioned inquiry, it has a tendency to show that the parties contemplated the partnership as possibly extending to and beyond the date named.

[3] By the term of this partnership agreement, no limit of its duration was fixed, other than is contained in the provision that "the said parties will use their best efforts to effect a sale of said property, and, if the said lands should at any time be sold through the efforts of any of said parties," then there should be a division of the profits. As there is no definite statement in the agreement as to the date at which the partnership should determine, the term during which it was to continue in existence is a matter of inference from the nature of the engagement between the partners, the contract provisions, and the facts and circumstances surrounding the parties; but, if no such inference of an intention for its continuance for some period can be so ascertained, then the partnership agreement would necessarily be construed as being determinable at the will of any one of the partners, upon notice. 30 Cyc. 417; 1 Lindley on Partnership, par. 218.

[4] Conceding the existence of the partnership prior to that time, it may be important to determine whether it was still in force on the 23d day of September, 1904, when the acts of the defendant were done in alleged violation of the trust relation. In the first place, it appears that the first option was extended to June 25, 1904, but before the expiration it was extended 90 days from that date, which carried the option to the close of September 23, 1904. Furthermore, language is used in the agreement which tends to show that the parties contemplated that the efforts of the partners in the common enterprise might extend over some considerable period, since the expression used with reference to the time within which a sale of the land might be consummated is the indefinite phrase "at any time," which phrase would seem to involve the meaning by the parties that their agreement should continue in force for such period as might reasonably be necessary to accomplish the purpose of the partnership, or for such time as might reasonably be required to make it appear that such purpose could not be attained.

When the language of the partnership contract is considered with reference to the nature of the engagement undertaken, the limit of the options given by the owners, and the facts and circumstances surrounding the parties, and their acts and conduct at the inception of the common undertaking, it is practically certain that the parties intended that the partnership should endure for a period longer than the 23d of September, 1904, if such longer time should become necessary for the accomplishment of the partnership undertaking. Be this as it may, however, the partnership was nevertheless still in existence on and after the 23d of September, 1904, as, even if it be considered as a partnership for a term entirely indefinite, and therefore determinable at the will of any partner, it had not in fact been determined at the date in question. While a partnership at will is, of course, capable of being brought to an end at the will of any partner, this result can only be accomplished by a notice of such determination, given by the one partner to all of the others, and the partnership continues to exist until such notice is actually given. 30 Cyc. 418; 1 Lindley on Partnership, p. 222.

It is clear from the evidence in the case that no such notice was ever given by defendant; nor was there any intimation to his copartners of intention by him to end the partnership until after September 23, 1904, on which day the acts were done by defendant upon which the plaintiffs seek to hold him to account for the profits realized by him in breach of the partnership engagement. Indeed, there is no evidence that any notice was ever given to plaintiffs by defendant of his intention to end the partnership, and certainly they had no knowledge of any such intention on his part until some time after the date last above named.

On September 23, 1904, during the continuance of the partnership relation, as already found, without the knowledge or consent of the plaintiffs, and in violation of the partnership agreement, acting upon the supposition that there had been an expiration of the time limit of the option therefor originally held by one of the partners and which had become an asset of the partnership, the defendant, R. E. Johnson, secretly procured from the owners a contract for the sale by them to the said defendant of the same tract of land at the price of $125,000, of which amount the sum of $2,000 was agreed to be paid in cash, and was so paid by the defendant; the sum of $3,000 was to be paid on January 1, 1905; and the balance in five equal semiannual payments thereafter. The evidence shows, not only that this contract was made during the continuance of the partnership, as already stated, but that such purchase had been covertly contemplated by the defendant for some period of time prior to the date of the making thereof, and that some arrangements looking to that end had been previously made by him.

It further appeared that the defendant obtained the knowledge of the facts which enabled him to negotiate the contract solely by reason of the information derived by him through his partnership relations with the said plaintiffs. Having thus obtained for himself individually an interest in these timber lands in abuse of the partnership trust and confidence, in violation of his engagement as a member of the partnership, the defendant forthwith proceeded to promote and assist in the formation of a corporation, of which he himself became the largest stockholder, and which was manifestly designed chiefly for the purpose of purchasing the timber lands in question; and, having duly procured the organization of said corporation with a capital stock of $5,000,000, on the 14th day of October, 1904, the defendant transferred and assigned to the said corporation his contract for the purchase of the lands aforesaid, and received in exchange therefor fully paid stock of the said corporation of the par value of $358,000. The proof is by the admissions of the defendant himself, as testified to by witnesses for the plaintiffs, that the stock in this corporation was worth at least par, and that therefore the defendant received from the corporation, as profits on the transaction by which he had obtained the contract for the sale of the said timber lands, the said sum of $358,000, less the sum of $2,000, which he had paid to the original owners in part, and on account of the purchase price.

It is argued on behalf of the defendant that the profits here under consideration were realized by him through his own individual exertions after the termination of the partnership engagement and by the expenditure of his own funds, and that no trust relation then existed, by reason whereof the plaintiffs can be held to share in the profits of this transaction. But the conclusions already announced show that, even if the view of the partnership agreement favorable to the defendant should be entertained, and the partnership were held determinable at will and upon notice by any one partner, yet no such determination thereof had in fact taken place at the time of the acts in question, and that the plaintiffs and the defendant were then and thereafter partners, so as to require the defendant to be held to account for the profits so obtained by him. It is hardly necessary to cite the practically unbroken line of authorities holding that, where partners engage in a common enterprise, each being the agent of the others for the promotion of the common purpose, no one of the partners, during the continuance of the partnership contract, can make a profit to himself in any matter of partnership endeavor, even by the use of his own private funds therein, without being held liable to account to his copartners for his shares of the profits so realized, just as if the undertaking had been in the name of the partnership.

[8] In the work on partnership already mentioned, the rule is well stated as being that a partner "shall never obtain a private advantage at the expense of the firm," and is "bound in all transactions affecting the partnership to do his best for the common body, and to share with his copartners any benefit which he may have been able to obtain from other people, and in which the firm is in honor and conscience entitled to participate." 2 Lindley on Partnership, p. 572; 30 Cyc. 438, 454. There can be no question but that the law holds each member of a partnership to the highest degree of good faith in his dealings with reference to any matter which concerns the business of the common engagement, and that each partner, being the agent of the firm, must be held, during the existence of the relation, to the same accountability as other trustees, in all matters which affect the common interest. Story on Partnership, 174, 178; Mitchell v. Reed, 61 N. Y. 125, 19 Am. Rep. 252; Kimberly v. Arms, 129 U. S. 512, 9 Sup. Ct. 355, 32 L. Ed. 764; Henson v. Byrne (Tex. Civ. App.) 41 S. W. 494.

[9] The finding of the circuit judge is fully sustained by the evidence that the defendant did not act in good faith in the partnership relation with the plaintiffs, but that, during the time when it is admitted that the partnership engagement was in force, the defendant secretly formed the purpose of so acting with reference to the partnership interest as to defeat the object of the partnership, and thereafter to obtain for himself the entire benefit which the firm had hoped to realize from a sale of the lands in question. We are satisfied from the evidence that, during the time the partnership agreement was admittedly in force, the defendant not only failed to carry out his agreement with his copartners in good faith, but that he then began a course of deception which was intended to promote his own secret purpose to prevent a sale of the property by the partnership, in order that he might thereafter be able to do that which eventually he did, and thus obtain for himself the entire profits of such sale. This is shown by the proof as to the secret violation by the defendant, in August, 1904, of the verbal undertaking had by him with his copartners that he would not have any personal interview, correspondence or other dealings with the owners from whom the options had been obtained, by his course of conduct towards his partners thereafter in advising against the purchase by the firm of the property, by the making of arrangements by him for the formation of the corporation which afterwards took title to the lands, and of which he became the principal stockholder, by the fact that, for the second time and without notice to his copartners, he made a journey to the distant city in which the owners of the said lands resided, appearing there on the very day on which he calculated that the option held by the partners would expire, by his making a contract for such purchase on that day in his own name, and by his procuring on that day the preparation and signature by widely scattered corporators of a petition for a charter for the very corporation which shortly afterwards became the purchaser of these lands. In view of these facts, there can be no doubt that, so far from using "his best efforts to effect a sale of the said property" for the benefit of the partnership, as stipulated in the partnership agreement, he had been theretofore and was then engaged in exerting himself solely and entirely in the promotion of his own private ends, with the purpose and intention of depriving them of their shares in the profits to be made by a sale of the lands in question. In equity and good conscience, he cannot be permitted to retain for his own use profits so acquired, but must be held to account for the same precisely to the same extent as if they had been obtained in the name and for the benefit of the partnership. See Trice v Comstock, 121 Fed. 620, 57 C. C. A. 646, 61 L. R. A. 176; Winn v. Dillon, 27 Miss. 494; Plugger v. Overysell, 11 Mich. 222; Grumbley v. Webb, 44 Mo. 444, 100 Am. Dec. 304; Lockart v. Rollins, 2 Idaho (Hash.) 540, 21 Pac. 413; Gardner v. Ogden, 22 N. Y. 327, 78 Am. Dec. 192; Davis v. Hamlin, 108 Ill. 39, 48 Am. Rep. 541.

The cases of Kayser v. Maugham, 8 Colo. 232, 6 Pac. 803, Kennedy v. Porter, 109 N. Y. 526, 17 N. E. 426, and Lafferty v. Lafferty, 174 Pa. 536, 34 Atl. 203, are not in conflict with the proposition just announced, as those cases proceed upon the finding that the trust relation had ended before the acts alleged to be in violation thereof were done, and that there had been no breach of good faith during the continuance of the trust relation.

Our conclusion is also sustained by the application of practically the same principles in the cases of Johnson v. Hayward, 74 Neb. 157, 103 N. W. 1058, 107 N. W. 884, 5 L. R. A. (N. S.) 118, Wood v. Rabe, 96 N. Y. 414, 48 Am. Rep. 645, Rose v. Hayden, 85 Kan. 106, 10 Pac. 554, 57 Am. Rep. 153, Butler v. Prentise, 158 N. Y. 49, 52 N. E. 652, Hayward v. Leeson, 176 Mass. 310, 57 N. E. 656, 49 L. R. A. 725, and in other cases in the circuit decree.

[7] But it is urged by the defendant that the plaintiffs were put to an election as to whether they would seek their remedy by an action for an accounting of profits, or by a suit to impress the lands with a trust in their favor, or to have the stock in the said corporation issued to the defendant decreed to be held in trust for the benefit of the partnership; and that by the bringing of certain actions in North Carolina, both in the courts of that state and of the United States, in which the latter remedies were sought before the commencement of this action, the plaintiffs have already elected remedies inconsistent with that which is prayed in the suit at bar. As, however, no such defense was pleaded by answer in this case, it would be sufficient to say that no such issue is made by the pleadings; and hence no such question is presented for determination. The defense being an affirmative one, the requirement of the Code is imperative that the same must be set up by answer, in order to be available to the defendant. See Code of Civil Procedure 1902, § 170; L. Enc. Pl. & Pr. 837; Henry v. Herrington, 193 N. Y. 218, 86 N. E. 29, 20 L. R. A. (N. S.) 249; Roberge v. Winne, 144 N. Y. 709, 39 N. E. 631. The decree upon this point should therefore be affirmed for the reasons urged by the plaintiffs in their additional grounds in support of the same.

[8] Waiving this consideration, however, it appears from the record that there is no real inconsistency between the remedy sought in the present action and that which some of the parties plaintiff herein endeavored to invoke in the actions heretofore commenced in the courts of such sister state and of the United States; nor was any adjudication had or relief granted upon the merits in any of said former actions. Indeed, it appears that one of the two actions, brought by one or more of the present plaintiffs in the state courts of North Carolina against the defendant, Johnson, and others, and to which the other plaintiff or plaintiffs in the present action were made parties defendant, as well as the third action, commenced by one of the present plaintiffs against the same defendants and the corporation above mentioned in a United States court for the District of North Carolina, were suits seeking substantially the same relief which is sought in the present action, the primary remedy which was invoked in each of the said suits being an accounting, although relief was also prayed by way of a judgment in rem; while the first action was brought by the said H. A. Edwards alone against the parties who had given him the option for the sale of the said lands, and was for the recovery of commissions alleged to be due to him on the sale thereof, being the same commissions recognized by the said partnership contract between plaintiffs and defendants as belonging to said H. A. Edwards alone. As is said in 16 Cyc. 261, "no act is decisive, so as to constitute a conclusive election, unless the remedial right upon which such act is based is irreconcilable with the remedial right which the subsequent action or suit is brought to enforce." It is plain from the record that the remedies invoked in the three actions mentioned were not inconsistent with the relief demanded in this suit.

[9] The appeal of the defendant also assigns error in the circuit decree in the failure to hold that the plaintiffs are barred by laches from now maintaining this suit; such laches being claimed to consist in the delay in bringing this action, and also in the failure of the plaintiffs to tender in due time to the defendant any part of the expenses said to have been incurred by the latter in making sale of the property in controversy.

In order to constitute laches, there must be shown, not merely neglect for a time to enforce a legal or equitable right, where such neglect is for a period short of that which is a bar under the statute of limitations, but it must further be made to appear that such delay was accompanied either by a failure to perform some legal duty, whereby prejudice has resulted to the person pleading such neglect, or that such delay was accompanied by some act on the part of the person so negligent, which operated to mislead the person pleading such neglect, to his prejudice to such an extent that it would be unjust and inequitable thereafter to permit such negligent party to enforce such right. See Demuth v. Old Town Bank, 85 Md. 315, 37 Atl. 266, 60 Am. St. Rep. 822; Ripley v. Seligman, 88 Mich. 177, 50 N. W. 143; Selby v. Abithoe, 4 Maule & S. 462; Hellams v. Pryor, 64 S. C. 296, 42 S. E. 106.

The evidence in this case entirely and completely fails to establish the claim that the plaintiffs were guilty of such laches. The evidence shows that, from the time of first receiving information of the action of the defendant in the matter of making a contract on his own account with reference to said lands, the plaintiffs undeviatingly insisted upon their right to a participation in the profits, and repeatedly endeavored to induce the defendant to make a satisfactory settlement. Even the comparatively brief delay in commencing the suits in North Carolina appears to have been induced by the conduct and statements of the defendant himself, which seem to have been calculated to inspire the hope and belief on the part of the plaintiffs that an amicable adjustment of the matter might be reached.

[10] It was the duty of the defendant to fully account to the plaintiffs for their shares of the profits realized in the transaction by which the lands were disposed of by him, and to pay over to the plaintiffs their respective shares thereof. Failing to do this, it does not lie in his mouth to complain that the plaintiffs did not tender him their proportionate shares of the expenses incurred by him in that transaction. As is shown in the circuit decree, no genuine offer of settlement was ever made by the defendant, and, although it seems that one or more of the plaintiffs were for a time misled by him into the belief that he would ultimately make a fair accounting and settlement, no showing whatever has been made by the defendant of any action on the part of the plaintiffs, or of any negligent delay on their part, by reason whereof he was misled to his prejudice. The decree of the circuit court is regarded as being correct as to all material findings of fact, and as being substantially free from error in its conclusions of law as to the rights of the parties in the relations between them as therein considered, and should be affirmed in all the particulars in which the same is questioned by the exceptions on the part of the defendant.

[11] It remains to consider the appeal of the plaintiffs, by which it is averred that there was error in the conclusion of the circuit court that, by reason of the terms of the prayer for relief of the complaint herein, the plaintiffs were precluded from recovering against the defendant any sum in excess of $100,000; whereas, as plaintiffs contend, there was no such limitations of the amount sought to be recovered in the prayer of the complaint. By their exceptions to said decree, the plaintiffs further contended that, under the findings of fact of the circuit decree, judgment should have been rendered in their favor and against the defendant for the sum of $237,333.20, instead of the sum so found by the said decree.

An examination of the complaint will show that it is therein alleged that the interest of the plaintiffs in the proceeds and profits realized by the defendant in the transaction in controversy would amount to "at least $100,000," and that it was therein further averred that "plaintiffs are entitled to recover said sum against the said R. E. Johnson, and are entitled to have the defendant account for any further sums realized by him." The prayer of the said complaint for judgment against the said defendant is "for the sum of $100,000, and that he account for any further sums realized by him."

It is apparent, therefore, both from the terms of the allegation as to the accountability of the defendant and from the wording of the prayer for relief, that the circuit judge was in error in the conclusions that

"the prayer of the complaint, after asking for an accounting, seeks judgment for $100,000," and that "the plaintiffs are therefore limited in their recovery to that sum."

The circuit judge found substantially that the defendant realized a profit of $356,000 upon the purchase and sale of the timber lands, the same being the cash value of the $358,000 received in stock therefor by defendant, less the $2,000 cash paid by him on the purchase price of the lands, and was inclined to allow plaintiffs their full pro rata share of that sum, but under his construction of the complaint limited recovery to $100,000.

After careful consideration, this court is satisfied that the amount of recovery allowed by the circuit court is fully supported by the testimony, and is well vindicated by the able circuit decree, so far as it goes. We hesitate, however, to give absolute judgment beyond the recovery awarded by the circuit decree, in the absence of a further and fuller showing as to the value of the stock or property acquired by defendant as the result of the transaction under consideration.

The judgment of this court is that the decree of the circuit court be affirmed to the extent of the relief granted, with leave to plaintiffs, if they be so advised, to prosecute this proceeding for further relief in accordance with the prayer of the complaint.

GARY, A. J., and WOODS and HYDRICK, JJ., concur.

(90 S. C. 87)

DU BOSE v. DU BOSE et al.

(Supreme Court of South Carolina. Nov. 20, 1911.)

PROCESS (§ 98*)—SERVICE—PUBLICATION—ORDER FOR PUBLICATION—SIGNATURE BY CLERK.

An affidavit and order for publication of summons were folded together, and were in the usual form, except that the clerk neglected to subscribe the order until after the publication. He, however, indorsed the character of the paper and the date of filing on the back thereof, to which he signed his name. Held, that such indorsement did not constitute a signing of the order, and, there being no signature thereon by the clerk prior to publication, the service was void.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Process, Cent. Dig. §§ 121-124; Dec. Dig. § 98.*]

Appeal from Common Pleas Circuit Court of Abbeville County; R. C. Watts, Judge.

"To be officially reported."

Action by Porter Du Bose against Major Du Bose and others. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendants appeal. Reversed.

J. Frank Clinkscales, for appellants. Wm. N. Graydon and J. M. Nickles, for respondents.

WOODS, J. The plaintiff brings this action for the purpose of foreclosing five mortgages covering four tracts of land situated in Abbeville county. Four of these mortgages were made by Major Du Bose, defendant herein, the plaintiff, his brother, and William Du Bose, their father, as co-mortgagors, and were later assigned to the plaintiff, Porter Du Bose. The fifth mortgage was executed by Major Du Bose in favor of the plaintiff. The defendants Boykin Tate and Janie Tate are joined in the cause as the heirs and distributees of Sara Du Bose, widow of William Du Bose, deceased, and R. F. Morris is made defendant as a junior mortgagee. The remaining defendants are the heirs of William Du Bose. The defendants Major Du Bose and R. F. Morris live in this state; the remaining defendants reside in Georgia. After the filing of the summons and complaint and a lis pendens, plaintiff applied to the clerk of the court for Abbeville county for an order allowing service to be made by publication upon the nonresident defendants. The affidavit contained the usual allegations, and the order of publication was in the usual form, except that the clerk neglected to sign it at the foot. The two papers, however, were folded together, and on the back of the order the clerk made this indorsement: "State of South Carolina, County of Abbeville. Court of Common Pleas. Porter Du Bose, Plaintiff, v. Major Du Bose et al., Defendants. Affidavit and order of publication. Wm. N. Graydon and J. M. Nickles, plaintiff's Attorneys. Filed December 16, 1910, J. L. Perrin, C. C. C. P." The cause was referred to the master to take testimony, and on March 10, 1911, a decree of Hon. R. C. Watts, circuit judge, was filed, affirming the report of the master, and ordering a sale of the various tracts of land and the application of the proceeds to the satisfaction of the mortgages.

On March 25, 1911, notice was served on plaintiff's attorneys, by J. Frank Clinkscales, Esq., representing the nonresident defendants, of a motion to set aside the judgment entered in the case, on the ground that these defendants "have not been properly served with summons in the above-entitled action." The notice was accompanied by an affidavit of J. L. Perrin, clerk of court, stating that the order for publication of the summons had been signed by him on March 23, 1911. Affidavits were also filed from Elizabeth Tate and Jake Du Bose, two of the nonresident defendants, in which they deny that they have ever received notice of the bringing of the action, and allege further that they have a good and valid defense to the suit. Judge Watts filed an order, on March 31, 1911, refusing to set aside the summons and open the judgment, and from this order the movants appeal.

The first question is whether the failure of the clerk to sign the order of publication was a fatal defect, which was not cured by his indorsement on the back of the paper, or by his signature after publication had been made. The rule that the statutory requirements as to constructive service by publication must be strictly carried out does not mean that any irregularity, however slight, is fatal. But it seems clear that the signing of the order after publication was unavailing, because the statute expressly requires that the order shall be the basis of the publication. We cannot help thinking that it is yielding much to technicality to hold that the indorsement, written on the back and signed by the clerk, that the paper was an order of publication was not in substance a signing of the order, within the meaning of the statute. A paper, in form a decree of a judge, is in fact his decree, if the judge, omitting to sign at the foot, writes and signs a statement on the back that it is his decree. But it has been decided that, when an officer is performing the ministerial duty of issuing a paper on compliance with certain conditions prescribed by law, his signature at the foot of the paper he intended to sign is necessary to its validity. In Davis v. Sanders, 40 S. C. 507, 19 S. E. 138, a magistrate, intending to "issue" a warrant of arrest, inadvertently failed to sign at the foot of the paper, but indorsed it: "The State of South Carolina, County of Sumter. The State v. Murray Davis, Lafayette Davis, Joshua Davis. Arrest warrant. Offense, resisting an officer. C. C. Manning, trial justice. Officer, sheriff. Date Jan. 27, 1893." The court held that the warrant was not "issued" as required by law, and conferred no authority on the sheriff to make the arrest, because the magistrate did not sign at the foot as he intended to do, and because he did not intend the indorsement on the back as his signature of the warrant. This authority is controlling, for in this case, also, it is evident that the clerk intended to sign at the foot, and did not intend the signature on the back to be his signature of the order. The case of Davis v. Sanders, it is true, involved a warrant of arrest, but the principle and rule on which it was decided does not apply more strongly to a criminal proceeding than to the methods of acquiring jurisdiction over nonresidents without personal service of the summons.

The judgment of this court is that the judgment of the circuit court be reversed.

JONES, C. J., GARY, A. J., and HYDRICK, J., concur.

(69 W. Va. 559)

SMITH'S ADM'R v. NELSON BROS. & CO.
(Supreme Court of Appeals of West Virginia.
Oct. 24, 1911.)

(Syllabus by the Court.)

1. PROCESS (§ 6*)—AMENDED DECLARATION—NECESSITY.

Where an amended declaration, not presenting a new cause of action, is filed by leave of the court, and remanded to rules, process thereon is unnecessary, and it may be regularly proceeded with by rule to plead, either to an office judgment, or an issue, without service of summons to answer the same.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Process, Cent. Dig. § 5; Dec. Dig. § 6.*]

2. JUDGMENT (§ 17*)—AMENDED DECLARATION—NECESSITY OF SERVICE—REMOVAL FROM COUNTY.

The removal by defendants to a county other than that in which suit is brought, after service of process on them to answer the original declaration, and where they then resided, will not deprive the court of jurisdiction to proceed to judgment against them on such amended declaration, though served with new process, directed to and served on them by the sheriff of the county to which they may have removed, and their plea in abatement to such amended declaration should be rejected, or stricken out.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Judgment, Dec. Dig. § 17.*]

Error to Circuit Court, Randolph County.

Action by Thaddeus Pritt, Sheriff, etc., against R. L. Nelson and others, partners as Nelson Bros. & Co. Judgment for defendants and plaintiff brings error. Reversed and remanded.

W. H. Griffith and Cunningham & Stallings, for plaintiff in error.

MILLER, J. In an action on the case, brought in Randolph County, for damages for breaking and entering the plaintiff's close, and cutting down and removing the growing timber, plaintiff had leave, in term, without objection by defendants, duly served with process on the original declaration, in the county where suit was brought, and appearance thereto by them, to file an amended declaration, and on the filing thereof the same was remanded to rules, as the order recited, "for process thereon."

After process on the original declaration was executed, and before process issued on the amended declaration, defendants removed from Randolph to Harrison County, and the process on the amended declaration, directed to the Sheriff of that County, was executed upon them there.

On the return day of the writ on the amended declaration, defendants appeared at rules, and filed a plea in abatement, alleging that before and at the commencement of said action upon the amended declaration, and at the time of the issuance of the summons thereon, they were and continued to be residents of Harrison and not Randolph County, and that said process, directed to the Sheriff of Harrison County, had been served upon them in that county, and not in the county of Randolph.

*For other cases see same topic and section NUMBER in Dec. Dig. & Am. Dig. Key No. Series & Rep'r Indexes

On the trial of said plea, and the motion of the plaintiff to strike out the same, the motion was overruled, and the further judgment of the court was, that the process on the amended declaration be quashed and that the plaintiff's action upon his amended declaration be and the same was dismissed. The present writ of error is to review that judgment for alleged errors therein.

Defendants below, defendants in error, have entered no appearance in this court, and no brief or argument had been filed on their behalf. The amended declaration, which the plaintiff was permitted to file, is for identically the same cause of action pleaded in the original declaration, and no point seems to have been made in the court below, and none is made here, on that score.

[1, 2] The ruling question presented, therefore, is, was process on the amended declaration necessary to give the court below jurisdiction of the parties? We believe it to be the practice in some counties to award process on amended declarations, but whether this is necessary to maintain, or give jurisdiction of the parties, properly served with process on the original declaration, we do not find has ever been adjudicated in this state, but in Virginia and in other states is has.

Back in 1840, Judge Tucker, in Couch v. Fretwell, 10 Leigh (Va.) 578, said: "The judgment in this case is altogether irregular. The cause having been remanded to the rules, to enable the plaintiff to amend his declaration, ought to have been there regularly proceeded in, upon the filing of the declaration, by rule to plead, &c., to an office judgment or an issue. Parties indeed may amend their pleadings in court, where they are willing and consent to make up an issue there; but there can be no judgment by default for want of a plea, except at the rules." The judgment below was reversed and the case remanded, with direction to the court below to send it back to rules for proceedings there to be had in accordance with the directions given. There was no intimation that process on the amended declaration was necessary.

In Norfolk & W. Ry. Co. v. Sutherland, 105 Va. 545, 54 S. E. 465, a later Virginia case, it is distinctly decided that on remanding a cause to rules, and after the filing of an amended declaration it may be regularly proceeded with, by rule to plead, either to an office judgment or an issue, without the service of a summons to answer the amended declaration, and the court, at page 466, says: "The reasons in favor of the practice that new process is not necessary in such a case seem to us to be much stronger than those against it. The defendant is already a party to the action and in court. The object of the writ of summons is to apprise the defendant of the nature of the proceedings against him. New River Min. Co. v. Painter, 100 Va. 507, 509, 42 S. E. 300, and cases cited. Where he is in court and knows what the proceeding is, why should the plaintiff be put to the expense and delay of having new process issued and served upon the defendant to inform him of what he already knows? Again, if it be necessary to issue and serve process upon him to answer the amended declaration, it might frequently result in defeating the plaintiff's action entirely, because the defendant might be a nonresident of the state, upon whom such process could not be served; or he might be a resident of another county or city of the state upon whom process could not be executed, under the prohibition of section 3220 of the Code of 1904 that process against a defendant to answer any action brought under section 3215 of the Code of 1904 shall not be directed to an officer of another county or corporation than that wherein the action is brought, except in certain cases.

"The proper practice in such a case is, we think, for the plaintiff to file his amended declaration at the first rules after the order of the court remanding the case to rules, and then, without new process, for the cause to be regularly proceeded in at rules in the manner provided by sections 3239 and 3240 of the Code of 1904. See Couch v. Fretwell, supra; Alvis v. Johnson [1 Va. Dec. 381], supra; 1 Rob. Pr. (old) 233; 4 Min. Inst. (3rd Ed.) 684." Mr. Minor says, at the page cited by the Virginia Court: "Of this rule or order (the rule or order to plead entered at rules) the defendant, in all actions, including ejectment, is bound to take notice, as he is also of all that passes in court or at rules, after he has been once summoned."

The rule in Virginia is the same in other jurisdictions. In 3 Am. & Eng. Enc. L. & P. 799, citing in notes many cases, it is said: "The rule seems to be well settled that where parties have once been brought under the jurisdiction of the court, they are there for all purposes, and amendments of the pleadings thereafter will not require a new service of process. This rule is especially applicable where the amendment is in effect merely formal in its nature and does not set up any new cause of action or work any substantial change in the cause of action already alleged. But it has been said that where the amendment touches a matter of substance, the court may order new process to be served."

Among the cases cited in the notes in 3 Enc. L. & P. is Stevens v. Thompson, 5 Kan. 305. The court in this case says, apropos to the case at bar: "The reissue and service of the summons can have no bearing on this question (the question whether Stevens was in default), for the summons had already performed its functions of bringing the parties before the court and it can serve no other purpose." Our statute like the Kansas statute permits amendments by plaintiff of his declaration or bill at any time before or after appearance by defendant, if substantial justice will be promoted thereby.

Section 12, chapter 125, Code 1906, is somewhat different from the statute of Virginia, at the time of Couch v. Fretwell, supra, and from the present statute of that state, covering the subject of amendments to pleadings, but so far as our statute relates to amendments allowed by the court in term, and of which a party must at all times take notice, it is not materially different. It differs from the statute of the old state in providing that "The plaintiff may also at any time before or after the appearance of the defendant, in the vacation of the court wherein the suit is pending, file in the clerk's office, with the other papers in the cause, an amended declaration or bill, supplemental bill, or bill of revivor; whereupon the clerk shall issue a summons against the defendant, requiring him to plead to, or answer such amended declaration or bill." Clearly this provision was intended to cover amendments made in the vacation of the court, without the previous leave of the court, and of which a party would not be presumed to have notice. Another statute, section 8, chapter 131, Code 1906, permits amendments even at the trial, for variance between the evidence and allegations or recitals, and the practice in such cases is, where substantial justice will be promoted thereby, to permit such amendments, without continuance, or intermission in the trial, unless such continuance is thereby rendered necessary.

The judgment below will be reversed, and the case remanded to the circuit court, with directions to re-instate the same on the docket, to strike out defendants plea in abatement to the amended declaration, and to be further proceeded with, in accordance with the directions given, and further according to rules governing courts of law.

(69 W. Va. 544)

GRAY et al. v. MANKIN.

(Supreme Court of Appeals of West Virginia.
Oct. 24, 1911.)

(Syllabus by the Court.)

1. JUDGMENT (§ 111*) — DEFAULT — OFFICE JUDGMENT.

It is only in actions wherein no writ of inquiry is requisite that office judgment becomes final so as to bar counter affidavit and plea at a subsequent term.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Judgment, Cent. Dig. § 202; Dec. Dig. § 111.*]

2. APPEAL AND ERROR (§ 907*) — REVIEW — PRESUMPTIONS.

When the record does not exhibit a counter affidavit, tendered and refused in a case in which counter affidavit is admissible under Code 1906, c. 125, § 46, it must be presumed that the same was so defective as to justify the refusal.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Appeal and Error, Dec. Dig. § 907.*]

3. APPEAL AND ERROR (§ 1040*) — REVIEW — HARMLESS ERROR.

Refusal to consider a properly interposed demurrer cannot be ground for reversal when the record shows that the demurrer was not well taken.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Appeal and Error, Cent. Dig. §§ 4089-4105; Dec. Dig. § 1040.*]

4. APPEAL AND ERROR (§ 1073*) — REVIEW — HARMLESS ERROR.

A judgment entered as upon an office judgment confirmed, in a case in which a writ of inquiry is proper, while technically irregular as to procedure, is not reversible when the record shows that no jury was demanded and the same judgment must have been entered on inquiry of damages.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Appeal and Error, Cent. Dig. §§ 4240-4247; Dec. Dig. § 1073.*]

Error to Circuit Court, Raleigh County.

Action by W. R. Gray and others against Crockett Mankin. Judgment for plaintiffs, and defendant brings error. Affirmed.

Matheny & Hutchinson, for plaintiff in error. W. H. Rardin, for defendants in error.

ROBINSON, J. By this writ of error Mankin seeks to reverse a judgment against him, in favor of W. R. and J. E. Gray, as partners. The action is one in debt. With the declaration plaintiffs filed an affidavit of the amount claimed, pursuant to Code 1906, c. 125, § 46. The trial court, evidently considering that there was a final office judgment by reason of the filing of this affidavit, refused to receive a demurrer to the declaration which defendant tendered at a term subsequent to that at which an office judgment in the case would become final, if a final one were proper. The court also refused to allow the defendant to file his counter affidavit and set off account, both of which were tendered for the first time at that subsequent term. No jury being demanded by either party, the court entered judgment for the amount claimed in plaintiffs' affidavit, as upon an office judgment confirmed.

On proper exceptions saved, defendant assigns that it was error to refuse consideration of his demurrer to the declaration, to refuse the filing of his counter affidavit and set off account, and to enter judgment as upon an office judgment confirmed. Some other assignments of error are made, but they are so clearly untenable that we need not notice them in this opinion.

[1, 2] There was no such final office judgment in the case that a counter affidavit could not be filed at the subsequent term. The action was debt on a mere open account, not on a bond or writing, and a writ of inquiry was requisite. Code 1906, c. 125, § 45;

4 Minor's Inst. (3d Ed.) 724; Hunt v. McRea, 6 Munf. (Va.) 458; Shelton v. Welsh, 7 Leigh (Va.) 175. In such case a defendant may file his counter affidavit and plea at any time before the writ of inquiry is executed. Carey Mfg. Co. v. Watson, 53 W. Va. 189, 52 S. E. 515. It is only in cases wherein no writ of inquiry is necessary that the office judgment becomes final so as to bar a counter affidavit and plea at a subsequent term. Still, though this case was one for a counter affidavit, we cannot say that the court erred in not admitting the counter affidavit tendered. The record does not exhibit that counter affidavit. Its exclusion may have been justified on tenable ground other than the untenable one that it came too late. It may not have been a good and sufficient affidavit—one in compliance with the statute. Defendant does not show us by the record that the counter affidavit was one that should have been admitted. In the absence of that showing, we must presume that its exclusion was warranted. And, of course defendant was not entitled to file his offset account until he had filed a sufficient counter affidavit. The exclusion of the one on proper ground was the warranted exclusion of the other.

[3] However, defendant insists that his demurrer to the declaration was not a plea to issue and should have been considered, counter affidavit or no counter affidavit. That may be true. We need not digress on this subject. It suffices to say that if the point is well taken, no harm came to defendant. A careful consideration of the declaration convinces us that a demurrer thereto, if it had been admitted, would rightfully have been overruled. Defendant suffered no prejudice in the exclusion of his demurrer. The declaration is sufficient.

[4] Technically, we may say, it was not proper to enter a judgment in this case as upon an office judgment confirmed. The case was not of the character to warrant that procedure. It demanded the execution of a writ of inquiry. But the execution of such writ was all that remained to be done when defendant, so far as we can see from the record, was properly denied the filing of a counter affidavit. The amount due plaintiffs remained to be determined by executing the writ of inquiry which the nature of the case made requisite therein. That amount was determinable by plaintiffs' affidavit since nothing else was offered as on inquiry of damages. No jury was required on this inquiry, since the record discloses no demand for one by either party. Code 1906, c. 121, § 7. The judgment which the court did enter was exactly the amount claimed by plaintiffs in their affidavit. So the same judgment was reached by the court that it must have reached under the form of executing a writ of inquiry. Defendant has not been prejudiced by styling the judgment one on an office judgment confirmed, since the same judgment would have been entered against him on an inquiry of damages. The court virtually executed an inquiry of damages and followed a finding therein to judgment.

There is no error in the record prejudicial to defendant. The judgment will be affirmed.

(69 W. Va. 547)

STATE v. WELCH.

(Supreme Court of Appeals of West Virginia.
Oct. 24, 1911.)

(Syllabus by the Court.)

1. WEAPONS (§ 17*)—CARRYING WEAPONS—ELEMENTS OF OFFENSE.

An indictment for carrying a revolver, under Code 1906, c. 148, § 7, as amended by Acts 1909, c. 51 (Code Supp. 1909, c. 148, § 7 [section 4338]), must charge that the act was done without a state license therefor.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Weapons, Cent. Dig. §§ 20-33; Dec. Dig. § 17.*]

2. INDICTMENT AND INFORMATION (§ 70*)—REQUISITES OF ACCUSATION—DIRECTNESS AND POSITIVENESS.

In an indictment every fact necessary to constitute the crime intended to be charged must be directly and positively alleged.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Indictment and Information, Cent. Dig. § 192; Dec. Dig. § 70.*]

3. INDICTMENT AND INFORMATION (§ 93*)—REQUISITES OF ACCUSATION—UNLAWFUL NATURE OF ACT.

The omission of essential matter in the description of the offense intended to be charged in an indictment cannot be supplied by a charge therein that the act was committed "unlawfully."

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Indictment and Information, Cent. Dig. §§ 266, 267; Dec. Dig. § 93.*]

Error to Circuit Court, McDowell County.

Frank Welch was convicted of carrying a revolver, and brings error. Reversed, and defendant discharged.

Cook, Litz & Howard, for plaintiff in error.
James A. Seaman, for the State.

ROBINSON, J. Frank Welch complains that a judgment sentencing him to fine and imprisonment for carrying a revolver is erroneous. Our consideration of the case leads us to the conclusion that his motion to quash the indictment should have been sustained. The trial court clearly erred in refusing to quash the indictment. No violation of law is charged against him.

[1] The indictment merely charges that Welch, on a certain day, in the county in which the presentment was made, "did unlawfully carry about his person certain revolvers and other pistols, against the peace and dignity of the state." Now, these words do not make a statement that Welch transgressed the law; for, under the statute, one may carry a revolver or pistol in a legal way. The charge in the indictment does not state facts sufficient to show that Welch carried a revolver illegally. It simply says that he carried a revolver. He could carry a revolver and not violate any law, if he had a state license under the law now in force, and which was in force at the time alleged in the indictment. Acts 1909, c. 51; Code Supp. 1909, § 4338. The indictment does not, by a charge of facts, show whether he carried a revolver legally or illegally. In failing to state facts showing that Welch illegally carried a revolver, the indictment is bad. An indictment under the statute cited must allege that the accused carried the weapon without having a state license so to do. If it does not allege the fact that the accused had no state license, it clearly does not state a case against him; for, the fact of the absence of a state license is an affirmative element in the description of the offense against which the statute provides. The words "without a state license therefor" are plainly used in the statute in describing the offense. The want of a state license is the very gist of the offense. Indeed the statutory offense cannot be charged without using these words. The words "without a state license therefor" are really not used in the statute as an exception or proviso, but as words directly descriptive of the offense. Were we, however, to consider the words as an exception or proviso in the act prohibiting the carrying of weapons, then the well known rule of criminal pleading would apply: "Where the statute has exceptions, provisos, and the like, the indictment on it must aver the contrary of those the negative whereof constitutes an affirmative element in the offense." Bishop, Crim. Pro. (3d Ed.) § 631.

[2] A charge cannot be made in an indictment by mere implication, intendment, or conclusion. Facts constituting an offense must be stated. Every fact necessary to constitute the crime must be directly and positively alleged. 22 Cyc. 293, 326; 1 Bishop, Crim. Pro. (3d Ed.) 519. In an indictment for the offense of carrying a revolver, there are two very essential facts that must be stated. One of these facts is that the accused carried a revolver, and the other is that he had no state license so to do. Unless both facts are stated, no crime is charged, for it takes both to constitute the violation of the law as described by the terms of the statute.

[3] The use of the word "unlawfully" does not make the charge sufficient. It has been suggested that this indictment states that the accused unlawfully carried a revolver, and that, therefore, it indirectly charges that he had no state license. But no such indirect method of accusation will do. "The omission of material matter in the description of an offense cannot be supplied by a charge that the act was committed 'contrary to law,' or 'unlawfully,' or 'against the peace,' etc." 22 Cyc. 326. In point are also the following: 2 Hale's Pleas of the Crown (1st Amer. Ed.) 169; Chitty on Crim. Law (5th Amer. Ed.) 281; State v. Helm, 6 Mo., side page 263; Redfield v. State, 24 Tex. 133; State v. Casey, 45 Me. 435; State v. Stroud, 99 Iowa, 16, 68 N. W. 450. In Roberts' Case, 10 Leigh (Va.) 686, it was held that the indictment was defective in not stating essential facts constituting the crime, though the charge was that the act was "unlawfully" done. And in Bishop's Case, 13 Grat. (Va.) 785, it was held that the words "contrary to law" could not supply an omission in stating facts material to show that an offense had been committed. Judge Lee there said: "These terms in an indictment serve to preclude all legal cause of excuse for the act imputed, but never to enlarge or extend the force and effect of those employed to describe it so as to make the act unlawful when it is not so by the description itself."

The judgment against the defendant will be reversed, the verdict on which it is based set aside, the indictment quashed, and the defendant discharged.

(69 W. Va. 611)

MORGAN v. MOORE et al.
(Supreme Court of Appeals of West Virginia.
Oct. 24, 1911.)

(Syllabus by the Court.)

MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS (§ 980*)—TAX SALE
—FAILURE TO RECORD TAX LIST.

Points of syllabus in Ritchie Lumber Co. v. Nutter, 66 W. Va. 444, 66 S. E. 646, reaffirmed and applied.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Municipal Corporations, Dec. Dig. § 980.*]

Appeal from Circuit Court, Wood County.
Bill by George P. Morgan against S. P. Moore and others. Decree for plaintiff, and S. P. Moore appeals. Affirmed.

Hilteshew & McDougale and James A. Watson, for appellant. F. P. Moats, for appellee.

WILLIAMS, P. This is a suit to enjoin W. E. Stout, clerk of the county court of Wood county, from making a tax deed to S. P. Moore, claimant, under a tax sale, of three-eighths of a certain lot of land in the city of Parkersburg, sold on the 2d day of January, 1906, for city taxes delinquent for the year 1902. It does not appear to have been delinquent for either state or county taxes. On the 18th of June, 1908, the circuit court of Wood county perpetually enjoined the execution of a deed, and declared the tax sale void. From that decree, S. P. Moore has appealed.

Jennie E. Johnson was the owner of the land, and conveyed it to George McDonald by deed, dated March 14, 1902, which was not recorded until May 16, 1902. It was therefore properly assessed with taxes in the name of Jennie E. Johnson for the year 1902, and was returned delinquent by the city collector, and the return approved by the city council on the 12th of October, 1904, and ordered to be certified to the State Auditor for sale according to law. But, after the delinquent list was approved by the city council, a copy of it was not filed with the clerk of the county court; nor was it recorded by him, as provided by section 37 of the city charter. It appears that the delinquent list was recorded by the city recorder in a book which was usually kept in the county clerk's office, but which it was the custom of the city recorder to take from the office and retain in his own possession, so long as it was necessary, in order to make entries therein. But the entries were not signed by the clerk or his deputy; nor were they attested in any manner, so as to make such entries records of the county clerk's office. The keeping of a book in the county clerk's office containing entries, not made or attested by the clerk, is not a recording by the clerk in his office, within the meaning of section 31 of the amended charter of the city of Parkersburg, passed by the Legislature in 1903 (Laws 1903, c. 68). And the recordation of the delinquent list in the county court clerk's office is one of the essential prerequisites to the right to sell land for delinquent city taxes. The omission of this important step defeats the tax sale. This identical question was decided by us in Ritchie Lumber Co. v. Nutter, 66 W. Va. 444, 66 S. E. 646. This case is governed by the principles announced and the points decided in that case; we adhere to those principles, and it is unnecessary to repeat the discussion of them here.

We see no error in the decree appealed from, and will affirm it.

(66 W. Va. 593)

RALEIGH LUMBER CO. v. WILLIAM A. WILSON & SON.

(Supreme Court of Appeals of West Virginia.
Oct. 24, 1911.)

(Syllabus by the Court.)

1. CONTRACTS (§ 169*)—CONSTRUCTION—EXTRINSIC MATTERS.

To ascertain the intent of the parties to a contract, respecting a portion thereof, stated in general and indefinite terms, reference may be had to the subject-matter, the situation of the parties, their aims and purposes and the circumstances, as well as the other provisions of the contract.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Contracts, Cent. Dig. § 752; Dec. Dig. § 169.*]

2. LOGS AND LOGGING (§ 34*)—SALE OF LUMBER—CONSTRUCTION OF CONTRACT.

Under a contract of sale of a large quantity of lumber by a manufacturer thereof to a dealer for resale in the market, providing for certain percentages of the entire quantity in certain lengths, and stipulating for widths by the use of the phrase "4 to 12" wide," the vendor is bound to furnish in all large shipments reasonable percentages of all widths and lengths covered by the contract, if demanded by the vendee.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Logs and Logging, Cent. Dig. §§ 104-111; Dec. Dig. § 34.*]

3. LOGS AND LOGGING (§ 34*)—SALE OF LUMBER—PERFORMANCE OF CONTRACT.

In such case, refusal of the vendor to deliver a portion of the amount sold, because the vendee declined to receive a large portion of it in a single installment, containing only narrow and short boards, constitutes a breach of the contract.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Logs and Logging, Cent. Dig. §§ 104-111; Dec. Dig. § 34.*]

4. SALES (§ 348*)—ACTION FOR PRICE—SET-OFF—PROFITS.

Gains or profits of the vendee, prevented by such breach, may be recouped in an action for purchase money of the lumber furnished under the contract.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Sales, Cent. Dig. §§ 973-986; Dec. Dig. § 348.*]

5. CUSTOMS AND USAGES (§ 10*)—EFFECT ON CONTRACT.

In an action involving the interpretation of a contract, a custom or usage, consistent with the terms of the contract, peculiar to the subject-matter thereof, known to the parties, and probably intended to be included in the contract, as shown by their situation and purposes, the nature of the subject-matter, and the attendant circumstances, is admissible in evidence.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Customs and Usages, Cent. Dig. §§ 11-39; Dec. Dig. § 10.*]

6. WITNESSES (§ 237*)—EXAMINATION—ASSUMPTION AS TO FACTS.

If, on the trial of an action for damages for a breach of contract, the breach appears, as matter of law, from undisputed facts and circumstances, the court may permit an attorney, in examining witnesses as to the quantum of damages, to assume the existence of the breach.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Witnesses, Cent. Dig. §§ 829-832; Dec. Dig. § 237.*]

Error to Circuit Court, Ohio County.

Action by the Raleigh Lumber Company against William A. Wilson & Son. From the judgment, plaintiff brings error. Affirmed.

Hubbard & Hubbard, for plaintiff in error.
Russell & Russell, for defendants in error.

POFFENBARGER, J. The plaintiff in error complains of the allowance of a deduction, by way of recoupment, of about $400 from the amount claimed in its action of assumpsit against the defendants in error, to recover the purchase price of lumber sold and delivered to them. The matters in difference were submitted to a jury, and most of the numerous assignments of error relate to rulings made in the course of the trial, all of which will be better understood after a statement of the facts and the positions assumed by the parties.

The plaintiff, engaged in the manufacture and sale of lumber, undertook to furnish the defendants, general dealers in that commodity, 400,000 feet of two-inch hemlock lumber, within the reasonable period of about four months. The contract was evidenced by letters. Before any lumber had been delivered or accepted under it, a controversy arose as to the mode of execution. While all the lumber was to be two inches thick, different lengths and widths were provided for or contemplated. On the 10th of November, 1905, the plaintiff tendered to the defendants 166,239 feet of lumber, ranging from 10 to 18 feet in length, but having only two widths, namely, 4 inches and 6 inches. Near the same time, the defendants made an order on the plaintiff for 157,000 feet, ranging in lengths from 10 to 20 feet, and in widths from 4 to 12 inches. The offer and order were both by letter, and passed each other in transmission. The defendants declined to accept the lumber offered, but said so much of it as was covered by their order for lumber, about 30,000 feet, would be received. Thereupon the plaintiff gave notice of its intention to sell this particular lumber to other parties, and deduct it from the amount which it had obligated itself to furnish the defendants. Against this there was a protest, and thereafter lumber was furnished and accepted from time to time until the defendants had received about 263,000 feet. The plaintiff refused to deliver any more, and the defendants, insisting that the contract had not been fully performed, demanded an additional 137,000 feet, at the prices stipulated in the agreement, and gave notice of their intention to claim damages for breach of the contract in the case of refusal on the part of the plaintiff. Confident of the correctness of its interpretation of the contract and lack of any breach on its part, the plaintiff declined to furnish more. At the time this action was brought, all of the purchase money for the lumber actually delivered had been paid, except $965.75. Estimating their damages at $473.74 and interest, the defendants paid into court $511.69, and declined to pay the balance. They filed with their plea an account, designated as one of set-off, claiming the difference between the contract prices of the undelivered lumber and the subsequent market prices within the life of the contract. The judgment, conforming to the verdict, was for $61.69.

The most important provisions of the written offer and acceptance, constituting the contract, read as follows: "In accordance with our talk with your Mr. Smith, this a. m., we propose to furnish you 400 M ft. of 2" hemlock lumber, 10 to 20' long and 4 to 12" wide, in about the following proportions: 35% 14' and under long; 35% 16' long; and 30% 18 and 20' long." The reply was: "In reference to proposition made our Mr. Smith in confirmation of same under date of the 30th ult., beg to state that we will accept your proposition to furnish us 400,000 ft. of 2 in. hemlock sizes, as enumerated in your letter and also at the price which you made." The third letter says: "We have your favor of Oct 2, and have entered your order for the 400 M ft. of 2" hemlock." It further appears from this correspondence and other evidence adduced that the plaintiff expected to furnish the lumber in installments, as manufactured, within about four months; that the defendants desired a larger percentage of 18 and 20 foot lumber than the contract provided for; and that the plaintiff knew the defendants were general dealers in lumber, buying to resell, not to store for use. A condition of the contract named in the first letter was that shipping directions should be furnished as fast as the stock should be ready for loading. The defendants bound themselves to remove it as fast as it should be prepared for shipment.

The defendants refused the lumber tendered November 10, 1905, because, in their opinion, it contained an undue percentage of short lengths and narrow widths, protesting their inability to handle the lumber in that form advantageously, and insisting upon their right to a reasonable percentage in each installment of all widths and all lengths, to enable them to dispose of the lumber in the market as the market called for it. They further insisted that the narrow widths and short lengths were the less desirable portions of the lumber contracted for, and not salable at a fair price, unless mixed with lumber of greater dimensions in length and breadth. The contract allowed 140,000 feet in short lengths. The lumber of these lengths tendered as the first installment amounted to about 104,000 feet. As stated, it had only two dimensions in width, four and six inches. The contract did not guarantee any percentage of any particular width, but it did contemplate lumber ranging in width from four to twelve inches. The plaintiff insisted upon its right to furnish its full percentage of any lengths all at one time and any width it saw fit. As the material facts are practically uncontroverted, the construction of the contract was a legal question, which, no doubt, the court would have settled, had it been called upon to do so. The settlement of that question will dispose of practically all of the assignments of error.

[2. 3] We have said the defendants were dealers in lumber, buying to resell in the market. The evidence fully establishes this. Presumptively the plaintiff knew it, but we are not left to mere presumption. The letter of acceptance clearly indicated it, saying, "You are no doubt aware that on an ordinary order the percentage of 18 and 20 ft. stock is usually a little more than 14 ft. and under;" and, again, "We are just completing an order of two million feet of hemlock now, we had with one mill this summer." Before these letters were written, the agent of defendants conferred with plaintiff's representatives, and the contract was then made. The conversation between them is not in the record, but it must be presumed that, in making a contract for six or eight thousand dollars worth of lumber, the plaintiff previously obtained some knowledge of the character and business of the vendees. It must have known, therefore, the disadvantages to the vendees of the kind of performance it offered, and that no such thing was contemplated by the latter in entering into the agreement. In undertaking to furnish them with lumber for sale in the general market, it impliedly, if not expressly, agreed to furnish the lumber in a condition suitable for disposition in the general market. The specifications of widths and lengths and percentages of lengths fairly indicate the kinds of lumber desired and expected by the defendants. The failure to stipulate for certain percentages of widths was clearly not a waiver of all right on the part of the vendees in respect to that. Nothing in the contract or circumstances indicates intent on their part to make a one-sided contract in regard to widths. They stipulated as positively for twelve-inch widths as for four-inch widths, and also for the intermediate widths. The nature and purpose of the contract and all the circumstances must be taken into consideration. Failure to stipulate for quantities of certain widths left the plaintiff free from obligation to furnish any certain percentage of the lumber in any width, and prevented the defendants from demanding it; but the latter were entitled to have, and the former was bound to furnish, reasonable percentages of the lumber in all of the widths contemplated, and in all of the installments in which deliveries were made. What would have been a reasonable percentage would have been a question of fact for a jury, had a controversy arisen involving that question.

[1] If the language of a contract or agreement is on its face ambiguous, the courts will look at the surrounding circumstances, at the situation of the parties, and the subject-matter of the contract for aid in giving a construction to its language. Titchenell v. Jackson, 26 W. Va. 460; Heatherly v. Bank, 31 W. Va. 70, 5 S. E. 754; Caperton's Adm'r v. Caperton's Heirs, 36 W. Va. 479, 15 S. E. 257; Scraggs v. Hill, 37 W. Va. 706, 17 S. E. 185; Shrewsbury v. Tufts, 41 W. Va. 212, 23 S. E. 692; 9 Cyc. 587. The court is not limited in the interpretation of the contract to the mere letter of its words. Its spirit and purpose may be considered. We may here repeat the observation made in Gas Co. v. Oil Co., 56 W. Va. 402, 49 S. E. 548: "This method of interpreting the contract may, to some extent, seem to go beyond its terms, in dealing with them in the light of the subject-matter, the situation of the parties, the purpose of the contract, the attendant circumstances, and the conduct of the parties, but, when the terms of an instrument are uncertain or indefinite, it is proper to do so." That which is not inconsistent with the terms of a written contract and plainly within its purpose, as indicated by the situation of the parties and all the circumstances, may be supplied, or treated as included in it. Such construction does no violence to the terms of the contract. This agreement is silent upon the subject of percentages of widths. From this a mere slight implication arises against the conclusion here stated, but it is only an implication, and, being such, the plain intent of the parties, deduced from their purposes, their situation, and all the circumstances, completely overthrows it. "Where a manufacturer contracts to sell to a dealer or middleman, who buys, as the manufacturer knows, to sell again, there is an implied warranty on the part of the manufacturer that the thing sold shall be reasonably fit for the purpose for which it is made, and for which the dealer intends to sell it." 12 A. & E. Enc. L. 1235. Of course, this relates to quality, but it applies the principle here enforced. Though perhaps not so material as quality, assortment or condition was, under the circumstances of this case, vital to the vendees. Absence thereof deprived them, in large measure, of the benefit of their contract.

[5] Under the designation of "custom," the defendants were permitted to prove that, in the execution of such contracts as the one involved here, the buyer demanded and the seller furnished the lumber in installments, containing reasonable percentages of the lengths and widths contemplated. Their knowledge of the subject was derived chiefly from their own practice and experience in the business. This evidence was objected to, on the ground that the witnesses had not shown themselves qualified to testify to it as a usage or custom, and also that it failed to prove one. The designation of the evidence as that of custom, usage, or practice was to some extent, a misnomer and misinterpretation of it. To a very considerable extent, it was proof of the market conditions contemplated by the contract, and in view of which it was made. The witnesses stated these conditions and their experience under them. If, however, they correctly designated the practice, and it amounted to a usage or custom, they were qualified to testify on the subject, by their experience and knowledge. Smith said he had had experience with the sawmill people of every state. W. A. Wilson's testimony showed extensive experience in the lumber business and great familiarity with timber and lumber transactions. Moreover, his competency seems not to have been questioned. The custom, usage, experience, description of methods of manufacture, shipment, and sale, or whatever it may be, strictly considered, harmonizes with the legal construction of the contract, and was relevant, material, and admissible.

An exception was taken to the action of the court in sustaining an objection to a question, asking a witness whether there was a custom, giving the buyer right to dictate sizes to be shipped, in the case of a contract like the one in question. Though the court sustained such an exception, the question was repropounded in different form, and answered. The action of the court in sustaining an objection to a question of the same kind, relating to the first shipment under such a contract, is also complained of. The cross-examination on this subject was very lengthy, and the questions propounded in numerous ways. A great many answers were given, some of which we think would cover this question. Whether they do or not, the defendants were not prejudiced by this ruling. Nor was there any error in refusing to strike out the witness' answer, saying he never knew "a millman being so unreasonable as to insist upon furnishing any one width to the exclusion of others." That purported to give the witness' experience. The question was evasive, but its substance not material. The witness afterward answered the question to the best of his ability. Exceptions were taken to the action of the court in allowing a witness, in explanation of the objection to the plaintiff's first offer of lumber, the one giving rise to the controversy, to show what that offer ought to have contained to make it conform to the contract. What we have said on the subject of the interpretation of the contract shows these rulings were not erroneous.

[6] Exceptions were also taken to the action of the court in allowing counsel, in the examination of witnesses, in two instances, to assume that the contract had been broken by the plaintiff. Our conclusion as to the interpretation of the contract sustains these rulings. As a matter of law, it did break the contract, hence the court did not err in allowing counsel to assume the existence of the breach.

[4] Numerous objections were made to testimony tending to prove the difference between the contract prices of the lumber and the market prices, when it should have been delivered or was demanded and refused, as showing what profits the defendants lost in consequence of the plaintiff's breach of the contract. All of these exceptions, as well as others based upon the action of the court in refusing to direct a verdict for the plaintiff for the amount of its claim, and to set aside the verdict, were founded upon the view that the deducted claim was not a proper subject of set-off; it being a claim for unliquidated damages. Though called a set-off, it was really a claim of recoupment. It was not a debt due the defendants, growing out of a different transaction and founded upon a consideration, other than the contract out of which the controversy arose, constituting a proper subject of set-off. It was for damages growing directly out of a breach of the contract sued on. Hence it was a claim for recoupment, not one of set-off. This being so, the character of the damages, whether liquidated or unliquidated, was wholly immaterial. Unliquidated damages may be proved under a claim of recoupment. Railroad Co. v. Jameson, 13 W. Va. 833, 31 Am. Rep. 775. The erroneous designation of the claim as one of set-off does not change its character, nor prevent allowance thereof. Courts determine the character of claims or notices by their substance, rather than names. The notice gave full information of the nature of the claim, apprising the plaintiff thereof. This in the record; there could be no surprise, prevention of which is the sole purpose of a notice of recoupment.

Seeing no error in the judgment, we affirm it.

Affirmed.

(89 W. Va. 554)

WOOLDRIDGE et al. v. WOOLDRIDGE et al.

(Supreme Court of Appeals of West Virginia. Oct. 24, 1911.)

(Syllabus by the Court.)

1. SUNDAY (§ 13*)—VALIDITY OF SUNDAY CONTRACT—DEED.

A deed made on Sunday is not for that reason invalid, section 17, c. 149, Code 1906, providing that "no contract shall be deemed void because it is made on the Sabbath day."

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Sunday, Cent. Dig. §§ 36-44; Dec. Dig. § 13.*]

2. ACKNOWLEDGMENT (§ 62*)—CERTIFICATE—IMPEACHMENT.

The evidence of a justice of the peace, who takes and certifies an acknowledgment to a deed, is incompetent so far as it tends to impeach his official act.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Acknowledgment, Cent. Dig. §§ 345-347; Dec. Dig. § 62.*]

3. DEEDS (§§ 207, 211*)—VALIDITY—CAPACITY OF GRANTOR—FORGERY.

A case in which the evidence is held insufficient to invalidate the deed of a deceased grantor for alleged fraud and forgery, and the mental incompetency of the grantor to make a deed.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Deeds, Cent. Dig. §§ 614-625, 637-647; Dec. Dig. §§ 207, 211.*]

(Additional Syllabus by Editorial Staff.)

4. WITNESSES (§ 176*)—COMPETENCY—TESTIMONY AS TO TRANSACTIONS WITH PERSONS SINCE DECEASED.

Under Code 1906, c. 130, § 23, relating to testimony as to transactions with persons since deceased, the evidence of a grantee of a deceased grantor was rendered competent by the previous testimony of the adverse parties in their own behalf with reference to the same transaction.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Witnesses, Cent. Dig. §§ 714-719; Dec. Dig. § 176.*]

Appeal from Circuit Court, McDowell County.

Action by Henry Wooldridge and others against James Wooldridge and others. From a judgment for defendants, plaintiffs appeal. Affirmed.

D. J. F. Strother and M. O. Litz, for appellants. Chapman & Gillespie, for appellees.

MILLER, J. The original bill, which sought partition only of a tract alleged to contain one hundred and forty-three acres, by survey actually containing one hundred and nine acres, was, after answers filed, amended by bringing in, as a new party plaintiff, John D. Peery. The amended bill, adopting the allegations of the original bill, alleged in addition, that subsequent to the bringing of the original suit, November 22, 1905, the plaintiffs in the original bill, or some of them, had sold and conveyed their interests as co-parceners in the land, sought to have partitioned, to said Peery, wherefore the necessity of his presence as plaintiff; that the title bond of February 28, 1887, and the deed of September 7, 1895, purporting to have been made by W. C. Wooldridge and wife to James Wooldridge, pleaded and relied on by said James Wooldridge and Thomas Fisher, his successor in title, in their answers to the original bill, were void and of no effect: First, because the title bond was intended only to secure to James Wooldridge title to the interest already conveyed to him; second, because said deed was a fraud and forgery, and had not vested in said James Wooldridge, nor in his successors in title, any title to said land.

The answers of James Wooldridge and Thomas Fisher to the amended bill, as did their answers to the original bill, deny all material allegations thereof; and the sufficiency of the amended bill was also challenged by demurrer thereto. Besides James Wooldridge and Thomas Fisher, in their answers, plead possession, the statute of limitations, laches on the part of plaintiffs, and estoppel by deed and by conduct, barring them of all rights, and precluding them from any relief.

The court below, by decree of February 18, 1909, dismissed the plaintiffs' bill, and they have brought the case here to review that decree for alleged errors therein.

The material facts developed by the pleadings and proofs, and on which the rights of the parties depend, are substantially these: On November 20, 1880, the land in controversy, in consideration of seventy-one dollars and fifty cents, paid, was conveyed by one Shannon, attorney in fact for John H. Divine, to said W. C. Wooldridge and James Wooldridge, his son, jointly. It was on this deed that the plaintiffs in the original bill predicated the allegation that said W. C. Wooldridge died seized and possessed of a half undivided interest in said land, and that they, as children and heirs at law, and co-parceners with the said James Wooldridge, or his grantees, were entitled to a partition thereof.

By the title bond of February 28, 1887, which the amended bill charges was made under a mistaken notion as to the effect of the Shannon deed, W. C. Wooldridge bound himself and his heirs to make James Wooldridge "a general warranty of title to seventy-one and two-thirds acres of land" described as "lying on Long Branch of Big Creek, known as the Wooldridge Mill," when said James Wooldridge should pay him, as provided, in two equal payments, the sum of two hundred dollars, evidenced by the notes or bonds of said James Wooldridge. These notes are proven to have been paid by James Wooldridge long before the date of the deed of September 7, 1895, and it is also proven, beyond controversy, that upon the making of this title bond, James Wooldridge, took possession of the entire tract of land, built and occupied a house upon it, and so remained in possession of the land some fourteen years, until he sold and conveyed it, April 17, 1901, to the McCormicks, the immediate grantors of said Fisher.

The deed of September 7, 1895, in consideration of two hundred dollars, acknowledged to have been paid in hand, grants, bargains, sells and conveys to James Wooldridge, "seventy-one and two-thirds acres of land," described as "being the same land that W. C. Wooldridge and James Wooldridge bought from J. H. Shannon." Following the granting clause, the deed also contains this clause, further descriptive of the land granted: "Which W. C. Wooldridge and Mary C. Wooldridge deeds to the said James Wooldridge the parties of the first part, convey all their right, title and interest in and to that said tract of land which land never was divided between the said parties, the land is situate in McDowell County, State of West Virginia, lying on Long Branch waters of Big Creek, better known as the James Wooldridge Mill." This deed purports to have been duly acknowledged by the grantors on the day of its date, and duly recorded in McDowell county, October 15, 1895.

Numerous questions are argued by counsel with reference to the validity and legal effect of, and failure to record said title bond, upon the interests of the alleged purchaser, Peery. It is conceded, however, that Peery took whatever interests he acquired by sundry deeds from his co-appellants, subject to the deed of W. C. Wooldridge and wife to James Wooldridge, which being recorded was notice to him of the rights of the grantee and his successors in title; so that, if we hold, as did the circuit court, contrary to the contentions of appellants, that that deed is good and valid, and sufficient to pass the title to the whole interest of the grantors in said tract, we need not concern ourselves with the questions presented respecting the title bond. Indeed the title bond is not so much relied on by the appellees as evidence of title, as it is on the questions of alleged fraud, forgery and want of good faith charged against James Wooldridge in procuring the execution of said deed, and as evidence of the adverse holding of the land from the date thereof. The latter question becomes unimportant, however, if the deed be good.

[1] Several questions are presented as to the validity of the deed. First, it is charged to have been made, executed and acknowledged on a Sunday, and invalid for that reason. The deed purports to have been made and acknowledged on September 7, 1895, a Saturday; but there is conflict in the evidence as to whether it was in fact made on Sunday, September 8, and post-dated for that reason. The fact is immaterial. At common law judicial acts done on Sunday were invalid; but as to all other acts, not of a judicial nature the common law made no distinction between Sunday and any other day. 2 Par. on Cont. (9th Ed.) 923, and note N. In many states statutes, similar to sections 16 and 17, chapter 149, Code 1906, relating to Sabbath breaking, have been held applicable to deeds and contracts executed on Sunday, and as rendering them void as violative of those statutes. 37 Cyc. 564, and notes; Love v. Wells, 25 Ind. 503, 87 Am. Dec. 375; 2 Par. on Cont. (9th Ed.) 923. But said section 17 of our statute specifically provides that "no contract shall be deemed void because it is made on the Sabbath day."

The fact that the deed was also signed and acknowledged by Mrs. Wooldridge, is not noted. It is not claimed that she was also incapacitated by sickness or otherwise to make a deed, nor that the deed was a forgery as to her.

[3, 4] Another point made against the deed is that it is a forgery, that it was never in fact signed or acknowledged by W. C. Wooldridge, one of the grantors, that at the time the deed was made W. C. Wooldridge was in an unconscious state, about to die, and did not then have mental capacity to make a deed or other contract. This point the court below, on conflicting evidence decided adversely to the contentions of appellants. We think the evidence, with the corroborating facts and circumstances largely preponderates in favor of appellees: The evidence of James Wooldridge, the grantee, objected to because it respected a transaction with a deceased person, corroborated by the two attesting witnesses, was rendered competent by the previous testimony of some of appellants previously examined in their own behalf, with reference to the same transaction. Section 23, chapter 130, Code 1906.

[2] Appellants rely greatly on the testimony of James S. Brewster, a Justice of the Peace, who not only took and certified the acknowledgments of the grantors, but actually prepared the deed, and who also, years before, prepared the title bond and notes. His evidence is to the effect that W. C. Wooldridge, at the time the deed was made was in an unconscious state, and did not in fact sign or acknowledge the deed. In the mean time two of his sons had married daughters of W. C. Wooldridge, and all are plaintiffs and appellants in this suit. His testimony, that of a public officer, objected to, could not be received to impeach his official act in taking and certifying the acknowledgments to the deed. Hockman v. McClanahan, 87 Va. 33, 12 S. E. 230; Harkins v. Forsyth, 11 Leigh (Va.) 301. G. W. Cyphers the subscribing witness to the deed, and his wife, also present, swear positively that W. C. Wooldridge, though sick, after the deed was read to him, signed and acknowledged it, remarking at the time, that it should have been attended to sooner. The testimony of Nancy Rose, a sister of deceased, is to the same effect. A most significant fact in connection with the due and proper execution of the deed is, that Jane Brewster, who in her bill charges forgery, admits, that she signed her father's name to the deed, which, if he was incapacitated, as she now swears, would convict her of aiding and abetting, if not actually committing the forgery. The decree below must remain undisturbed so far as this point is concerned.

Another point strongly urged on behalf of appellants, based largely on the testimony of said James S. Brewster, Justice, is, that the title bond and deed were intended simply to sell and convey to James Wooldridge the original interest conveyed to him and his father by Shannon, attorney in fact, in 1880. In view of the terms of the deed, and of all the concurrent and subsequent facts and circumstances this is a most unreasonable and improbable story. The consideration for the Shannon deed was seventy-one dollars and fifty cents, half of which is proven to have been paid by James Wooldridge in a particular way. The deed was made to him and his father jointly. The story of James Brewster is clearly a fabrication, is inconsistent with established facts, and is wholly incredible. The deed which the witness admits he prepared, and to which he added his certificate of acknowledgment, as clearly shown from the clause therein quoted, purported to convey not only seventy-one and two-third acres, just half the number of acres supposed to be in the entire tract, but to make the intention clear, also, "all their right, title and interest in * * * said tract * * * which * * * never was divided between the said parties." Moreover, after the death of W. C. Wooldridge, all other lands of the decedent were partitioned between appellants and James Wooldridge. There was then no pretence that the land now in controversy belonged to his estate. Many years elapsed, and it was not until long after James Wooldridge had parted with the land and it had come to the appellee, Thomas Fisher, an innocent purchaser, that the present claim thereto was made by appellants to an interest therein. A fact most inconsistent with appellants' theory is that the consideration for the deed of September 7, 1895, as shown by the title bond and notes, and the evidence of the witnesses, was two hundred dollars, which was more than half the original purchase price paid for the joint interests of W. C. Wooldridge and James Wooldridge.

These views demand an affirmance of the decree below without reference to any other questions presented for our consideration, and it will be so ordered.

(69 W. Va. 612)

CAPITAL CITY SUPPLY CO. v. BEURY.

(Supreme Court of Appeals of West Virginia.
Oct. 24, 1911.)

(Syllabus by the Court.)

1. APPEAL AND ERROR (§ 659*)—EXCEPTIONS, BILL OF (§ 56*)—RECORD—AMENDMENTS—AUTHORITY OF APPELLATE COURT.

When a bill of exceptions is signed in vacation, it is much the better practice for the trial court to certify that it was done within 30 days from the adjournment of the term. But, if it does not appear from the record that it was signed within time, this court may, on its own motion, supplement the record by bringing up a certified copy of the final order adjourning the term of the trial court, to determine the fact.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Appeal and Error, Cent. Dig. §§ 2834-2843; Dec. Dig. § 659;* Exceptions, Bill of, Cent. Dig. §§ 94-96; Dec. Dig. § 56.*]

2. APPEAL AND ERROR (§ 282*)—PRESENTATION OF QUESTIONS IN TRIAL COURT—MOTION FOR NEW TRIAL.

In case of a trial by the court in lieu of a jury, it is not necessary that a motion for a new trial should have been made and overruled, in order to entitle a party to apply for a writ of error.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Appeal and Error, Cent. Dig. §§ 1662-1665; Dec. Dig. § 282.*]

3. EVIDENCE (§ 378*)—DOCUMENTARY EVIDENCE—AUTHENTICATION—LETTER.

A reply letter received, in due course of mail, from the addressee of a former letter is presumed to be genuine, and if otherwise proper evidence may go to the jury without proof of the handwriting of the person whose signature appears thereto.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Evidence, Cent. Dig. §§ 1648-1665; Dec. Dig. § 378.*]

4. EVIDENCE (§ 378*)—DOCUMENTARY EVIDENCE—AUTHENTICATION—LETTER.

Evidence offered to impeach such letter, which goes only to the extent of proving that the name was signed to it by the bookkeeper in the office of the person whose name is placed to the letter, is not sufficient to overcome the presumption that he authorized his bookkeeper's act.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Evidence, Dec. Dig. § 378.*]

Error to Circuit Court, Kanawha County.

Action by the Capital City Supply Company against Thomas C. Beury. From a judgment for plaintiff, defendant brings error. Affirmed.

U. S. Albertson, for plaintiff in error.
Payne & Payne and J. F. Bouchelle, for defendant in error.

WILLIAMS, P. [1] The motion to dismiss the writ of error, on the alleged ground that the bill of exceptions is not a part of the record, is overruled. The bill of exceptions was signed in vacation, and it does not appear by the record that it was signed within 30 days after the adjournment of the term. It is much the better practice for the judge to make this fact appear by his certificate, but the judge's certificate is not the only method of showing it. This court has established the practice of reading the order adjourning the term in connection with the record, to determine whether the bill of exceptions was signed in time. Scott v. Hughes, 66 W. Va. 573, 66 S. E. 737; Whyel v. Coal & Coke Co., 67 W. Va. 651, 69 S. E. 192. A certiorari, issued on the court's own motion, has brought up a certified copy of the adjourning order of the term of the intermediate court of Kanawha county, at which the judgment was rendered, and from this it appears that the term was adjourned on the 4th of December, 1907. The bill of exceptions was signed on the 30th of December, 1907, and therefore in time.

[2] It is insisted that, according to the practice prevailing in Virginia and in this state, the judgment cannot be reviewed, because no motion for a new trial was made and overruled. But it has been decided in both states that such motion is not required, where the trial is by the court in lieu of a jury, as was the fact in this case. Fisher v. Bell, 65 W. Va. 10, 63 S. E. 620; Bank v. Walton, 96 Va. 435, 31 S. E. 890.

This brings us to a consideration of the merits of the case. The action is assumpsit on an account for goods sold to the Thayer Lumber Company, a corporation, of which Thomas C. Beury was president. The suit is against said Beury personally, and was originally brought before a justice of the peace, and appealed to the intermediate court of Kanawha county. There plaintiff obtained judgment for $225.75. Defendant made application to the circuit court of Kanawha county for a writ of error, which was refused, and he later obtained one from this court.

That the goods were sold to the Thayer Lumber Company, and were originally charged to it on plaintiff's books of account, are facts admitted by the testimony of Mr. Clark Howell, who is president of the plaintiff company. Consequently the personal liability of Mr. Beury for the debt depends upon whether he has subsequently obligated himself by a writing to pay it. Two letters were introduced by plaintiff to prove his written promise to pay the debt, one dated December 22, 1906, and signed "Thos. C. Beury, L." and another, dated February 14, 1907, and signed "Thos. C. Beury." Both were received in regular course of mail, and are replies to letters written by Mr. Howell to the Thayer Lumber Company concerning the collection of the account sued on, and addressed to said company at its principal office, in care of T. C. Beury. Both replies are written on the Thayer Lumber Company's printed stationery, which advertises Thos. C. Beury as its president. The first of these letters was admitted as evidence, over defendant's objection, and he excepted. Omitting the printed heading, the letter is as follows, viz.: "Dec. 22, 1906. Capital City Supply Co., City—Gentlemen: I have your favor of the 18th inst. in regard to your account against the Thayer Lumber Company. In reply, beg to say that I myself being the principal creditor of the Thayer Lumber Company have taken over the property and assumed all the debts and just as soon as I am able to do so will pay off the various accounts. At the present time I am very much in need of funds, and am not able to do anything for you, but you may rest assured that I will personally see to it that when able your account is paid. Yours truly, [Signed] Thos. C. Beury, L."

[3] There can be no doubt that the letter contains sufficient promise to bind defendant, provided it was sufficiently authenticated to allow it to be read as evidence. It is signed "Thos. C. Beury, L." and it is insisted that the initial "L," after the name, imports that Thos. C. Beury's name was signed to the letter by another, and that the authority of such other to so sign his name should have been first proven before admitting the letter as evidence, and Winkler v. C. & O. Ry. Co., 12 W. Va. 699, is cited as authority for this proposition. The writing on which it was sought to hold the railroad company liable in that case differs from the writing in the present case, in that it does not purport to be a reply to any communication addressed to, and received by, the railroad company. It was signed "W. A. Keeper, Pr. Assistant Engineer." We do not doubt that the writing in that case was not sufficient to bind the railroad company without proof of Keeper's agency. But in the present case the writing in question is a letter which came through the mail in due course, and is a reply to another letter which plaintiff had addressed and mailed to the Thayer Lumber Company, in care of Thos. C. Beury, and relates to a matter of which Mr. Beury himself is supposed to have special knowledge, because of his official connection with said company. In such case, a reply letter so received is presumed to be genuine, and may be received as evidence without proof of the handwriting of the signature. We find the rule stated by Wigmore, in his valuable work on Evidence, vol. 3, § 2153, to be that: "The arrival by mail of a reply purporting to be from the addressee of a prior letter, duly addressed and mailed, are sufficient evidence of the reply's genuineness to go to the jury. Such a rule—varying slightly in the phraseology of the different judges—seems now to be universally accepted." See, also, the Norwegian Plow Co. v. Munger, 52 Kan. 371, 35 Pac. 11; White v. Tolliver, 110 Ala. 300, 20 South. 97; Ragan v. Smith & Gordon, 103 Ga. 556, 29 S. E. 759; City National Bank v. Jordan, 139 Iowa, 499, 117 N. W. 758; Boykin v. State of Florida, 40 Fla. 484, 24 South. 141; 2 Wharton on Evidence (2d Ed.) § 1328.

[4] But it is proven by a witness for defendant that the signature was not made in the handwriting of Thomas C. Beury. The question then arises, should the letter have been excluded? We do not think so. While we have not found any authority directly bearing on this point, we think the true rule is that, even though such a reply letter may not have been signed by the person whose name appears to it, still the presumption is that it was signed by proper authority; and the presumption of genuineness is not overcome by simply proving that he did not sign it himself, but it was necessary to go further, and prove that he did not authorize the signing of it, or adopt the signature as his own. In these modern days of large and multiplied business, it is well known that much correspondence is carried on, and important business transacted, through dictations, made to clerks and stenographers, who take down the dictation, and then transcribe it into longhand. It is also known that clerks employed in offices of large business concerns are often directed to write the signature of their employers to their letters. It is scarcely to be supposed in the present case, in view of the subject-matter of the letter in question, that Lewis, Mr. Beury's bookkeeper, would have either written the body of the letter, or signed Mr. Beury's name to it, without his authority. We think it is entirely within the rule relating to the presumed genuineness of reply letters purporting to come from the addressee of another letter, in due course of mail, to include the authority to sign the name which appears to it. It was therefore not enough to overcome the presumption of the genuineness of the letter to prove simply that the signature was not in the handwriting of Mr. Thomas C. Beury. It should also have been made to appear that the signature was made without his authority.

It is admitted that the other letter, dated February 14, 1907, is signed by Thomas C.

Beury in person. But we are of the opinion that, while it relates to the same matter of account spoken of in the first letter, it does not contain a promise of Mr. Beury to answer personally for the debt. However, we see that defendant was not prejudiced by the admission of this letter as evidence, over his objection.

Finding no error, we will affirm the judgment.

BRANNON, J. I doubt point 4.

(112 Va. 335)

VAN DYKE et al. v. NORFOLK SOUTHERN R. CO. et al.

(Supreme Court of Appeals of Virginia. Nov. 16, 1911.)

1. EQUITY (§ 239*)—PLEADING—DEMURRER—ADMISSIONS.

A demurrer to a bill in equity admits the truth of all facts well pleaded, but not conclusions of law suggested in the bill or inferences from facts stated.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Equity, Cent. Dig. § 494; Dec. Dig. § 239.*]

2. SPECIFIC PERFORMANCE (§ 116½*)—PLEADING—REQUISITES.

The rule governing the consideration of a bill in equity on demurrer thereto, where the relief asked is specific performance of a contract, applies to all cases, regardless of the magnitude of the interests involved; and the court may not overrule a demurrer to an insufficient bill, where the questions involve inferences of facts, and the interests at stake are weighty, and postpone the questions of law until they are determined on a full discovery of all the facts.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Specific Performance, Dec. Dig. § 116½.*]

3. SPECIFIC PERFORMANCE (§ 28*)—CONTRACTS ENFORCEABLE.

Equity will not enforce a contract, the terms of which are uncertain.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Specific Performance, Cent. Dig. §§ 61-68; Dec. Dig. § 28.*]

4. SPECIFIC PERFORMANCE (§ 116½*)—PLEADING—REQUISITES.

A bill in equity to enforce a contract must, when considered on demurrer, show that the contract is complete and certain, and that equity will not risk doing injustice by enforcing the contract; otherwise a demurrer must be sustained.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Specific Performance, Dec. Dig. § 116½.*]

5. SPECIFIC PERFORMANCE (§ 116½*)—BILL—DEMURRER.

A bill in equity to enforce a contract between a syndicate and a reorganization committee for the bondholders of a corporation, which sets out in full an agreement, designated as "preliminary agreement," and indicating a more complete agreement to follow, and which shows modifications of the agreement embodied in an exhibit, making substantial changes, and which avers that plaintiffs, suing on behalf of themselves and others composing the syndicate, did not assent to the modifications, etc., is demurrable for failing to show a complete, certain, and definite contract.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Specific Performance, Dec. Dig. § 116½.*]

6. SPECIFIC PERFORMANCE (§ 28*)—CONTRACTS ENFORCEABLE — "COMPLETENESS" — "CERTAINTY."

The element of "completeness" of a contract, requisite to its specific performance, denotes that the contract embraces all the material terms, while the element of "certainty," also a requisite, denotes that each of the terms is expressed in a sufficiently exact and definite manner; and an incomplete contract, which equity will not enforce, is one from which one or more material terms have been omitted; and an uncertain contract, likewise unenforceable, is one wherein one or more of the material terms is expressed in such indefinite language that the intent of the parties cannot be ascertained, to enable equity to carry the same into effect.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Specific Performance, Cent. Dig. §§ 61-68; Dec. Dig. § 28.*]

For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, vol. 2, pp. 1028, 1366-1368.]

Appeal from Circuit Court of City of Norfolk.

Suit by one Van Dyke and another, on behalf of themselves and others, composing a syndicate, against the Norfolk Southern Railroad Company and others. From a decree sustaining demurrers to the bill, plaintiffs appeal. Affirmed.

R. T. Thorp, Tazewell Taylor, and Thomas Leaming, for appellants. E. R. Baird, Jr., T. L. Chadbourne, Jr., and Frederick Hoff, for appellees.

CARDWELL, J. This appeal is taken from a decree of the circuit court, sustaining the demurrers of appellees to a bill filed by appellants, seeking specific enforcement of a certain written memorandum of a contract, bearing date January 19, 1909, made by and between appellants Van Dyke and Zell, on behalf of themselves and others, composing a syndicate, and appellees Schoonmaker and Clark, on behalf of themselves and others, acting as a reorganization committee for the bondholders of the Norfolk Southern Railroad Company.

The contention of appellants is that by the alleged contract the syndicate agreed to purchase certain of the bonds of a new company to be organized, and to procure a certain guaranty of other bonds, and that the reorganization committee agreed to complete foreclosure and to convey the properties of the railroad company, when acquired, to the new corporation to be created by the syndicate. It is further contended that the agreement, although oral, was perpetuated by a memorandum, signed by the parties on the day of its making, and is also evidenced by a subsequent memorandum, signed by appellees; the agreement or contract sought to be enforced being as follows:

"Preliminary agreement reached January 19, 1909, by the undersigned, respecting the Norfolk & Southern Railway Company reorganization.

"First Mortgage: $9,000,000 4 per cent. on railroad to be taken by syndicate at 90.

"General Mortgage: First on lumber company, and second on railroad, $16,000,000, to bear 4¼ per cent. interest, to be given present refunding bondholders ($14,000,000) and balance $2,000,000 to remain in treasury of the company, and to be used for the acquisition of new property and strict betterments.

"$14,000,000.00 of general mortgage bonds to have the interest guaranteed for five years (surety company guarantee) as approved by committee's counsel.

"$16,000,000.00 of stock, of which $6,500,000 goes to present bondholders, and balance, $9,500,000, goes to syndicate.

"Sinking Fund: To begin to operate two years from date of conveyance to new company.

S. L. S. J. W. V. D.
"G. C. C. F. D. Z."

The memorandum signed by appellees, and which, as appellants claim, evidenced the written contract of January 19, 1909, is filed with the bill as Exhibit 2, but we deem it only necessary to refer to that memorandum as we review appellants' bill upon the demurrers thereto.

Exhibit 1, with the bill, is called "Modified Plan and Agreement," bearing no date, and containing only a notice addressed to the holders of the first and refunding mortgage bonds of the old company, not signed by any committee or any one else, and annexed to the notice is a proposed plan of reorganization, but which does not contain any agreement of reorganization. In this draft ("modified plan") is contained a statement that when, in the discretion of the reorganization committee, "a sufficient amount of all the outstanding first and refunding mortgage bonds of the company shall have been deposited under the accompanying agreement, the property of the existing Norfolk & Southern Railway Company will be foreclosed."

The material facts out of which this suit arises, appearing from the bill and the exhibits therewith, are as follows: The Norfolk & Southern Railway Company was a consolidated corporation, existing under the laws of Virginia and North Carolina, owning a valuable line of railroad extending from Norfolk, Va., through the states of Virginia and North Carolina for about 600 miles, and also controlling valuable timber property in both of said states, held by the John L. Roper Company. The railway company had executed its first and refunding mortgage to the Trust Company of America, as trustee, creating a lien upon the properties owned by the company, under which mortgage it had issued bonds, which were outstanding in the public, to the extent of $14,000,000, par value, each bond being of the par value of $1,000, and in addition thereto had pledged a further issue of $1,000,000, par value of such bonds.

On or about July 1, 1908, the said trust company, as trustee under the aforesaid mortgage, instituted proceedings in the United States Court for the Eastern District of Virginia to foreclose the mortgage securing said bonds, and receivers were appointed; whereupon some of the first and refunding mortgage bondholders, desirous of protecting their interests, and for the purpose of reorganizing the Norfolk & Southern Railway Company, formulated a plan and agreement of reorganization, under which appellees Clark, Schoonmaker, Thorne, Gardner, and Waterbury became a reorganization committee, and, as appears from the preamble to Exhibit 2, holders of a large majority of bonds had deposited their holdings and accepted, in accordance with the plan and agreement of reorganization, certificates of deposit therefor. The plan and agreement of reorganization, which was the initial step taken by certain of the bondholders, and under which other bondholders necessarily would have the right to participate in accordance with its terms, is referred to in the preamble to Exhibit 2 as Schedule A, but it is not attached, and there is no reference to it contained in appellants' bill, other than such as appears in Exhibit 2.

It is to be noted in this connection, and as a matter to be considered throughout the case, that those bondholders who had deposited their bonds under the original plan of reorganization became the owners of certificates of deposit, which themselves no longer represented first and refunding mortgage bonds, but such rights and properties as such certificates would be entitled to upon reorganization, in accordance with such original plan of reorganization.

We shall confine our consideration of the allegations of the bill to such as are essential to the relief asked, and which are called in question by the demurrers of the respondents, which demurrers are filed by the Norfolk Southern Railroad Company, the corporate respondent, and by Rathbone Gardner and the other respondents jointly, acting as a reorganization committee of the bondholders of the Norfolk & Southern Railway Company, and for themselves, jointly and severally, as individuals.

The first paragraph of the bill states that appellants associated themselves together as a syndicate, for the purpose of acquiring the properties formerly belonging to the Norfolk & Southern Railway Company, and organizing a corporation to take over and operate the same; but, as pointed out in the demurrers filed by appellees, it does not appear that such corporation was ever formed by appellants. On the contrary, it is later alleged in the bill that the individual appellees composing the reorganization committee organized the Norfolk Southern Railroad Company, with the intent to vest in said company the property of the old company. To this, however, we do not attach much importance.

In paragraph 2 of the bill, it is stated that the individual respondents constitute a committee representing first and refunding mortgage bondholders of the Norfolk & Southern Railway Company; that in the transaction narrated in the bill this committee were acting on behalf of themselves and the holders of the first and refunding mortgage bonds, whom they represented; and that the appellee Norfolk Southern Railroad Company was created at the instance of the reorganization committee, for the purpose of taking over the properties acquired by them at the foreclosure of the mortgage of the old company. It is therefore sought in this connection to charge the individual respondents solely in a representative capacity, while their principals, the first and refunding mortgage bondholders, are not made parties to the bill.

The third paragraph of the bill is but a recital of the incorporation of the old company, and the making by it of the first and refunding mortgage to the Trust Company of America, as trustee, which recitals are followed by a description of the property and the action taken upon the foreclosure of the said first and refunding mortgage.

In its fourth paragraph, the bill states that a meeting was had, on January 19, 1909, between appellees Clark and Schoonmaker and appellants Zell and Van Dyke, and that at said meeting Clark and Schoonmaker told Zell and Van Dyke that they appeared as the representatives of the individual appellees, acting as a reorganization committee, and that they were further acting as agents for a majority of the first and refunding mortgage bondholders, and that they were authorized and empowered by the committee and by such majority of said mortgage bondholders to conclude an agreement with appellants. It is further stated that appellants expected to prove that Clark and Schoonmaker had been empowered by resolution of the committee to negotiate and conclude an agreement, and that they had been empowered by a majority of the first and refunding mortgage bondholders to negotiate and conclude an agreement. A statement follows the foregoing, to the effect that Zell and Van Dyke stated to Clark and Schoonmaker that they represented a syndicate comprising the appellants, and were authorized to negotiate and conclude an agreement with Clark and Schoonmaker as the agents of the committee and of said bondholders.

Exhibit 2, which is attached to the bill, shows that the appellants had knowledge of an existing agreement of reorganization, wherein the powers of the committee, or its members, must of necessity have been fixed and expressed, and under which there had become parties thereto holders of certificates of deposit representing the securities thereunder deposited. This original plan and agreement of reorganization, referred to in Exhibit 2, is not attached to appellants' bill, although whatever power or authority was vested in Clark and Schoonmaker, or the committee itself, was so vested and fixed by such plan and agreement of reorganization, and in the absence of which it is by no means made clear how the court could ascertain the authority of the committee to act, or of a majority of the bondholders to bind all. In this connection, it is also stated that, prior to said meeting (of January 19, 1909), a plan of reorganization had been adopted by the counsel for the reorganization committee; and, without stating in what manner and by what authority, but merely as a conclusion, it is alleged that Clark and Schoonmaker, acting for the committee and the first and refunding mortgage bondholders, modified such plan of reorganization as set forth, which alleged modifications were of substantial difference and import, in that they changed the securities to be issued by the proposed new company under the prior plan of reorganization by increase and decrease of millions of dollars.

The next allegation is that at said meeting a complete, final, and binding contract, etc., was reached, to the effect that the draft thereof, modified in the particulars stated, should be put into effect by means of a further agreement, then finally and completely made as a binding contract between the parties to the negotiations, and to the effect that the syndicate should purchase $9,000,000 of first mortgage bonds at 90 per cent., and procure a guaranty by a surety company (in a form to be approved by the counsel for the reorganization committee) of the interest upon $14,000,000 general mortgage bonds for five years, and that the reorganization committee agreed, in consideration of the same, that the syndicate should receive $9,500,000 of the capital stock of the new company.

Then follows the statement that the effect of the agreement reached was to modify the plan of reorganization, making it more favorable to the bondholders, and to bind the syndicate to finance the reorganization upon that basis. It was further agreed that the reorganization committee, on behalf of the first and refunding mortgage bondholders, should endeavor to buy at the foreclosure sale the properties, rights, and franchises of the Norfolk & Southern Railway Company, and that a new company should be incorporated, in which should be vested the said properties, rights, and franchises, which company should issue the securities specified in the plan marked "Exhibit 1," modified as above set forth.

Exhibit 1, labeled "Modified Plan and Agreement," bears no date, and contains a notice addressed to holders of first and refunding mortgage bonds, not signed by any committee, nor having annexed to it any plan of reorganization, and omits to state any agreement of reorganization. In this "modified plan" appears the statement, that when, in the discretion of the reorganization committee, "a sufficient amount of all the outstanding first and refunding mortgage bonds of the company shall have been deposited under the accompanying agreement, the property of the existing Norfolk & Southern Railway Company will be foreclosed." Here we have presented by the bill of complaint a draft of a "modified plan," providing for the deposit of bonds under an agreement of reorganization, which does not accompany the draft of the plan, and which the bill does not show or allege; nor is it shown or alleged that bonds were deposited thereunder; so that, upon the face of the bill, all that had been approved by any one was a draft of "modified plan," in which there is a reference to an agreement of reorganization, but whether such an agreement ever existed does not appear.

Paragraph 5 of the bill again refers to and alleges the execution of the memorandum, made on the 19th of January, 1909, which memorandum of agreement is the basis of appellants' entire case, and which they ask to be specifically enforced. It is entitled "Preliminary Agreement—reached January 19, 1909."

In the sixth paragraph of the bill, it is alleged that the act of Clark and Schoonmaker was ratified, approved, and confirmed as the act and deed of the first and refunding mortgage bondholders; but this is but an allegation of a conclusion of law, since there are no facts stated or data exhibited with the bill to show upon what the allegation is based; in fact, it is stated that the appellants "are not aware of the full and exact manner and methods by which said ratification, approval, and adoption was effected," "but they were informed, believe, and expect to prove that their [the bondholders'] assent was had in writing, partly by power of attorney, duly executed, etc.; that appellants had called upon the reorganization committee and its counsel for discovery as to all papers and documents showing the assent of the bondholders to said agreement, but were refused access to any and all information on the subject; but they particularly aver that they were continuously advised by said reorganization committee and its counsel that, prior to the delivery of a certain more formal contract on or about January 30, 1909, hereto attached and referred to as Exhibit 2, the full, express, and written approval of the bondholders to said agreement [of January 19, 1909] was obtained."

It is apparent from their indefinite allegations and an examination of Exhibit 2 that, while the said bondholders (how many, who they were, and how they could bind their assigns or other bondholders, does not appear) may have approved of the act of Clark and Schoonmaker, which from the bill itself was preliminary only, there is nothing to show that the bondholders ever deposited their bonds under the agreement referred to in the draft of "modified plan," or how those who deposited their bonds under an original plan and agreement could have deposited under another plan bonds they had already relinquished; nor is it made to appear in the bill or in the exhibits therewith under which plan appellants seek to charge the individual defendants (appellees here) as a committee. As proof of the fact that the bondholders have approved of the alleged agreement of January 19, 1909, here sought to be enforced, great reliance is placed upon a recital in the proposed draft of an agreement (Exhibit 2). It is recited in the preamble to this proposed agreement that certain certificate holders, representing in amount a majority of outstanding first and refunding mortgage bonds, had approved an amended plan which that agreement contemplated would be attached thereto; but this proposed agreement (Exhibit 2) was never executed by both parties, and therefore, was never brought into effect. On the contrary, the bill, after stating how this proposed agreement came to be drawn up as "a more formal contract to be executed by the committee and the members of the syndicate," proceeds to state the reasons why the members of the syndicate (appellants) would not acquiesce in certain of its provisions and affix their signatures thereto. Had this proposed "more formal agreement" been executed by the parties, it plainly contemplated that the committee would use its efforts as a committee to have an amended plan adopted by all the bondholders; and it does not appear from the bill that the alleged draft of modified plan was ever adopted by the bondholders; nor does it appear that the committee purchased the properties of the railroad company at foreclosure under the draft of modified plan, which plan provided that it would be discretionary with the committee to buy thereunder.

In fact, it is not made to appear in the bill that there was any express agreement that the committee would purchase under the draft of modified plan, or any other named plan; but it contains only an allegation to the effect that the committee was to endeavor to buy at foreclosure and issue the securities specified in the draft of modified plan. How the committee could have exercised the discretionary right alleged to have been conferred upon them by the draft of modified plan, until there had been a deposit of the bonds of the old railway company under that plan, is not made to appear.

Paragraph 7 of the bill is characterized by vague and indefinite allegations of facts. Here it is repeated how the proposed agreement (Exhibit 2) came to be drawn to embody the provisions of the alleged agreement, reached January 19, 1909, in a more formal contract "to be executed by the committee and the members of the syndicate," and following it is alleged that Exhibit 2 was drafted by Burr, of counsel for the syndicate, and Chadbourne, of counsel for the committee, and one copy thereof signed and retained by the committee, and an unsigned copy forwarded to Burr, and that a Schedule A and an Exhibit B were referred to in such draft of agreement, but not annexed. What was contained in Schedule A the bill does not state; but the agreement (Exhibit 2) designates it as the original plan and agreement of reorganization, under which bonds had been deposited. It is alleged that Exhibit B was in existence and designed to be attached to Exhibit 2; but it is admitted that no copy thereof was in fact attached to the copy of the agreement delivered to Burr. If it be accepted as true the statement in the bill that the Exhibit B to be attached represented appellants' Exhibit 1, that exhibit itself (the modified plan) was not in existence, but would have required subsequent action by the bondholders becoming parties to an agreement of reorganization. No such action on the part of the bondholders is shown by appellants, or attached to the papers they rely on, and as to which they make no comment; nor do they recognize that the action of the committee in purchasing at the foreclosure sale was discretionary, and that discretion to be exercised when sufficient bonds had been deposited, etc.

In paragraph 8 of the bill, it is related that the form of the contract executed by the committee (Chadbourne—draft of contract, Exhibit 2) having no date, was executed before it was submitted to the syndicate or Burr, as counsel for the syndicate, and that he (Burr), on behalf of the syndicate, advised counsel for the committee "that, while the same substantially represented the agreement between the parties," in certain particulars it did not accord therewith; and then follows in this paragraph of the bill a specification of the particulars referred to. It is here also alleged and set forth that various notices were sent to the committee by the syndicate from time to time, in which they refer to a contract having been made by the reorganization committee and a large majority of the first and refunding mortgage bondholders; and it is further stated that on December 7, 1909, the reorganization committee purchased all the assets of the Norfolk & Southern Railway Company at foreclosure sale, but it is not alleged in this connection whether said committee purchased such properties in accordance with the existing plan and agreement of reorganization, or on any other plan. Reference is also made in this connection to an attempt made by appellants, on or about September 23, 1910, to intervene in the foreclosure suit pending in the federal court, and that court's refusal to take jurisdiction of their controversy; but to this statement of fact and the conclusion of law, that such refusal was made for want of jurisdiction, we attach no importance.

The only other feature of the bill to which we deem it necessary to refer is the sixteenth paragraph thereof, in which it is alleged that the reorganization committee caused to be organized the Norfolk Southern Railroad Company, and that it was organized by the committee with the intent to vest in said company the property so purchased, contrary to the rights of the appellants and in breach of the alleged contract of January 19, 1909; that said company was an instrumentality created by the individual defendants (appellees), as the reorganization committee, for the purpose of defeating the rights of the appellants and depriving them of the property, formerly of the Norfolk & Southern Railway Company, to which appellants claim they are entitled under the agreement of January 19, 1909, "upon payment to said reorganization committee of the consideration provided for in the contract;" and that it is sought by the committee to carry out a plan of reorganization wholly at variance with the agreement of January 19, 1909, and in fraud of the rights of the appellants.

The special relief prayed in the bill is that the defendant Norfolk Southern Railroad Company be required either (a) to issue its securities to appellants in the manner provided in the plan of reorganization (to this bill attached marked "Exhibit 1"), as modified by the agreement between the reorganization committee and appellants, dated January 19, 1909, upon performance by appellants of the various matters and things stipulated to be done by them in said contract, or (b) that it be adjudicated and decreed that the properties, rights and franchises acquired by the reorganization committee at the foreclosure sale shall be transferred to a new corporation to be formed by appellants in accordance with the terms of the agreement between themselves and the reorganization committee, and that the securities of said new corporation be issued in accordance with the terms and provisions of the contract between the parties.

[1] The general rule is that, by demurrer to a bill in equity, the truth of material and relevant matters, i. e., matters of fact, set forth with requisite precision, and which are well pleaded, is admitted, but not conclusions of law suggested in the bill or inferred from the facts stated. 1 Daniell's Chy. Pr. (5th Am. Ed.) 546; Stephen on Pleading, p. 138; 12 Enc. Pl. & Pr. p. 1026; Foster on Fed. Practice (4th Ed.) p. 474; Dillon v. Barnard, 21 Wall. 430, 22 L. Ed. 673.

"A demurrer admits as true all facts which are properly pleaded, but does not admit the conclusions of law from those facts which the pleader may have seen fit to introduce." Trumbo v. Fulk, 103 Va. 73, 48 S. E. 525. See, also, Latham v. Westervelt, 26 Barb. (N. Y.) 259; Ryan v. McLane, 91

Md. 175, 46 Atl. 340, 50 L. R. A. 501, 80 Am. St. Am. Rep. 438; 1 Barton's Ohy. Pr. 368.

[2] Recognizing the force and effect of the general rule just adverted to, when applied to the bill in this case, the learned counsel for appellants invoke the doctrine, that, where all the questions involve inferences of fact, and the interests at stake are weighty, it is entirely within the discretion of the court to overrule the demurrer and postpone the questions of law until they can be determined upon a full discovery and development of all the facts; and it is argued that, not only is such a course of procedure within the discretion of the court, but it may be said to be essential, in a case of magnitude, and where conclusions of law rest upon inferences to be drawn from a series of complex and involved occurrences and facts.

Among the cases cited in support of this contention is that of Kansas v. Colorado, 185 U. S. 125, 22 Sup. Ct. 552, 46 L. Ed. 838, where the opinion does cite Daniell's Chy. Pr. for the proposition that a court of equity sometimes declines to decide a doubtful question (of title) on demurrer; but we need only say here that to apply that doctrine to all cases of magnitude, i. e., where large interests are involved, would be practically to abolish the office of a demurrer in such cases. Moreover, the character of the case in which the citation of Daniell's Chy. Pr. was made and followed was very different from the case at bar, and none of the conditions upon which the court might depart from the general rule governing in the consideration of a bill in equity upon a demurrer thereto, pointed out by Mr. Daniell, exist in this case.

[3] The rule governing the consideration of a bill in equity upon a demurrer thereto, where the relief asked is the specific performance or rescission of a contract, applies alike to all such cases, regardless of the magnitude of the interests involved. That equity will not enforce a contract, the terms of which are uncertain, is well established.

As said by this court in the opinion by Harrison, J., in Berry v. Wortham, 96 Va. 89, 30 S. E. 444: "It is an elementary doctrine of courts of equity that they will not specifically enforce any contract, unless it be complete and certain."

[4] It must appear from the bill, considered upon demurrer thereto, that the contract asked to be enforced is complete and certain, so that it may be seen that a court of equity would not encounter risk of doing injustice to the defendants and others if it enforced the contract; otherwise the demurrer has to be sustained. Clinchfield Coal Co. v. Clintwood Coal Co., 108 Va. 433, 62 S. E. 329.

In other words, the court must be enabled to say from the facts and circumstances alleged in the bill whether the minds of the parties met upon all the essential particulars of the contract, and, if they did, then can say exactly upon what substantial terms they agreed, and trace out the particular line where their minds met. This is the settled rule where such a case is determined upon the proofs (Clinchfield Coal Co. v. Powers, 107 Va. 393, 59 S. E. 370), and must necessarily be applied in the consideration of a bill upon demurrer thereto, where specific enforcement of a contract is asked; otherwise the pleader could make one case by his bill and prove another or different one, or make an imperfect statement of it and supply its lacking essentials by proof, as to which the defendant had no notice from the bill of complaint filed against him.

[5] The allegations of the bill we are considering here are very unsatisfactory and in many particulars difficult to comprehend, due to the fact admitted that the negotiations between appellants and the individual appellees, relied on as evidencing the contract asked to be enforced, were so complicated that they are not and could not be precisely stated so as to show that a contract which a court of equity could undertake to enforce was ever entered into and consummated by the parties. As we have seen, the alleged agreement of January 19, 1909, set out in full above, is the contract asked to be enforced, yet that document is designated in its caption "Preliminary Agreement," indicating a more complete agreement to follow, and the parties asking its enforcement have to rely upon Exhibit 2, with their bill, as a ratification of the contract sought to be enforced, and that, too, in face of the fact that they state that they refused to consent to this modified plan (Exhibit 2), and give their reasons for refusing. As we have observed, the modifications embodied in Exhibit 2 were of substantial difference and import, and from the allegations of the bill they wrought changes of the securities stipulated for in the "preliminary agreement" by increase and decrease of millions of dollars; so that we have, according to the allegations of the bill, this case: The agreement of January 19, 1909, declared to be a "preliminary agreement"—a mere skeleton of an agreement itself, plainly indicating that there were other essential conditions and terms to be agreed upon between the contracting parties—never signed or assented to by the individual appellees, acting as a reorganization committee, or ratified or approved by the bondholders of the old company, on the one hand, and, on the other, Exhibit 2, with the bill, signed only by the committee, disapproved of by appellants, and never signed by them or any one for them.

[6] "A contract that is incomplete, uncertain, or indefinite in its material terms will not be specifically enforced in equity. Following the general principles of equity, there is required a greater degree of certainty and definiteness for specific performance than to obtain damages at law.

For specific performance is required that degree of certainty which leaves in the mind of the chancellor or court no reasonable doubt as to what the parties intended, and no reasonable doubt of the specific thing equity is to compel done. The element of completeness denotes that the contract embraces all the material terms; that of certainty denotes that each one of these terms is expressed in a sufficiently exact and definite manner. An incomplete contract, therefore, is one from which one or more material terms have been entirely omitted. An uncertain contract is one which may, indeed, embrace all the material terms, but one or more of them is expressed in so inexact, indefinite, or obscure language that the intent of the parties cannot be sufficiently ascertained to enable the court to carry it into effect." 6 Pom. Eq. Jur. § 764. Creedy v. Grief, 108 Va. 320, 61 S. E. 769; Clinchfield Coal Co. v. Powers, supra; Ford v. Euker, 86 Va. 75, 9 S. E. 500.

Giving to appellants the benefit of all the admissions of facts well pleaded in their bill to which they are entitled upon the demurrers thereto, they have not set out a completed contract with that degree of certainty and definiteness which the general principles of equity require. Indeed, they fail to show that the minds of the parties ever met on all the essential particulars of any contract, or in fact upon what substantial terms they agreed. On the contrary, the bill but sets out various negotiations between the parties, which, doubtless, had in view the making of a completed contract in the nature of the one asked to be enforced, but does not allege facts to show that any such contract was in fact entered into; nor from the facts stated could a court of equity trace out any particular line where the minds of the parties met in said negotiations, with respect to the terms of any contract, sufficiently certain and definite to enable the court to determine with any degree of accuracy what the parties intended.

It follows that we are of opinion that the decree appealed from, sustaining the demurrer to the bill and dismissing the same, should be affirmed.

Affirmed.

(112 Va. 780)

ROLLER v. MURRAY et al.

(Supreme Court of Appeals of Virginia. Nov. 16, 1911.)

1. CONTRACTS (§ 138*)—UNENFORCEABLE CONTRACTS—ILLEGAL CONTRACTS—RIGHTS OF PARTIES.

Where money is paid or services are rendered under a contract void merely because not enforceable, an implied assumpsit lies for the money paid or the value of the services rendered; but where the contract is illegal, because contrary to positive law or against public policy, an action does not lie to recover the money paid on it, or the value of the services rendered under it.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Contracts, Cent. Dig. §§ 681-700; Dec. Dig. § 138.*]

2. CHAMPERTY AND MAINTENANCE (§ 4*)—ILLEGALITY OF CHAMPERTOUS CONTRACTS.

A champertous agreement is unlawful and void; the common law as to champerty being in force.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Champerty and Maintenance, Cent. Dig. §§ 4, 9, 11-19; Dec. Dig. § 4.*]

3. CHAMPERTY AND MAINTENANCE (§ 5*)—RECOVERY FOR SERVICES RENDERED UNDER ILLEGAL CONTRACT.

An attorney, rendering services pursuant to a champertous contract, whereby he undertook to carry on a litigation at his own risk and without costs to his client, for a part of the recovery, may not recover on quantum meruit the value of the services rendered, though they are in themselves legal.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Champerty and Maintenance, Cent. Dig. §§ 24-51; Dec. Dig. § 5.*]

Appeal from Circuit Court, Rockingham County.

Suit by John E. Roller against Mary H. Murray and others. There was a decree for defendants, and plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

John E. Roller, for appellant. Conrad & Conrad and Holmes Conrad, for appellee.

BUCHANAN, J. This is an attachment in equity to subject the estate of a nonresident to the satisfaction of a claim alleged to be due the complainant for services rendered as attorney. The services sued for were performed under a contract sought to be enforced in a suit between the same parties, which was held to be champertous and void by the circuit court of Rockingham county, whose decree was affirmed by this court. That case (Roller v. Murray) is reported in 107 Va. 528-547, 59 S. E. 421, where the champertous contract is set out.

The contract was held to be contrary to public policy and void, because it was an agreement by an attorney to undertake and carry on litigation at his own risk, or without costs to his client, for a share of the recovery. While it was held in that case that there could be no recovery upon the contract, the question whether the attorney could recover the value of his services was left open.

The contention of the complainant (appellant here) is that, notwithstanding the fact that the contract under which the services sued for were rendered was contrary to public policy and void, he is entitled to recover the value of those services upon a quantum meruit.

Upon this question the courts are not in accord.

Page, in his work on Contracts (section 345), says that, while such contracts are clearly void, the courts are divided as to the question whether they are illegal—that the courts which hold them to be illegal, not only do not enforce the champertous contract, but do not allow a recovery for the value of the services rendered upon a quantum meruit, while the courts which treat such contracts as merely void, and not illegal, permit a recovery upon a quantum meruit for the value of services rendered. Whether this statement of the learned author be entirely accurate as to the ground upon which the two lines of decision are based is not altogether clear from the decisions, since some of them do not give the reasons for their conclusion; but, if that be the true distinction between the two lines of cases, it would seem to render each consistent with well-settled legal principles.

*For other cases see same topic and section NUMBER in Dec. Dig. & Am. Dig. Key No. Series & Rep'r Indexes

[1] The general rule is that where an agreement is treated as void merely because it is not enforceable, as in cases under the statute of frauds or of parol agreements where the contract is not in writing and money is paid or services are rendered under it by one party and the other avoids it, there can be a recovery upon an implied assumption for the money paid or the value of the services rendered. In such cases there has been the mere omission of a legal formality, and while by the terms of the statute he must lose the benefit of his contract, yet, there being nothing illegal or immoral in it, he is entitled to be compensated for the services rendered under it. See Johnson v. Jennings, 10 Grat. 1, 6, 7, 60 Am. Dec. 323; 1 Smith's Lead. Cases (5th Am. Ed.) note to Peter v. Compton, at page 438; Pollock on Contracts (Wald's Ed.) pp. 597-599, 609.

On the other hand, it is also well settled, as a general rule, that where the contract is illegal, because contrary to positive law or against public policy, an action cannot be maintained, either to enforce it directly, or to recover the value of services rendered under it, or money paid on it. See Johnson v. Jennings, 10 Grat. 6, 7, 60 Am. Dec. 323; Marshall v. Railroad Co., 16 How. 314, 14 L. Ed. 953, cited with approval in Yates & Ayres v. Robertson, 80 Va. at page 484; note to Chapman v. Haley, 4 Am. & Eng. Ann. Cas. 712, 714-716, where numerous cases are cited; Webb v. Fulchre, 25 N. C. 485, 40 Am. Dec. 419, 420; Wald's Pollock on Contracts, pp. 233, 234, 338, 339.

The general rule is stated as follows in 9 Cyc. 546, and is sustained by the decided cases: "The law in short will not aid either party to an illegal agreement. It leaves the parties where it finds them. Therefore neither a court of law nor a court of equity will aid the one in enforcing it, or give damages for a breach of it, or set it aside at the suit of the other, or, when the agreement has been executed, in whole or in part, by the payment of money or the transfer of other property, lend its aid to recover it back. The object of the rule refusing relief to either party to an illegal contract, when the contract is executed, is not to give validity to the transaction, but to deprive the parties of all right to have either enforcement of, or relief from, the illegal agreement. * * * Money paid under an agreement which is executed, whether as the consideration or in performance of the promise, cannot be recovered back where the parties are in pari delicto; and goods delivered or lands conveyed under an illegal agreement are subject to the same rule."

And for like reasons the same rule would apply to services rendered.

Pollock, in his work on Contracts (Wald's Ed.), after stating the general rule that money or property paid or delivered under an unlawful agreement cannot be recovered back, says that "the principle proper in this class of cases is that persons who have entered into dealings forbidden by law must not expect any assistance from the law, save so far as the simple refusal to enforce such an agreement is unavoidably beneficial to the party sued upon it. As it is sometimes expressed, the court is neutral between the parties. The matter is thus put by Lord Mansfield: 'The objection that a contract is immoral or illegal, as between the plaintiff and defendant, sounds at all times very ill in the mouth of a defendant. It is not for his sake, however, that the objection is ever allowed; but it is founded in general principles of public policy, which the defendant has the advantage of, contrary to the real justice as between him and the plaintiff, by accident, if I may say so. The principle of public policy is this: "Ex dolo malo non oritur actio." No court will lend its aid to a man who founds his cause of action upon an immoral or an illegal act, if from the plaintiff's own stating or otherwise the cause of action appears to arise ex turpi causa, or the transgression of a positive law of this country. There the court says he has no right to be assisted. It is upon that ground that the court goes; not for the sake of the defendant, but because they will not lend their aid to such a plaintiff. So, if the plaintiff and defendant were to change sides, and the defendant was to bring his action against the plaintiff, the latter would then have the advantage of it, for, where both are equally in fault, "potior est conditio defendentis."'"

[2] Whatever view be taken in some jurisdictions as to the ground upon which a champertous agreement is held to be void, whether upon the ground merely that it is not enforceable, or because it is illegal, in most jurisdictions, and certainly in this state, such an agreement is considered unlawful, and held to be void on that ground. Champerty is a criminal offense at common law (Bishop's Cr. Law [6th Ed.] §§ 132, 134; Clark on Contracts, § 134; 2 Chit. on Contracts [11th Ed.] 906; Wald's Pollock on Contracts, 293, 294), and the common law as to champerty with respect to the validity of contracts is still in force in this state (Nickels v. Kane, 82 Va. 312; Roller v. Murray, 107 Va. at page 544, 59 S. E. 421).

[3] A champertous agreement being unlawful, it would seem clear that compensation for services rendered under it could not be recovered upon a quantum meruit, any more than upon the agreement itself, without overturning the very foundations upon which the rule refusing to enforce unlawful agreements is based. Of what value would the rule be, if the courts permit that to be done by indirection which they refuse to allow to be done directly? Why say to the attorney, "You shall not recover upon the champertous agreement the agreed value of the services rendered by you, but you may recover upon an implied contract (which in fact never existed) the value of such services," which in this case is claimed and shown to be the same as the agreement provided for? How would any such result uphold the policy of the law, deter others from entering into similar contracts, or promote the public good? To permit a recovery upon a quantum meruit, instead of discouraging, would encourage, the making of such contracts; for, if the client kept and performed his unlawful agreement, the attorney would get the benefit of it, and, if he did not, the attorney would suffer no loss, since he could recover upon the quantum meruit all that his services were worth. Any process of reasoning which leads to such a result we think must be unsound.

In Butler v. Legro, 62 N. H. 350, 13 Am. St. Rep. 573, it was held that, as a champertous contract was illegal, the law did not imply a promise to pay an attorney what his services were worth.

In Thurston v. Percival, 1 Pick. (Mass.) 415, an attorney, after rendering some services for his client, entered into a champertous agreement with him. At the trial of the case before Chief Justice Parker, he was of opinion that the attorney, upon a quantum meruit for services rendered, etc., was entitled to recover the reasonable value of his services rendered prior to the making of the champertous agreement, and the jury were directed to distinguish in their verdict the value of the attorney's services rendered before and after the champertous agreement was entered into. They found a verdict accordingly, subject to the opinion of the court. When considered by the whole court, it was held that the attorney was entitled to recover the value of his services rendered before the champertous agreement was entered into, but the court did not permit a recovery for services rendered under the champertous agreement. See, also, Ackert v. Barker, 131 Mass. 436.

In the case of Mazureau & Hennin v. Morgan, 25 La. Ann. 281, an attorney was not permitted to recover upon a quantum meruit the value of his services rendered under a champertous agreement.

In Barngrover v. Pettigrew, 128 Iowa, 533, 104 N. W. 904, 2 L. R. A. (N. S.) 260, 111 Am. St. Rep. 200, in which it was held that a contract was champertous, the court said: "The appellants contend that, if the agreement be held to be invalid, they are still entitled to recover the reasonable value of their services on a quantum meruit. But the law will not imply a promise to pay for services which are in derogation of public policy, any more than it will enforce a specific contract having that object in view; and when a plaintiff cannot establish his cause of action without relying on an illegal contract, or on services which by their very nature contravene public policy, he cannot recover." The illegal contract in that case was to procure a divorce.

It is claimed that there is a distinction between the right of an attorney to recover upon a quantum meruit for services rendered in a case where the services agreed to be rendered are in themselves illegal, and where the services to be rendered are in themselves legal, but the agreement under which they were rendered is for some other cause champertous.

There are cases that so hold, some where the contract is held to be champertous because it provides for a contingent fee for the attorney proportionate to the amount recovered, and others because it stipulated against the client's right to compromise without the attorney's consent. See Davis v. Webber, 66 Ark. 190, 49 S. W. 822, 45 L. R. A. 196, 74 Am. St. Rep. 81; Gammons v. Johnson, 69 Minn. 488, 72 N. W. 563. That class of cases seems to be based upon the ground that what the attorney agreed to do was in itself legal.

In the case under consideration, what the attorney undertook to do, viz., to carry on the litigation at his own risk, or without costs to his client, was in itself illegal, and it was upon that ground that the contract was held to be champertous. Roller v. Murray, supra. It was further held in that case that the agreement was indivisible, quoting with approval the decision of the Supreme Court of the United States in Trist v. Child, 21 Wall. 441, 452 (22 L. Ed. 623), in which it was held that, where that which the attorney had the right to do was so blended and confused with that which was forbidden, the whole contract is a unit and indivisible. "That which is void destroys that which is good, and they perish together."

We are of opinion that to permit an attorney to recover upon a quantum meruit the value of his services rendered under an unlawful agreement, by which he undertook to carry on litigation at his own risk and without costs to his client for a part of the recovery, would be to encourage the making of such contracts on the part of attorneys, and would furnish an easy expedient for escaping the consequences of entering into contracts in violation of laws based upon considerations of public policy.

Having reached the conclusion, upon the main question involved, that there can be no recovery in this case, it is unnecessary to consider any of the other questions discussed, since their decision could not affect the result, no matter how decided.

The decree complained of must be affirmed.

Affirmed.

(112 Va. 754)

NORTH BRITISH & MERCANTILE INS. CO. v. ROBINETT & GREEN.

(Supreme Court of Appeals of Virginia. Nov. 16, 1911.)

1. INSURANCE (§§ 567, 612*)—ADJUSTMENT OF LOSS—STIPULATIONS—VALIDITY—CONDITION PRECEDENT TO ACTION.

A stipulation in a fire policy for appraisal of a loss when required, as a condition precedent to an action on the policy, is valid, and when required is a condition precedent to an action for a loss.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Insurance, Cent. Dig. §§ 1420, 1421, 1520-1528; Dec. Dig. §§ 567, 612.*]

2. INSURANCE (§ 146*)—CONTRACTS—CONSTRUCTION.

Though contracts of insurance are liberally construed in favor of insured, he must comply with the plain provisions of the policy.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Insurance, Cent. Dig. §§ 292, 294-298; Dec. Dig. § 146.*]

3. INSURANCE (§ 567*)—ADJUSTMENT OF LOSS—STIPULATIONS—CONSTRUCTION.

A fire policy, stipulating that insured shall have 60 days from the date of a fire to deliver proof of loss, and that the loss shall not become payable until 60 days after delivery of proof of loss, including an award by appraisers, where an appraisal is required, gives to insurer the right, at any time within 60 days after the delivery of proof of loss, to demand an appraisal.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Insurance, Cent. Dig. §§ 1420, 1421; Dec. Dig. § 567.*]

4. INSURANCE (§ 576*)—ADJUSTMENT OF LOSS—STIPULATIONS—WAIVER.

A fire policy stipulated for an award by appraisers when required. Insured gave prompt notice of a loss, and furnished proof of loss. An agent of insurer notified an attorney of insured that the amount of the loss claimed was excessive, and demanded an appraisal. During the investigation, the agent made no response to a question put to him as to whether an appraisal was desired. Held, that insurer did not waive its right to an appraisal; a waiver, to be effective, must have occurred with full knowledge of all material facts, and must be distinctly made.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Insurance, Cent. Dig. §§ 1436-1438; Dec. Dig. § 576.*]

5. INSURANCE (§ 576*)—ADJUSTMENT OF LOSS—STIPULATIONS—"ESTOPPEL BY CONDUCT."

The insurer was not estopped from insisting on an appraisal; for, to create an "estoppel by conduct," the party sought to be estopped must have caused the other party to occupy a more disadvantageous position than that which he would have occupied, except for such conduct.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Insurance, Cent. Dig. §§ 1436-1438; Dec. Dig. § 576.*]

For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, vol. 8, p. 7654.]

Error to Circuit Court, Wise County.

Action by Robinett & Green against the North British & Mercantile Insurance Company. There was a judgment for plaintiffs, and defendant brings error. Reversed and rendered.

Geo. W. St. Clair and Bond & Bruce, for plaintiff in error. Morton & Parker and W. S. Cox, for defendant in error.

CARDWELL, J. This suit is brought upon a policy of insurance issued by plaintiff in error to defendants in error, insuring the latter against loss or damage by fire to their stock of merchandise, situated at Appalachia, Wise county, Va., for the period of one year from the date and delivery of the policy, not to exceed three-fourths of the actual cash value of each item of property insured at the time of loss or damage, less the amount covered by any concurrent insurance, not to exceed, however, $1,500, while contained in a certain building in the town of Appalachia; the consideration for the insurance being the premium mentioned, and the performance on the part of the insured of the conditions and stipulations set forth in the policy.

A fire occurred April 17, 1909, at about 11:30 o'clock p. m., in a building not owned by or connected with the property of the insured, which rendered necessary the removal of their stock of goods. None of the goods were destroyed or damaged by fire or smoke, but were damaged, according to the claim made by the insured, 50 per cent. of their value, or to an amount somewhat exceeding $2,000, by their removal from and back into the same building.

Among the almost innumerable provisions contained in the policy, and found in practically all like policies of insurance, is one which provides that in case of loss, if the assured and insurer differ as to the loss sustained, then an appraisal of the property is to determine the amount of the loss.

The policy contains these provisions also: "The loss shall not become payable until sixty days after the notice, ascertainment, estimate and satisfactory proof of the loss herein required have been received by the company, including an award of appraisal where appraisal has been required."

"No suit or action on the policy for the recovery of any claim, shall be sustainable in any court of law or equity until after full compliance by the insured with all the foregoing requirements."

On the next day after the fire, to wit, April 18, 1909, the insured notified the in-

*For other cases see same topic and section NUMBER in Dec. Dig. & Am. Dig. Key No. Series & Rep'r Indexes insurance company of the fire and the damage to their stock of goods; they also notified the agent of the company who resided at Appalachia, and who had issued the policy in question, countersigned it, and collected the premium thereon. The company nor its agents made any reply to the notices, and, on May 15, 1909, proof of the loss was forwarded by the insured, and was received by the insurance company on May 18, 1909. In the early part of June, 1909, the company sent one C. L. Garnett, an adjuster and an employé of the Virginia Adjustment Bureau, to Appalachia, to adjust the loss on the building which contained the stock of goods of plaintiffs insured, and also to adjust the loss of another insurance company which had issued a policy on the same stock of goods. After Garnett left Richmond for Appalachia, the insured (plaintiffs in error) employed also said Virginia Adjustment Bureau to adjust their loss; and all of the papers pertaining to the fire of April 17, 1909, were mailed from Richmond, addressed to Garnett at Appalachia, but Garnett never received them, and on returning to Richmond he so notified R. M. Friend, president of the Adjustment Bureau. Friend had the papers returned to Richmond, and, on June 29, 1911, he went to Appalachia to adjust the loss, but, after examining the stock of goods, getting such information as he could, and consulting Garnett, who had examined the stock of goods soon after the fire, demanded an appraisal in accordance with the conditions of the policy, which demand was made in writing, by letter of July 2, 1909, addressed to and received by the insured's counsel July 5, 1909, the said letter being as follows:

"Richmond, Va., July 2nd, 1909.

"Messrs. Morton & Parker, Attorneys, Appalachia, Va.—

"Dear Sirs: We are in receipt of papers purporting to be proofs of loss under policy No. 4962619 of the North British & Mercantile Insurance Company issued in the name of Robinett and Green.

"The amount of loss and damage named therein is excessive, and we respectfully demand an appraisal in accordance with the terms and conditions of the policy.

"Expressly reserving all rights of the company under the policy contract, we are

"Yours very truly,

"[Signed] Robert M. Friend,
"President."

To this letter the insurance company received the following reply:

"Gate City, Va., July 6, 1909.

"Mr. Robert M. Friend, Richmond, Va.—

"Dear Sir: In your letter of July 2, and received on July 5, 1909, in reference to the Robinett and Green claim you used this expression: 'Expressly reserving all rights of the company under the policy contract, we are,' etc.

"Please explain what you mean by this statement so that we will know just how to answer you. You will recall that Mr. Parker asked you the direct question as to whether you wanted an appraisal and you at that time gave him no definite answer. That occurred more than one month ago. So please let us know by return mail what you mean and we will give you an answer.

"Yours truly [Signed] W. S. Cox."

Considering, doubtless, that the letter of July 2d, supra, required no explanation, the company made no reply to the letter of Attorney Cox, and thereafter, while there was some correspondence between counsel for the respective parties, practically nothing was done by either party towards an adjustment of the loss of the insured, and this suit was instituted on December 3, 1909.

At the trial of the cause, upon the defendant company's plea of nonassumpsit, the grounds of its defense stated in writing were:

(1) "No ascertainment or estimate was agreed upon as provided in said policy; the parties differed as to the amount of the loss or damage; the same has not been determined by appraisals as provided in the policy; the plaintiffs did not demand an appraisal as required by the policy. An appraisal was demanded by the defendant in accordance with the terms and conditions of the policy, and they failed, declined, and refused to have an appraisal, as required by the policy.

(2) "That the three-fourths value clause was attached to the policy, and was made one of the conditions and provisions of same.

(3) "That the policy sued on was for $1,500, and $2,000 concurrent insurance was permitted. Another company issued a policy for $500, and appellees collected same; therefore if plaintiffs were entitled to recover anything, they were only entitled to recover three-fourths of the actual damage to said property, less $500 heretofore paid them."

After the evidence of the respective parties had been introduced, and the court had instructed the jury as to the damages they were to assess, the defendant company demurred to the evidence, and the plaintiffs joined in the demurrer, which demurrer the court overruled and gave judgment on the verdict of the jury, assessing plaintiffs' damages at $1,500, with interest, to which judgment this writ of error was awarded.

[1] There are two assignments of error, the first relating to the ruling of the court on the demurrer to the evidence, and the second to the instruction given by the court to the jury on the amount of damages to which the defendants in error were entitled under the policy sued on, if entitled to a recovery at all; but, in the view we take of the case, it will be only necessary for us to consider the first assignment, which presents the question whether or not this action has been brought prematurely; the defendants in error having declined or failed to enter into an appraisal of their loss, as provided for in the policy sued on, and demanded. This question has not been directly passed on by this court, but has been by the Supreme Court of the United States and by the appellate courts of a number of the states.

In Hamilton v. Liverpool, etc., Ins. Co., 138 U. S. 242, 10 Sup. Ct. 945, 34 L. Ed. 419, it is said, in the opinion by Mr. Justice Gray, that a stipulation in a policy of insurance for appraisal is uniformly held in this country and England to be valid, and is a condition precedent to the right of recovery; and in Hamilton v. Home Ins. Co., 137 U. S. 370, 11 Sup. Ct. 133, 34 L. Ed. 708, the opinion by the same learned judge holds that, if the contract of insurance further provides that no action upon it shall be maintained until after an award by arbitrators is made as to the amount due upon it, "then, as was adjudged in Hamilton v. Liverpool, London & Globe Ins. Co., above cited, and many other cases therein referred to, the award is precedent to a right of action on the contract." See, also, Carroll v. Girard Ins. Co., 72 Cal. 297, 13 Pac. 865; Mosness v. German Am. Ins. Co., 50 Minn. 341, 52 N. W. 932, and Graham v. German American Ins. Co., 75 Ohio, 374, 79 N. E. 930, 15 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1055; Grady v. Home Ins. Co., 27 R. I. 435, 63 Atl. 173, 4 L. R. A. (N. S.) 292; Dunton v. Westchester F. Ins. Co., 104 Me. 372, 71 Atl. 1037, 20 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1053.

In Carroll v. Girard Ins. Co., supra, the opinion, referring to the view uniformly taken that stipulations for an appraisal are a condition precedent to the right of action on a policy of insurance, says: "The logical result of this view is that the award is a necessary element of the plaintiff's cause of action."

In Grady v. Home F. Ins. Co., supra, it is held that: "Arbitration as to the amount of the loss is a condition precedent to an action on an insurance policy, where the policy expressly provides that no action shall be sustainable until full compliance with all conditions, one of which is that in case of dispute the amount of loss shall be fixed by arbitration. Failure of arbitration through no fault of the insurance company does not abrogate a provision in the policy that no action shall be brought until the amount of the loss has been settled by arbitration, and there is nothing to show that arbitration has become impossible"—citing Hamilton v. Home Ins. Co., supra, and a large number of other cases.

The opinion in Hamilton v. Home Ins. Co., supra, further says: "The manifest intention of the agreement of the parties to the contract of insurance was that any difference arising between them as to the amount of loss or damage of the property insured shall be submitted, at the request in writing of either party, to the appraisal of competent and impartial persons, to be chosen as therein provided, whose award shall be conclusive as to the amount of such loss or damage only, and shall not determine the question of the liability of the company. * * * The appraisal, when requested in writing by either party, is distinctly made a condition precedent to the payment of any loss, and to the maintenance of any action. Such a stipulation, not ousting the jurisdiction of the courts, but leaving the general question of liability to be judicially determined, and simply providing a reasonable method of estimating and ascertaining the amount of the loss, is unquestionably valid, according to the uniform current of authority in England and in this country"—citing a number of authorities.

"Where the parties, in their contract, fix on a certain mode by which the amount to be paid shall be ascertained, as in the present case, the party that seeks an enforcement of the agreement must show that he has done everything on his part which could be done to carry it into effect. He cannot compel payment of the amount claimed, unless he shall procure the kind of evidence required by the contract, or show that by time or accident he is unable to do so."

[2] Contracts of insurance, as counsel for defendants in error agree and the authorities hold, are to be liberally construed in favor of the assured; but the policy is a contract, and it is just as much the duty of the assured to comply with the plain provisions of the policy, as it is the duty of the insurer to pay the amount of the loss, when that amount has been properly ascertained in accordance with the terms of the contract.

The case of Tilley v. Insurance Co., 86 Va. 811, 11 S. E. 120, is cited in support of the contention that a stipulation in a policy of insurance for an appraisal is not a condition precedent to a right to recover on the policy; but, with respect to that case, we need only to say that it merely disposed of the question as to what should be alleged in a declaration on an insurance policy, in view of section 3251 of the Code of 1904, and what is there said has no sort of bearing upon the question here under consideration. Very true the opinion in the case cited does refer to the provision in the policy that suit thereon could only be brought within one year from date of a loss, and says that it would be an unreasonable construction of the policy that the award stipulated for in the policy could be asked for just before the expiration of the year, and thus defeat all recovery; but such is not the case here.

Nor does the case of Summerfield v. North British, etc., Ins. Co. (C. C.) 62 Fed. 249, which had under review a similar policy of insurance to that here in question, sustain the contention of defendants in error. In that case, Paul, J., did hold that the plaintiff had the right to bring and maintain an action on her policy, although there had been no appraisal of the loss sustained by her for which she claimed damages; but this ruling was upon the peculiar facts of that case, and could not have been intended to impair the force and controlling influence of the decisions of the Supreme Court of the United States referred to above. On the contrary, the case considered by Judge Paul was by him distinguished from those cases, upon the ground that the defendant company refused to submit to an appraisal, except upon the terms of the form of submission proposed by it; whereby, says the opinion, "it placed itself in the attitude of the plaintiff, Hamilton, in the case of Hamilton v. Liverpool, etc., Ins. Co., and under the authorities of the cases there cited judgment must be entered in this cause for the plaintiff.

The decisions of this court in Liquid Carbonic Co. v. Norfolk & Western Ry. Co., 107 Va. 323, 58 S. E. 569, 13 L. R. A. (N. S.) 753, Atlantic Coast Line R. Co. v. Bryan, 109 Va. 532, 65 S. E. 80, and Virginia Car. Co. v. Southern Ex. Co., 110 Va. 666, 66 S. E. 838, by analogy have an important bearing in the consideration of the issue we now have in hand.

In the first two of the cases just cited, it is held that a condition in a bill of lading that claims for loss or damage shall be made in writing to the carrier's agent at the point of delivery promptly after the arrival of the property, and, if delayed more than 30 days after the delivery of the property, or after due time for the delivery thereof, there shall be no liability upon a carrier, is a reasonable provision, and will be upheld; that such a provision contravenes no public policy and excuses no negligence, but is a reasonable regulation for the protection of the carrier from fraudulent imposition in the adjustment and payment of claims for goods alleged to have been lost or damaged; and that such a provision in the contract, unless waived, is enforceable by the carrier in bar of any action by the shipper for such loss or damage.

In the third case last cited, it was held that a provision in a receipt, given by an express company for the carriage of goods, that the company shall not be liable for any loss or damage, unless the claim therefor shall be presented in writing to it at the office of issue within 30 days from its date, is a reasonable and binding provision, which must be complied with according to its tenor; otherwise the company cannot be held liable.

Defendants in error in this case contend, however, that, notwithstanding the existence of the general rule with respect to the construction of a contract of insurance and the enforcement of its provisions in the cases we have cited, and the almost innumerable authorities cited in those cases, they escape the effect of the rule by invoking the doctrine of waiver. It is not claimed that there was any agreement on the part of plaintiff in error to waive the right it had to an appraisal under the provisions of the policy sued on; but it is claimed that it is estopped by the conduct of its agents to claim the benefit of that provision in the policy.

There is practically no conflict in the evidence introduced in the case, and the facts appearing therefrom are as follows: Both defendants in error testify that notice was given promptly of the fire, which occurred on April 17, 1909, as required by the policy; that a month afterwards they forwarded proof of loss to plaintiff in error, which was received by the latter May 18, 1909; that no other communications were had between the parties until June 29, 1909, when Friend, agent of plaintiff in error, went to Appalachia, at which time he secured certain information in reference to the loss, and after returning to Richmond obtained further information from Garnett, who had examined the stock of goods a few days after the fire. When fully informed as to the actual loss, Friend, on July 2, 1909, wrote the letter of July 2d to Messrs. Morton & Parker, attorneys, saying that the amount of the loss, as claimed in the proof of loss—$1,758.42—was excessive, and demanded an appraisal in accordance with the conditions of the policy.

[3] The policy provided that defendants in error should have 60 days from the date of the fire to make out and deliver the proof of loss, and that the loss should not become due until 60 days after the proof of loss had been delivered, including an award by appraisers, if an appraisal should be required. Equal rights were contemplated in the contract to each of the parties thereto, 60 days being given to furnish proof of loss on the part of insured, and 60 days after the proof of loss had been furnished the insured could demand payment; and, clearly, during all of the last-mentioned 60 days the insurer was to have the right to investigate the amount of the loss and its liability therefor. It is equally as clear that the insurer was given the right, at any time within the 60 days after the proof of loss was delivered, to demand an appraisal, which it did. May on Insurance (4th Ed.) § 479; Joyce on Insurance, § 8182.

[4, 5] It further appears from defendants' in error own testimony that the appraisal could have been had when the demand therefor was received, on July 5, 1909, and later; in fact, until defendants in error, without responding to the demand for an appraisal, or requiring one themselves, had sold off a part of the insured goods, and so intermingled the balance with other goods that a satisfactory appraisal could not be had.

It will not do to say that there was no disagreement as to the loss, and therefore no reason for an appraisal, when the letter of July 2, 1909, demanding the appraisal, distinctly stated that the writer, as the agent of the insurer to adjust the loss, considered the claim made in the proof of loss furnished it was excessive. Nor is there any merit in the contention that plaintiff in error waived its right to an appraisal when Friend, the adjuster, made no answer to an attorney for defendants in error when he asked Friend, on June 29, 1909, the question: "Mr. Friend, do you want an appraisal in this case? If you do, we will give it to you." Friend, testifying in this case, neither affirms nor denies the statement of said attorney (Parker) that he made no reply to the question asked him, but states that he, on the occasion referred to, had very little talk with Parker, and was not then ready to talk about an adjustment of the claim asserted by defendants in error. It also appears that Friend had gone to Appalachia for the purpose of investigating this loss, went to the store of defendants in error, and, after looking at the stock of goods, was not satisfied, but wanted to secure further information from Garnett, who had seen the goods in their original damaged condition; that it was after getting full information that Friend wrote the letter of July 2, 1909.

It is a well-settled principle with respect to the doctrine of waiver, applicable as well to insurance transactions as to other business dealings, that a waiver, to be effective against the party making it, must have occurred with full knowledge of all material facts, and must be distinctly made. And, in order for there to be an estoppel by conduct, the party sought to be estopped must have caused the other party to occupy a more disadvantageous position than that which he would have occupied, except for that conduct. Atlantic Coast Line v. Bryan, supra; Virginia-Carolina Co. v. Southern Express Co., supra, and authorities cited.

There is no proof whatever in the record to make available to defendants in error, either the doctrine of waiver or estoppel, and the loss of the right to institute and maintain this action is due to their dereliction alone.

For the foregoing reasons, the judgment of the circuit court against plaintiff in error upon its demurrer to evidence is erroneous, and will be reversed and judgment entered by this court for defendant in the court below, plaintiff in error here.

Reversed.

(112 Va. 767)

R. S. OGLESBY CO., Inc. v. LINDSEY et al.
(Supreme Court of Appeals of Virginia. Nov. 16, 1911.)

1. PARTNERSHIP (§ 371*)—SPECIAL PARTNERS—LIABILITY FOR DEBTS—EVIDENCE—ADMISSIBILITY.

In a suit on a partnership debt, a defendant claiming to be a special partner was not entitled to show that he had lost the money put into the concern, and had received no dividends; the only issue being whether he had so complied with the statute as to avoid liability.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Partnership, Cent. Dig. § 848; Dec. Dig. § 371.*]

2. PARTNERSHIP (§ 362*)—SPECIAL PARTNERS—LIABILITY—BURDEN OF PROOF.

In a suit on a partnership debt, a defendant who claims limited liability as a special partner must show compliance with Code 1904, §§ 2863-2886, regulating limited partnerships.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Partnership, Cent. Dig. § 842; Dec. Dig. § 362.*]

3. PARTNERSHIP (§ 357*)—LIMITED PARTNERSHIP—COMPLIANCE WITH STATUTE.

In a suit on a partnership debt, a defendant cannot avoid liability on the theory that a limited partnership existed without showing that the articles were recorded in the county clerk's office in a separate book kept for that purpose, and indexed in the name of the concern as required by Code 1904, § 2866.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Partnership, Cent. Dig. § 835; Dec. Dig. § 357.*]

4. PARTNERSHIP (§ 357*)—LIMITED PARTNERSHIP ORGANIZATION—RECORD OF STATEMENT—SUFFICIENCY.

The requirement by Code 1904, § 2866, that limited partnership articles be recorded in a separate book kept for that purpose, is sufficiently met by the county clerk recording articles in a book labeled "Roads and Limited Partnerships," if a custom of keeping road records in the book has been discontinued.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Partnership, Cent. Dig. § 835; Dec. Dig. § 357.*]

5. PARTNERSHIP (§ 357*)—LIMITED PARTNERS—FORMATION—INDEXING ARTICLES—SUFFICIENCY.

The requirement of Code 1904, § 2866, that limited partnership articles be indexed in the name of such partnership in recording the same, is not met by indexing as "Limited Partnership," though there is but one limited partnership of record.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Partnership, Cent. Dig. § 835; Dec. Dig. § 357.*]

6. APPEAL AND ERROR (§ 877*)—RIGHT TO COMPLAIN.

Plaintiff in error cannot complain of an instruction refused to defendant in error.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Appeal and Error, Cent. Dig. §§ 3560-3572; Dec. Dig. § 877.*]

7. PARTNERSHIP (§ 365*)—SPECIAL PARTNERS—LIABILITY—KNOWLEDGE OF RELATION BY CREDITORS.

That a creditor of a corporation knew who purported to be the general and the special partners of a firm does not prevent him from relying upon the invalidity of the formation of the partnership to defeat a defense that part of the defendants were special partners only.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Partnership, Cent. Dig. § 845; Dec. Dig. § 365.*]

8. PARTNERSHIP (§ 362*)—SPECIAL PARTNERS—LIABILITY.

Good faith and honest intention to comply with Code 1904, §§ 2863-2886, regulating the formation of limited partnerships, will not protect one as a special partner if there has not been substantial compliance.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Partnership, Cent. Dig. § 842; Dec. Dig. § 362.*]

9. PARTNERSHIP (§ 362*)—LIMITED PARTNERSHIP—COMPLIANCE WITH STATUTE.

In a suit on a partnership debt to avoid a defense that certain defendants are special partners, plaintiff need not show that he has been injured by defendants' noncompliance with Code 1904, §§ 2863-2886, regulating the formation of limited partnerships.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Partnership, Cent. Dig. § 842; Dec. Dig. § 362.*]

10. PARTNERSHIP (§ 358*)—LIMITED PARTNERSHIP—FORMATION—REQUISITES.

Under Code 1904, § 2871, requiring the names of the members of a limited membership to appear conspicuously on the front of the place of business, there must be some sign or writing conveying such information; and the sign or writing must be in a conspicuous place, and must be easily read.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Partnership, Cent. Dig. § 836; Dec. Dig. § 358.*]

11. PARTNERSHIP (§ 358*)—LIMITED PARTNERSHIPS—"APPEAR."

"Appear," as used in Code 1904, § 2871, requiring the names of the members of a limited partnership to appear conspicuously upon the front of the place of business, means to be obvious and manifest.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Partnership, Dec. Dig. § 358.*]

For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, vol. 1, pp. 448-451.]

12. PARTNERSHIP (§ 358*)—LIMITED PARTNERSHIPS—"CONSPICUOUSLY."

"Conspicuously," within Code 1904, § 2871, requiring that the names of the members of a limited partnership appear conspicuously upon the front of the place of business, means plain to the eye, and easily seen.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Partnership, Dec. Dig. § 358.*]

For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, vol. 2, p. 1454; vol. 8, p. 7613.]

13. PARTNERSHIP (§ 358*)—LIMITED PARTNERSHIPS—STATUTORY REQUIREMENTS.

The requirement of Code 1904, § 2871, that the names of the members of a limited partnership appear conspicuously upon the front of the place of business, is not met by placing typewritten papers 8¼ feet from the floor, and illegible to one standing on the floor at the entrance of the doors of the place of business, or on the sidewalk adjacent thereto.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Partnership, Dec. Dig. § 358.*]

Error to Circuit Court, Grayson County.

Action by the R. S. Oglesby Company, Incorporated, against C. L. Lindsey and others. From the judgment, plaintiff brings error. Reversed.

The following instructions requested by plaintiff were refused:

Instruction No. 1: "The court instructs the jury that if they believe from the evidence that the paper offered in proof in this case as the statement and affidavit under which the Lindsey Mercantile Company, Limited, was formed, has not been recorded in the clerk's office of Grayson county, Va., in a separate book kept for that purpose, or that the same has not been indexed in the name of the Lindsey Mercantile Company, Limited, then all the parties defendant are liable as general partners, and you shall find for the plaintiff."

Instruction No. 2: "The court instructs the jury that if they believe from the evidence that any material part of the capital contributed to this partnership by the special partners was, during the continuance of the partnership, withdrawn or diminished otherwise than by losses or in the ordinary course of business, then all the defendants in this case are liable as general partners, and you shall find for the plaintiff."

Instruction No. 3: "The court instructs the jury that, in order that the special partners in this case may be relieved of the ordinary liability of general partners, the names of the partners of the Lindsey Mercantile Company, Limited, with a designation of which were general and which were special partners, must have appeared conspicuously upon the front of the place of business of said partnership during the time while said partnership was in business; and, if you shall believe from the evidence that this requirement was not complied with, you shall find for the plaintiff against all the defendants."

The court instructed for plaintiff as follows.

"No. 1. The court instructs the jury that, in order that the special partners in this case may be relieved of the ordinary liability of general partners, the names of the partners of the Lindsey Mercantile Company, Limited, with a designation of which were general and which were special partners, must have appeared conspicuously on the front of the place of business of said partnership during the time while said partnership was in business; and, if you shall believe from the evidence that this requirement was not substantially complied with, you shall find for the plaintiff against all the defendants.

"No. 2. The court instructs the jury that the word 'conspicuously' means plain to the eye, easily seen."

The following instructions requested by defendants were refused:

"No. 1. That if the jury shall believe from the evidence that at the time plaintiff sold the goods, wares, and merchandise shown by the account to have been bought, plaintiff or its officers and agents had knowledge as to who were the general and who were the special partners, and of the other facts connected with the formation of said firm, then they are estopped to deny such knowledge, and from insisting that defendants are liable to it, and the jury will find for the defendants.

"No. 2. That if the jury shall believe from the evidence that at the time the debt in the declaration mentioned was made and contracted the names of the partners, with a designation of which were general and which were special partners, appeared conspicuously upon the front of the place of business of the Lindsey Mercantile Company, Limited, then, with reference to the requirements of the statute, the court tells the jury defendants complied with the same, and if plaintiff relies on this failure of the defendants to comply with the statute for a recovery, and the jury shall believe defendants have complied therewith, they shall find for the defendants.

*For other cases see same topic and section NUMBER in Dec. Dig. & Am. Dig. Key No. Series & Rep'r indexes

"No. 3. That if the jury shall believe from the evidence that the names of the partners, with a designation of which were special and which were general partners, appeared conspicuously upon the front of the place of business of the Lindsey Mercantile Company, Limited, then, with reference to this requirement of the statute, the court tells the jury that defendants complied with the same, and if plaintiff relies on this failure to comply with the statute for a recovery, and the jury shall believe defendants have complied therewith, they will find for the defendants.

"No. 4. That if the jury shall believe from the evidence that defendants substantially complied with that requirement of section 2871 of the Code of 1904, with reference to having appeared conspicuously upon the front of the place of business of the Lindsey Mercantile Company, Limited, the names of the partners, with a designation of which were special and which were general partners, and the plaintiff relies upon their failure to do so for a recovery, then the court tells the jury plaintiff is not entitled to recover on this ground in this action, and the jury will find for the defendants.

"No. 5. That the burden of proof is upon the plaintiff to make out its case by a preponderance of the evidence, and to the satisfaction of the jury."

The court instructed for defendants as follows: "The jury are instructed that the evidence in this case shows that the special partners complied with the law in regard to recording and publishing the paper under which the defendant partnership was formed, as provided by statute, and the plaintiff cannot recover on this ground."

H. C. Gilmer and J. H. Rhudy, for plaintiff in error. W. S. Poage, R. L. Kirby, and W. D. Tompkins, for defendants in error.

KEITH, P. The Oglesby Company, Incorporated, sued C. L. Lindsey and others in assumpsit, claiming the sum of $586.30 as due upon an account for goods sold and delivered. The defendants appeared, and pleaded that the cause of action mentioned in the declaration was contracted, if at all, by the Lindsey Mercantile Company, a limited partnership formed and doing business under the laws of the state of Virginia; that the defendants other than C. L. Lindsey were only special partners of the Lindsey Mercantile Company; that they were not interested or in any way connected with the Lindsey Mercantile Company except in their capacity as such special partners, and at a subsequent day the defendants appeared and filed a further plea, setting out in detail the fact that they were liable only as a limited partnership, and averring their compliance with the statute laws regulating the formation of such partnerships; that the plaintiff before the debt in the declaration mentioned was contracted had full knowledge of the organization of said limited partnership, who composed the same, how they were bound, the amount of capital put in by each of said partners, and who were the general and who the special partners, and to what extent each of the members of the firm were bound for the debts and obligations of the partnership, and had full and complete knowledge of every fact to enable them to know to whom they were and how they were extending credit; and that by reason of the premises the plaintiffs were estopped from asserting the demand referred to in the declaration against them and upon which this action is founded.

Upon the trial the jury found a verdict against the general partner, C. L. Lindsey, and in favor of all of the other defendants, the special partners, referred to in the declaration, upon which judgment was entered, and to this judgment a writ of error was awarded.

"By the common law every member of an ordinary partnership is liable in solido for the debts and engagements of the firm. The law ignoring the firm as anything distinct from the persons composing it treats the debts and engagements of the firm as the debts and engagements of the partners, and holds each partner liable for them accordingly." George on Partnership, § 109.

"A limited partnership is one in which the liability of one or more, but not all, of the partners, is limited to the amount contributed by him or them to the firm capital at the time of the formation of the partnership. They are created only by statute, and exist and are controlled entirely by legislative enactments." Gilmore on Partnership, § 204.

The statutes regulating the formation of limited partnerships in this state are found in chapter 135, Code 1904.

Section 2865 provides that the persons forming a limited partnership "shall make and severally sign a paper, which shall state the name and place of residence of each partner, the name or firm name under which the partnership is to be conducted, who are general and who are special partners, the sum which each special partner contributes, and whether such contribution is made in cash or in other property at cash value, or to what extent in each, the general nature of the business to be transacted, the place or places of said business, the duration of the partnership. * * * One or more of the general partners shall also make oath that each sum so stated to be contributed has been actually contributed in the form set forth in said paper."

By section 2866 it is provided that "no such partnership shall be deemed to be formed until such paper and a certificate of such oath, or a certified copy thereof, shall be admitted to record as to each person signing the same in each county and corporation in which the place or places of the said business may be. The said paper and certificate shall be recorded in a separate book to be kept for the purpose, and be indexed in the name of such partnership."

By section 2867 it is provided that "the parties shall publish a copy of the said paper and certificate immediately after they are admitted to record once a week for four successive weeks in a newspaper (if such there be) published in every such county or corporation; and, if no newspaper be published in any such county or corporation, they shall post a copy of such paper and certificate for four successive weeks at the front door of the courthouse of such county or corporation. If such publication or posting be not made, the partnership shall be deemed general."

By section 2871 it is declared that "the names of the partners, with a designation of which are general and which are special partners, shall appear conspicuously upon the front of the place or places of business of the partnership. * * *"

[1] The first assignment of error is to the ruling of the court as set out in plaintiff's bill of exceptions No. 1, from which it appears that T. L. Felts, one of the defendants, while testifying as a witness, was asked by his attorney whether or not he had made any money or received any dividends out of the business of the Lindsey Mercantile Company, to which plaintiff by counsel objected, but the court overruled the objection, and permitted the witness to answer the question. The witness in answering said question said that he had lost all the money he had put into the business of the Lindsey Mercantile Company, Limited, and had never received any dividends from said business. The plaintiff asked the court to strike out the answer, but the court refused to do so.

We think this ruling of the court erroneous. It was wholly immaterial to the issue whether T. L. Felts had or had not lost the money he had put into this company, or whether he had or had not received any dividends from the business. That the debt was due is shown by the verdict of the jury, which finds for the sum demanded against the general partner, and the sole question is whether there has been a compliance with the statute which exonerates the other defendants, among them T. L. Felts, from liability for this debt.

[2, 3] The plaintiff in error by proper bills of exceptions calls in question the propriety of the judgment of the circuit court in refusing certain instructions asked for by the plaintiff in error, and in giving certain other instructions at the instance of the defendants in error.

Instruction No. 1, asked for by the plaintiff and refused by the court, tells the jury that they must find for the plaintiff, unless the paper offered in proof as the statement and affidavit under which the Lindsey Mercantile Company was formed had been recorded in the clerk's office of Grayson county in a separate book kept for that purpose, and been indexed in the name of the Lindsey Mercantile Company, Limited.

It appears from the evidence that there was a book in the clerk's office labeled "Roads" and "Limited Partnerships"; that the custom of keeping road records in this book was discontinued before the said articles were recorded, and it has never been used since for road purposes; that the articles are not indexed in the book in the name of the Lindsey Mercantile Company, Limited, but that the index shows "Limited Partnership"; and that this partnership is the only limited partnership which appears of record in Grayson county, Va.

It is a matter of contention between the parties whether or not the court should construe the statutes with respect to limited partnerships strictly or liberally, and upon this subject the courts seem somewhat at variance. On the one side it is contended that those who claim under a statute which derogates from the common law must show strict compliance with its terms; on the other hand, that the statutes are remedial in their nature and entitled to a liberal construction.

Perhaps the suggestion in Bates on Limited Partnerships, § 13, that "provisions for the protection of third persons are to be liberally construed in favor of such persons, which means strictly against the special partner; and provisions which cannot affect the rights of third persons will be liberally construed, so as not to forfeit the protection of the statute without reason," offers a satisfactory solution of the difficulty. It seems to us clear that as the liability of a general partner is in solido for all the debts of the firm, and that the statute law, by virtue of which alone a limited partnership exists, has provided that upon a compliance with its terms special partners shall come under a limited liability, there is no hardship in requiring a person seeking such limitation upon his liability to show a compliance upon his part with the terms of the statute upon which he relies—that the courts should adopt and enforce a reasonable construction of the statute which, on the one hand, will not defeat one of the objects of the law, which is to induce the investment of capital in business, and upon the other hand will not under cover of a substantial compliance with the requirements of the statute fritter away the protection which the law has thrown around those who deal with the firm.

To this effect is section 205 of Gilmore on Partnership, where it is said: "The better view, and the one toward which the courts are now tending, would seem to be that those provisions of the statute which are clearly for the protection of creditors should be strictly complied with, but that a mere formal defect or technical violation of the statute should not make the special partner liable as a general partner, unless it can be shown that creditors have been misled."

[4, 5] Plaintiff's instruction No. 1 we think very well illustrates what we conceive to be a just and reasonable construction of the law. We think that the requirement that the paper offered in evidence as the statement and affidavit under which the Lindsey Mercantile Company, Limited, was formed, should be recorded in a separate book kept for that purpose, was sufficiently complied with in this case, as shown by the facts to which we have alluded; but, on the other hand, the requirement of law that the statement be indexed in the name of the Lindsey Mercantile Company, Limited, is not answered by the proof that the index shows "Limited Partnership," and that this partnership is the only limited partnership which appears of record in Grayson county.

[6, 7] Instruction No. 1, asked for by the defendants in error, having been refused by the court, is not the subject of exception by the plaintiff in error, but the principle which it embodies is one of importance, and it will not be improper to discuss it. It proceeds upon the idea that knowledge upon the part of the plaintiff as to who were the general and who were the special partners, and of other facts connected with the firm, was sufficient to bring the defendants within the protection of the law as to special partners. We do not think that knowledge has anything to do with the question.

It was said by this court in Hoge v. Turner, 96 Va. 624, 32 S. E. 291, in speaking of section 2877 of the Code, which relates to doing business as a trader with the addition of the words, "factor," "agent" etc., that its provisions apply without regard to knowledge by the creditor of the principal, if principal there be, for "knowledge or want of knowledge does not affect the application of the statute. It is an immaterial matter."

In 19 Am. & Eng. Ency. L. (2d Ed.) p. 340, it is said: "The question is not one of good faith on the part of the members, nor of notice to creditors, nor whether the creditors had actual knowledge of the facts required to be set out in the recorded statement, but whether the members conformed to the law in their attempt to form a limited partnership."

In 30 Cyc., at page 762, it is said that "there is authority for the view that persons who deal with a firm as a limited partnership are estopped from denying the validity of its organization, but the better doctrine is that creditors are not thus estopped, unless they have advised the partners to carry on their business in this irregular manner or have expressly assented to the limited liability of the special partner."

[8, 9] Nor will good faith and an honest intention to comply with the statute protect the special partner; nor need a creditor prove that he has been injured by a failure to comply with the statute. The statute must be actually complied with. George on Partnership, § 197.

[10] Instructions 3 and 4 deal with so much of section 2871 as provides that "the names of the partners, with a designation of which are general and which are special partners, shall appear conspicuously upon the front of the place or places of business of the partnership."

[11, 12] That we consider one of the most material provisions of the statute for the protection of creditors and means just what the language imports. It must "appear"—that is, be obvious and manifest—"conspicuously"; that is, plain to the eye, and easily seen. There must be some sign or writing conveying the information required by the statute appearing conspicuously upon the front of the place or places of business of the partnership. The place to which it is attached must be conspicuous, and it must also be conspicuous in the sense that it may be easily read.

[13] We do not think that the evidence in this case in these respects measures up to the requirements of the law. Two typewritten papers placed at a height of 8¼ feet from the floor, illegible to one standing on the floor at the entrance of the doors or on the sidewalk adjacent thereto, and almost illegible after being taken down from their position above the door, one of them written on a piece of paper 7¼ inches long and 2¼ inches wide, and the other 1 inch wide and about 4 inches long, upon which nothing was legible, exposed to the weather for months, are neither a literal nor a substantial compliance with the law upon that subject. It appears, indeed, that for a considerable period of time there were no notices such as the law required.

We are of opinion that the judgment should be reversed, and the case remanded for further proceedings to be had in accordance with this opinion.

Reversed.

(112 Va. 859)

WILKINSON v. DORSEY.

(Supreme Court of Appeals of Virginia. Nov. 16, 1911.)

1. EQUITY (§ 348*)—JURISDICTION—MISTAKE—EVIDENCE.

Equity will not relieve against an alleged mistake on proof of a possibility or even a probability of mistake; but the existence thereof must be established by the clearest and most satisfactory evidence.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Equity, Cent. Dig. § 20; Dec. Dig. § 348.*]

2. REFORMATION OF INSTRUMENTS (§ 20*)—GROUNDS.

Equity will reform a written instrument where there has been an innocent omission or insertion of a material stipulation, contrary to the intention of both parties, and under a mutual mistake, and where there has been a mistake of one party, accompanied by fraud or other inequitable conduct of the remaining parties.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Reformation of Instruments, Cent. Dig. § 80; Dec. Dig. § 20.*]

8. REFORMATION OF INSTRUMENTS (§ 45*)—MISTAKE OR FRAUD—EVIDENCE.

In a suit to compel performance of a contract to convey real estate, which defendant executed to her husband's creditor in payment of a debt, evidence held insufficient to establish that she was induced to execute the instrument by fraud or mistake as to her liability on the notes executed by her husband to secure the debt.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Reformation of Instruments, Cent. Dig. § 159; Dec. Dig. § 45.*]

Appeal from Corporation Court of City of Roanoke.

Bill by J. H. Wilkinson against E. E. Dorsey for specific performance. Decree for defendant, and complainant appeals. Reversed.

C. B. & H. M. Moomaw and Hall, Woods & Jackson, for appellant. Scott, Altizer & Watts, for appellee.

KEITH, P. The object of the bill in this case was to obtain the specific performance of a contract for the sale of land lying in the city of Roanoke, which is as follows:

"This contract, made this 21st day of September, 1908, by and between E. E. Dorsey, party of the first part, and J. H. Wilkinson, party of the second part:

"Whereas, the said E. E. Dorsey and her late husband, Joseph M. Dorsey, are indebted to the said J. H. Wilkinson in the sum of $800, evidenced by the notes of the said Joseph M. Dorsey; and

"Whereas, the said party of the first part is anxious to provide for the payment of said debt and is willing to make provision therefor:

"Now, therefore, this contract witnesseth, that the said E. E. Dorsey agrees to sell to the said J. H. Wilkinson all that lot or parcel of land lying and being in the city of Roanoke, Va., and described as follows, to wit: * * *

"And in consideration of the above agreement the said J. H. Wilkinson agrees to pay to the said E. E. Dorsey the sum of $900 for said property.

"It is agreed between the parties that settlement and payment for the above property shall be made when the property which was owned by the said Joseph M. Dorsey, to wit, two lots of land, one lying on the west of the above described lot, and one on the east thereof, is sold by decree of court, and it is mutually agreed that so much of the proceeds of the sale of the said two lots belonging to the said Joseph M. Dorsey as is not required for the payment of the cost of the suit and other indebtedness of the said Joseph M. Dorsey, shall be applied to the payment of the indebtedness of the said Joseph M. Dorsey and Ella E. Dorsey to J. H. Wilkinson; that the balance of the indebtedness to the said J. H. Wilkinson shall be deducted from the nine hundred dollars ($900.00), the purchase price of the above described lot, and that any balance which may be due by the said J. H. Wilkinson upon said lot shall be paid by the said J. H. Wilkinson to the said Ella E. Dorsey.

"Witness the following signatures and seals the day and year first above written.

"Ella E. Dorsey. [Seal.]

"J. H. Wilkinson. [Seal.]"

This contract was acknowledged before a notary public on the day of its date, and was admitted to record on the 11th day of October following.

Mrs. Ella E. Dorsey filed an answer, in which she says that she was the wife of Joseph M. Dorsey, who died in the year 1908, owning the two vacant lots in the bill mentioned, and leaving her and her three children with no other means of support than the property mentioned in said contract, which was conveyed to her as her separate estate in the year 1890; that shortly after the death of her husband, she being utterly ignorant of business and wholly unadvised as to her rights, the complainant told her that he held notes of her husband, upon which her name appeared as indorser, to an amount of about $800; that thereupon respondent informed the complainant that she had never indorsed said notes, and that if her name appeared upon them it was placed there without her knowledge or consent; that nevertheless the complainant insisted that respondent was liable on said notes, and said that they had been brought to him with her name on them by respondent's husband, and that she, or at least the property conveyed to her, was liable for their payment; that complainant then proposed that respondent should go with him to the office of the Honorable C. B. Moomaw, whom he represented to respondent as being a good lawyer, and one who would rightly advise her as to her liabilities in the premises; that, wishing to do what was right, she complied with this suggestion, and when she reached the office of Mr. Moomaw she was there again told that she and her property were liable for the debt; that, so believing, and in ignorance of the fact that Mr. Moomaw was then the attorney for the complainant, she entered into the contract in the bill mentioned, which was then and there prepared at the dictation of Mr. Moomaw and in his office; that she never would have entered into the contract, unless she had believed that she or her property was liable for the indebtedness; that she had full confidence that Judge Moomaw would advise her correctly, and does not now believe that he would have permitted her to sign the contract, unless he was satisfied that she was liable for the payment of said indebtedness. The facts with reference to the $800 debt are stated to be: That her husband, Joseph M. Dorsey, was indebted to the complainant for materials furnished him some time previous to his death; that after said indebtedness had been incurred and was long past due her husband gave to Wilkinson certain notes covering the same, upon which he had placed her name as indorser, without her knowledge and consent; that the existence of these notes was unknown to respondent until she was advised thereof by Wilkinson after her husband's death. The answer further states and charges: That the contract is the result of a mutual mistake of the parties thereto, or, if complainant was not mistaken in the premises, it was the result of fraudulent and inequitable conduct on his part, and she prays, not only that specific performance may be denied, but that the court will proceed further and decree that the contract be annulled and set aside, and to that end that her answer may be taken and treated as a cross-bill, and that complainant may be required to answer the same, but not under oath, and that all other and general relief may be granted respondent as the nature of her case may require and to equity shall seem meet.

Wilkinson answered this cross-bill, denying its allegations, and giving his version of the transactions which led up to the execution of the contract set up in his bill. Upon the issues thus made, depositions were taken, and the case was submitted to the corporation court, which entered a decree, denying the specific execution of the contract in the bill mentioned, and decreeing its cancellation as prayed for in the cross-bill, and from that decree an appeal was allowed.

It appears from the proof that Joseph M. Dorsey was a contract plasterer in the city of Roanoke; that Wilkinson was a merchant dealing in building material; and that in the course of business Dorsey became indebted to him. In the month of January, 1908, Dorsey owed Wilkinson about $800. He was unable to pay the whole of the debt at one time, and proposed to close the account by notes signed by himself and indorsed by his wife, the defendant in this suit, and accordingly eight notes for $100 each were prepared, payable consecutively at from one to eight years. Dorsey executed these notes on his part, and was about to indorse them on behalf of his wife, when Wilkinson said to him: "I thought that you would have your wife indorse these notes?" to which Dorsey replied: "Well, she is. This is the way we do our business. If you doubt my word, call up Mrs. Dorsey." This Wilkinson declined to do, whereupon Dorsey went to the telephone and called up his wife and spoke to her about the matter, and asked her if it would be all right for him to indorse her name. Wilkinson did not hear Mrs. Dorsey's reply, but he knew the number of the telephone of Dorsey's house, and knew that Dorsey called the right number. When the conversation over the telephone was finished, Dorsey remarked, "I told you it was all right," and proceeded to write his wife's name on the back of the notes. On the 1st of May, 1908, Dorsey died without having paid any of the eight notes; none of them at the time being due. Some time after the death of Dorsey, his widow, the defendant in this suit, went to Wilkinson's place of business, and stated that she wanted to make arrangements for the payment of these notes. She said that she could not pay the debt and continue to live on her property, and she wanted to go north and live with her husband's people, and asked Wilkinson to take charge of her house and rent it, and use the rents for the payment of the notes, but that she did not want to leave the city until the fall of the year. Some time in the month of September, she telephoned to Wilkinson and asked him to come down to her home. When he went there, she stated to him that she wanted to sell him the property—not only her property, but the two vacant lots belonging to her husband. She asked Wilkinson the sum of $1,200 for the whole property, and out of the proceeds of this sale she proposed to pay to Wilkinson the notes above referred to, and let him pay her the difference. Wilkinson was of the opinion that the whole property was worth about $1,300; the house and lot being worth $900, and the vacant lots $200 each. It developed that Mrs. Dorsey was not the owner of all the property, and that her late husband was the owner of the two vacant lots; whereupon Wilkinson stated that he doubted if she could make sale of her husband's property. A few days after this conversation, Mrs. Dorsey came up town, and telephoned to Wilkinson to meet her at the bank. When they met, she said that she wanted some money, and thereupon Wilkinson indorsed her note for $75. At that time Wilkinson said to her that he had consulted an attorney with reference to her right to sell the property of her husband, and that the attorney was of the opinion that she could not do so, and suggested that they go to the office of Mr. Moomaw, an attorney in the city of Roanoke, which they did. On reaching the office of Mr. Moomaw, Mrs. Dorsey, after being introduced to him, proceeded to state the facts hereinbefore set forth—that her husband was dead; that he owned two vacant lots, and that she owned a house and lot situated between them; that Wilkinson held notes of Dorsey for $800, upon which she was indorser, and that she wished to pay this debt by a sale of the property to Wilkinson, receiving from him the difference. In the conversation that ensued, it appeared that in addition to the notes held by Wilkinson Dorsey was indebted to a number of other people in the city of Roanoke. Mrs. Dorsey also stated that she was willing to take $1,200 for the whole property, but, being informed that she could not sell Dorsey's lots, she expressed her willingness to sell her individual property to Wilkinson for the sum of $800 in discharge of his debt, and at that time Wilkinson said he was willing to pay her $900 for it. Mr. Moomaw suggested to Mrs. Dorsey that such an arrangement would not be fair to her, as she was only the indorser on the notes and secondarily liable; that the property of Joseph M. Dorsey should be exhausted first; and that if she should pay the whole of that debt out of her property it would leave his property for his other creditors; whereas it should be applied to the debts which he owed ratably, and she should only be required to pay such balance of the notes as was left after the property of Dorsey was exhausted. Seeing the propriety of this suggestion, Mrs. Dorsey and Wilkinson thereupon entered into a contract, in which Mrs. Dorsey agreed to sell to Wilkinson her house and lot for the sum of $900. The contract provided that a suit should be brought to settle the estate of Joseph M. Dorsey and subject his property to the payment of his debts; that such portion of the proceeds of said property as would be applicable to the payment of Wilkinson's debt should be credited on said debt; and that the balance of said debt should be deducted by Wilkinson from the purchase price he was to pay Mrs. Dorsey for her property. A creditor's bill was filed to subject Dorsey's property to the payment of his debts, and, the property being sold, Wilkinson received on his debt about $124, and was then ready to make a settlement with Mrs. Dorsey for her property, and pay her what was coming to her and receive a deed to the property.

This recital of facts is taken in a large degree from the petition for appeal, and is fully sustained by the preponderance of the testimony. There is, indeed, but little contradiction between the testimony of Mrs. Dorsey and that of the witnesses for Wilkinson. The only material difference is that Mrs. Dorsey asserts that she never authorized her husband to indorse her name upon the notes; that she signed the contract in the bill mentioned, believing that she was bound to pay those notes; that she was not advised that she was not liable upon them; and that she had never seen the notes until they were shown to her at the time she gave her testimony.

In her testimony, in answer to questions, she said:

"Q. You placed the property you owned as being worth about $800 at that time, didn't you? A. $900 was what Mr. Wilkinson said.

"Q. I understand; but you placed the full value of the property at $1,200, and you said the two lots were worth $200 apiece? A. Yes, sir.

"Q. And it was then that Mr. Wilkinson said he would give you $900? A. Yes, sir.

"Q. You also remember, don't you, we were making a calculation as to the amount of your debts? A. Yes, sir.

"Q. That I stated to you if you sold your property that way you would not have much left? A. Yes, sir; after you brought in those notes of Mr. Dorsey.

"Q. After I calculated what you owed Mr. Wilkinson and the other debts which you named, and got what you valued the property at, I told you that if you would sell the property that way you would not have much left? A. Yes; you did; but you see I did not know anything about those notes when I was trying to sell Mr. Wilkinson the property.

"Q. You knew it before you came to my office? A. I do not remember that I knew anything about the notes until I came to the office. I knew Joe owed Mr. Wilkinson, but I did not know anything about the notes until I came to your office.

"Q. Didn't you say Mr. Wilkinson spoke to you about the notes at your house when you called him down there? A. He did not say anything to me about the notes, but I knew Joe owed Mr. Wilkinson the money; but there was nothing said to me about the notes.

"Q. Now, who spoke first about the debt at your house, you or Mr. Wilkinson? A. I must have spoken first about it.

"Q. You spoke about the debt coming off the price of the property? A. I thought, you know, that it would leave me—yes; I remember I spoke about that coming off the property. But, you see, I thought after Mr. Wilkinson got his money, why, there would be something coming to me. When I asked him about selling him the property, I did not know anything about the notes. I knew Joe owed this money, and I thought if I could sell him the property then there would be something coming to me.

"Q. And you offered to sell him the property and take Mr. Wilkinson's debt out of it, and then pay you the balance? A. Yes; after I sold him all this property. Then he said to me, after I proposed selling him all the property: 'Well, you cannot sell Mr. Dorsey's property. That will have to go through court.'

We think it appears, not only from the evidence of other witnesses, but from the testimony of Mrs. Dorsey herself, that she knew of this indebtedness on the part of her husband; that she intended to pay it out of the proceeds of the sale of her property; that she herself made the first proposal to that effect; and that her subsequent attitude is due to two causes: First, the fact that she found her husband's indebtedness, other than that to Mr. Wilkinson, would absorb the greater part of his property; and, secondly, to influences which will always exert themselves to a greater or less extent under similar conditions. Immediately upon the death of her husband, she felt a disposition to provide for his debts, which insensibly faded with time, while, on the other hand, the pressure of her situation was making itself felt each day with greater force. Here was a debt contracted by her husband in the ordinary course of business, for which he gave negotiable notes, placing her name upon them as indorser as he had before done without objection on her part. There was a strong motive to protect his good name, which prevailed with her in the first instance; but, ascertaining that there was perhaps no legal liability upon her, the pressure of conditions finally overcame the sentiment by which she had been at first influenced, and she determined to stand upon her legal rights.

There is nothing to indicate that Mrs. Dorsey is ignorant or incompetent. She says that she had frequently indorsed her husband's notes before, but carefully discriminates as to the character of the notes which it was her custom to indorse; and we think the reading of the exhibit filed with the bill of itself plainly sets forth and carefully protects her rights, and shows knowledge upon her part of every essential condition. That she executed that instrument is not denied, and she was bound by it, unless she maintains her position that it was obtained from her by fraudulent misrepresentation, or by mutual mistake.

[1] In Solenberger v. Strickler, 110 Va. 273, 85 S. E. 566, it is said that equity will not relieve against a mistake, unless it be established by the clearest and most satisfactory evidence. Bibb v. Am. Coal & Iron Co., 109 Va. 261, 64 S. E. 32.

[2] It is not enough to show a possibility or even a probability of mistake. As was said by Lewis, P., in Shenandoah Val. R. Co. v. Dunlop, 86 Va. 346, 10 S. E. 239: "The authorities all agree that equity has jurisdiction to reform written instruments in two well-defined classes of cases only, viz.: (1) Where there has been an innocent omission or insertion of a material stipulation, contrary to the intention of both parties, and under a mutual mistake; and (2) where there has been a mistake of one party, accompanied by fraud or other inequitable conduct of the remaining parties. But so great and obvious is the danger of permitting the solemn engagements of parties, when reduced to writing, to be varied by parol evidence, that in no case will relief be granted, except where there is a plain mistake, clearly made out by satisfactory and unquestionable proof. According to some of the cases, there must be a certainty of the error. At all events, the party alleging the mistake must show by evidence which leaves no reasonable doubt upon the mind of the court, not only exactly in what the mistake, if any, consists, but the correction that should be made. * * * A rule less rigid would be fraught with infinite mischief, since it would be destructive to the certainty and safety of written contracts." See, also, Donaldson v. Levine, 93 Va. 472, 25 S. E. 541; Snyder v. Grandstaff, 96 Va. 473, 31 S. E. 647, 70 Am. St. Rep. 863.

[3] The evidence in this case not only fails to establish fraud or mistake by clear and satisfactory proof, but the preponderance of the proof maintains the fairness and integrity of the transaction.

We are of opinion that the decree of the corporation court should be reversed, and the cause remanded for further proceedings to be had, not in conflict with this opinion.

Reversed.

(112 Va. 731)

MARTIN v. MARTIN.

(Supreme Court of Appeals of Virginia. Nov. 16, 1911.)

1. PARTITION (§ 4*)—NATURE OF "PARTITION." "Partition" is the division between two or more persons of lands which they jointly own as coparceners, joint tenants, or tenants in common, and before land purchased by one of them can be brought into a partition suit along with lands jointly owned, pursuant to a verbal agreement, a state of facts must be established which will authorize a specific performance of the verbal agreement.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Partition, Cent. Dig. §§ 6-12; Dec. Dig. § 4.*

For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, vol. 6, pp. 5188-5190.]

2. SPECIFIC PERFORMANCE (§ 41*)—VERBAL AGREEMENT FOR PARTITION—ENFORCEMENT—CONDITIONS PRECEDENT.

Under the statute of frauds (Code 1904, § 2840), a verbal agreement for partition is not enforceable, unless the agreement is certain and definite, and the acts of part performance refer to and result from the agreement; and the agreement must have been so far executed that a refusal of full execution will operate as a fraud on the party seeking enforcement.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Specific Performance, Cent. Dig. §§ 120-123; Dec. Dig. § 41.*]

3. SPECIFIC PERFORMANCE (§ 43*)—VERBAL AGREEMENT FOR PARTITION OF REAL ESTATE—PART PERFORMANCE.

Plaintiff and defendant purchased the interests of their brothers and sisters in land of their deceased father, pursuant to an oral agreement that adjacent land, previously purchased by defendant alone, should be considered a part of the father's land for partition between plaintiff and defendant. Plaintiff furnished his share of the money for the purchase of the interests, the cultivation of the land, and the raising of crops, the proceeds of which went to the support of plaintiff and defendant, the surplus being used to pay for the interests purchased, and the interests so purchased were paid wholly out of the crops raised by the joint labor of plaintiff and defendant. Held, that the acts of performance by plaintiff did not take the agreement out of the statute of frauds (Code 1904, § 2840), and it was not enforceable.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Specific Performance, Cent. Dig. §§ 134-139; Dec. Dig. § 43.*]

4. SPECIFIC PERFORMANCE (§ 41*)—VERBAL AGREEMENT FOR PARTITION—ENFORCEMENT.

The evidence did not show a state of facts justifying enforcement of the agreement, within the rule that, to justify the enforcement of a parol contract for partition, the contract must have been so far executed that a refusal of full execution will operate as fraud on the party seeking enforcement.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Specific Performance, Cent. Dig. §§ 120-123; Dec. Dig. § 41.*]

Appeal from Circuit Court, Roanoke County.

Suit by Lewis J. Martin against Thomas H. Martin. From a decree for plaintiff, defendant appeals. Reversed and remanded.

A. E. King, for appellant. Horace M. Fox and Hall, Woods & Jackson, for appellees.

KEITH, P. Arabia Martin died in 1894, leaving 11 children. Among them were Lewis J. Martin and Thomas H. Martin, the parties to this litigation. Thomas H. Martin had spent four years of his life in the West, where he had saved some money, and upon his return to his home in Roanoke county he purchased 60 acres of land adjoining his father's farm, for which he paid the sum of $1,000. The land was bought, paid for, and the deed executed to him before his father died. Arabia Martin, at the time of his death, was the owner of a farm containing about 204 acres, and Lewis and Thomas Martin agreed to purchase the interest of their brothers and sisters in the lands of their father. In execution of this arrangement, they succeeded in purchasing all of their father's real estate, except the interest of two of their sisters, paying for the interests thus purchased the sum of $2,750. This money was obtained from sale of crops raised on the lands purchased by them, together with the crops raised on the 60 acres of land belonging to Thomas H. Martin.

During the progress of these transactions, Thomas and Lewis Martin lived together, and the proceeds of the crops, after deducting their living expenses, were used in paying for the land which they had jointly bought. From time to time temporary loans were negotiated to make payments as they fell due. Some of them were secured by deed of trust on the land jointly owned by Thomas and Lewis Martin, and some upon the individual land of Thomas Martin; but all were paid from the proceeds of the crops, and no money from any other source was used in making payments for the land. Thomas and Lewis Martin lived together in the same house until the latter part of April, 1908. About that time they undertook to partition the land which they had bought, and a disagreement arose between them which resulted in Lewis Martin bringing a suit for partition. In it he states that it was agreed between him and Thomas Martin that they would together purchase such interest of their coheirs as they could, and, as a part of the consideration inducing the complainant, Lewis Martin, to enter into this agreement and furnish certain moneys, the 60-acre tract of land, which was theretofore purchased by and deeded to Thomas Martin, should be considered as a part of the land to be enjoyed jointly and held by them, together with such lands as they had inherited from their father, Arabia Martin, and such as they might be able to purchase as aforesaid; that pursuant to this agreement complainant and Thomas H. Martin did make the aforesaid purchases, the complainant furnishing the money that he had agreed to furnish; and that they did thereafter hold and enjoy the lands thus purchased, and as a result of these proceedings the complainant and Thomas Martin were seised and possessed each of a one-half undivided interest in and to the 60-acre tract, as well as the interest of their father's estate which they had inherited, or had acquired by purchase from their coheirs. The bill further avers that there was a partition agreed upon between the complainant and his brother Thomas, by which all of their lands, including the 60 acres, were divided, and that the two brothers, Lewis and Thomas, had entered upon, used, cultivated, and enjoyed the parcels so allotted to each of them; Thomas Martin making numerous and valuable improvements upon the share allotted to him.

Thomas Martin answered the bill, and denied all the material allegations. Proof was taken, and the circuit court decreed that the "contract of partition heretofore made between Thomas H. Martin and Lewis J. Martin, as set out and alleged in said bill, be enforced by the conveyance as herein-after provided, to the said Lewis J. Martin, of the following described property, to wit," and from that decree Thomas Martin appealed.

[1] This case presents something more than a bill for the partition of lands. As is set forth in the petition for an appeal, "partition is the division between two or more persons of lands which they jointly own as coparceners, joint tenants, or tenants in common," and before the 60-acre tract which was purchased by Thomas Martin before his father's death, for which he paid, and to which he held title, can be brought into the partition suit along with the lands jointly owned by Thomas and Lewis Martin as purchasers from their brothers and sisters, a state of facts must be established which will entitle Lewis Martin to a specific performance of the verbal contract between him and Thomas Martin that the 60-acre tract should be considered as belonging jointly to Thomas and Lewis Martin.

[2] "Agreements to make partition can only be enforced in equity, where a similar agreement to convey land could be enforced." 1 Minor on Real Property, § 901.

Under the statute of frauds (section 2840 of the Code), no action shall be brought upon a contract for the sale of real estate, unless some memorandum or note thereof be in writing, and signed by the party to be charged thereby, or his agent.

No such memorandum or note appears in this record, and none in fact existed. To maintain the decree of the circuit court, therefore, the case must be brought within the influence of Wright v. Puckett, 22 Grat. 370; Plunkett v. Bryant, 101 Va. 818, 45 S. E. 742; and Reed v. Reed, 108 Va. 790, 62 S. E. 792. Those cases are to the effect that, "in order to justify a court of equity in the enforcement of a parol contract for the sale of land on the ground of part performance, the contract must be certain and definite in its terms; the acts of part performance relied on must refer to, result from, or be made in pursuance of, the contract proved; and the contract must have been so far executed that a refusal of full execution would operate a fraud upon the party and place him in a situation which does not lie in compensation."

[3] Let it be admitted that such a contract is averred in the bill as should be specifically executed, if maintained by proof. We are clearly of opinion that the proof falls far short of that which is required by a court of equity for the enforcement of a parol contract for the sale of land. The only acts of performance upon the part of the plaintiff were the furnishing of his share of the money for the purchase of the interests of his coparceners, the cultivation of the land, and the raising of crops, the proceeds of which were devoted, first, to his own support and that of his brother, and the surplus constituted the source of payment of the purchase price of the land.

[4] It must be observed that Thomas Martin is making no objection to the partition of the shares purchased by him jointly with Lewis Martin from their brothers and sisters. Those purchases were the act of Lewis, as well as of Thomas. Thomas and Lewis agreed with their vendors upon what the interests purchased were fairly worth, and those interests have been paid for out of crops raised by their joint labor, belonging to them jointly, and that joint interest must be taken to compensate the joint purchasers for their outlay; and Lewis and Thomas must be considered to have had a sufficient quid pro quo for what each of them has paid. If, in addition to an equal share with Thomas in the land jointly purchased, Lewis is to be held entitled to one-half of the 60-acre tract bought and paid for by Thomas, and which is shown to be worth about $2,500, then the result would be that Lewis would be the owner of at least twice as much land in value as would fall to the share of his brother. If that were the result of a bargain fairly made, between people of sound mind and capable of contracting, and proved to the satisfaction of the court, there would be no choice but to enforce it; but the appellee is before the court asking the enforcement of what is substantially a verbal contract to convey land. To bring it within the influence of the equitable principle of part performance, he must show such a state of facts that a refusal of a full execution would be a fraud upon him, and place him in a situation which does not lie in compensation. In this the proof that he adduces wholly fails. There is no hardship upon him in refusing to enforce performance of the contract; for, without reference to the interest which he claims in the 60-acre tract, he had received a full equivalent for the labor performed and the money expended by him.

We are, for these reasons, of opinion that the decree of the circuit court should be reversed, and the cause remanded to the circuit court, with direction to exclude from the partition the 60-acre tract, the title to which is in Thomas Martin, and, as to the other lands mentioned in the bill and proceedings, to make partition of them between the plaintiff and the defendant.

Reversed.

(112 Va. 802)

SILLING v. TODD.

(Supreme Court of Appeals of Virginia. Nov. 16, 1911.)

1. TRUSTS (§ 81*)—RESULTING TRUSTS—PAYMENT OF CONSIDERATION FOR CONVEYANCE TO ANOTHER—HUSBAND AND WIFE.

Where property is bought and paid for by a married woman with her own means and for her own benefit, a conveyance to her husband creates a trust in favor of the wife, which a court of equity, in a proper proceeding, will enforce.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Trusts, Cent. Dig. §§ 115-118; Dec. Dig. § 81.*]

2. BANKRUPTCY (§ 303*)—ACTION BY TRUSTEE—FRAUDULENT CONVEYANCE BY BANKRUPT—SUFFICIENCY OF EVIDENCE.

Evidence in a proceeding by a trustee in bankruptcy to set aside a conveyance by the bankrupt to his wife, acknowledged and delivered within a month of his involuntary bankruptcy, on the ground that a transfer was made with intent to hinder, delay, and defraud the bankrupt's creditors, held insufficient to sustain a decree for the trustee.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Bankruptcy, Dec. Dig. § 303.*]

Appeal from Circuit Court, Augusta County.

Bill by R. A. Todd, trustee of the bankrupt estate of John H. Silling, against Annie E. Silling. Decree for plaintiff, and defendant appeals. Decree reversed, and bill dismissed.

Bumgardner & Bumgardner and Robertson & Robertson, for appellant. J. M. Perry, for appellee.

HARRISON, J. This record shows that by deed recorded January 23, 1908, John H. Silling made a general assignment for the benefit of his creditors, and that four days later he was, upon the petition of his creditors, thrown into bankruptcy. The bill in this proceeding was filed in the circuit court of Augusta county by R. A. Todd, trustee in bankruptcy of Silling, assailing the validity of a deed from John H. Silling to his wife, the appellant, dated February 15, 1908, but not acknowledged and delivered until January 9, 1908, conveying to her a storehouse and lot at Stokesville, in Augusta county, and asking to have the same set aside upon the ground that the transfer was made with intent to hinder, delay, and defraud the creditors of John H. Silling within the purview of the bankrupt act, and also because within the purview of that act it constituted a preferential payment of a bond of Silling to his wife, and, further, because the transfer was fraudulent and void under the laws of Virginia, and therefore void under the bankrupt act.

The answer filed by the defendant, Annie E. Silling, denies every charge of fraud made in the bill against herself or her husband, and asserts that the utmost good faith characterized the conveyance to her which is assailed; that the lot upon which the storehouse was built at Stokesville was bought for $100 by her and paid for with her own means, and that the building thereon was erected entirely with means furnished by her for that purpose; that the whole was an investment made by her for her own benefit; that through a mistake of the scrivener who prepared the deed the property was conveyed to her husband, instead of herself, and that this mistake was intended to be corrected by the conveyance sought to be set aside; and that her husband never at any time had any beneficial interest in the property, and never claimed any.

Both the husband and wife were introduced as witnesses to sustain the bona fides of the deed assailed; but their testimony was objected to upon the ground that, under the Virginia statute (Code 1904, § 3346), neither husband nor wife is competent to testify in any proceeding by a creditor to avoid or impeach any conveyance, gift, or sale from one to the other on the ground of fraud or want of consideration.

There is much force in the contention of the learned counsel for the appellant that this suit is not based upon the Virginia statute of fraudulent and voluntary conveyances, but is based upon a federal act, and that the validity of the deed in controversy is to be tested alone by the rules of federal procedure as fixed by federal statutes and decisions, and that the disability imposed upon husband and wife by the Virginia statute cannot by legal intentment be stretched to extend that disability to a proceeding under a federal statute to set aside a paper declared void by a federal statute. See Samuels' Case, 110 Va. 901, 66 S. E. 222.

This question, however, need not be decided, because the evidence in this case, other than that given by the appellant and her husband, shows that the transaction in question was bona fide and without prejudice to the rights of the appellee or the creditors represented by him.

John H. Silling, the husband of appellant, was called as a witness by the appellee in the bankrupt proceeding, and there testified at length. That deposition is quoted from by the appellee in his bill in this case, and the whole deposition is filed by the appellant as part of her answer to the bill. This deposition of John H. Silling, taken in the bankruptcy proceeding, is conceded to be proper evidence in this case; and it, together with other competent evidence herein, abundantly shows that the appellant was amply able to buy the Stokesville lot and pay for the building erected thereon, and that she did in fact buy the lot and pay for it and the improvements put thereon with her own means, as an investment for her own benefit, and that her husband never at any time had any interest therein. The scrivener who prepared the deed conveying the lot to John H. Silling testifies that neither Mrs. Silling nor her husband ever saw that deed until after it was prepared, executed, and delivered; that as soon as they saw it, and found that the lot was conveyed to the husband, instead of to the wife, they both protested, and at once insisted that it was a mistake which must be corrected, and that he advised them that the correction could be made by the husband conveying the title to Mrs. Silling, and that he would prepare the deed for that purpose free of charge, as he had made the mistake; that it was his fault that this deed was not made until January, 1908; that every time Mrs. Silling saw him, from the time the mistake was discovered until the transfer from the husband was made, she urged upon him the preparation of the deed conveying the property to her, but that he procrastinated without cause until January, 1908, when the deed from the husband was finally made and executed. In the meantime, and until the deed was made, Mrs. Silling took from her husband, as a protection, his bond for $500, the total cost of the house and lot, which she surrendered as soon as she received the deed. The deed which had by mistake been made to the husband was never recorded until the deed from him to his wife was made, when both were recorded within a few days of each other.

[1] It being satisfactorily established that the property in controversy was bought and paid for by the appellant with her own means and for her own benefit, and that her husband did not have and was never intended to have any interest therein, it follows that, when the deed was made conveying the property to John H. Silling, a trust was thereby created by operation of law in favor of Mrs. Silling, the party paying the purchase money, and, when Silling subsequently transferred to his wife the legal title held by him for her benefit, he did no more than a court of equity in a proper proceeding would have compelled him to do. That under such circumstances a trust resulted in favor of Mrs. Silling, the party paying the purchase money, is a familiar doctrine. Cox v. Cox, 95 Va. 173, 27 S. E. 834.

[2] In the case at bar, the charges of fraud are wholly unsustained, and the good faith of the transaction assailed is fully established. The decree complained of must therefore be reversed, and this court will enter such decree as the circuit court ought to have entered, dismissing the bill filed by the appellee, with costs.

Reversed.

(112 Va. 798)

SHOEMAKER v. SHOEMAKER et al.

(Supreme Court of Appeals of Virginia. Nov. 16, 1911.)

1. BONDS (§ 128*)—ACTION—BURDEN OF PROOF.

On plea of non est factum in a suit on a bond, plaintiff has the burden of showing genuineness of the signature.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Bonds, Cent. Dig. §§ 205-217; Dec. Dig. § 128.*]

2. EQUITY (§ 378*)—ISSUES OF FACT—JURY TRIAL.

Where suit on a bond involved the credibility of witnesses, and the proof was very conflicting as to the genuineness of the bond, it was error not to order a jury trial on the trial court's own motion.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Equity, Cent. Dig. §§ 794-799; Dec. Dig. § 378.*]

Appeal from Circuit Court, Russell County.

Bill by B. H. Shoemaker, assignee, against A. D. Shoemaker, administrator, and others. From a decree dismissing the bill, plaintiff appeals. Reversed.

W. W. Bird, for appellant. Finney & Wilson, for appellees.

CARDWELL, J. The controversy involved in this appeal is with respect to a bond alleged to have been executed on the 1st day of August, 1908, by James M. Shoemaker, who it appears resided in Russell county, Va., was never married, and had accumulated some property. His nearest relatives and heirs at law were four brothers, one sister, and two nephews, children of a deceased brother; one of the brothers, Isaac Shoemaker, being a resident of Scott county, Va., whom James M. Shoemaker had been in the habit of visiting at irregular intervals, his visits being sometimes prolonged as much as two weeks or more. It is claimed by appellant that, while on a visit to his brother Isaac, the bond here in question for $1,077, payable one day after its date, was executed by James M. Shoemaker to B. H. H. Shoemaker, a son of Isaac Shoemaker, and by B. H. H. Shoemaker assigned to appellant, another son of Isaac Shoemaker.

James M. Shoemaker died intestate at his home in Russell county in September, 1908, but a short time after the date of said bond, and A. D. Shoemaker was duly appointed and qualified as his administrator. Some time after the death of James M. Shoemaker, appellant presented the said bond to said administrator for payment, which was refused, although the bond had been approved and allowed by the commissioner of accounts for Russell county as a debt against the estate of James M. Shoemaker, deceased; but whether payment was refused because of the want of sufficient personal assets of said decedent's estate to pay it, or for what reason, does not appear and is not material. Payment of the bond having been refused, appellant filed his bill in this cause against the administrator and heirs at law of James M. Shoemaker, deceased, the purpose of which was to enforce its payment out of the personal assets in the administrator's hands, if sufficient, and, if not, out of the proceeds of the sale of the real estate owned by James M. Shoemaker at his death.

To the bill the administrator filed a separate answer, some of the other defendants their joint and several answers, and at the same term of the court two of the defendants filed their plea of non est factum, verified by their affidavits. The answers set up as a defense want of consideration and the incompetency of James M. Shoemaker to dispose of his estate at the time the said bond purports to have been executed; but defendants offered no evidence in support of either of those defenses, and the case was litigated and finally determined by the circuit court upon the plea of non est factum interposed by two of the defendants, the decree of the court being adverse to appellant, and his bill was dismissed.

[1] There was some evidence, brought out by appellees in the conduct of the case upon their cross-examination of witnesses for appellant, tending to show that there was no consideration for the execution of the bond in controversy; but it is conceded here that the plea of non est factum presents the only defense relied upon by appellees. The question, therefore, presented on this appeal, is whether or not the appellant has successfully carried the burden, cast upon him by the plea of non est factum, of proving the genuineness of the signature of James M. Shoemaker to the disputed bond.

[2] We shall not go into a discussion of the evidence, further than to say that it involves not only the credibility of witnesses, but the charge of both forgery and perjury on the part of some of the witnesses who have testified in the case; and the proof is not, in our opinion, sufficiently definite and certain to satisfy us that the ends of justice have been attained by the decree complained of. With the strong circumstances, both favorable and adverse to the genuineness of the bond, appearing from the depositions taken and considered at the hearing of the case, it is one peculiarly for a jury, and the error of the court was in not ordering of its own motion an issue out of chancery. Wherefore, in order that the subject may be more fully investigated, the decree of the circuit court will be reversed, and the cause remanded, with directions that a jury be impaneled to try and determine at the bar of the court the issue of fact involved, viz., whether or not the signature of James M. Shoemaker to the disputed bond is genuine; and upon the trial of that issue before the jury, the burden of proving the genuineness of the signature in question shall be upon the appellant.

Reversed.

(112 Va. 694)

CHURCH et al. v. GOSHEN IRON CO.

(Supreme Court of Appeals of Virginia. Nov. 16, 1911.)

1. LANDLORD AND TENANT (§ 265*)—DISTRESS. Distress for rent will not lie, unless the relation of landlord and tenant exists.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Landlord and Tenant, Cent. Dig. §§ 1062-1074; Dec. Dig. § 265.*]

2. LICENSES (§ 44*)—DISTINGUISHED FROM LEASE.

Defendant and plaintiff executed an agreement providing that plaintiff allow defendant to remove ballast rock from its limestone quarry upon the following terms, to wit: Defendant to furnish all necessary machinery and to pay plaintiff a royalty of 10 cents a yard and remove at least 100 tons each day, the royalties for each week to be paid on the succeeding Thursdays, and in default of payment all operations to cease until royalties were paid. It was further provided that the minimum royalty should begin to accrue on the day defendant started the machinery, and that the contract should terminate on a certain date, when defendant should turn over the premises to plaintiff. Held, that the relation of landlord and tenant did not exist between the parties; defendant merely having a license to work the quarry.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Licenses, Cent. Dig. §§ 97-99; Dec. Dig. § 44.*]

Error to Circuit Court, Augusta County. Proceedings by the Goshen Iron Company against E. W. Church and another. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendants bring error. Reversed.

H. J. Taylor and Blease & McCoy, for plaintiffs in error. R. L. Parrish and J. M. Perry, for defendant in error.

WHITTLE, J. This writ of error is to a final order upon a distress warrant for rent, under Code Va. 1904, c. 127. Upon the hearing the plaintiff in error, Church, the alleged tenant, resisted the demand on several grounds, while his coplaintiff in error, the Good Roads Machinery Company, set up its ownership of the property levied on by interpleader. A jury was waived, and the whole matter was submitted to the court, which held the property liable to distress, and, ascertaining the rent due to be $510, gave judgment for that sum, and likewise ordered a sale of so much of the property distrained as might be necessary to discharge the rent.

[1] The principle is elementary that distress for rent will not lie unless the relation of landlord and tenant exists between the parties. The right is not only incident to that relation, but is dependent upon it. The controlling question in this case, therefore, is whether the relation of landlord and tenant arises out of the contract upon which the proceeding is based.

The agreement between the Goshen Iron Company and Church stipulates that the first party allows the second party to get and remove ballast rock from its limestone quarry upon the following terms: The second party to furnish all machinery necessary for such quarrying, and to pay the first party a royalty of 10 cents a yard, of 2,500 pounds, and to remove at least 100 tons of ballast rock each and every working day that the contract is in force. The royalties for each week were to be due and payable on the succeeding Thursday at noon; and in default of payment all operations were to cease until such royalty was paid. The minimum royalty was to begin to accrue on the day the second party started his machinery, which should be not later than October 1, 1907, and the contract was to terminate on January 31, 1908, at which time the second party was to turn over the premises occupied by him to the first party. The remaining stipulations do not affect the character of the agreement.

In 27 Cyc. 690, it is said: "There is a broad distinction between a lease of a mine, under which the lessee enters into possession and takes an estate in the property, and a license to work the same mine. In the latter case the licensee has no permanent interest, property, or estate in the land itself, but only in the proceeds, and in such proceeds, not as realty, but as personal property, and his possession is the possession of the owner. A contract simply giving a right to take ore from a mine, no interest or estate being granted, confers a mere license, and the licensee acquires no right to the ore until he separates it from the freehold. But an instrument that demises and leases certain lands for mining purposes only, for a designated term of years, at a fixed rent, and giving the right to erect all necessary buildings, etc., is a lease, and not merely a mining license."

So in the leading case of Funk v. Holderman, 53 Pa. 229, it was held that "a grant of the free and uninterrupted privilege to go upon a tract of land to prospect, bore, erect engines, and take any ore, oil, etc., out of the earth, does not amount to a lease, nor a sale of the land or the minerals, but is a mere grant of an incorporeal hereditament—a license to work the land for minerals, and one coupled with an interest not revocable at the pleasure of the licensor."

Bainbridge on the Law of Mines and Minerals (Ed. 1841), at page 162, observes: "There is a great distinction between a lease of mines and a license to work mines. The former is a distinct conveyance of an actual interest or estate in lands, while the latter is only a mere right or incorporeal hereditament to be exercised in the lands of others. * * * In order to ascertain whether an instrument must be construed as a lease or a license, it is only necessary to determine whether the grantee has acquired by it any estate in the land in respect of which he might bring an action of ejectment. If the land is still to be considered in the possession of the grantor, the instrument will only amount to a license, and though the grantee of the license will certainly be entitled to search and dig for mines according to the terms of his grant, and appropriate the produce to his own use, on payment of the stipulated rent or proportion, yet he will acquire no property in the minerals till they are severed from the land, and have thus become liable to be recovered in an action of trover."

This well-defined distinction between a mining lease and a license is observed by our own decisions.

In Barksdale v. Hairston, 81 Va. 764, the court held that an agreement which conferred the right to "have and possess the exclusive use and privilege of digging, hauling off, and working any ore now found, or which may hereafter be found, anywhere on the said John A. Hairston's land," was the grant of a mere license to dig ore on the premises, not coupled with any estate or interest in the lands.

In the later case of Young v. Ellis, 91 Va. 297, 21 S. E. 480, the court construed the agreement to be, not a mere license, but a mining lease. But the agreement there was essentially different from the one under consideration. The indenture in that instance granted to Ellis the right to enter upon Young's land for the purpose of examining, testing, and searching for minerals of all kinds, to erect and maintain such buildings and machinery and fixtures as might be necessary to work the mines, with the use of timber lands and water necessary and requisite in working the same, and the right of ingress and egress to such mines, for which Ellis agreed to pay "$25 per year, in the event the said minerals are not mined, said rental of $25 to be credited on the royalty herein specified whenever actual mining commences." Ellis furthermore agreed to pay Young "ten cents per gross ton for all ores mined and shipped from said lands quarter yearly * * * for the use and rent of said lands." The lease was for 99 years, with the privilege of buying the land leased within 5 years at $1,000, and contained a clause of forfeiture for nonpayment of rent, with the right to the lessor to re-enter. The court held this agreement to constitute a lease. But it declared that a parol agreement or written contract, where the licensee does not promise or undertake anything more than to pay a royalty on the ore raised from the mine, is a revocable license, and not a lease. See, also, 1 Minor on Real Property, § 51; Taylor's Landlord & Tenant (6th Ed.) § 251.

[2] Tested by these authorities, it would seem clear that the relation of landlord and tenant did not exist between the Goshen Iron Company and Church, and, consequently, the issuance and levy of the distress warrant was without authority of law.

It follows that the order must be reversed, and judgment entered in accordance with the foregoing opinion.

Reversed.

(112 Va. 715)

KEMP v. McGUIRE et al.

(Supreme Court of Appeals of Virginia. Nov. 16, 1911.)

WILLS (§ 603*)—ESTATES CREATED—CONDITIONAL FEE.

A will provided that testatrix's husband should have the property during his lifetime, and that on his death it should go to a daughter, and that if the daughter should outlive the husband, and die "without a husband or issue," the property should go to certain persons. Held, that the daughter, who survived her father, took a conditional fee, so that, if at her death she had a husband or issue, one or both, her estate would become absolute; a contention that she must die without a husband and also without issue to defeat her fee, and that as she had a husband, although he might predecease her, she could not die without a husband, being without merit.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Wills, Cent. Dig. §§ 1351-1359; Dec. Dig. § 603.*]

Appeal from Circuit Court, Rockingham County.

Action by Edward McGuire and others against Lula V. Kemp. From a decree for plaintiffs, defendant appeals. Affirmed.

Ed. C. Martz, for appellant.

KENTH, P. This suit was brought by Edward McGuire and others, judgment creditors of Lula V. Kemp, who before her marriage was Lula V. Miller, to subject certain real estate to the payment of her debts. Lula V. Kemp takes title to the property in question under the will of her mother, Sarah J. Miller, which the circuit court held was an estate in fee, liable to be divested at her death upon certain conditions. From that decree this appeal was allowed.

The will is as follows:

"This is to certify that I, Sarah J. Miller, the wife of Thomas H. Miller, do will and bequeath to my husband, Thomas H. Miller, all of my real estate and personal property to have and to hold during his lifetime, and at his decease said property to go to our daughter, Lula V. Miller.

"(2) Should Lula V. Miller decease before her father's death I bequeath all that may be left after her father's death to my brother Wm. Lambert, my sister Laura V. Dinkle and Eliza Lambert, or in case of their death to their children.

"(3) In case my daughter, Lula V. Miller, should outlive her father and die without a husband or issue, then the property to go as above stated."

Lula V. Miller survived her father, Thomas H. Miller, and therefore the bequest to him conditioned upon his surviving his daughter fails, and Thomas H. Miller disappears from the case. The question to be decided is the effect of the language in the third clause of the will: "In case my daughter, Lula V. Miller, should outlive her father and die without a husband or issue, then the property to go as above stated." She has survived her father and that condition is fulfilled.

The decision of the circuit court was that "Lula V. Kemp has an estate in fee in the house and lot of land mentioned and described in these proceedings, liable, however, to be divested upon her dying without a husband or issue living at the time of her death; and should she so die without a husband or issue surviving, then said house and lot is to vest in fee in the remaindermen named in said will."

The appellant contends that the word "or" should be construed as "and," relying upon Goldsborough v. Washington, 70 S. E. 525; that Lula V. Miller must die without a husband and without issue in order to defeat her estate; and that as she has a husband, although he may predecease her, she cannot be said to have died without a husband, relying upon the decision of this court in Jennings v. Commonwealth, 109 Va. 821, 63 S. E. 1080, 21 L. R. A. (N. S.) 285, 132 Am. St. Rep. 946, where it was held that a woman who has been married and divorced is not an "unmarried female," within the intentment of section 3677 of the Code, providing punishment for the seduction of any unmarried female of previous chaste character. But that case we do not think by any means conclusive of this. While in a criminal prosecution the court was justified, under the authorities, in holding that the terms of a penal statute were not to be extended, and that the phrase "unmarried female," as used in the statute, had reference to one who had never been married, the language of this will is altogether different. A woman who has married and whose husband has died is without doubt a woman "without a husband"; but she may die without a husband and still have issue of her marriage living at her death, and it cannot be supposed that the testatrix intended to defeat the estate of her daughter because she died without a husband, though issue of the marriage were living.

We think, therefore, that the phrase should be construed as though the testatrix had said, "die without a husband and issue," thus requiring the absence of both conditions to defeat the estate of her daughter. Lula V. Miller may die without a husband and without living issue, in which event the property would go under the will "as above stated" —that is to say, to the brother and sisters of the testatrix; or she may die leaving a husband and issue, in which case all the conditions of her title are fulfilled and she takes a fee simple; or she may die leaving issue, in which case she would also take a fee simple; or she may die leaving a husband, without issue, and in that case, also, she would take a fee simple.

It will be observed that in the first clause of the will the husband of the testatrix and father of Lula V. Miller is given a life estate, and if he survived his daughter his life estate, of course, under the first clause of the will, would still continue, and only that which was left after his death would pass to the brother and sisters of the testatrix, and it might well be urged, under those conditions, that he took a fee simple; but, as he predeceased his daughter, that inquiry need not be pressed. The objects of the bounty of the testatrix were her husband, to whom she gave a life estate, her daughter, who took a conditional fee if she survived her father, with a conditional remainder to the brother and sisters of the testatrix. Now by the terms of the third clause of the will exactly the same situation may arise as to the estate given the daughter which confronted the testatrix when she came to make a will. If the daughter has a husband living at the time of her death, or issue living at the time of her death, she takes a fee simple, which upon her death without a will would pass to her heirs, or if she saw fit, and her husband survived her, he might become the beneficiary of her will, just as the father and husband might have taken in the will under consideration.

We are therefore of opinion that the appellant took an estate in fee under her mother's will, liable to be divested upon her dying without a husband or issue living; in other words, it requires the absence or failure of presence of both conditions, a husband and issue, to defeat the estate, and if at the time of her death she has a living husband or issue, one or both, her estate becomes an absolute fee simple.

The decree of the circuit court must be affirmed.

(112 Va. 686)

CAMPBELL v. DOTSON.

(Supreme Court of Appeals of Virginia. Nov. 16, 1911.)

PARTITION (§ 8*)—BY ACT OF PARTIES—DEED—VALIDITY.

A partition deed is not invalidated as to the parties signing it because it was not signed by all the parties to it, where all the shares were verbally agreed upon, and the allottees entered upon their respective allotments and made improvements, and one of the parties had conveyed his interest according to the metes and bounds agreed upon.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Partition, Cent. Dig. § 19; Dec. Dig. § 8.*]

Appeal from Circuit Court, Buchanan County.

Bill by Shade Dotson against A. W. Campbell. From the decree, defendant appeals. Affirmed.

E. S. Finney, for appellant. Chase & Daughterty and A. S. Skeen, for appellee.

KEITH, P. Shade Dotson filed his bill in the circuit court of Buchanan county, from which it appears that he is tenant in common with Rhoda Dotson and A. W. Campbell in certain lands in the bill mentioned; he owning one-half, Rhoda Dotson one-fourth, and A. W. Campbell one-fourth. There is filed with the bill a deed, marked "Exhibit F," dated November 11, 1907, between A. W. Campbell, of Pike county, Ky., Rhoda Dotson and John S. Dotson, her husband, John H. Dotson and Mary Dotson, his wife, of the first part, and Shade Dotson, of Buchanan county, Va., of the second part. This deed is only executed by A. W. Campbell, John H. Dotson, and Mary Dotson, and Campbell in his answer avers that it is not binding upon him because of an error contained in it, growing out of the false and fraudulent representations of Shade Dotson, and that the facts are as follows: That he and Shade Dotson "agreed to partition said land in the deed mentioned, and Dotson for that purpose had a deed prepared, and represented to respondent that said deed called for a line agreed on between Pricy Fuller, John H. Dotson, and respondent, when in fact the line put in said deed was not the line agreed on at all, but a different line, which begins at a different point and runs to a different point from that agreed on, and to that which respondent intended to convey to, and is not the true division line as agreed on, and that there is error in the description of the division line; that respondent did not know when he signed said deed that there was an error and mistake in it as to the location of the division line; that Shade Dotson represented to him that the division line in the deed was the line that had been agreed on, and respondent signed said deed, believing it to be the line agreed on as represented by Shade Dotson.

This was the sole issue tried in the circuit court. Upon it evidence was taken, and the circuit court rendered a decree partitioning the land in the bill mentioned in accordance with the lines set out in the deed, and from that decree A. W. Campbell has appealed.

In his petition before this court he relies in large measure upon the fact that the partition deed was not signed by all of the parties to it; that it was an incomplete instrument, and therefore a nullity; that, it being an agreed fact that the land mentioned in the bill was of uniform value, he was entitled to one-fourth of the entire area, which was 153.24 acres, instead of 127.35 acres, as allotted to him by the decree.

The record shows that a partition of these lands had been verbally agreed upon between the parties; that they had entered upon the shares so allotted to them, and had made improvements; and that one of the tenants in common had conveyed his interest in accordance with the metes and bounds agreed upon between the parties. It further appears that no issue is presented by the pleadings in this cause, with respect to the incompleteness and consequent nullity of Exhibit F. The answer of Campbell sets out the alleged misrepresentation and fraud upon which he relies with much amplification, and at the conclusion of his charge he denies that the deed is binding on him; but it is obvious that this general denial has relation to the specific allegation of fraud as releasing him from the obligation of the deed, and not to the fact that the deed was wholly void.

When we come to consider the evidence upon the charge of fraud, we find it to be wholly insufficient and that it falls far short of that clear proof of fraud which the law requires.

Upon the whole case, we are of opinion that the decree complained of should be affirmed.

Affirmed.

(112 Va. 719)

LEE v. LEE.

(Supreme Court of Appeals of Virginia. Nov. 18, 1911.)

DIVORCE (§ 37*)—GROUNDS—DESERTION—ACTS CONSTITUTING.

A wife, who without cause abandoned her husband continuously for more than three years, and who during that time did not live with him and declared her purpose never to return to his home, though he had tried to induce her to do so, deserted her husband for three years, within Code 1904, § 2257, authorizing the husband to procure a divorce on that ground.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Divorce, Cent. Dig. §§ 107-132; Dec. Dig. § 37.*]

Appeal from Circuit Court, Rockingham County.

Suit by Thomas H. Lee against Eveline Lee for divorce. From a decree denying relief, plaintiff appeals. Reversed and remanded.

Geo. C. Grattan, for appellant. E. D. Ott, for appellee.

PER CURIAM. This bill was filed by Thomas H. Lee to obtain a divorce from his wife, Eveline Lee, on the ground of desertion.

The statute (Code 1904, § 2257) provides that a divorce from the bond of matrimony may be decreed where either party willfully deserts or abandons the other for three years.

The uncontradicted evidence shows that without cause the defendant has abandoned her husband continuously for more than three years, that during that time she has not lived with him, and has declared her purpose never to return to his home, though he has tried to induce her to do so. These facts constitute such proof of desertion as entitles the appellant to a decree of divorce from the bond of matrimony. Washington v. Washington, 111 Va. 524, 69 S. E. 322.

The circuit court having denied the divorce, its decree must be reversed, and the cause remanded for a decree to be entered in conformity with this opinion.

Reversed.

(112 Va. 706)

HURLEY v. CHARLES.

(Supreme Court of Appeals of Virginia. Nov. 16, 1911.)

1. DEEDS (§ 38*)—DESCRIPTION—SUFFICIENCY.

A description in a deed which identifies the land is sufficient.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Deeds, Cent. Dig. §§ 65-79; Dec. Dig. § 38.*]

2. WILLS (§ 433*)—PROBATE—EVIDENCE—RECORDS—CERTIFICATES.

Code 1904, § 817, authorizes the clerk of the circuit court, with the consent of the court, to appoint one or more deputies, who may discharge any of the official duties of their principal during his continuance in office, unless the duty be one which a deputy is expressly forbidden to perform by law. Section 3334 declares that a copy of a record or paper in the clerk's office of any court, attested by the officer in whose office the same is, may be admitted in evidence in lieu of the original; no special form of certificate being required. A paper writing, offered in evidence as the will of D., was attested only by "A. B. Buchanan, D. Clerk," without stating for whom or of what county he was deputy clerk. The certificate of probate showed that the will was probated in the T. county court, and was from the clerk's office of the T. circuit court, and was attested by "A. B. Buchanan, Deputy Clerk for S. M. Graham, Clerk of the Circuit Court of Tazewell County, Virginia." Held, that the certificate to the will, when construed in connection with the certificate of probate, was sufficient.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Wills, Cent. Dig. §§ 924-936; Dec. Dig. § 433.* Evidence, Cent. Dig. §§ 1321, 1414, 1415.]

3. ESTOPPEL (§ 38*)—ESTOPPEL BY DEED—AFTER-ACQUIRED TITLE—COVENANTS.

An after-acquired title by a grantor, who conveys with covenants of special warranty and quiet possession, inures to the benefit of his grantee.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Estoppel, Cent. Dig. §§ 99-107; Dec. Dig. § 38.*]

4. JUDICIAL SALES (§ 50*)—TITLE OF PURCHASER—UNRECORDED DEED.

An unrecorded deed from a judgment debtor is ineffective against the purchaser of the land at a judicial sale, in a creditor's suit to procure a sale of the lands.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Judicial Sales Dec. Dig. § 50.*]

5. JUDICIAL SALES (§ 50*)—UNRECORDED CONVEYANCES BY DEBTOR.

Since an unrecorded deed by a judgment debtor is void as to his creditors, an instruction in ejectment that, if the jury believed that the debtor conveyed the land in dispute to defendant, the jury should find for him was properly refused, where it appeared that such conveyance, if made, was unrecorded, and it was therefore invalid as against plaintiff purchasing the land at a judicial sale.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Judicial Sales, Dec. Dig. § 50.*]

6. BOUNDARIES (§ 41*)—NATURAL AND ARTIFICIAL MONUMENTS—INSTRUCTIONS.

Where in ejectment involving a disputed boundary line the deeds in evidence called for natural and artificial monuments, the court properly refused to charge that courses and distances must give way to calls for lines of adjoiners, and charged that courses and distances must give way to calls for marked lines and natural objects.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Boundaries, Dec. Dig. § 41.*]

7. ESTOPPEL (§ 19*)—INVALID DEED.

An unrecorded deed by a judgment debtor to defendant, which was void as to the grantor's creditors and the purchaser at a judicial sale, was insufficient to create an estoppel.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Estoppel, Cent. Dig. § 25; Dec. Dig. § 19.*]

Error to Circuit Court, Buchanan County. Ejectment by H. G. Charles against Eli Hurley. Verdict for plaintiff, and defendant brings error. Affirmed.

Chase & Daughterty, for plaintiff in error. Ayers & Smithdeal, A. A. Skeen, and C. C. Burns, for defendant in error.

KEITH, P. Charles brought an action of ejectment to recover 2,200 acres of land from the defendant, Eli Hurley, but the controversy finally became one with respect to the title to 80.9 acres. There was a verdict for the plaintiff, and Hurley brought the case to this court upon a writ of error.

During the progress of the trial, 18 bills of exceptions were taken to the rulings of the court with respect to the admission of evidence, instructions to the jury, and the motion to set aside the verdict as contrary to the evidence.

[1] Bills of exceptions Nos. 2, 3, 5, 6, 7, 8, 9, 10, 11, and 12 are to the admission in evidence of certain deeds, and may be considered together. The objection to their admission was a general one—that they insufficiently described the land conveyed. We shall content ourselves with the statement that an inspection of the deeds shows very plainly that each of them refers to the 2,200-acre tract which is described in the declaration, or to some part of or interest therein, and gives such a description thereof as is sufficient for its identification.

Assignment of error No. 4 is as to the admissibility of the will of M. G. B. Davis. The first objection was that the will was not properly probated.

The printed record does not contain the certificate of probate, but counsel agreed that the certificate might be inserted in the record at page 42, immediately after the signature to the will, and that has been done. The certificate appears to be in all respects formal and sufficient.

[2] The second objection to its admission is that it was not properly certified. Bearing upon that question, the facts upon the record, as amended, are: That the will was duly admitted to probate in the county court of Tazewell county, and the certificate from the clerk's office of Tazewell circuit court, attested by "A. B. Buchanan, Deputy Clerk for S. M. Graham, Clerk of the Circuit Court of Tazewell County, Virginia," is in proper form and is sufficient.

But that formal attestation applies only to the certificate of probate of the will. The paper writing appearing in the record as the will of M. G. B. Davis is attested by "A. B. Buchanan, D. Clerk." It does not say for whom or of what county he is the deputy clerk, conceding that we are authorized to say that "D. Clerk" is the equivalent of "Deputy Clerk."

Section 817 of the Code of 1904 authorizes the clerk of a circuit court, with the consent of the court of which he is clerk, or of the judge thereof in vacation, to appoint one or more deputies, who may discharge any of the official duties of their principal during his continuance in office, unless it be some duty the performance of which by a deputy is expressly forbidden by law.

Section 3334 of the Code provides that "A copy of any record or paper in the clerk's office of any court, * * * attested by the officer in whose office the same is * * * may be admitted as evidence in lieu of the original." The form of certificate is not prescribed by the statute.

As was said in Wynn v. Harman's Devises, 5 Grat. 165, "There is no statutory provision regulating the manner in which the records of the proceedings of a court in our state are to be authenticated, so as to make them evidence in any other court in the state." In that case it is held that a will, certified as "a true copy. John Hunter, C. L. C."—was a sufficient certificate that Hunter was the clerk of the court, and the copy of the paper so certified was held to be competent evidence, upon the authority of cases there cited.

In Morgan v. Haley, 107 Va. 331, 58 S. E. 564, 13 L. R. A. (N. S.) 732, 122 Am. St. Rep. 846, the paper offered in evidence was attested as follows: "A copy Teste: H. C. T. Ewing, Clerk." Judge Buchanan, delivering the opinion of the court, said: "If the certificate had stated that the person making it was clerk of the court, in whose office the deed was recorded, or had used initials to show that fact, under the decisions of Gibson v. Commonwealth, 2 Va. Cas. 111, 120, Wynn v. Harman, 5 Grat. 157, 165, 166, and Usher v. Pride, 15 Grat. 190, 195, 196, it would clearly have been prima facie sufficient. But whether in its present form it was admissible in evidence it is unnecessary to decide, as the judgment complained of will have to be reversed on other grounds, and the case remanded for a new trial, when this question is not likely to arise again, as the defect in the certificate, if it be one, can easily be cured."

If in aid of the certificate signed "A. B. Buchanan, D. Clerk," we are permitted to look to the certificate of probate, the difficulty disappears; for that certificate shows that A. B. Buchanan is the deputy clerk for S. M. Graham, clerk of the circuit court of Tazewell county, Va., which answers every requirement of the law. It will be observed that the agreement of counsel is that the certificate of probate is to be inserted in the record immediately after the signature to the will. The certificate does not state that the person making it is the clerk of the court, nor in whose office the will was recorded; nor does it use initials to show that fact, unless we are permitted to look to the certificate of probate, by which all of these defects are supplied.

After a careful consideration of the facts, we are reluctant to hold that it was error to admit the copy of the will in evidence. It was duly probated, and the transcript of the probate is attested by "A. B. Buchanan, Deputy Clerk for S. M. Graham, Clerk Circuit Court, Tazewell County, Va.," and the copy of the will is attested by "A. B. Buchanan, D. Clerk," and under these circumstances it would be technical in the extreme to reverse the judgment of the circuit court when it plainly can be gathered from the certificate of probate and attestation of the copy of the will that A. B. Buchanan is the deputy clerk of Tazewell county, authorized by law to act in place of his principal.

[3] The twelfth assignment of error is as to the effect of the deed from Frank Phillips to Daniel Hurley, which the court told the jury they might consider only for the purpose of locating the boundary lines of the 2,200-acre tract of land, and for no other purpose. This assignment presents the question whether an after-acquired title by a grantor, who conveys with covenants of special warranty and quiet possession, inures to the benefit of his grantee.

In Reynolds v. Cook, 83 Va. 821, 3 S. E. 712, 5 Am. St. Rep. 317, Judge Lewis, speaking for the court, says: "The general rule undoubtedly is that, where land is conveyed without warranty, the grantor is not estopped from setting up an after-acquired title. On the other hand, a covenant of warranty works an estoppel, and the reason usually given is that the estoppel prevents circuity of action"—citing Doswell v. Buchanan's Ex'rs, 3 Leigh, 365, 23 Am. Dec. 280; Gregory v. Peoples, 80 Va. 355. "But this is not the only ground upon which an estoppel arises. The rule is well established that, where the deed recites or affirms, expressly or impliedly, that the grantor is seised of a particular estate, which the deed purports to convey, and upon the faith of which the bargain was made, he will be thereafter estopped to deny that such an estate was passed to his vendee, although the deed contains no covenant of warranty at all. And the rule accords with common honesty and fair dealing"—citing, among other cases, Van Rensselaer v. Kearney, 11 How. 297, 13 L. Ed. 703.

In Reynolds v. Cook, there was a sale of a tract of land with a covenant of general warranty, and after execution of the deed the parties entered into a supplemental contract under seal, in which it was recited, among other things, that Reynolds "grants unto the said Cook the right to quarry and remove all the limestone (free of charge for royalty) that may be required for furnace and agricultural purposes, in connection with the aforesaid Mt. Airy tract of land, from the said Reynolds' land on the opposite side of the river;" and it was with reference to the right to remove the limestone, as to which there was no warranty, that the language quoted from the opinion of Judge Lewis was used.

In Flanary v. Kane, 102 Va. 566, 46 S. E. 312, 681, Judge Buchanan cites Reynolds v. Cook with approval; and in Nye v. Lovitt, 92 Va. 717, 24 S. E. 348, this court said, that, "In order to avoid circuity of action, it has long been the rule that a vendor of land was estopped from setting up an after-acquired title against his vendee, where there was a warranty or covenant for title, if the eviction of his vendee would result in an action upon the covenants."

In Reynolds v. Cook and Flanary v. Kane, there were no covenants of warranty; but in the case before us there were the covenant of special warranty and the covenant of quiet possession, both of which would be broken, should the plaintiff be permitted to assert claim to the land in controversy, either by adverse possession or any after-acquired title. See Va. Code 1904, § 2447, as to the effect of a covenant of special warranty.

[4] There is no error in the ruling of the court as to the effect of the deed alleged to have been made from Frank Phillips to Daniel Hurley. It was never recorded, and was therefore void as to the creditors of Frank Phillips, the grantor. There was a suit instituted by the creditors of Frank Phillips, and in that suit the 2,200-acre tract of land was sold and purchased by Charles, the defendant in error, and a deed was made to him, pursuant to the decrees of the court. It is manifest, therefore, that an unrecorded deed from the judgment debtor could not affect the purchaser at that judicial sale.

The following instruction was given to the jury at the instance of the plaintiff in the court below: "The court instructs the jury that if they believe by a preponderance of the evidence that the land in controversy is embraced in the 2,200-acre patent issued from the commonwealth of Virginia to Samuel L. Graham and others, on August 28, 1885, then they should find for the plaintiff the land described in the declaration."

Having held the evidence upon which this instruction was predicated to have been properly introduced, it follows, of course, that it was the duty of the jury to render a verdict in accordance with it.

[5] The defendant in the court below asked for the following instruction: "The court further instructs the jury that, although you may believe from the evidence in this case that the correct location of the line of the 2,200-acre grant from the 30-acre N. Hurley tract at point '17' on map is as shown by the white lines by the way of letters S, T, U, V, W, X, Y, Z, to ZZ, yet, if you should believe from the evidence, by a preponderance thereof, that Frank Phillips by deed conveyed the land in dispute to Daniel Hurley, you will find for the defendant."

As we understand the instruction, the first part of it would give to the defendant in error the land in controversy, unless the jury should believe from the evidence, by a preponderance thereof, that Frank Phillips conveyed the land to Daniel Hurley. But we have just seen that this deed, not having been recorded, was void as to the creditors of Frank Phillips, and the instruction was properly refused.

[6] The plaintiff in error asked the court to instruct the jury that "courses and distances must give way to calls for lines of adjoining." The court refused to give this instruction as asked, and, over the objection of plaintiff in error, instructed the jury as follows: "The court further instructs the jury that courses and distances must give way for calls for marked lines and natural objects."

That the instruction given by the court is good law cannot be controverted.

Both plaintiff in error and defendant in error, with reference to this instruction, rely upon the law as stated in 5 Cyc. p. 925, where the following statement is made: "In the absence of calls for natural or artificial monuments, calls for adjoiners will, as a rule, control other and conflicting calls."

The deeds in evidence in this case do call for natural and artificial monuments. The condition, therefore, upon which calls for adjoiners will prevail does not arise, and the ruling of the circuit court with respect to this instruction must be approved.

Plaintiff in error contends that, if he was estopped by his deed to Frank Phillips, then Frank Phillips and those who claim under him are estopped by the deed made by Phillips to Daniel Hurley, and there would be an estoppel against an estoppel, which would set the whole matter at large.

[7] Without going into the learning upon that subject, it is sufficient to say that the unrecorded deed from Frank Phillips to Daniel Hurley was void as to the creditors of Phillips and the purchaser under the judicial sale, and therefore cannot work an estoppel in this controversy.

Upon the whole case, we are of opinion that the judgment of the circuit court should be affirmed.

Affirmed.

(112 Va. 749)

McDONALD et al. v. ROTHGEB et al.

(Supreme Court of Appeals of Virginia. Nov. 16, 1911.)

1. ESTOPPEL (§ 38*)—BY DEED—COVENANTS—CONVEYANCE OF WIFE'S SEPARATE PROPERTY—LIABILITY OF HUSBAND.

A husband, who unites with his wife in executing a deed of her life estate, covenanting that he and wife have good right to sell the property, and that they will warrant generally the title thereto, is not estopped from claiming his share in remainder as heir of his daughter, who dies unmarried and without issue; his liability on the covenant, if any, being personal, and not operating to enlarge the estate granted.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Estoppel, Dec. Dig. § 38.*]

2. IMPROVEMENTS (§ 4*) — COMPENSATION — GOOD FAITH OF CLAIMANT.

Under Code, § 2763, authorizing the recovery of improvements on land made by a claimant having reason to believe that his title is good, a purchaser may not close his eyes to his record title, and recover for improvements on the theory that there was reason to believe that his title is good; but his belief must be founded in ignorance of facts which cannot be predicated of a purchaser affected with constructive notice.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Improvements, Cent. Dig. §§ 4-26; Dec. Dig. § 4.*]

Error to Circuit Court, Page County.

Ejectment by Ethel McDonald and others against U. G. Rothgeb and others. There was a judgment granting insufficient relief, and plaintiffs bring error. Reversed and rendered.

H. W. Bertram, C. A. Hammer, O. B. Roller, and Ed. C. Martz, for plaintiffs in error. R. F. Parks and Walton & Walton, for defendants in error.

WHITTLE, J. The defendants in error acquired title, by remote purchase, to the life estate of Jennie Powell in certain lots located in the town of Shenandoah, in Page county, Va., and after her death the plaintiffs in error, holders of the fee-simple title to the lots in remainder, instituted an action of ejectment for their recovery.

A jury having been waived, and all matters of law and fact submitted to the court, judgment was rendered in favor of the plaintiffs, other than Robert Powell, for an undivided two-thirds interest in the lots. But the court found for the defendants as to the one-third undivided interest to which Powell asserted title. The court, moreover, allowed the defendants for the value of improvements made by them upon the lots in excess of the damages awarded the plaintiffs.

The grounds of error assigned involve the ruling of the court in giving judgment for the defendants for the one-third undivided share of Robert Powell, and also to the allowance for improvements.

[1] Robert Powell was the husband of Jennie Powell, and united with his wife in a deed conveying her estate in the lots to Fritz. Rachael Powell died subsequent to the execution of this deed, unmarried and without issue, and her father, Robert Powell, who was her sole heir at law, inherited her vested remainder, an undivided one-third interest in the property, after the expiration of the life estate of her mother, Jennie Powell. The deed to Fritz contained the following covenant: "And the said Robert Powell and Jennie, his wife, covenant that they have good right to sell and convey said property aforesaid, and that they will warrant generally the title to the same."

The trial court was of opinion that the covenant on the part of Robert Powell ran with the land, and estopped him from asserting his after-acquired title as heir to Rachael. The husband was a stranger to his wife's title to the property, and had no interest in her life estate therein. The recitals of the deed show this, and that it was conveyed by Coverstone to the wife alone. The life estate in the wife, therefore, was all that she had power to convey; and if, in the circumstances detailed, there was any ilability on the husband upon his warranty, it was a personal liability merely to the grantee in the deed, incident to and coextensive with the life estate of the wife. Certainly such warranty could not operate to enlarge the estate granted.

In Bull v. Beiseker, 16 N. D. 290, 113 N. W. 870, 14 L. R. A. (N. S.) 514, it was held that, "where a covenantor has neither title nor possession, the covenants do not run with the land, so as to transfer the cause of action for the breach thereof to remote grantees by operation of assumed conveyances of the property by the execution and delivery of deeds purporting to convey the same." The court declares that the foregoing principle is supported by the overwhelming weight of authority, and cites a number of cases to sustain it.

Among the citations will be found the leading case of Mygatt v. Coe, 152 N. Y. 457, 46 N. E. 949, 57 Am. St. Rep. 521, which is strongly in point. There a married woman had purchased real estate, which was conveyed to her for her sole and separate use, free from the control of her husband. The wife, supposing that she had good title, sold and conveyed the property, with covenants of warranty in which her husband joined. It was afterwards discovered that the grantors had no title, and in a suit by a remote grantee, who had been evicted by title paramount, to recover on the warranty, it was held that the husband was not liable. The court there laid down the principles that "if a husband joins with his wife in a conveyance of her separate estate, and covenants that she has good right to convey the premises, and the deed also contains the usual covenants of warranty and for quiet enjoyment, such covenants, as against the wife, pass with the land, because she has possession of it and delivers such possession to her grantee; but as the husband had no possession in his own right, and therefore delivered none to the grantee, his covenant is personal, and does not run with the land, and a subsequent grantee cannot recover against the husband thereon, unless he can prove its assignment to him."

"Though a husband lives with his wife and family on her lands, pays taxes thereon, and keeps them in repair, this does not impair her title to the possession, nor give him the possession of the property, or any right to the possession thereof." Mygatt v. Coe, supra.

Our conclusion, therefore, on this branch of the case, is that the husband, being a stranger to the wife's title, without either possession or beneficial interest in her estate, and uniting with her in the conveyance to Frittz merely for the sake of conformity under the statute, was not estopped by his warranty to claim his share in remainder in the property as heir to his daughter Rachael.

[2] With respect to the matter of allowance for improvements, we are of opinion that the question involved is ruled by the conclusion reached by this court in the analogous case of Nixdorf v. Blount, 111 Va. 127, 68 S. E. 258, and cases cited in the opinion.

It seems to us that to hold that a purchaser can close his eyes to his record title and recover for improvements, on the theory that "there was reason to believe the title good" (Code Va. 1904, § 2763), would be to set a premium on negligence and nullify our registry statutes.

It was said in Bodkin v. Arnold, 48 W. Va. 108, 109, 35 S. E. 980, 981, that "belief, to be bona fide, must be founded in ignorance of facts, and not ignorance of law." And ignorance of fact cannot be predicated of a case where the purchaser is affected with constructive notice.

These views are decisive of the case, and render the consideration of subordinate questions unnecessary.

The judgment complained of must be reversed, and this court will retain the case and render such judgment for the plaintiffs in error as the circuit court ought to have entered.

Reversed.

(112 Va. 683)

CHESAPEAKE & O. RY. CO. v. BARGER.
(Supreme Court of Appeals of Virginia. Nov. 16, 1911.)

1. CARRIERS (§ 320*)—INJURY TO PASSENGERS—ACTIONS—EVIDENCE.

In an action by a female passenger for injuries alleged to have been received while alighting from defendant's train, evidence as to the cause of the injury held to be conflicting, and to raise a question for the jury.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Carriers, Cent. Dig. § 1244; Dec. Dig. § 320.*]

2. EVIDENCE (§ 571*)—WEIGHT—UNCONTROLLED EVIDENCE.

The jury may disregard the testimony of an unimpeached medical expert, even though he was the only one who saw the case, and his testimony has not been directly controverted.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Evidence, Cent. Dig. §§ 2395-2398; Dec. Dig. § 571.*]

3. CARRIERS (§ 315*)—EVIDENCE—VARIANCE—USE OF VIDELICKT.

In an action against a carrier by a passenger for injury while alighting from a train, where the declaration alleged that the passenger "was compelled to step down from the car a great distance to the ground, to wit, two feet," evidence that the distance was between 26 and 34 inches was not so different from the allegation as to require the court to strike it out on the ground of variance.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Carriers, Cent. Dig. § 1281; Dec. Dig. § 315.*]

4. CARRIERS (§ 317*)—INJURIES TO PASSENGERS—ACTIONS—EVIDENCE—ADMISSIBILITY.

In an action for injuries received by a passenger in alighting from a train at a station where there was no platform, evidence tending to show how the accommodations at this station compared as to safety with other stations, and thus show lack of care on the part of the carrier in failing to furnish proper accommodations, was admissible.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Carriers, Cent. Dig. §§ 1295-1306; Dec. Dig. § 317.*]

5. EVIDENCE (§ 155*)—EVIDENCE ADMISSIBLE BECAUSE OF THE ADMISSION OF OTHER EVIDENCE.

In an action by a passenger for injuries received while alighting from a train at a station, where there was no platform, the defendant having introduced evidence comparing the accommodations at this station with those of other stations cannot complain that the passenger introduced other evidence along the same line.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Evidence, Cent. Dig. §§ 445-458; Dec. Dig. § 155.*]

Error to Circuit Court, Botetourt County.

Action by Maggie E. Barger against the Chesapeake & Ohio Railway Company. There was a judgment for plaintiff, and defendant brings error. Affirmed.

R. L. Parrish, for plaintiff in error. R. Haden Penn, A. P. Staples, Jr., and A. B. Hunt, for defendant in error.

HARRISON, J. This action was brought by Maggie E. Barger to recover damages for injuries alleged to have been suffered by her as a result of the negligence of the defendant railway company. There was a verdict and judgment in her favor, which we are asked to review and reverse.

It appears that the plaintiff, a woman 44 years of age, the mother of eleven children, nine of whom were living, most of them being solely dependent upon her for their care and attention, left her home in Botetourt county, with her youngest child, to go to her daughter, who was ill and needed her attention. She bought a ticket at Buchanan for Haden, a station about 35 miles distant, where her daughter lived, and became a passenger on one of the regular trains of the defendant company. The evidence tends to show that at Haden station no platform or other convenience was provided for passengers entering or leaving the train, and that on her arrival there, in order to alight, she had to step down from the lower car step, a distance of some 26 to 34 inches to the ground, the place where she alighted being between the main track and the side track, with the ground at that point forming a rough depression and in bad condition. At the time the plaintiff was about four months in pregnancy, and was carrying her baby, about three years of age, in her left arm. The only assistance rendered her was the taking of her hand by the brakeman, which she says was worse than no assistance. When she stepped down, her foot slipped in a hole, turning her ankle, which, together with the high step, caused a severe wrench of her back. She complained at the time to the conductor of the high step she had been compelled to take, and told those who met her at the station of the pain she was suffering as the result of the step. The evidence further tends to show that the plaintiff suffered continually from the time she took the step until the next afternoon, when she had several hemorrhages, which continued until the following morning, when she had a miscarriage. Since then she has suffered greatly and been unable to discharge her usual duties, her physician attributing her condition to the injury she received in alighting from the train, which he says resulted in displacing the womb and other organs, from which no relief can be had except possibly by an operation.

[1, 2] The first assignment of error is to the action of the court in refusing to set aside the verdict as contrary to the evidence. The chief contention in support of this assignment is that Dr. Givens, a witness introduced on behalf of the defendant company, who saw the fetus after it was delivered, testified as an expert and expressed the opinion that the fetus had been dead for a week before it was delivered; that Dr. Givens being the only expert who saw the fetus, and knew the facts to be derived from its inspection, his evidence could not be disregarded by the jury, but must be accepted by them as showing conclusively that the miscarriage was not the result of alighting from the train, but that it resulted from causes existing before the plaintiff left her home.

This position cannot be sustained. No one can read the testimony of this witness without seeing that the jury might well have regarded Dr. Givens as a prejudiced and biased witness. In addition, his view is in direct conflict with other expert testimony and circumstances adduced by the plaintiff. Whether or not the miscarriage resulted from the injury sustained in alighting from the train was a question for the jury, to be determined upon due consideration of all the evidence bearing upon the issue. The testimony of the plaintiff is that she felt "completely torn to pieces" by the step from the train, especially through her side and the right side of her back, and that it was with great difficulty that she walked 100 yards to her daughter's house, and that she continued to suffer until the miscarriage occurred. She stated that she had been in her usual good health up to the accident, had borne 11 children, and had never been threatened with an abortion; but that on the day after she stepped from the train she knew from her suffering and general physical condition that an abortion was threatened. Dr. Godwin, an expert witness for the defendant, says that a woman can almost always tell anything unusual when she is pregnant; that, if the fetus is dead, she can very often tell by her feelings. Dr. Dodd, the attending physician of the plaintiff, testifies that the abortion occurring 36 hours after an injury of the kind received by the plaintiff is the natural and probable result of such injury; that from the displaced condition of the uterus, as disclosed by his examination, in the absence of any other physical disturbance, he would attribute the abortion and subsequent illness to the step from the train. This witness further says that from his examination of the plaintiff he found nothing to suggest that the womb had been in any way infected by carrying a dead fetus.

*For other cases see same topic and section NUMBER in Dec. Dig. & Am. Dig. Key No. Series & Rep'r Indexes

It is not necessary to recite other testimony and other circumstances furnished by the record in support of the plaintiff's view that the abortion resulted from the injury sustained by her in alighting from the train. We have said enough to show that the evidence on that issue was conflicting. The question was submitted to the jury by the defendant's instruction No. 4, which told them that, if they believed the fetus to have been dead for two days or more prior to the happening of the abortion, they must find for the defendant. The verdict shows that the jury disregarded, as they had the right to do, the expert opinion of Dr. Givens, and rested their finding upon the other evidence tending to sustain the plaintiff's theory. A jury is not bound to accept as conclusive the testimony even of an unimpeached witness.

In Clopton's Case, 109 Va. 813, 63 S. E. 1022, this court, quoting from high authority, says: "The mere assertion of any witness does not of itself need to be believed, even though he is unimpeached in any manner, because to require such belief would be to give a quantitative and impersonal measure to testimony. * * * The jury have the power to refuse their credit to parol testimony, and no action of the court should control the exercise of their admitted right to weigh its credibility."

Especially is it true that a jury is not generally bound to accept the opinion of expert witnesses as conclusive. It considers the facts upon which the opinions are based, and determines from all the evidence in the case whether the conclusions given by the witness are sound and substantial. 1 Moore on Facts, §§ 105, 107.

[3] It is further assigned as error that the court erred in refusing to strike out all evidence tending to show that the distance from the bottom of the step of the coach to the ground was more than two feet. The declaration alleges that the plaintiff "was compelled to step down from the car a great distance to the ground, to wit, two feet."

The plaintiff's evidence shows that the distance was between 26 and 34 inches, and it is contended that this constitutes such a difference between the allegation and the proof as requires the court to strike out the evidence on the ground of variance.

This position is without merit. The videlicet, namely, "a great distance, to wit, two feet," employed in the declaration, is intended to avoid a positive averment which must be strictly proved.

"The office of the videlicet is to mark that the party does not undertake to prove the precise circumstances alleged; and in such cases he is not required to prove them." 2 Bouv. L. Dict. p. 786.

[4, 5] It is further assigned as error that the court permitted the plaintiff to be questioned as to the kind of landings the defendant had at other stations than the Haden station.

These questions were confined to a comparison with two stations on the same line and a short distance from Haden station. The evidence tended to show how the accommodations at Haden compared as to safety with other stations of the defendant which the witness had observed, and thereby to show the lack of care observed by the company in furnishing reasonably safe accommodations for passengers at Haden. If, however, the few questions asked along this line had been irrelevant, the defendant could not complain, as it introduced like evidence with respect to other stations.

There was no reversible error in the matter of giving and refusing instructions. The alleged negligence of the defendant in not providing a reasonably safe and convenient means of alighting from its train, and in not rendering the plaintiff reasonable assistance when alighting, as well as all other questions of fact arising in the case, were submitted to the determination of the jury under instructions which were free from prejudice to the rights of the defendant. The verdict of the jury was sustained by the evidence, and therefore cannot be disturbed.

The judgment complained of must be affirmed.

Affirmed.

(112 Va. 788)

RUNKLE'S ADM'R v. RUNKLE'S ADM'R
et al.

(Supreme Court of Appeals of Virginia. Nov. 16, 1911.)

1. INTERPLEADER (§ 37*)—GROUNDS OF RELIEF —STATUTORY PROVISIONS.

Code 1904, § 2998, providing for a summary proceeding by interpleader in a pending action, does not enlarge the rule governing bills of interpleader, but merely furnishes a special cumulative and concurrent remedy without limiting or affecting the equitable jurisdiction by bill of interpleader.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Interpleader, Dec. Dig. § 37.*]

2. INTERPLEADER (§ 6*)—RIGHT TO MAINTAIN BILL OF INTERPLEADER.

A bank coming into possession of money as debtor to or bailee of the estate of a deceased wife may not maintain a bill of interpleader against her administrator and against the administrator of the deceased husband, both claiming the money, because of its independent liability as debtor or bailee, and because of want of privity between the two claimants under the rule that the equitable remedy of interpleader independent of statute is dependent on the existence of four elements: The same debt or duty must be claimed by all the parties against whom the relief is demanded; all their adverse claims must be dependent on or derived from a common source; the person asking the relief must not have any interest in the subject-matter; and he must not have incurred an independent liability to either of the claimants.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Interpleader, Cent. Dig. § 6; Dec. Dig. § 6.*]

Appeal from Circuit Court, Rockingham County.

Bill of interpleader by the Bank of Elkton against Rebecca M. Runkle's administrator and against William J. Runkle's administrator to determine rights to a fund in possession of the bank. From a decree adjudging that William J. Runkle's administrator is entitled to the fund, Rebecca M. Runkle's administrator appeals. Reversed and rendered, dismissing the bill for want of jurisdiction.

H. W. Bertram, for appellant. Grattan & Grattan, Ed. C. Martz, and Charles A. Hammer, for appellees.

BUCHANAN, J. This is a bill of interpleader filed by the Bank of Elkton, in which the personal representatives, respectively, of the estates of Rebecca M. Runkle, deceased, and of William J. Runkle, deceased, were made parties defendant. The trial court held that, upon the evidence, the bill of interpleader could be maintained, and that as between the parties claiming the fund the personal representative of William J. Runkle was entitled to it, and so decreed. From that decree this appeal was taken.

The first question to be determined here is whether or not upon the facts disclosed by the record the bank could maintain its bill.

The record shows that William J. Runkle died on the 4th day of January, 1908, and his wife, Rebecca M., on the 12th day of the same month. After the husband's death and a few days before the wife's she took from her bed and about her person pocket-books and parcels containing money, which she directed her sister, Mrs. Louisa C. Davis, to place in her (Mrs. Runkle's) trunk, lock it, and keep the key. The day after the burial of Mrs. Runkle, I. L. Flory, the cashier of the Bank of Elkton, by request, came to the home of the deceased, counted the money placed in the trunk by Mrs. Davis, and carried it to his bank. At the time he received the money from Mrs. Davis he gave her a receipt or deposit slip in the following words:

"Received from the estate of Rebecca M. Runkle, by Louisa C. Davis, $2,668.20.

"I. L. Flory, Cashier."

He requested Mrs. Davis to come to the bank on the next morning, which she did, and he took up the receipt or deposit slip he had given her the day before and gave her a book with the following entry therein:

The Bank of Elkton, Elkton, Va.

In Account with Mrs. Rebecca M. Runkle.
Dr. Cr.

1908.

Jany. 16, To Dep...$2,668.20

A few days afterwards Mr. Flory, the cashier of the bank, qualified as the administrator of the husband's estate, and A. U. Lewis as administrator of the wife's estate, each claiming the money deposited in bank as the property of his decedent.

If there were no evidence in the case but the deposit slip and the entry in the bank book handed to Mrs. Davis when she delivered the money to the cashier of the bank, as to the circumstances under which the bank came into the possession of the money, it is clear that the bank had no sufficient ground upon which to maintain its bill. But it is claimed by the bank that the parol evidence in the case shows that the money was delivered to it as a stakeholder, or as a joint deposit of both the husband's and the wife's estates, to be held by it until it was determined to which estate it did belong.

There is no question that after the death of the wife and before the money was delivered to the bank there was a controversy between Mrs. Long, one of the distributees of the husband's estate, and Mrs. Davis, one of the distributees of the wife's estate, as to the ownership of the money. Besides these two, four other persons testify as to the circumstances under which the money was delivered to the cashier of the bank. Mrs. Davis, who had been put in possession of the money by her sister and had consulted counsel and been advised to put the money in bank in her own name, testified that, after the cashier had counted the money which she took out of Mrs. Runkle's trunk and handed him, he asked in whose name it was to be deposited, and she told him in her name until there was an administrator appointed for the wife's estate. She denied emphatically when asked the question that she ever agreed that the money should be placed in the bank to see whose money it was. Mrs. Davis' son testified that after the cashier had counted the money, and inquired of his mother what he must do with it, "she told him that she wanted it put in the bank for safe-keeping until there was an administrator appointed for Aunt Becca's estate," and that the cashier thereupon wrote the receipt or deposit slip which he gave the witness' mother. Mrs. Smith states that, when the cashier had counted the money, Mrs. Davis told him that it would have to go in bank in her name. Mrs. Dean states that, when the cashier asked in whose name the money should be placed in bank, "Mrs. Davis told him 'herself, of course.'" Neither Mrs. Long nor the cashier Mr. Flory, the other two witnesses who testified to what was said and done when the money was delivered to the cashier, denied these statements of the other witnesses as to how it was to be deposited in bank. On the contrary, Mrs. Long testified, among other things, as to what took place on that occasion as follows:

"Q. Did you hear what took place and what was said between Mrs. Louisa C. Davis and Mr. Flory? A. She told him to put the money in her name in the bank.

"Q. What else was said about it? A. I turned away and said, 'That is my brother's money.' * * *

"Q. And what did she say then? A. She said put it in her name, and I said no more."

Mr. Flory's evidence is very vague and indefinite as to what took place when the money was delivered to him. He not only does not contradict the statement of the other witnesses as to what Mrs. Davis said when she transferred the money from her possession to his, but says he does not remember precisely what the conversation was along that line. When asked if it was not agreed then and there that it should remain at his bank until the title was settled, he replied: "There was no agreement as to how long it should remain there or anything of the kind, as I understood it, but in my own mind it was put there until the matter was settled." While he states from what occurred on that occasion that he got the impression that the money was placed in the bank to be held by it until it was determined to whom it belonged, he does not state facts which would justify such a conclusion, and his conduct in entering it as a general deposit to the credit of Mrs. Runkle's estate, subject of course to the check of her personal representative when appointed, and using the money as the bank's own, as in the case of other general deposits, sustains the other witnesses as to the character of the deposit made and the circumstances under which the bank came into the possession of the money.

After a careful examination and consideration of all the evidence, written and oral, as to the manner in which the bank came into the possession of the money, it does not appear that the money was delivered to the bank as a joint deposit of the estates of the husband and wife, or upon any agreement that the bank should hold it as a stakeholder until it was determined to which estate the money belonged. But, on the contrary, it does appear that, when Mrs.

Davis delivered the money to the cashier of the bank, she intended that it should either be placed or deposited in the bank in her name until a personal representative of her sister's estate had been appointed, or to the credit of her sister's estate, and that in fact as well as in form it was so delivered to or deposited with the cashier of the bank.

The right to file a bill of interpleader does not lie in every case where two or more persons claim the same thing, debt, or duty from a third person, and he is in doubt as to which of them he ought to render the debt or duty or deliver the thing; but the jurisdiction of a court of equity to grant that remedy independent of statute is confined in much narrower limits.

Mr. Justice Story says in his work on Equity Jurisdiction, § 823: "That the remedy by bill of interpleader, although it has cured many defects in the proceedings at law, has yet left many cases of hardship unprovided for."

Again, in section 820, he says: "Whether it might not have been more wise and more consistent with the principles of equity originally to have held that in all cases whatsoever, where the bailee was innocent and without fault, he should have had the right to a bill of interpleader, is a point into which it is now too late to inquire."

[1] Section 2998 of the Code makes provision for a summary proceeding by interpleader in a pending action, but there was no action pending when this bill was filed, and it is not a proceeding under that section. The statute can have no effect upon the question we are now considering, for, as Mr. Pomeroy says (section 1329), such statutes (except where they enlarge the rule governing bills of interpleader, and our statute does not) it is universally held do not at all limit or affect the equitable jurisdiction by suit. They merely furnish another special cumulative and concurrent remedy.

[2] The right of the complainant to file its bill in this case must therefore be determined without reference to our statute by the principles or rules which govern courts of equity in granting the remedy of interpleader.

The general principles which govern a court of equity in administering relief in such cases seem to be pretty well settled.

In 4 Pomeroy's Equity Jurisprudence, § 1320, it is said that "where two or more persons, whose titles are connected by reason of one being derived from the other, or of both being derived from a common source, claim the same thing, debt or duty by different or separate interests, from a third person, and he not knowing to which of the claimants he ought of right to render the debt or duty or to deliver the thing, fears he may be hurt by some of them, he may maintain a suit and obtain against them the remedy of interpleader." Substantially to the same effect is section 806 of Story's Eq. Jur.

In section 1322 of Pomeroy it is said: "That from the description in a previous paragraph and from the whole course of authorities it is clear that the equitable remedy of interpleader, independent of recent statutory regulations, depends upon and requires the existence of the four following elements, which may be regarded as its essential conditions: (1) The same thing, debt, or duty must be claimed by both or all the parties against whom the relief is demanded. (2) All their adverse titles or claims must be dependent upon or derived from a common source. (3) The person asking the relief—the plaintiff—must not have nor claim any interest in the subject-matter. (4) He must have incurred no independent liability to either of the claimants; that is, he must stand perfectly indifferent between them in the position, merely of a stakeholder."

Applying these principles to the facts of this case, it is clear that the right of the bank to file a bill of interpleader was lacking in both the second and fourth essential requirements, as laid down by Mr. Pomeroy. The second essential, that there must be privity between the opposing claimants, does not exist. The claims of the defendants were not dependent upon or derived from a common source. Their claim of title is independent of each other. One derives his title from the husband, and the other from the wife.

Mr. Pomeroy, § 1324, in discussing this essential, says: "Where there is no privity between the claimants, where their titles are independent, not derived from a common source, but each asserted as wholly paramount to the other, the stakeholder is obliged in the language of the authorities to defend himself as well as he can against each separate demand. A court of equity will not grant him an interpleader."

Upon this requirement, Mr. Justice Story says: "The true doctrine supported by the authorities would seem to be that in cases of adverse, independent titles the party holding the property must defend himself as well as he can at law; and he is not entitled to the assistance of a court of equity, for that would be to assume the right to try merely legal titles upon a controversy between different parties where there is no privity of contract between them and the third person who calls for an interpleader." 2 Story's Eq. Jur. (11th Ed.) § 820. See, also, Northwestern Mutual Life Ins. Co. v. Kidder, 162 Ind. 382, 70 N. E. 489, 66 L. R. A. 89, 1 Am. & Eng. Ann. Cas. 509, and note p. 513, in which many cases are cited sustaining the rule as laid down by Pomeroy and Story.

The fourth essential condition to filing such a bill, as stated by Mr. Pomeroy, is that the complainant must be under no independent liability to either claimant. Upon that question he says: Such an independent liability may be incurred in two classes of cases: "(1) In the first place, the agent, depositary, bailee, or other party demanding an interpleader in his dealings with one of the claimants may have expressly acknowledged the latter's title, or he may have bound himself by contract, so as to render himself liable upon such independent undertaking, without reference to his possible liability to the rival claimant upon the general nature of the entire transaction. Under these circumstances, as the plaintiff is liable at all events to one of the defendants, whatever may be their own respective claims upon the subject-matter as between themselves, he cannot call upon them to interplead. He does not stand indifferent between the claimants, since one of them has a valid legal demand against him at all events. Even if the acknowledgment or promise has been obtained by fraud or mistake, the right of the party thus deceived to be relieved in equity from his liability cannot be considered and sustained in an interpleader suit. (2) In the second class of cases, the independent liability of the plaintiff to one of the defendants arises from the very nature of the original relation subsisting between them, without reference to any collateral acknowledgment of title or promise to be bound. The most important examples of such relations are those subsisting between bailee and his bailor, or agent or attorney and his principal, a tenant and his landlord, and the like. In pursuance of the doctrine above stated, if a bailee is sued by his bailor or an agent by his principal, or a tenant by his landlord, and at the same time a third person asserts a claim of title adverse and paramount to that of the bailor, principal, or landlord, a suit of interpleader cannot in general be maintained against the two conflicting elements, since from the very nature of the relation there is an independent personal liability with respect to the subject-matter of the bailee to the bailor, of the agent to his principal, and of the tenant to his landlord." 4 Pomeroy's Eq. Jur. § 1326. See, also, 2 Story's Eq. Jur. §§ 817, 817a, 817b.

There are some exceptions to the general rule as above stated, as where the title of one of the adverse claimants is derivative and not antagonistic and paramount to the bailor, principal, or landlord. 2 Pom. Eq. Jur. § 1827; 2 Story's Eq. Jur. § 817.

This case is not within any of the exceptions. The bank, as we have seen, came into the possession of the money either as debtor to or bailee of Mrs. Runkle's estate, and whether it holds it as debtor or bailee it is under an independent liability to her estate, and upon that ground as well as upon the ground of the want of privity between the opposing elements, the bank was not entitled to maintain its bill of interpleader.

The decree complained of must be reversed, and this court will enter such decree as the circuit court ought to have entered, dismissing the bill for want of jurisdiction.

Reversed.

(112 Va. 397)

FERRIMER v. COMMONWEALTH.

(Supreme Court of Appeals of Virginia. Nov. 16, 1911.)

1. INDICTMENT AND INFORMATION (§ 110*)—FOLLOWING STATUTE—SUFFICIENCY—INTOXICATING LIQUORS.

The indictment alleged that accused, on a certain date, upon the order of V., did unlawfully sell, in the town and county named, to said V. a quantity of ardent spirits, not exceeding 4½ gallons, and that said spirits was unlawfully sold, not to be delivered at the place of purchase, or within the town, or within one mile outside of the corporate limits thereof, but that accused unlawfully shipped such ardent spirits by express to V., without then and there having a license to do so. Held, that the indictment was sufficient, being laid in the language of the statute.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Indictment and Information, Dec. Dig. § 110.*]

2. INTOXICATING LIQUORS (§ 6*)—REGULATION—POLICE POWER.

Under its police power to enact laws to promote the public safety, health, and morals, the Legislature may regulate and control traffic in intoxicating liquors.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Intoxicating Liquors, Cent. Dig. § 4; Dec. Dig. § 6.*]

3. COMMERCE (§ 64*)—INTOXICATING LIQUORS—REGULATIONS.

Acts 1910, c. 190, authorized the issuance of a retail license and a retail and shipper's license, for the sale of intoxicants, and provides that a retail license shall permit the sale of intoxicants to any individual, to be delivered at the place of purchase, or to any place within the city, town, county, or district, or within one mile outside of where the license is granted, and nowhere else within the state, and that the retail and shipper's license shall confer the additional privilege of shipping by express or otherwise. Held, that the Legislature had power to regulate the sale of liquor by the imposition of a reasonable license, even though it be intended for shipment without the state, and the statute was valid though construed as prohibiting one merely having a retail license from shipping liquor without the state.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Commerce, Dec. Dig. § 64.*]

Error to Circuit Court, Tazewell County.

H. J. Ferrimer was convicted of unlawfully selling intoxicants, and brings error. Affirmed.

The indictment was as follows:

"The jurors of the grand jury, in and for the county aforesaid, impaneled and sworn at the term hereof commencing on the 22d day of August, 1910, and now attending said court, upon their oath present that H. J. Ferrimer, on the ——— day of June, 1910, in the said county, did unlawfully ship by express ardent spirits, without then and there having a license so to do, against the peace and dignity of the commonwealth of Virginia.

"And the jurors aforesaid, upon their oaths aforesaid, do further present that H. J. Ferrimer, on the ——— day of June, 1910, in the said county, did unlawfully ship, by express, ardent spirits, in a quantity of not more than 4½ gallons, to Vincent Volscent, upon the order of such Vincent Volscent, without then and there having a license so to do, against the peace and dignity of the commonwealth of Virginia.

"And the jurors aforesaid, upon their oaths aforesaid, do further present that H. J. Ferrimer, on the ——— day of June, 1910, in the said county, did unlawfully sell and ship ardent spirits, by express, in a quantity of not more than 4½ gallons, to Vincent Volscent, upon the order of such Vincent Volscent, without then and there having a license so to do, against the peace and dignity of the commonwealth of Virginia.

"And the jurors aforesaid, upon their oaths aforesaid, do further present, that H. J. Ferrimer, on the ——— day of June, 1910, in the said county, at one time, upon the order of Vincent Volscent, unlawfully did sell, in the town of Pocahontas, in said county, to said Vincent Volscent, a quantity of ardent spirits, not exceeding 4½ gallons; that said ardent spirits was so unlawfully sold by the said H. J. Ferrimer, not to be delivered to the said Vincent Volscent at the said place of purchase; that said ardent spirits was so unlawfully sold by the said H. J. Ferrimer, not to be delivered to the said Vincent Volscent within the said town of Pocahontas; that said ardent spirits was so unlawfully sold by the said H. J. Ferrimer, not to be delivered to the said Vincent Volscent within one mile outside of the corporate limits of the said town of Pocahontas; and that said H. J. Ferrimer did then and there unlawfully ship said ardent spirits, by express, to said Vincent Volscent, upon the order of said Vincent Volscent, without then and there having a license so to do, against the peace and dignity of the commonwealth of Virginia."

Sexton & Roberts, for plaintiff in error. Samuel W. Williams, Atty. Gen., for the Commonwealth.

KEITH, P. Ferrimer was indicted in the circuit court of Tazewell county for shipping by express ardent spirits without having a license so to do. When the case was called for trial, with the consent of the attorney for the commonwealth and of the accused in person, the court heard the evidence and determined the case without a jury, upon an agreed statement of facts, which was as follows:

"It is agreed between the attorney for the commonwealth and the defendant, by his attorneys, that the defendant, H. J. Ferrimer, is a resident of the town of Pocahontas, in Tazewell county, Va.; that on the 25th day of March, 1910, there was granted to him a 'retail license' to sell ardent spirits in the said town of Pocahontas, from the 1st day of May, 1910, until the 30th day of April, 1911, as provided by an act of the General Assembly of Virginia, approved 16th day of March, 1910 (Acts of Assembly 1910, page 290), which said license is in the words and figures following, to wit:

"State of Virginia, Tazewell County—to wit:

"At a circuit court held for said county at the courthouse thereof, on the 25th day of March, 1910.

"A license was this day granted to H. J. Ferrimer to sell at his place of business in the town of Pocahontas in this county, to any individual, beer, malt liquors, whisky, wine, brandy, or any mixture thereof, fruits preserved in ardent spirits, alcoholic bitters, and all other mixtures, preparations and liquids which will produce intoxication, in quantities not exceeding four gallons and a half, in jugs, bottle and demijohns, or to be drunk where sold, to be delivered at the place of purchase, or to any place within the city, town, county, or district or within one mile outside where the license is granted, and nowhere else in the state, for the period beginning on the first day of May, 1910, and expiring on the thirtieth day of April, 1911.

"Teste: A. B. Buchanan, Clerk."

"That under said license the defendant now is and has been, since the 1st day of May, 1910, retailing ardent spirits in the said town of Pocahontas.

"That on the — day of June, 1910, the said defendant, in said Tazewell county, state of Virginia, did ship ardent spirits, by express, in a quantity of not more than 4½ gallons, to one Vincent Volscent; that the said Vincent Volscent resided at Mora, in the state of West Virginia; that said defendant packed said ardent spirits at his place of business in said town of Pocahontas, and delivered said package to the Southern Express Company, at its office in said town of Pocahontas, consigned by the defendant to the said Vincent Volscent, to be delivered to said Vincent Volscent by the said express company at said Mora, W. Va., all express charges being prepaid by the said defendant; and that said ardent spirits were carried by said express company from said town of Pocahontas and delivered to said Vincent Volscent at said Mora, W. Va.

"That the said shipment of ardent spirits was made through said express company over the Norfolk & Western Railway, which railway passes immediately out of the corporate limits of the said town of Pocahontas into the said state of West Virginia.

"That said defendant, at the time of making the shipment aforesaid, did not have a retail and shipper's license, as provided by the above-mentioned act of the General Assembly of Virginia."

And the court certifies that this was all of the evidence.

The defendant demurred to the indictment and pleaded not guilty, and moved the court to dismiss the charge against him, "because said offense, if any there was, was for the shipping of whisky from the town of Pocahontas, Va., to Vincent Volscent, to be delivered to the said Vincent Volscent at a point in the state of West Virginia, and therefore was interstate commerce, and could not be affected by any act of the General Assembly of the state of Virginia, from which point said shipments were made." But the court overruled said motion and refused to discharge the defendant, overruled the demurrer to the indictment and found the prisoner guilty, and rendered judgment against him for the sum of $50 and costs, to which judgment the defendant, Ferrimer, obtained a writ of error.

The first error assigned is to the action of the court in overruling the demurrer to the indictment.

[1] The indictment is for a statutory offense, is laid in the language of the statute, and, in our judgment, is clearly sufficient. See Smith v. Commonwealth, 85 Va. 924, 9 S. E. 148; Fletcher's Case, 106 Va. 840, 56 S. E. 149; White's Case, 107 Va. 901, 59 S. E. 1101; Runde's Case, 108 Va. 873, 61 S. E. 792; Dix v. Commonwealth, 110 Va. 907, 67 S. E. 344.

The second assignment of error is the one chiefly relied upon, and is that this was an interstate shipment, and that the statute of Virginia, in so far as it applies to the facts of this case, was a regulation of interstate commerce, and therefore void.

[2] The state of Virginia, in the exercise of its police power, may pass laws for the promotion of the safety, health, and morals of the people, and the regulation and control of the traffic in ardent spirits is within the discretion of the Legislature, under the police power of the state. Farmville v. Walker, 101 Va. 323, 43 S. E. 558, 61 L. R. A. 125, 90 Am. St. Rep. 870.

In the case of Kidd v. Pearson, 128 U. S. 1, 9 Sup. Ct. 6, 32 L. Ed. 346, a statute of the state of Iowa was brought under review, which had been construed by the Supreme Court of that state as "meaning that intoxicating liquors might be manufactured and sold within the state for mechanical, medicinal, culinary, and sacramental purposes, but for no other—not even for the purpose of transportation beyond the limits of the state"; and the Supreme Court of the United States held (Justice Lamar delivering its unanimous opinion), that the statute thus construed raised no conflict with the Constitution of the United States, and was therefore valid. The principle thus announced seems to be conclusive of the question under consideration. See, also, Mugler v. State of Kansas, 123 U. S. 623, 8 Sup. Ct. 273, 31 L. Ed. 205.

[3] In passing the law in question, the state surely never intended any interference with interstate commerce; nor do we think that it tends in any way to regulate or control interstate commerce. It operates equally upon all citizens engaged in the sale of ardent spirits—a traffic which the good order and well-being of society renders it imperatively necessary that the Legislature should strictly limit and control. It provides for licenses of various kinds which carry with them certain privileges. There is the retail liquor license which was issued to Ferrimer, and under which he was entitled to enjoy certain specific and designated rights. The statute provides for another license, known as the "retail and shipper's license," which is issued to proper persons upon the payment of a reasonable license fee. Upon obtaining that license, the dealer could exercise the privilege which it conferred, to ship, by express, within the state or without the state; the law making no discrimination along that line. If the contention of plaintiff in error can be maintained, then any citizen may anywhere within the limits of this commonwealth sell and ship intoxicating liquors without a license. It is the sale, as well as the shipping, of the liquor which comes within the operation of the statute, and which cannot lawfully be made without first obtaining a license for that purpose, for which the plaintiff in error was indicted and found guilty. If a state may lawfully prohibit the manufacture and sale within the state, "even for the purpose of transportation beyond the limits of the state," surely it may regulate the sale of liquor, even though its transportation beyond the limits of the state be intended by the imposition of a reasonable license, which operates without discrimination upon all of its inhabitants.

We are of opinion that there is no error in the judgment complained of, and it is affirmed.

Affirmed.

(112 Va. 516)

STULL et al. v. HARVEY et al.

(Supreme Court of Appeals of Virginia. Nov. 16, 1911.)

1. APPEAL AND ERROR (§ 81*)—JUDGMENTS APPEALABLE—"FINAL DECREE."

In a suit to restrain a sale of property under a trust deed, a decree directing the clerk to pay the trustee's attorneys a fee out of certain funds belonging to the grantor on the motion to dissolve the injunction, and referring the case to the master to take an account showing what part of the expenses claimed by the trustee other than counsel fees should be allowed as a charge against the trust estate, was not a "final decree" from which an appeal would lie, under the rule that a final decree is one which disposes of the whole subject, giving all the relief that is competent, and leaves nothing to be done by the court.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Appeal and Error, Cent. Dig. §§ 510-516; Dec. Dig. § 81.*]

For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, vol. 3, pp. 2774-2798; vol. 8, p. 7663.]

2. TRUSTS (§ 227*)—TRUSTEE—PROTECTION OF TRUST ESTATE—EMPLOYMENT OF COUNSEL—AUTHORITY.

It being the duty of a trustee to protect the trust estate from waste, invasion, or trespass, and to defend suits against him with respect to the trust subject, he has implied power to employ counsel therefor at the expense of the trust fund.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Trusts, Cent. Dig. § 324; Dec. Dig. § 227.*]

3. TRUSTS (§ 227*)—TRUSTEE—POWERS—EMPLOYMENT OF COUNSEL.

Where grantors in a deed of trust filed a bill to enjoin the trustee from making a sale thereunder, to which the beneficiary, who was sui juris, was also a party, the trustee had no interest in the litigation, and could not therefor employ counsel at the expense of the trust to defend the suit.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Trusts, Cent. Dig. § 324; Dec. Dig. § 227.*]

Appeal from Circuit Court, Augusta County.

Suit by A. M. Stull and another to restrain O. B. Harvey and others from the foreclosure of a trust deed. From a decree awarding certain costs and expenses to the trustee, complainants appeal. Reversed and remanded.

John T. Delaney, for appellants. Timberlake & Nelson and O. B. Harvey, for appellees.

KEITH, P. By deed of trust dated December 12, 1902, A. M. Stull and A. W. Persinger conveyed to R. L. Parrish, Jr., trustee, a tract of land to secure to the Longdale Iron Company a debt of $8,000; on November 15, 1904, this debt was assigned to the Clifton Forge Light & Water Company; and on December 15, 1904, O. B. Harvey was substituted by decree of the circuit court of Alleghany county as trustee in the said deed, in the place and stead of R. L. Parrish, Jr., who had resigned. By deed bearing date September 25, 1905, Persinger conveyed his interest in this land to J. C. Stull, subject to the lien of the deed of trust. In February, 1908, default then existing in the payment of the debt, the Clifton Forge Light & Water Company directed Harvey, the substituted trustee, to enforce the deed of trust, and he thereupon caused to be published in the Clifton Forge Review, a newspaper published in the city of Clifton Forge, a notice to the effect that on March 6, 1908, he would make sale of the tract of land aforesaid, or so much thereof as might be necessary. This notice did not specify certain of the valuable rights and privileges which were subject to the lien of the deed of trust, nor did it specify what part of the land would be sold, should it be unnecessary to make sale of the whole.

On March 4, 1908, A. M. and J. C. Stull were awarded an injunction against the trustee and the Clifton Forge Light & Water Company. This injunction was dissolved on March 19, 1908, on the motion of the defendants. At the hearing of this motion, the Clifton Forge Light & Water Company was not represented by counsel. Harvey, trustee, who is himself an attorney at law, appeared and argued the motion in his own behalf, and in addition the law firm of Timberlake & Nelson, who were employed by the substituted trustee, appeared in support of the motion to dissolve the injunction. From this decree dissolving the injunction no appeal was applied for by the appellants, an agreement having been made with the trustee that he would make sale of the property covered by the deed of trust in such parcels as appellants would specify in writing. In pursuance of this agreement A. M. and J. C. Stull caused to be prepared and forwarded to the trustee a notice of sale of the land, rights, and privileges aforesaid; but the trustee declined and refused to cause said sale notice to be published, and in lieu thereof adopted and published a notice which was substantially different. Prior to the date specified in this second notice A. M. and J. C. Stull, on an amended bill, applied for and obtained an injunction enjoining and restraining the trustee from making sale under the second notice, and by decree of April 28, 1906, upon said amended bill and upon the answers of Harvey, substituted trustee, and the Clifton Forge Light & Water Company, all matters in controversy in the cause were settled, except the question of the liability of A. M. and J. C. Stull for the amount of counsel fees claimed by Timberlake & Nelson, and certain amounts claimed by O. B. Harvey, substituted trustee, as compensation for services alleged to have been rendered by him and in reimbursement of certain expenses which he alleged he had incurred as trustee.

*For other cases see same topic and section NUMBER in Dec. Dig. & Am. Dig. Key No. Series & Rep'r Indexes

By decree of May 19, 1908, the clerk of the circuit court of Augusta county was directed to and did pay to Timberlake & Nelson, out of funds which had been deposited with him, the sum of $200 for their fee for the services which they had rendered at the request of Harvey, trustee, upon the motion to dissolve the injunction which had been awarded upon the original bill. By this decree, after passing upon the fee claimed by Timberlake & Nelson, it was further adjudged and ordered that the cause be referred to one of the master commissioners in chancery, to take, state and settle an account showing what part of the expenses claimed by Harvey, trustee, other than counsel fees, should be allowed as a charge against the trust estate. On May 14, 1909, the Stulls filed in the clerk's office a paper styled a "bill of review," in which they prayed that the said decree of May 19, 1908, be reviewed and reversed. Timberlake & Nelson were made parties defendant, together with O. B. Harvey, substituted trustee, and the Clifton Forge Light & Water Company. On the _____ day of _____, 1909, Master Commissioner Gordon filed his report in accordance with the directions of the decree of May 19th. By that report Harvey, trustee, was found to be entitled to recover from the trust estate the further sum of $163.40 as compensation for services alleged to have been rendered by him and reimbursement of certain expenses said to have been incurred. To this report A. M. and J. C. Stull filed exceptions, which were, by decree of October 25, 1910, overruled, and the bill of review, as it is called, dismissed, and the clerk was directed to pay out of the funds in the control of the court in the cause the sum of $163.40, together with a fee of $200, making a total of $363.40, which by the decree complained of was made a charge against the trust fund under the control of the court. From that decree the Stulls applied for and obtained an appeal.

The first question which we have to consider relates to the jurisdiction of this court.

[1] It is insisted upon the part of appellees that the decree of May 19, 1908, is a final decree; that, being a final decree, Timberlake & Nelson could not be made parties to this suit by bill of review; that the fee allowed Timberlake & Nelson was a separate and distinct transaction, and the expenses and costs of $163.40 allowed to the trustee was another separate and distinct transaction; and that neither of them are sufficient to give this court jurisdiction.

In this view we cannot concur. The decree of May 19, 1908, is not a final decree. As was said by this court in Sims v. Sims, 94 Va. 580, 27 S. E. 436, 64 Am. St. Rep. 772: "A decree which disposes of the whole subject, gives all the relief that is contemplated, and leaves nothing to be done by the court, is to be regarded as final; and, on the other hand, every decree which leaves anything to be done by the court in the cause is interlocutory as between the parties remaining in the court"—citing Cocke's Adm'r v. Gilpin, 1 Rob. 20; Ryan v. Mcleod, 32 Grat. 367; Rawlings v. Rawlings, 75 Va. 78; Wright v. Strother, 76 Va. 357.

The object of the petition, improperly called a bill of review, was to reopen certain questions which were disposed of by the decree of May 19, 1908. It does settle the question at issue with respect to the attorney's fee allowed to Timberlake & Nelson; but it referred other questions at issue between the parties to a commissioner for report, so that it is manifest that all the relief contemplated by the pleadings had not been given. The final decree of October 25, 1910, disposes of property greater in amount than the minimum sum necessary to confer jurisdiction upon this court.

[2] The principal question presented by the appeal is whether or not, under the circumstances of this case, the substituted trustee was justified in the employment of counsel, whose fees were to constitute a charge upon and be paid out of the trust fund. No question is raised, involving the good faith of any party to this record. That the trustee believed that he had the right to employ counsel, that he did employ counsel, that counsel rendered the service, and that the compensation allowed is reasonable, there is no ground to controvert. The sole question is whether, under the existing facts and circumstances, the fee allowed should have been a charge upon the trust fund; and that is a question of law which we must now answer.

The trust deed makes no provision for the compensation of the trustee. The trustee made no sale, so as to be entitled to the compensation provided for by section 2442 of the Code of 1904 of 5 per cent. upon the first $300 and 2 per cent. upon the residue of the proceeds.

In Perry on Trusts (6th Ed.) § 910, it is said: "Trustees have an inherent equitable right to be reimbursed all expenses which they reasonably and properly incur in the execution of the trust, and it is immaterial that there are no provisions for such expenses in the instrument of trust. If a person undertakes an office for another in relation to property, he has a natural right to be reimbursed all the money necessarily expended in the performance of the duty, and for losses that may accrue to himself in the proper administration of the trust. Thus a trustee will be reimbursed all his necessary traveling expenses, and all reasonable fees paid for legal advice in the discharge of his duties. And this rule will be applied, although the trust may subsequently be declared void, if the trustees were without blame in the matter. So trustees will be allowed all the expenses of litigation concerning the fund, and all costs which they are ordered to pay to strangers, if the litigation was forced upon them, or was necessary for the protection of the estate. * * * A trustee can receive pay only for such services and expenses as are within the line of the duties imposed on him by the instrument creating the trust."

In Rossett v. Fisher, 11 Grat. 492, 498, Judge Moncure said: "A trustee in a deed of trust is the agent of both parties, and bound to act impartially between them; nor ought he to permit the urgency of creditors to force the sale under circumstances injurious to the debtor at an inadequate price. He is 'bound to bring the estate to the hammer,' as has been said by Lord Eldon, 'under every possible advantage to his cestui que trusts,' and he should use all reasonable diligence to obtain the best price. He may and ought, of his own motion, to apply to a court of equity to remove impediments to a fair execution of his trust, to remove any cloud hanging over the title, and to adjust accounts, if necessary, in order to ascertain the actual debt which ought to be raised by the sale, or the amount of prior incumbrances."

It is the duty of the trustee to protect the trust estate from waste, invasion, or trespass, and, of course, it would be his duty to defend all suits brought against him with respect to the trust subject. In the performance of these duties a trustee would be justified in employing counsel and charging their compensation to the trust fund.

This court held in Cochran v. Richmond, etc., R. Co., 91 Va. 339, 21 S. E. 664, that "trustees who in good faith engage the services of counsel to aid them in the duties, even where not expressly authorized, are entitled to pay them out of the trust fund, or to be reimbursed out of that fund for all the expenses which they have incurred, including reasonable fees to attorneys." We have again examined that case and are satisfied with the decision. But something more than good faith is necessary to justify the trustee in the employment of counsel. There must be some reasonable ground to justify the trustee and to render the employment of counsel reasonably necessary to aid in the discharge of the duties of the trustee and the protection of the trust property; and such was the case in Cochran v. Richmond, etc., supra. There was, indeed, in that case no dispute as to the right of counsel to receive compensation. There were liens by deed of trust upon the franchises and property of the James River & Kanawha Canal, which had been acquired by the Richmond & Alleghany Railroad Company subject to those liens. There were a great number of beneficiaries who were not before the court, and their interests were represented only by the trustees, as is usually the case in trusts of that character, and the trustees employed counsel to protect the creditors, and their fees were properly allowed as a charge upon the fund.

There is an instructive criticism of this case in the opinion of the corporation court of Lynchburg, adopted by this court in Wilson v. Langhorne, 105 Va. 68, 52 S. E. 842:

"It is undoubtedly well settled that a trustee, where there are doubts and difficulties attending the execution of his trust, may appeal to the court for guidance, and as incident to this right, or when legal advice is necessary, or when maintaining or defending the deed of trust in suits in which the cestui que trust is not a party, may employ counsel, and out of the fund pay reasonable counsel fees. The cases of Cochran v. Richmond & Alleghany R. Co., 91 Va. 339 [21 S. E. 664], and Berkeley & Harrison v. Green, 102 Va. 378 [46 S. E. 387], certainly fall under the above rule. In the first case the trustees only were parties to the suit, and not the bondholders, except in answer to the petition of Cabell & Smith for more fee. Cochran and all the bondholders in 1891 agreed upon the fee, but Cochran contended no part thereof should come out of the fund from which he was to be paid. In that case the trustees alone were asserting the rights of the bondholders, and, of course, were entitled to have counsel fees allowed. In the latter case, Green, trustee, filed a bill asking the aid of the court in the execution of his trust, and therefore had the right to retain counsel for that purpose and pay them a fee out of the fund. But these cases are not analogous to the one at bar. Wilson, trustee, in this case, was only a formal party holding the legal title, and all the creditors interested in the deed of trust were sui juris and before the court."

In Berkeley & Harrison v. Green, 102 Va. 378, 46 S. E. 387, the trust deed in express terms provided that the trustee "shall be authorized and empowered to employ counsel and compensate them for their services out of the trust funds." And the court found as a fact that the administration of the trust necessitated the institution and prosecution of a litigation, and involved debts and assets to the amount of several hundred thousand dollars.

The trustee, as we have seen, is the agent of the grantor and of the grantee, of the debtor and of the creditor, and is bound to stand neutral and impartial between them. We have enumerated cases in which the trustee has the right, and it would be his duty, to employ counsel; but in every case there must exist some reasonable necessity for such employment. We shall not attempt an exclusive enumeration of the conditions under which such employment would be proper, but will leave each case to be determined upon its merits.

[3] In the case before us, the grantors in the deed of trust, for reasons satisfactory to themselves, filed a bill to enjoin the trustee from making sale under the deed of trust. To that bill the trustee and the beneficiary were made parties. The beneficiary was sui juris and capable of protecting its own interests. The trustee had no interest whatever in that litigation, unless it be that in every case where a trustee is a formal party he has the right to employ counsel and charge his fees against the trust fund. That such is not the case in Virginia is shown by the careful manner in which each case is discriminated by the court, and the precise fact pointed out which in the opinion of the court justifies the allowance. The cases in which trustees have been enjoined in this state from the execution of the trust are innumerable, but in none of them, so far as we are advised, has the proposition been maintained, that a trustee, under facts such as appear in this case, is entitled to employ counsel and to charge the payment of his fee upon the trust estate. The effect of such a proceeding would be to make the debtor pay the counsel fees of the creditors, and this we have held cannot be done, even though the debtor expressly enters into a contract to that effect. See Watts v. Newberry, 107 Va. 233, 57 S. E. 657; German National Ins. Co. v. Va. State Ins. Co., 108 Va. 393, 61 S. E. 870; Stuart v. Hoffman, 108 Va. 307, 61 S. E. 757.

We are of opinion that it was error, under the facts of this case, to allow the fee of $200 as a charge upon the trust fund. We are further of opinion that the fees paid to the clerk for copies of certain papers, the cost of two advertisements of sale, and the surveyor's fee, aggregating $119.30, and the sum of $100 allowed by the commissioner to the trustee for services in the execution of the trust, should be allowed as a charge upon the trust fund, and that all other charges be disallowed and denied.

The decree complained of is reversed, and the cause remanded to the circuit court, for further proceedings to be had therein not in conflict with this opinion.

Reversed.

(112 Va. 678)

BIXLER v. MODERN WOODMEN OF AMERICA.

(Supreme Court of Appeals of Virginia. Nov. 16, 1911.)

1. INSURANCE (§§ 716, 718*)—MUTUAL BENEFIT SOCIETIES—BY-LAWS—BINDING EFFECT ON MEMBERS.

One who takes out a policy in a mutual benefit society becomes a member thereof, and is bound by its charter and by-laws made in pursuance thereof, and is chargeable with knowledge of limitations on the powers of agents of the society found in the by-laws.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Insurance, Cent. Dig. §§ 1854, 1855; Dec. Dig. §§ 716, 718.*]

2. INSURANCE (§ 761*) — MUTUAL BENEFIT INSURANCE—SUSPENSION FOR NONPAYMENT OF ASSESSMENTS—REINSTATEMENT—VALIDITY.

The by-laws of a mutual benefit society provided for the reinstatement of a suspended member by his payment of assessments, if he was at the time of payment in good health; that otherwise the receipt and retention of the assessments should not reinstate him and prohibited the clerk of any local camp from knowingly receiving assessments from a suspended member, if at the time of tender of payment the member was in impaired health. A member who had been suspended for nonpayment paid arrearages while ill, and the clerk of the local camp who received the money had knowledge thereof. None of the directors or other officers of the society knew of the member's payment until after his death. Held, that the payment and the reception thereof by the clerk of the local camp did not reinstate the member, and the society did not waive the forfeiture, and was not estopped from setting it up as a defense.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Insurance, Cent. Dig. § 1924; Dec. Dig. § 761.*]

Error to Circuit Court, Augusta County. Action by Savannah Bixler against the Modern Woodmen of America. There was a judgment for defendant, and plaintiff brings error. Affirmed.

Carter Braxton, for plaintiff in error. Timberlake & Nelson, for defendant in error.

BUCHANAN, J. This action was brought by Mrs. Savannah Bixler against the Modern Woodmen of America, a beneficial organization, upon a policy of insurance or benefit certificate issued to her husband, W. A. Bixler, and payable to her on his death.

The principal question involved in the case is whether or not the insured, who had been suspended for the nonpayment of his dues, had been reinstated by the payment of such dues to the clerk of the local camp.

Upon a demurrer to the evidence by the defendant, there was a judgment in its favor. To that judgment this writ of error was awarded.

It appears that in the year 1907 the husband, who was at that time in good health, became a member of the defendant company and obtained a benefit certificate therein payable to his wife at his death. He paid his dues and assessments until the levy for the month of March, 1910, became due and payable, when he defaulted and on that account was regularly suspended in accordance with the by-laws of the defendant company. On the 23d day of April following Bixler inquired by phone of Todd, the clerk of the local camp of which he was a member, what was due from him, and was informed that he owed for the months of March and April, whereupon he paid the same to Todd without anything being said by either as to the condition of Bixler's health. On the 26th of April Bixler received notice from the defendant company's home office, calling his attention to the fact that he had been reported by the clerk of his local camp as suspended for the nonpayment of his March dues, that his suspension had been recorded, and that from April 1st his certificate was null and void, but stated that, if he had been reinstated since that date, the notice of his suspension might be disregarded. On the 6th of May, Bixler, who had been suffering from chronic diabetes for two years or more, a fact known to both the insured and Todd, the clerk of the local camp, died suddenly of "diabetic coma." None of the directors or other officers of the defendant knew anything about Bixler's payment of his arrearages until after his death. The clerk of the local camp was instructed not to receive the May dues from Bixler's estate, and the defendant after this action was instituted (which was, as claimed by the defendant, before it had finally passed upon the validity of the claim) offered to return the amount of the March and April dues, but the tender was refused.

The provisions of the by-laws of the defendant company bearing upon the reinstatement of a suspended member and the powers and duties of the clerk of the local camp, so far as applicable to the facts of this case, are found in sections 39, 56, 278, 287, and 291, which are as follows:

"Sec. 39. No Waiver of Any By-Law.—No officer of this society, except as provided in section 108 hereof, nor any local camp officer, is authorized or permitted to waive any of the provisions of the by-laws of this society which relate to the contract between the member and the society, whether the same be now in force or hereafter enacted."

"Sec. 56. Reinstatement Within Sixty Days After Suspension for Nonpayment of Assessments, Fines, or Dues.—Any member suspended for the nonpayment of assessments, fines, or dues, if not engaged in any of the prohibited occupations mentioned in section 12 hereof, may be reinstated by payment, within sixty days from the date of suspension, of all arrearages of every kind, including current assessment and all fines, dues, and assessments for which he would have been liable had he remained in good standing; provided, however, that he be in good health at the time of reinstatement; provided, further, that the receipt and retention of such assessments or dues in case the suspended neighbor is not in good health, or is engaged in any such prohibited occupation, shall not have the effect of reinstating said member or entitling him or his beneficiaries to any rights under his benefit certificate."

